Ephraim Clark was tanner and currier on the Springfield and Scotch Plains road, where he resided until his death. Mr. Clark was a useful man and prominent citizen. He was made deacon in the Presbyterian Church, July 12, 1846. He married for his first wife Phebe Clark, and had four children: 1, Edwin; 2, James; 3, Henry; 4, Anne. For his second wife he married Hannah Baker, and had seven children: 1, Cyrus Osborn Clark; 2, Daniel Clark; 3, Phebe Clark; 4, Margaret Clark; 5, Mary Britton Clark; 6, Catherine Clark; 7, Ephraim Newton Clark. And for his third wife he married Margaret Cory, daughter of Joseph Cory, of Westfield.

Master Coles was a school-teacher as well as a farmer. A number of his descendants reside at Scotch Plains. His farm was for many years after his death occupied by Jacob Miller, who died Dec. 12, 1869, and is buried in the family plot on the farm. His son, William H. Miller, now occupies the Coles farm.

Squire William Clark occupied the farm now owned by James L. Clark in the year 1809. Andrew H. Clark, his son, was also justice of the peace, school-teacher, and prominent in the Presbyterian Church, and was trustee and elder. He died in the year 1864.

John Miller owned the farm that originally belonged to the Mulford family. Mr. William Mulford's descendants reside at or near Elizabeth City.

Ezekiel Ludlam resided on the farm at the corner of Westfield and Cranford roads, now opposite the farm of W. H. Miller. Here he resided until his death as a farmer, and at the same time carried on the business of cabinet-maker and undertaker. He died in the year 1813. Mr. Eli Marsh, on the death of Mr. Ludlam, carried on the same business on the main road to Westfield. The property is now owned by Amos Clark, Esq., and the house is still standing, occupied now by Silas D. Pierson.

A Widow Baker lived where Mrs. Abbie built her house. She was also a school-teacher.

Warner Tucker bought his land of Mr. Hinds in 1742, and built himself a small house, where he carried on the business of a weaver.

Capt. Matthias Clark lived where William Stitt owned a farm, and built a house back on the road from Presbyterian Church to Westfield. From his epitaph we learn,—

"Capt. Matthias Clark
Died June 7, 1808,
Aged 54 years,
A Revolutionary soldier,
Companions here we lie,
Entombed beneath this stone,
Till Christ shall bid us rise,
And to the judgment come."

Capt. Myreick owned the place some years after, and eventually sold it to Jacob and Joseph Davis, and afterwards was occupied by Benjamin Marsh and David M. Woodruff, and then occupied by William Stitt.

Isaac Hendricks owned the farm now occupied by John R. Miller, and also the farm owned by the late David Miller belonged in 1812 to the Hendricks family.

Andrew Creig occupied the farm of his father, and there died in the year 1860.

John Clark was called "Carpenter" Clark. He owned the farm now occupied by George W. Pierson. He was the general builder in Westfield, and in his earlier days was the head of his trade over a large section of this township and adjoining ones. If there was a house or barn to be built, he with the farmer would go mark their trees in the timber land. Neighbors were called upon, then the hewing and squaring went on. When ready, a large number of his neighbors came. A sheep or calf was prepared and made into a pot-pie, as it was called, and cooked out of doors in the largest iron pot that they had. The building was raised, and perhaps by sundown partly inclosed. His neighbors received his thanks. They returned to their homes early enough to do up their chores before supper.

Sylvanus Pierson, 1st, uncle to Sylvanus, 2d, and William Pierson's brother, owned and lived on his farm, now owned by Squire Pierson's heirs, and opposite Mrs. Pierson's homestead. Jacob Ludlow was the father to John Ludlow, and the property is now owned by his grandson, Gideon Ludlow. Ezekiel Ludlow, who was killed by a fall from his wagon in 1813, coming from Rahway, owned the farm lately occupied by John C. Miller, father of John L. Miller, wheelwright and blacksmith. He is now living in Ottawa, Kan., and Benjamin Ham, Esq., has beautified the place, built his house and conservatory, and is one of the most prominent men in the township. Squire Marsh was not only farmer but tailor; lived and owned the farm of the late Squire Pierson, who lately deceased, and his widow still occupies the homestead. Squire Pierson's father went to Ohio when he was a young man, and he became an apprentice to learn the clothing business. It was the custom to go from neighborhood to neighborhood in the spring and fall, as the shoemakers did, and make the clothing for each family.

Marsh Crane lived on the road to Springfield to Elizabeth. He had a son, who married in 1822, by name of David Crane, a daughter of Christopher Denman.

Abraham Scudder married Joanna Meeker, daughter of Obadiah Meeker, of Connecticut Farms, in 1807. He resided opposite the farm were C. A. Lev-eridge resided, and formerly the Baker farm. He died in the year 1852. Their children's names were Israel, Clark, Amanda, Cornelia, Julia, Martha. Clark Scudder was one of the most prominent of Westfield citizens in the erection of the present Presbyterian Church, giving liberally towards its erection. He died suddenly of a malignant disease in 1875. His daughter Joanna married Rev. Benjamin Parvin, of the Newark Conference, residing in Rahway.

Isaac F. Scudder owns and lives on his grandfather's farm, John Scudder's, who died in 1848.

Aaron Ball was a blacksmith in the centre of the village. The property is now owned by James R. Ferris, who bought it in 1851.

David Townly, who was called "Boss," the shoemaker, lived next to Mr. Ball's. The family are all deceased except a grandson, David Pierson, son of Charles Pierson, of Cranford.

There is also a David Townly, a shoemaker, son of William Townly, deceased, but no relation to "Boss" David. Moses Ross lived where Benjamin Clark resided, and now the lands of L. V. Clark, Esq.

Judge Aaron Coe, father of Rev. Philemon Coe, owned all of the Elmer farm of nearly four hundred acres in the centre of the village. The homestead was opposite to the village. Benjamin Pierson, son of William Pierson, lives on the homestead road leading to Elizabeth and Rahway. On the bluff of this farm, nearly on the line of Charles Marsh's farm, is where the first log church was built, near where Mr. Marsh's barn stands, and the log cabin of the Pierson family stood just within two hundred yards east of the church.

Orrin Pearson bought and lived till within a few years on the Moses Decamp farm, below Charles Marsh's. The Charles Marsh (3d) farm belonged to Charles Marsh (1st), his grandfather.

The house where Charles F. Withe lives was originally the Elias Mills farm-house, and stood back some eight hundred feet on his farm from the main road. Joseph Mills, who died a few years ago in New York, was his son, and a granddaughter married Joseph Clark, and lives in Linden township. Mr. Clark was killed in 1863 by the falling of a tree.

On the farm now owned by Daniel Fink, and where Amos S. Miller lived and died in the year 1865, a singing-school teacher lived by name of Halsey. He was chorister in the village church, and taught during the fall and winter the school for singing, at one shilling a lesson, and to find their own candle-lights, or eight shillings for thirteen lessons. He was considered in his day an excellent singer. On Love Lane, as it was called, and is known by the older inhabitants, lived Sambo, a Guinea negro, just above the road back of Sylvanus Pierson's house, and where Cuff Wood lived and raised a large family. This Sambo was a jack of all trades and sexton of the meeting-house as long as he lived. It is said after the old church-bell had been brought back from Staten Island, where the British soldiers had taken it in 1780, and was heard ringing while Azariah Clark and other Westfield men were in the Sugar Prison-House in New York, they recognized the sound, and determined if they obtained their freedom that they would take the bell back again and hang it in the Westfield Church, and which they did, and the first time Sambo rung it in his joy of its recovery he broke it. The present bell is the second one that the church has had, and is still in use.

A well-known citizen of Westfield was John Williams, who commonly went by the name of Jack Williams. He was well known for miles as being a sort of cattle and horse doctor (called in these days veterinary surgeon). Mr. Williams was a man, and held in high esteem. He raised a large family. He owned the small house back of Mr. Charles Clark's store on the Jerusalem road. He died in 1860. His two sons, John William and Henry, are prominent members of the Zion Methodist Episcopal Church.

Purchase of Powder.—On the 12th day of April, 1813,—

"It was agreed by a unanimous vote of Town committee that the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars be raised and appropriated towards purchasing Powder, ball, and Flint for the purpose of repelling any attempt which may be made on our Rights and Liberties by our common enemy, which Amantia is to be put into the hands of the captains of the different Companies in the Township, who are to give security that shall be applied according to the vote of the township, to be by them distributed in equal proportion to each Individuals of their several companies or other Inhabitants of the township as shall on an alarm or other Emergency actually turn out and put themselves under their command, the men who receive it to be answerable to the captain they receive it from, to return to him all but what they expend against the enemy.

"Resolved, That Doct. Joseph Quintly, David Osborn, and Freeman Cole be a committee to carry the above into immediate effect.

"I hereby certify the above to be the true proceedings of the above town-meeting.

"CAPT. CHARLES CLARK,
"Moderator."

Village of Westfield.—This village is pleasantly located in the centre of the township. The main street running north and south, extending from Mor-

M. Tucker.

John Miller

gan's Hill to the distance of a little over a mile on a straight line to the south over the Central Railroad track towards the late residence of Aaron Hatfield. This beautiful village contains five churches, besides two halls, where services are held on the Sabbath by the Congregational and Zion Church, who in a short time contemplate building. The distance from New York City of only eighteen miles makes this place desirable for many doing business in the neighboring cities, the depot of the New Jersey Central Railroad being in the centre. The population is about eight hundred and seventy-five. There are many fine residences, which are tastily ornamented with ample grounds, fine shade-trees, and gardens. The avenues and streets are well shaded with maples and elms. The village has a good supply of water of fine quality, and Clark's Lake, fed by springs, is on the main street. The grounds of the Presbyterian Church, known as the village green, are neatly laid out and fenced, and large shade-trees of a century ago adorn them. On the south side of the depot within a few years avenues have been laid out and planted with shade-trees, and in a short time this locality has become thickly settled with residences; here the Catholic Church has been built, a neat frame building. Many of the newly opened avenues and streets have been given names representing some historic incident or former pastor of the old church, as Picton Street, after the Rev. Thomas Picton, in 1805; Elmer Street, after Dr. Jonathan Elmer, the first physician in Westfield in the year 1752.

In the year 1800 this village contained about 14 houses, 1 store, 1 blacksmith-shop, 1 tanner and currier, 1 shoe-shop, 1 tavern, 1 school-house, and the old church. It then had been substantially in this condition for nearly half a century.

The following list comprises those who are engaged in business in the village of Westfield:

Stove- and tin-store, Mahlon H. Ferris.

Hotel, Amos W. Morfitt.

Justice of peace, with office on Main Street, John D. Jaques.

Grocery and dry-goods, Erastus Miller and his two sons.

Grocery and dry-goods, David and A. Judson Miller.

Millinery, Miss M. S. Welsh.

General merchandise, James T. Pierson.

Clothing merchant, Frederick Decker.

Drugs and fancy goods, William Gale, M.D.

Dentist, C. E. Agnewe.

Butcher, William Schoonover.

Boots and shoes, Luther M. Whitaker.

Druggist, George A. Bayard.

Baker, John Dash.

Feed and flour, Isaac Amerman.

Tin, stoves, and hardware, John Ingram.

News depot and fancy goods, Charles F. Witte.

General grocer, Matthias Clark.

Æolian Hall and Westfield Lyceum.

Paint-store, J. M. Neil.

Township rooms, Luther M. Whitaker, town clerk.

Green grocer, E. A. Clark.

Carpenter and builder, Joel Moffitt.

Carpenters, Sparkman & Seager.

Green grocer, B. W. Woodruff.

Milliner, Miss Mattie G. Whitaker.

Dress-maker, Mrs. Laura Wilcox.

Grocery, Patrick Traynor.

Jewelry and watches, Charles E. Vale.

Barber-shop, Fritz Henicke.

Furniture, John H. Umston.

Paint and paper hangings, Messrs. Welsh Brothers.

Harness-maker, W. H. More.

Butcher, Joseph Perrey.

Lumber and sash and blinds, John S. Irving.

Cigar-store, Frederick Hinzer.

Green grocer, David Crouch.

Blacksmith, I. S. Irving.

" S. C. Young.

" Anson B. Smith.

Saloon and refreshments, John L. Rolston.

Atlas Lodge, F. and A. M., No. 135.

Hook-and-Ladder Company, No. 1, William Gale, foreman, Joseph R. Connerly, secretary, George W. Tice, treasurer, was organized in 1873, and has been found that in cases of sudden alarm of fire that they have been about the first upon the ground. This is a grand improvement to what was the custom years ago, when no sufficient number of buckets, axes, or ladders were to be had conveniently in cases of emergencies.

Westfield has an efficient fire company, organized and incorporated in 1876. They now number about forty members, and have done excellent work in protecting the village from the devouring element. S. S. Mapes was elected president of the board of trustees in November, 1876.

Post-Offices.—In the early times the mail was carried by couriers and post-boys, with the mail-bags strapped behind them on horseback. This was when there were only bridle-paths throughout this once heavy wooded country. When regular conveniences were established, not only was the mail-stage expected, but the drivers were expected to carry many messages from town to town, and were looked upon as knowing all that transpired for miles around.

Mr. Samuel Downer is believed to have been the first postmaster, and as early as 1793 it is said he made up a package that went by the Speedwell Line of stages. He held the position for many years, and was succeeded by William H. Pierson, Charles Clark, Charles B. Morehouse, James T. Pierson, and the present postmaster, Frederick Decker, who has held the position for some years.

Old Trees.—The large elm-tree opposite the Westfield tavern was planted by John Foster in 1827.

The large elm-tree by the late residence of Dr. Corra

Osborn was planted out by Dr. Joseph Quimby at the same date.

The large oak-tree in the dooryard of Robert French's is one of the original forest-trees, and when Henry Baker was a boy in 1809 he climbed among its lower limbs.

The black-walnut trees in the yard of Mr. William Still were planted by Henry Baker's father.

Taverns.—The earliest records found of the inn-keepers are as follows: 1794, Azariah Clark; 1794, Charles Gilman; 1799, Mary Gilman; 1799, Alexander Richards; 1799, Benjamin Crane; 1804, Samuel Ross; 1816, John Clark; 1819, Sanford Hickey; 1819, Thomas Burlocks; 1825, John M. Clark. Since the last date, 1867, '68, and '69, John M. C. Marsh; 1870, John J. Smalley; 1871-72, C. Mitchell; 1873, W. H. Kingman; 1874, C. Brocksmith; 1880-81, A. W. Moffitt.

There were two inns close together on the main street opposite the road to Rahway. Charles Gilman kept what was known far and near as the "Stage House" for a great many years; and here the line of conveyances from New York to Easton and other routes would stop for dinner and change of teams. This was in the year 1804, and after the death of Mr. Gilman his wife, Mary, better known as Aunt Polly Gilman, kept the tavern.

This old tavern was the resort of many for an evening's entertainment in the olden time. Here the doctor, squire, and many others of those well known at that time were in the habit of meeting, and many a story was told and joke went around. A favorite and very common beverage for the evening in those days was flip, which was made somewhat as follows: A quart-jug was nearly filled with malt-beer, sweetened, a red-hot poker was thrust into the liquid and kept there until foam was produced, when half a pint of rum was poured in and some nutmeg grated upon it. The price of a mug of flip was three pence. And at this old Stage House at all hours refreshments could be procured of bacon, beans, cabbage, corn-bread, etc., by payment of 3s. 6d. a meal, and they would be served with the blue dishes of the olden time; and it is mentioned of old Mr. Gilman, who would meet the daily stage from New York to Philadelphia as they halted for their dinners, dressed in his blue coat with brass buttons, and so gracefully welcome the weary and dusty traveler at the stage-door and show them the way to the large "living" room, where the repast had been spread awaiting their arrival. Some one has said or sung:

"Old Gilman is dead, that good old man,
We ne'er shall see him more;
He used to wear a long blue coat
All buttoned down before."

This old Stage House was taken down a few years ago, and Mr. W. W. Connerly built his wood- and blacksmith-shop on the premises.

At the corner of Broad, or main road to Springfield from Westfield, and Love Lane (as it was called) stood one of the first buildings, which was occupied by Mr. Benjamin Crane as a hostelry or inn for some years in the year 1809, but it was burnt down afterwards. Mr. Sylvanus Pierson bought the land and built himself the present homestead, where he died in 1857. His son, Silas D. Pierson, occupied the place for some years after.

I. M. Clark was an inn-keeper for many years from 1825 until he gave up the business in 1849. He also was justice of the peace, assessor, and collector in the township, and a member of the Legislature in 1854. He was a most worthy man, and at the time of his death, 1867, was lamented and missed by the community at large. Many looked up to him for advice in matters concerning their property, and no one was better acquainted as to boundary lines between the farms and the titles thereto than he was. He was kind and charitable for all.

I. M. C. Marsh built the present hotel, which was occupied by Mr. Marsh, who kept the house, 1867, '68, and '69; C. Mitchell, 1871-72; J. I. Smally, W. H. Kingsman, 1873; C. Brocksmith, 1874-79; and Amos W. Moffitt, 1880-81.

Morgan's Hill.—On the road leading to Springfield from Westfield, nearly opposite to the residence of Isaac H. Scudder, and on the corner of his farm and road leading to Cranford, is where Morgan was hung, the murderer of Rev. Mr. Caldwell, on the 29th of January, 1782, by Noah Marsh, sheriff of the county of Essex. This rise in the road has been since known as Morgan's Hill, a small pile of stone indicating the spot. He made no confession as to his motives in committing the crime for which he suffered, but it was believed that he was incited to it by the British. A sermon was preached in the Westfield Meeting-house by the Rev. Jonathan Elmer, of New Providence (father of Dr. Jonathan Elmer, who was at this time a practicing physician in Westfield, and owned the farm after his death occupied by Judge Aaron Coe), from Jeremiah xlv. 4.

The following account is taken from the Gazette of Wednesday, Nov. 28, 1780, published as a newspaper by Rivington:

"Last Saturday the Reverend Mr. Caldwell, minister of the Dissenting congregation at Elizabeth-Town, was shot dead without any provocation at the Point by a native of Ireland named Morgan, one of the rebel twelve months' men. The Coroner's Inquest brought a verdict of wilful murder against him. Mr. Caldwell had ever been an active zealot in the cause of Independence, and was much esteemed and confided in by Mr. Washington and the Republican leaders. It is said he lately promoted a petition to the New Jersey Assembly for recalling the refugees to the repossession of their estates. Requiescat in pace."¹

Branch Mills.—This hamlet, on the extreme border of Westfield township, on the line of Springfield, has some fifteen dwellings, a school-house called the Union School for both townships, one paper-mill (Aaron and Charles Parkhurst, proprietors), and two grist-mills, one carried on by the Parkhurst Brothers, and the other by William Drake, and owned by Silas D. Miller. These mills are fed by a mill-pond now known as Echo Lake. This lake is said to be sixty feet in depth, and on the easterly side a distinct answer or echo may be heard from the hill. The water is beautifully clear, surrounded mostly by fine trees, and is somewhat a resort for picnic as well as boating and fishing parties.

¹ See History of the Revolution in this work.

L. Cory

The outlet of this lake is in the mill-stream until it forms itself into a branch of the Normahiggen (an Indian name, said to signify clear stream), which empties into the Rahway River. This stream passes close by what is known as the Indian burial-ground. We notice an Indian relic at the Parkhurst mill, being a large stone in front of the mill-door, having an excavation of some nine inches and about twenty-two inches across, said to have been an Indian mortar for pounding their corn, contrasting vividly with the manner of grinding of grain in the mill by its side.

Census Report.—The township of Westfield contains a population of 2213, divided as follows: males, 1187; females, 1026 (for children, see report of schools).

Schools.—We find the following recorded by one of the former clergymen of this parish, Jan. 1, 1839, in relation to the schools:

"This parish has been more deficient in good schools for the education of children than in almost anything else of equal importance. No classical school has ever been established here, and the consequence is that with all the mind and means which have existed here, very few have been graduated in any college or entered any of the learned professions. In respect to schools, however, we hope the future will excel the past, and that the love of learning and its benefits will greatly increase. Already considerable has been done to promote these, especially by Sabbath-schools and Bible classes. They diffuse among the young a love of reading and habits of study; still from these, as from our common schools, the scholars depart too soon. This many deplore, and are endeavoring to prevent by inducing them to purane their studies further and longer."

The first school-house was built of hewed logs on the Coe farm, plastered. Mr. Andrew H. Clark said it was built square, and strong enough to resist an attack from the Indians. There were two windows on each side and one at the end opposite the door. The windows opened by shoving from right to left. This log school-house was built some time after the year 1750 and before the Revolution. Subsequently a frame school-house was built, which also served the purpose of religious meetings. It was destroyed by fire about the fall of 1816. The citizens were called together and decided to build an academy of brick two stories high, the upper part for the church meetings, and on the same ground where their wooden structure had been burnt. They decided that the foundation should be of dressed or faced stone, and maples and elms should be planted all along the roadside for shade. This building was completed in the spring of 1819. It stood on the southeasterly side of the burial-ground.

In the year 1873 they decided to take down this old academy and build a more substantial building.

Daniel Halsey was one of the early teachers in this village. He was born at a place called Wichapogne, on Long Island, and one of the descendants of the Halsey family was asked in 1796 to write an appropriate sign for a tavern-keeper. Mr. Halsey sent him the following grim effusion:

"Rum, whiskey, brandy, cordial, porter, beer,
Ale, apple-jack, and gin are dealt out here,
Diluted, raw, or mixed in any measure,
To all consumers come and act your pleasures.
The above specifics will in time, God knows,
Put to a period all your earthly woes;
Or would you bring life to a splendid close,
Take double slings, repeating dose on dose;
A panacea this for every ail.
'Twill use you up—'twas never known to fail,
Use up your property ere scarce you know it,
Use up your character or sadly blow it,
Use up your health and strength and mind's repose,
And leave mayhap your carcass to the crows."

(It is not learned whether he used this sign or not.)

Mr. James Tevigan was teacher in the year 1808, then came Jonathan Miller, Andrew H. Clark, Jonathan Cory, Isaac H. Pierson, Dr. A. M. Cory, of New Providence, John Squire, Luther Littell, Jason Elliott, Mr. Ayres, Mr. Husten, J. Walsh, Mr. McCord, John Ripley, George Wheelen.

The present elegant three-story frame building on Prospect Street was completed with all the necessary appliances for conducting a high school as well as a primary department in 1873. The district (No. 10) is in the centre of the town, on about the highest ground. The lots are one hundred by two hundred and twenty-five, giving ample room for play-ground and decorations. The building is fifty by eighty feet, with tower and belfry. The present clerk of the district is Robert R. Sinclair, Esq.; and Stephen S. Mapes, who has done so much for the school and its present advancement, is the president of the board of trustees; since 1869 William T. Peck and R. R. Sinclair are the trustees. The following have been the teachers: H. E. Harris, principal, 1871-76; S. M. Blazier, principal, 1877-79; W. H. Elston, principal, 1880-81; Miss E. Stryker, 1871-81; Mrs. M. E. Goodrich, 1871-80; Miss Lillie Gilman, 1871-72; Miss Emma Johnstone, 1871; Mrs. H. G. Harris, 1871; Miss McQuoid, 1872-73; Miss Fanny Leveridge, 1873-75; Miss — Cory, 1873-76; Miss — Gilbey, 1875-79; Miss P. S. Cory, 1878-81; Miss Anna Decker, 1880; Miss — Spicer, 1880-81; Miss Lillie Schamp, 1881; Miss Mary S. Cory, 1881; Miss Mary E. Moore, 1881.

LOCUST GROVE SCHOOL-HOUSE.—In the northerly part of the township and nearly opposite the residence of Mr. James T. Baker is to be seen a fine grove of locusts. Within the centre of this grove is the Locust Grove School-House, which has been built within a few years on the same site as the one which preceded it, and where the neighborhood had been taught for generations. The first school-house was built here long before the Revolutionary war, and stood on the cross-roads. The following is an imperfect list, and without dates, of those who have taught in this school: The first remembered was an Englishman by name of Chuesnitt, Miss Ryer, Peter B. Good, Phebe Clark, Katherine Clark, Sarah Dodd, Miss — Haviland, a Scotchman by name of Robinson, who would say a great many times a day, "Boys, I wash you to keep steel, that is, if you con;" Mulford Wilcox, Miss Stiles, Martin Cory, and the present one, Miss Minnie L. Taylor. "In ye olden time seventy-two days were counted for a quarter, and only one quarter was taught in a year, and this in the winter months."

The Old Westfield Church.—The first place of public worship in Westfield was a log house built in 1730. About this time the Rev. Nathaniel Hubbel became the first pastor, and before this so great was the love of the preached word among your pious ancestors that they often traveled through the woods on foot to Elizabethtown, from Sabbath to Sabbath, to hear the gospel, and at the time it was remarked that they were in their seats in the sanctuary with great regularity at an early hour.

When Mr. William Miller left his friends at Elizabethtown to settle in Westfield, near the Branch Mills, the parting was rendered very solemn by the expectation that they should seldom, if ever, see him again, the difficulty of passing and repassing seemed so great. But to their surprise as they went to the church on the next Sabbath morning they found him standing on the steps.

When they left their children at home on the Sabbath, as a consequence of going so far to the meeting-house, they were strictly enjoined to remain in the house and learn the catechism, and on the return of their parents they were required to recite their lesson. On this the parents wisely insisted, and one of these grandchildren recently remarked that the only time he was ever chastised for any offense committed on the Sabbath was when he was discovered to have neglected his study and engaged in play. After this log meeting-house was completed the signal for the people to assemble at their appointed hour was the beating of a large drum. On hearing this the male members took their guns for fear of the Indians, who frequently annoyed the inhabitants, and they had many skirmishes with them.

The inhabitants increasing, many coming from Long Island, they in 1735 vacated their log meeting-house for the frame church. At first it had no steeple, but one was added in 1758, and we find that Rev. John Grant is their minister in 1750, remaining until 1753, and in 1759 the Rev. Benjamin Woodruff was called. The first board of trustees under act of incorporation, Jan. 16, 1788, were Thomas Woodruff, moderator; John Scudder, clerk; Ephraim Marsh, Jesse Clark, Andrew Hetfield, Ephraim Scudder, and John Crane. About 1760 they first procured their bell, and had the name of the parish cast upon it. One instance of the kind and liberal feelings of the people of this place toward their minister at that early day is said to be found in the fact that they then wished and expected him to live, labor, and die among them, and gave him in fee simple one hundred acres of their parsonage land, including the square fronting on the main street, from the present parsonage line to where the arsenal stood by the corner of the late Mr. Sylvanus Pierson's farm. In 1803 the second frame church building was erected, costing six thousand dollars.

Mr. Woodruff's ministry here was a long and happy one. The attachment between the people and their pastor was mutual. He received many calls to other places, but always refused, saying that he never intended to remove until from earthly cares and labors to heavenly joys. He was heard to say he never intended to outlive his usefulness. He also expressed a desire to die on the Sabbath. And so it was. He preached on the Sabbath before his death, and on the next Sabbath morning before the hour of public service arrived he departed this life. His sickness was short, and so little was his death expected that many of the people knew not that he was sick until they came to the sanctuary on Sabbath morning and found their pastor gone and the pulpit hung in mourning. The day was one of solemnity and general grief. Rev. Dr. McWhorter, of Newark, preached the sermon from 1st Cor. xv. 56, and the body of the much beloved pastor was buried out of the sight of his people at the head of the broad aisle in the second frame church, which had just been finished for worship. Over his tomb they laid a marble tablet with the following inscription, containing a just tribute of respect to his worthy character, and deserving a place in this historical sketch of the parish, as it was then called:

"Sacred to the memory of The Rev. Benjamin Woodruff, A.M., who departed this life, April 3, 1803, Aged 70 years.

The dust lies here of a venerable man, formed from early youth in learning—human and divine—passing his collegiate studies with reputation—soon entered the holy ministry—was settled near 44 years pastor of this church.

An excellent preacher—zealous, pathetic, faithful, prudent, and successful.

In controversies—moderate and calm. Among ministers, husbands, fathers, brothers, friends, few his equals.

Piety, hospitality, friendship, humility, benevolence, and modesty formed his character.

His voice it cries my people quickly come
To Jesus your eternal rest and home."

During Mr. Woodruff's ministry three hundred and ninety-eight persons made a profession of religion, about eleven hundred were baptized, and seven hundred and fifty-two couples were married. The last of these was Mr. William Woodruff, son of Aaron Woodruff, to Miss Phebe Ludlum.

I have followed the account of the old church up to the Rev. Thomas Picton's installation, which took place Oct. 14, 1805. The church and its historical associations with the people it was of the greatest importance should be followed to the above date, and at some future time I will again refer to it and its official members. The record has been very minute in many particulars. It belongs to the historical events of the Revolutionary war. The last sermon preached by the Rev. E. B. Edgar, then pastor, through whose efforts the present church was built, Jan. 26, 1862, was from Deut. xxxii. 7: "Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will show thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee," was most interesting and the keystone of the past. I remember as I sat in the old house and all the citizens for miles around were assembled on so important a day (many present on that occasion have passed away), looking around upon the congregation now assembled for the last time in pews which they had occupied for so many years, to be occupied no more forever.

Squire Person

After the present edifice was completed, April 3, 1862, the remains of Rev. Mr. Woodruff and wife were buried under the tower of the new church, and the tablet placed on the wall of the vestibule, "Remember the days of old."

The Rev. Thomas Picton resigned in 1818, after serving the church for fourteen years, and was followed soon after by the much-loved Rev. Alexander C. Fraser, who was ordained and installed June 20, 1819. During his pastorate two hundred and fifty-three members were added. Of the deaths and baptisms no record has been found. He remained for seven years, when, in 1827, Rev. Edwin Holt was called, who supplied for some two years with acceptability. A letter before me records the fact that Mr. Holt removed to the West, and became pastor of a church at Madison, Ind., when by ill health he resigned. He died at Evansville, Ind., July 2, 1854, after a short and severe illness. He was a native of New London, Conn. The seventh pastor, the Rev. James M. Hunting, was settled in 1832, and resigned his charge in 1849. Since then he has been a successful teacher of a select classical school at Jamaica, L. I. His untiring activity and Christian devotedness in the cause of religion and the prosperity of this church are worthy of a grateful remembrance in the annals of this parish. He still lives. From a letter from him a few days since it is evident that he still, in his declining years, feels a deep interest in the welfare of Westfield, and speaks of many by name, desiring to be remembered. During his pastorate of over seventeen years nearly four hundred became members, many of whom still live and form a large part of the present membership. The Rev. Edward B. Edgar was called April 23, 1850, as their pastor, and resigned in 1873. Some two hundred were added, a large number baptized, and the interest of the temporal as well as the spiritual affairs were zealously cared for during this ministry. The old church, which had stood as a sort of moral light-house for nearly seventy years, and which had been the spiritual birthplace of so many, was finally demolished. Mr. Edgar's deep interest in the beautiful church now built, and dedicated March 26, 1862, has been referred to. Rev. George Potts, D.D., preached the sermon on the occasion. Many who assisted Mr. Edgar in his efforts have passed to their reward. I may mention the names of a few: Gideon Ross, Clark Scudder, Squire Pierson, William Clark, Isaac French, Ephraim Clark. They have left a lasting remembrance for their love of the church of their fathers. I find in the closing part of the sermon preached in the old church on the last Sabbath of its occupation the following beautiful and pathetic reminder of the conflict that we were passing through at that time in our country's history, as follows: "The smiles of God upon the new church enterprise must not be forgotten. God has been with us. We recognize him in the time when we laid the foundations and committed ourselves to the work. We recognize him in the safety of all who have labored for us. We recognize him in our united counsels and harmonious action. We recognize him in the mind the people have had for the work. We recognize him in affording us the means to carry it on during this year of national distress. In this recognition of God's presence and mercy we lay at his feet our tribute of gratitude and praise."

Rev. Alexander McKelvey, after a pastorate of a little over two years (he following Rev. Mr. Edgar), resigned in the fall of 1876, and is now pastor of the Canal Street Presbyterian Church, New York City. Under his administration 106 persons were added to the roll of membership, 81 on examination and 25 by letter. Through his instrumentality the fine Jardine organ, worth $3000, was procured for the church at an actual cost of $2200.

The present pastor, Rev. William H. Gill, began his official duties on the second Sabbath of January, 1878, and was duly installed on the 25th of the same month. The following statistics, as reported to the General Assembly, show the results of church work during these two years: sittings, 800; membership, 250; Sunday-school scholars, 350; amount raised for salary, repairs, rent, parsonage, Sunday-school expenses, etc., since the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Gill is nearly $10,000; of this amount Mrs. Kate B. High gives $650 to a church in Illinois.

The officiating of this church are, May, 1880: Ruling Elders, Evert M. Pierson, Levi Cory, Charles Pierson, James T. Pierson, E. W. Boyden, Hiram L. Fink, William W. Baker; Deacons, Henry Baker; Trustees, Edward Harrison, Samuel E. Young, Jacob S. Ring, Daniel G. Fink, Alexander S. Clark, Levin H. Dunkin; Sexton, David Crouch.

We find the following pastors who have labored in this church: Rev. Nathaniel Hubbel, 1730, resigned 1745; Rev. John Grant, 1750, died 1753; Rev. Benjamin Woodruff, 1759, died 1803; Rev. Thomas Picton, 1805, resigned 1818; Rev. Alex. Fraser, 1819, resigned 1826; Rev. Edwin Holt, 1827, resigned 1830; Rev. James M. Hunting, 1832, resigned 1849; Rev. Edward B. Edgar, 1850, resigned 1873.

Thus it appears that this old church has had eight pastors to the above date, besides many supplies prior to the settlement of the parish, 1730. The following have filled offices as elders and deacons prior to 1761: John Davis, John Woodruff, John Cory, Samuel Hinds, Zebulon Jennings, John Crane, Jr., Samuel Yeomans; and since the year 1768, John Meeker, Andrew Hetfield, William Pierson, Sr., Matthias Hetfield, Joseph Acken, John Miller, Caleb Maxfield, Jacob Davis, Ezekiel Ross, John Dunham, William Pierson, Jr., Charles Clark, George Frazee; and Sept. 10, 1820, William Baker, Samuel Cory, Charles C. Williams, Samuel Downer, Andrew H. Clark, Benjamin Cory, John High, Jr., Amos Laing, James Ryno; from June 3, 1832, Edward Frazee, Squire Pierson, Henry Baker, Jacob Baker, William Clark, Jr., Ebenezer Connet, Isaac H. Pierson; from July 12, 1846, Isaac French, Ephraim Clark, Jotham Williams; from Dec. 24, 1854, Joseph Cory, Charles Pierson, Francis R. Baker, Everet Pierson.

The landed property of this parish was once extensive and valuable, being three hundred acres, presented by nine men, viz.: John Crane, William Miller, Jonathan Marsh, John Scudder, and it is supposed James Badgley, John Davis, Isaac Frazee, Joseph Mills, and Daniel Ross. These lands were given about the year 1802. I find that many legacies were left in the wills of the early settlers to this church. It is always desirable that others should remember their fathers in the same acts of love, the interest to be used annually for the support of the gospel.

I find many interesting incidents connected with this historical church of the Revolutionary war, but I must close with an extract from Rev. James M. Hunting's sermon, preached Jan. 1, 1839, of which but few copies can now be found:

"Since your ancestors came to this place four generations of men have been numbered with the dead. Not only have the Indians who then roamed through the forest here all sunk away among the dead, but so have all those who purchased and enbided their lands. And now a fifth generation linger here and there at great distances from each other, 'who rather sigh and groan than live,' while all between them have fallen. On some of our roads they have to look each way for miles to find only a few of the companions of their youth. Several thousand have died here since the place was settled. Do we ask where are the fathers of this church and congregation? Where are the pastors and the people who preached and heard the gospel here, and planted gospel ordinances where the tomahawk and scalping-knife were wielded, and where the wild beasts of the forest grazed or preyed on each other? The answer is all, all are covered by the clouds of the valley, and we are quickly following them. Where are the men who would go on foot to Elizabethtown from Sabbath to Sabbath to hear the gospel if they could not hear it nearer? Do they exist here at present?"

"Not but the human fabric from the birth
Imbibes the flavor of its parent earth;
As various tracts enforce a various toil,
The manners speak the idiom of their soil.
An iron race the mountain cliffs maintain,
Foes to the gentler genius of the plain." "

Methodist Episcopal Church.—In the year 1849 a few families residing in this township by the name of Benjamin Marsh, Elihu Mott, Benjamin Willcox, C. A. Leveridge, Nathaniel R. Day, and David M.

Woodruff desiring to have the services of the Methodist preacher at Plainfield to come on a Sabbath afternoon and hold services at the residence of C. A. Leveridge, Esq., the Rev. William E. Perry consented to supply, which he did during the summer and fall of 1849. The following year Westfield and Springfield were joined together, when the Rev. T. T. Campfield was appointed in charge, and organized the first class of eleven members. In the fall of 1850, Rev. William H. Nelson was sent, and two rooms at the residence of John M. Clark, Esq., were fitted up for regular services. The congregation increasing arrangements were made for building a church, when a fine lot of ground was offered by the late Matthias Clark, Esq., and accepted, and arrangements were made to build a frame church thirty-six by fifty feet. In the spring of the following year Rev. T. T. Campfield was returned by the Conference, and efforts were put forth and the church was completed and dedicated. The late Bishop Edwin J. Janes preached the dedicatory sermon. The whole cost of church and improving the grounds was three thousand five hundred dollars. The membership had increased up to this time to twenty-seven. The Rev. T. T. Campfield remained on the charge until the following spring, when the Rev. James Harris, who was a transfer to New Jersey Conference from Atlanta, Ga. In the spring of 1857 Rev. B. O. Parvin came, and remained for two years. The following have been sent by the Conference (at this time its membership had increased to seventy-two members): Rev. J. Kowins, Jacob F. Dodd, Joseph H. James, Theodore D. Frazee, Garritt R. Vanhorne, Thomas E. Everitt, John Davis, R. B. Collins, C. S. Ryman, Elihu Grant, Henry M. Simpson, John I. Boswell, Alexander Craig, Thomas H. Smith, and Warren L. Hoagland, the present pastor. In the year 1863 a fine Sabbath-school room was built in the rear of the church, twenty-four by forty-six feet, for their increasing school. Mr. James R. Ferris has held the position of superintendent for nearly all the time since the organization of this Sabbath-school, and the church had increased in membership of about ninety, when in the year 1873 it was decided to build a larger church. A meeting was called and plans were exhibited for adoption. Benjamin Ham and James R. Ferris were appointed upon the building committee. It was decided to occupy the same ground; money was raised, and a beautiful church edifice was erected, with an audience-room to accommodate some five hundred persons, having lecture and class-rooms, parlor, and pastor's study on the first floor, a fine cellar for heating apparatus, making the whole comfortable in extreme weather. The whole cost was twenty thousand dollars, and is free from debt. The present membership is one hundred and eighty, with a Sabbath-school of two hundred and four.

In the year 1869 a double lot was secured in the rear of the church, and a comfortable parsonage was erected. The oldest member of the church at the present is Josiah Ferris, in his ninety-second year, who has held responsible official relation to the church for years as trustee, class-leader, and steward.

Oliver M Pierson

The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church was organized with thirty members in the fall of the year 1879, John Williams and Henry Nelson and a few others interesting themselves in collecting the colored people of Westfield together. They seem to be a prosperous society. The Rev. Valentine Buck, a Methodist clergyman of the New York East Conference, has assisted them in their efforts to establish regular services on the Sabbath. Rev. Thomas Harris, presiding elder, has the supervision of this society.

Grace Protestant Episcopal Church.—This society was organized July 2, 1867, at the homestead residence of Rev. Philemon E. Coe, who fitted up his large hall with temporary altar, organ, and other requisites for the use of a congregation, and here the society worshiped for some years. The festivals of Christmas and Easter were duly observed, the rector (Rev. Mr. Coe) sparing no pains to provide attractive music and all needed accessories. After a few years of this voluntary service Mr. Coe died of malignant smallpox, contracted while kindly visiting and praying with a neighbor dying of this disease.

In his will Rev. Mr. Coe donated to the society the plot of ground upon which the present church edifice stands. It is a beautiful elevation, centrally located upon the main thoroughfare, Broad Street. The corner-stone was laid July 3, 1874. It is a pretty Gothic frame building, forty by sixty feet, containing two hundred and fifty sittings. The successive rectors have been Rev. Harris C. Rush and the present incumbent, Rev. Thomas Drum, M.D. The congregation now comprises forty families, forty-three communicants, and is zealous, and hopeful for the future.

Congregational Church.—This is a new church organization of the Congregational Church of Christ, and was organized June, 1880. They were supplied with regular services, which are held in the Æolian Hall, until the Rev. Henry Neill became their stated pastor a few months ago.

They are expecting to build a frame church in the Queen Anne style of architecture, and to cost between six thousand and eight thousand dollars. They have secured lots eligibly situated in the centre of the village on Elmer Street near Broad Street. The church will have audience-room, parlor, and school-room so arranged that they can be all opened in one, making for extra occasions a well-ventilated audience-room.

Membership, 70; sittings, 275; teachers in Sabbath-school, 12; Sabbath-school scholars, 75.

Baptist Church.—This church is situated on Elm Street, about the centre of the village; organized in 1866. They have had a number of pastors. Rev. Charles A. Harris served them for a few years, until by broken health resigned in the fall of 1879, and for a few months they were supplied. The Rev. A.

Graves, who has resided here for many years, has done much for this feeble church from its first start, laboring for its extension, and holding meeting with considerable success. The present pastor, Rev. E. H. Bronson, came in May, 1880, from Aurora, Ill. The building, a frame, costing about six thousand five hundred dollars; sittings, 350; membership, 117; Sabbath-school teachers, 13; scholars, 125.

Holy Trinity Church.—This church was organized in 1870 by a few Roman Catholic families who resided in the township. The Rev. Mr. Kinnard held mass for a time in a building fitted up for the purpose, and soon lots were secured in the southerly part of the town of Westfield, on lands originally belonging to the estate of Theophilus Pierson, and soon a neat frame structure was erected with belfry at a cost of about four thousand five hundred dollars. The following pastors have been in here: Father Kinnard, Father Connerly, Father Morris, now of Plainfield, Father Mitchell, Father Daniels, Father Buerghman, Father Weighert, and the present pastor, the Rev. Father Berghman. There are two memorial windows in the church commemorating the deaths of John Stityard and Patrick Bahn. Sittings, three hundred; families in parish, thirty-five. The first trustees were John Fealy and Daniel Connors, and the present acting trustee is Patrick English.

The Westfield Monitor.—On the 23d of December, 1880, the first issue of a regular weekly paper by Sydney Genung, formerly of East Madison, N. J., editor and publisher; terms, two dollars per annum. In his salutatory he says,—

"To-day we launch the Westfield Monitor on what we trust may be a career of usefulness to our fellow-citizens and of at least moderate prosperity to its publishers. We shall treat all of whom we may have occasion to speak with judicial fairness, applauding virtue and condemning vice in public places wherever and whenever found. . . . We propose this shall be a journal for all the people, and believing that free and open discussion is the surest way of arriving at the truth, we extend to all our readers without regard to party or sect to use our columns, as far as our time and space will permit, to express their views on all subjects of public interest."

Burial-Places.—The oldest cemetery in this township is the Presbyterian, and it is as old as the first log church, which was built about 1720. The oldest date on a headstone appears to be in memory of "Noah,

the son of Wm. &
Hannah Miller, died
A.D. 1730, aged 6 weeks."

"In memory
of Baltus Roll who was murdered Feb. 22, 1830, in the 62 year of his age.

Ye friends that weep around my grave,
Compose your minds to rest,
Prepare with me for sudden death,
And live forever blest."

The graves of two persons are remarked here who died at the unusual age of one hundred and one years, viz :

"Sarah Collins,
Died June 18,
1868,
Aged 101 yrs.
3 mo."

"Samuel Downer,
Died Oct. 22,
1824,
Aged 101 yrs."

The two rough stones that stand close to the fence are of the Cranes :

"A. C.
1759."

"S. C.
1749."

Stephen Crane, died 1794, was the son of Stephen Crane, and he married Annie Williams; died 1759; had three children.

"Gideon Ross,
Born
Jan. 7, 1794.
Died
Dec. 22, 1861."

"Capt. John Scudder, deceased y^e 26 Feb. A.D., 1777, 77 year."

"This Stone is erected to the memory of Doctor
Joseph Quimby, who departed this Life March 26, 1833,
in his 66 year."

FAIRVIEW CEMETERY.—The organization of the Fairview Cemetery Association was perfected on the 13th of January, 1868, pursuant to the provisions of a general statute of this State, and a certificate was duly filed with the county clerk constituting the association a legally corporate body. The following were elected the first board of trustees: Chauncey B. Ripley, F. A. Kinch, M.D., Matthias Clark, Moses T. Crane, A. A. Drake, J. M. C. Marsh, Squire Pierson, J. Q. Dudley, William Stitt, Rev. Philemon E. Coe, Joshua Brown, and Joseph Moffett.

The cemetery grounds are located on the public road leading from Westfield to Springfield, about one and a half miles from the station of the Central Railroad, in Westfield, and about the same distance from Cranford station, convenient for each village, and at the same time not too far for the accommodation of Springfield.

The cemetery embraces an elevation of land formerly owned by Mr. John R. Miller, containing more than seventeen acres, and long known as Mount Pleasant, commanding a view of the surrounding country for many miles distant in every direction.

On the 24th of September, 1868, the cemetery grounds were solemnly dedicated.

The following gentlemen compose the board of trustees: Evert M. Pierson, president; Effingham Emery, treasurer; Edgar Pearsal, secretary; James R. Ferris, William Wood, James T. Pearson, Gideon Ludlow, Moses T. Crane, E. H. Bronson, Daniel G.

Fink, — Atwater, and William W. Connerly, superintendent of the grounds and outlays.

The private burial-ground of Mr. Jacob Miller, deceased, is on the road from Branch Mills to Cranford, adjoining Mr. G. W. Pierson's farms. The whole plot has been laid out and a number of interments made, including Mr. Jacob Miller.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN MILLER.

Mr. Miller was of English stock, his grandfather having been Enoch Miller, who resided in Westfield township, married and had fifteen children, among whom was a son Enoch, who also resided in the township, where he was united in marriage to Miss Ross, of the same locality. Their children were Anna, David, Rebecca, John, Hannah, Jacob, Enoch (1st), Enoch (2d), Keziah, Moses, Stites, Abner, Elijah, Eliza, and Josiah. John of this number was born March 22, 1790, in Westfield, where his boyhood was spent. His early years were devoted to attendance at the neighboring public school, after which he engaged in agricultural employments. His attention was specially directed to the cultivation of peppermint, the oil from which was distilled by him. He meanwhile acquired the farm which is the present residence of his widow and son, and made many improvements on the land. Mr. Miller was the first cultivator of peppermint in central and western New York, large fields of the herb having been raised and utilized by him in the immediate vicinity of Lyons, N. Y. He married Miss Betsey Ross, of Westfield, and had children,—John R., Charlotte, Keziah, David, and James H. Mrs. Miller having died Sept. 7, 1848, he was again married to Peninah W., daughter of Jonas and Eliza Smith, of Orange, N. J. Their only son is Jonas S. Miller, who now resides upon the farm. Mr. Miller was a firm Democrat in politics, but in no manner identified with the politics of the county or township. He was a Presbyterian in religion and a member of the church in Westfield. His death occurred Sept. 14, 1867, in his seventy-seventh year. He was a man of genial temper, of much industry, and of profound judgment in all matters of public or private interest. His life was essentially one of usefulness, and his death a source of genuine sorrow.

WILLIAM CLARK, JR.

The Clark family are of English ancestry, and, as has been stated elsewhere in this volume, intimately associated with the struggle for American independence.

William Clark, the father of the subject of this

Joseph H. Cory

S. F. Scudder

The Scudder family are of Revolutionary antecedents, John Scudder having been a captain during the war of the Revolution. His son, Captain John, married Miss Nancy Woodruff, and had children,—Susan, William, Sarah Ann, and two who died in infancy. Mr. Scudder spent his life on the farm which is now the property of his grandson. His son William was born during the year 1799, in Westfield township, where his life was spent until his recent removal to the home of his son in Fanwood.

He married Miss Mary, daughter of Zopher Hetfield, and had children,—Isaac F., Daniel S., and one whose death took place in infancy. The death of Mrs. Scudder occurred in the year 1874, in her seventieth year. Their son Isaac F. was born Dec. 27, 1822, in Westfield. His early years were spent with his parents, during which time he attended school. He later assisted his father upon the farm, and in 1849 was married to Miss Margaret P., daughter of John and Mary Enders Ludlow, of the township now known as Fanwood, born Dec. 15, 1828. The Enders family were of Holland descent, and the Ludlows of English ancestry. Mr. and Mrs. Scudder have had three children,—John Ludlow (deceased), Isaac Ludlow, and John William. Mr. Scudder has during his active life been a thrifty and successful farmer. He is a Democrat in politics, as were his ancestors before him.

He has held the offices of overseer of the poor of his township, collector, and member of the township committee, of which he was chairman during the late civil war, and rendered valuable aid in filling the quota of Westfield township. Both Mr. and Mrs. Scudder are members of the Westfield Presbyterian Church.

Robert French

The French family are of English descent, the great-grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, whose name was Richard, having been the father of a son Robert, who served in the war of the Revolution, where he endured much suffering. He married and had children, six in number,—Isaac, Abby, Charlotte, Abram, Jacob, and Mary. Robert French resided in Springfield township, as did also his ancestors. Here his death occurred on the 28th of February, 1830. His son Isaac was born in 1787, and spent his early life in Springfield and Westfield townships. He acquired the trade of a carpenter, and also followed farming occupations. He was married to Mary L., daughter of Jacob Davis, the latter having been for a period of fifty-one years an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Westfield. They had children, —Robert, Catherine D., Jacob D., and Mary D. Mr. French died in 1872, in his eighty-fifth year, and his wife survived until March 26, 1879. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Westfield, and much respected. Their son Robert, the subject of this sketch, was born Sept. 24, 1814, in Westfield, where the years of his boyhood were spent. He attended the village school, and at a later period began the labors incident to a farmer's life. After assisting his father for several years, he purchased the property which is his present home, and ultimately acquired possession of the homestead. He was, Nov. 2, 1836, united in marriage to Miss Phebe, daughter of James Mooney, of Westfield, to whom children were born,—Mary E. (Mrs. Joseph H. Clark), Isaac H., Richard N., James M., Josephine (deceased), and Robert M.

Mr. French was formerly a Democrat in politics, but was induced to change his views and become a Republican. He is not a seeker after office, and cares little for the honors of public life. He is a stanch Presbyterian, and has been for fifty years a member of the church at Westfield, of which he was for thirty-three successive years a trustee. Mrs. French's membership extends over the same period of time.

biographical sketch, was born in 1756, and married to Miss Sarah Hatfield, who became the mother of eight children, among whom was William, whose birth occurred Jan. 31, 1789, on the homestead in Westfield. Here his early life was spent, which was principally devoted to attendance at the district school of the neighborhood, or the more superior advantages of instruction offered at Westfield village. He determined later to follow the healthful pursuit of an agriculturist, and eventually succeeded the management of the farm. He was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Fitz Randolph, of New York City, and became the parent of children,—Stewart F., Hanson Cox, Sarah H., Kate B. (Mrs. High), and Emily S. Mrs. Clark having died, Mr. Clark was again married to Miss Mary, daughter of William Lewis, of Morristown, N. J., and had children,—Louisa C. (Mrs. George L. Richards) and Alfred V. William Clark, Jr., inherited the patriotic impulses of his father, and organized a company for the war of 1812. He was in politics a Republican, though in early life the platform of the Democratic party obtained his loyal support. Though averse to the responsibilities of office, he was for years justice of the peace of Westfield township. He was a Presbyterian in his religious convictions, for ten years a deacon, and for thirty years an elder, of the Presbyterian Church of Westfield. Mr. Clark was a man whose influence for good was very apparent in the community. All religious interests found in him a cordial sympathizer, and the cause of education a firm and active friend. He was conciliatory in temper, gentle in his nature, and possessed broad and charitable views on all matters of general import. The death of Mr. Clark occurred June 9, 1869, his wife having died previously. His daughters, Mrs. High and Mrs. Richards, are the only surviving children.

OLIVER M. PIERSON.

Three brothers named respectively David, William, and Sylvanus Pierson settled in Westfield township. The former, who was the grandfather of Oliver M., was by trade a tailor. He married and had children,—Theophilus, John, and a daughter who became Mrs. Wade. Mr. Pierson died and was buried in the township. His son John served with credit in the war of 1812, where he held a captain's commission. Theophilus was born Aug. 9, 1791, in Westfield, where his early life was passed. He decided upon the acquirement of a trade, and on removing to New York chose that of a mason, which he followed, after he had decided upon Savannah, Ga., as a place of residence. He married Nancy Mooney, of Cranford, and had one son, Oliver M.

Mrs. Pierson died April 1, 1821, and Mr. Pierson married Fanny Clark, of Westfield, whose children were Hattie C., Jonas, Edwin H., Eliza, John, Homer C., George H., and Theophilus S. Mrs. Pierson having died April 23, 1841, he was again married to Miss Abigail Connet, since deceased. Mr. Pierson located in Westfield, where his death occurred May 2, 1853.

Oliver M. was born Dec. 20, 1820, in New York, and has spent his life in Westfield. He at first attended school at Westfield village, and afterwards assisted his father on the farm, upon whose death he came into possession of the property. He was married Nov. 16, 1853, to Miss Sarah, daughter of William Cory. Their children have been Mary, David T., Mary C., George O., William R., deceased, Edwin, also deceased, and Hettie M.

Mr. Pierson is a Republican in politics, and although not an office-seeker, has been a member of the Township Committee of Westfield. He devotes his time and energies principally to farm labor.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Pierson are members of the Presbyterian Church at Westfield, as is also their daughter Mary.

ANDREW H. CLARK.

The progenitor of the branch of the Clark family represented by this biographical sketch was Samuel Clark, who emigrated from Herefordshire, England, to America about the year 1680, and settled on Long Island. After a brief period spent at the latter location he removed to Westfield, N. J., where his remaining years were passed. With him came two sons, one of whom was Thomas, whose son William was the father of Charles Clark. Among the children of the latter was William, a Revolutionary soldier, who was confined in the Old Sugar-House bastille in New York City, and was the last surviving prisoner of that memorable band. A more detailed sketch of William Clark will be found elsewhere in this volume. He had children, seven in number, of whom Andrew H., the eldest, was born July 12, 1786, at Westfield, where his early and later years were spent. He was married to Miss Rebecca, daughter of Enoch Miller, of Westfield, to whom were born children,—Sarah H. (Mrs. Squire Pierson), Mary (Mrs. Elias Mooney), Henrietta (Mrs. Samuel Gray), Caroline, who died in infancy; Richard Augustus, of Ohio; J. Lawrence, of Westfield; William A., of Trenton, N. J.; and Jabez, deceased.

Mr. Clark's early political associations were Democratic. These views were greatly modified during the late Rebellion, and the principles of the Republican party cordially indorsed by him.

He was actively identified with the public interests of Westfield, and filled at various times the offices of justice of the peace, commissioner of deeds, etc. He was also elected alderman for the borough of Elizabeth. Mr. Clark was an earnest Presbyterian in his religious views, a member of the church of that denomination in Westfield, and for forty years one of its ruling elders. He was a man of devout nature, zealous in all good works, and liberal to the extent of his opportunities.

The religious sentiment grew and strengthened with advancing years, and his seventy-seventh year found him actively engaged in Sunday-school work and the instruction of a large Bible class.

Mr. Clark was endowed with strong force of character, and this quality, associated with much native refinement and a high sense of honor, enabled him to exercise a salutary influence in the community. Added to this was a commanding presence, which won deference alike from friend and stranger.

The death of Andrew H. Clark occurred Oct. 19, 1862, in the fullness of years, after a life of great purity and signal usefulness.

LEVI CORY.

Joseph Cory, the grandfather of Levi, whose life is here briefly reviewed, was of Scotch ancestry, and resided upon the land now owned by his grandson. He married Margaret Darby, of Scotch Plains, and had children,—James, Jonathan, Levi, Joseph, Patty (Mrs. Dunham), Sarah (Mrs. Stites). Mr. Cory followed the pursuits of a farmer during his lifetime, and died on the homestead. He was a member as well as an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Westfield. William Cory, his son, was born in the township of Westfield. He learned the trade of a carpenter, but afterwards became a farmer, and died during the year 1866, aged eighty-two years. He married Charity, daughter of Jonathan I. Baker, of Westfield, and had children,—Keziah B., Margaret D. (Mrs. Ephraim Clark), Jonathan, Levi, Mary, Sarah (Mrs. O. M. Pearson), and Joseph. His son Levi was born July 2, 1819, on the ancestral property, where the years of his boyhood were spent. Westfield village at that time afforded opportunities for acquiring such an education as was usually given the children of the vicinity, after which he for a period of seven years assisted his grandfather upon the farm. He then returned to the land which is his present home, of which he became owner in 1867. He was, Feb. 12, 1851, married to Miss Harriet B., daughter of Job Clark, of Rahway. Mr. Cory has always devoted himself to the labors of an agriculturist, and has rarely engaged in business of an official or public character. He is a Republican in politics, and has served as member of the township committee of Westfield. He affiliates in religion with the Presbyterians, and is an elder of the church of that denomination in Westfield.

JOSEPH CORY.

The Cory family are of Scotch descent, four brothers having before the period of the Revolutionary war settled in New Jersey. One of these brothers served in the Canadian war, during which he contracted an illness that proved fatal.

Among them was John, the great-grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, who settled in Elizabeth, and whose son Jonathan located in Westfield township, on land now occupied by Joseph Cory. He married and had children,—Benjamin, Samuel, Joseph, Andrew, and three daughters. Samuel and Joseph served during the war of the Revolution, and were received with great demonstrations of joy on their return. The death of Jonathan Cory occurred on the farm which had been his lifetime residence. His son Benjamin was born Sept. 4, 1769, on the homestead, and married Miss Susanna, daughter of Christopher Denman, who had children,—Samuel, James M., a physician, Christopher, a clergyman, Benjamin, Joseph, Jonathan, Polly (Mrs. Freeland), Abby (Mrs. Brunner), and Susanna, who died in childhood. The death of Benjamin took place at his home on the 11th of April, 1851. The birth of his son Joseph, whose life is here briefly reviewed, occurred Sept. 2, 1809, and the years of his boyhood were spent under the ancestral roof. At the age of nineteen he repaired to New York and acquired the trade of a stone-cutter; but the advancing years of his parents soon after influenced his return, when he devoted his energies to the cultivation of the farm. He was in 1852 united in marriage to Miss Margaret, daughter of James Mooney, of Westfield, to whom was born one son, Joseph W., who resides at home. Mr. Cory is in politics a staunch Republican, having formerly fraternized with the Whig party. Mr. and Mrs. Cory and their son are members of the Presbyterian Church of Westfield, and actively devoted to its interests. The former was elected an elder in 1854, and still serves in that capacity.

SQUIRE PIERSON.

The Pierson family are of English extraction, and for successive generations have resided in Westfield township. The grandfather of Squire Pierson was Moses, who had among his children a son Squire, whose early life was spent in Westfield. Having determined in 1816 to explore the boundless resources of the great West, he ultimately located in Butler County, Ohio, then regarded, with a few exceptions, as the extreme point of Western civilization. He married a Miss De Camp, of French descent, and had children,—Moses, Squire, David, Stephen, Hiram, Mary, Sally, and Rebecca.

His son Squire, the subject of this sketch, was born in Westfield township, Oct. 1, 1796, where his early life was passed. At the period of his father's emigration to Ohio, and when nineteen years of age, he was apprenticed to Squire Marsh as a tailor. Previous to this he had acquired the rudiments of an education at the familiarly-known "Red School-House" in Cranford township, and at the houses of his patrons. He

Henry Baker

Henry Baker, the grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, was of Welsh descent, and an early resident of Westfield township. He married and had children,—Daniel, Jonathan I., William, Henry, Jeremiah, and Phebe, who became Mrs. Ludlow.

Daniel Baker was born June 3, 1753, in Westfield, where his life was spent. He served with credit during the whole period of the Revolutionary conflict, and was in 1775 honored with a corporal's position in his company. He was married to Margaret, daughter of Daniel Osborn, of Connecticut Farms, whose birth occurred July 14, 1760. They had children,—David O., born in 1785; Daniel, whose birth took place in 1790; Hedges, in 1792; Cyrus, born in 1795; Henry, in 1797; Elihu, in 1802; Mary, in 1780; Margaret, in 1784; Elizabeth, in 1789; Prudence, in 1794; Hannah, in 1800, and Electa, in 1804. Of this number, Daniel and Henry are living.

The birth of the latter occurred on the 18th of September, 1797, in Westfield township, where his growing years were spent. He was at the age of eighteen apprenticed to Dennis D. Tunison, of Rahway, as a wheelwright; but on concluding his period of service he returned to his early home and engaged in farming pursuits. He was married on the 27th of December, 1820, to Miss Mary Ann S., daughter of John and Phebe Radley, of Westfield. They have had seven children, as follows: Courtland R., born in 1821; David O., in 1823; Elihu, in 1825; Ann Martin, in 1827; Henry and James (twins), in 1834; and Jacob, in 1842. Of this number there are living Elihu, Henry R., and Ann M. (Mrs. Miller).

Mr. Baker has devoted his life to farming employments, and cared little for the excitements attending a more public career, though he has served as a member of the township committee of his township. In politics he was formerly a Democrat, but was induced to change his views, and later became a Republican.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Baker are Presbyterians in their religious belief, and have been since 1819 members of the Presbyterian Church of Westfield, in which the former was ordained an elder in 1832, and is now serving both as elder and deacon.

This venerable couple have entered upon the sixty-second year of their married life, and are now enjoying in their comfortable home a peaceful and happy old age.

A. M. Parkhurst

The grandfather of Mr. Parkhurst was Abram J. Parkhurst, who resided in Milburn, Essex Co., where he was both a farmer and a manufacturer of pasteboard. He was married to Miss Whitehead, of Essex County, and had children,—Jonathan, Ezra, Charles, David, and Abby (Mrs. James White). Mrs. Parkhurst having died, he married Miss Phebe Traphagen, and had children,—Abram J. and Sarah (Mrs. J. A. R. Simpson).

His son Ezra was born Feb. 22, 1799, at Milburn, where his life was chiefly spent.

He was united in marriage to Miss Mary E., daughter of Michel Meeker, of Connecticut Farms, and had children,—Charles T., born in 1830; Aaron M., in 1832; Almira, in 1823; Harriet, in 1824; Mary, in 1826; and Susan C., in 1828. Mr. Parkhurst succeeded to the business of his father, and established mills upon the Passaic River. In 1854 he removed to the Branch Mills, in Union township, where he conducted a paper manufacturing business until his death, which occurred Sept. 25, 1872. His son Aaron M. was born July 8, 1832, at Milburn, Essex Co., and devoted his boyhood to study, after which he became familiar with the business of paper-making, and assisted his father in the mills. He was married to Miss Emma, daughter of Samuel C. Smith, of Essex County, whose death occurred within a year of her marriage. Mr. Parkhurst was a second time married, to Miss Sarah, daughter of Jacob French, of Springfield, Union Co., to whom were born children,—Anna H., Sarah K., and Mabel B. Mrs. Parkhurst died March 23, 1880, and Mr. Parkhurst was, on the 28th of November, 1881, united to Miss Helen Louisa, daughter of Rev. Rodney Winans, of Westfield.

Both Aaron M. and Charles T. Parkhurst are engaged in the manufacture of pasteboard, and in a general milling business in Westfield township. In politics the subject of this biography is a Republican, but the cares of an increasing business prevent active participation in the excitements of political life. In religion Mr. Parkhurst espouses the tenets of the Presbyterian Church, being both elder and trustee of the church of that denomination in Springfield.

later purchased the house of Mr. Marsh, and having added more land made it his home during his lifetime.

He married March 30, 1817, Miss Abby, daughter of Charles Marsh, of Westfield, and had children,—Orren, Evert M., James T., Lyman H., Sarah Ann (Mrs. Muchmore), Mary Eliza (Mrs. Smith), Eveline (Mrs. Miller), and Harriet, who is deceased.

Mr. Pierson was in his political views an old-line Whig, and naturally espoused the principles of the Republican party on its organization. He served on the Township Committee of Westfield, but cared little for the distinctions of office, and seldom permitted his name to be used as a candidate.

The family have ever been largely identified with church interests, Moses Pierson having been a deacon of the Baptist Church of Scotch Plains, Union Co. Both Squire Pierson and his wife were members of the First Presbyterian Church of Westfield, in which the former had officiated as deacon and elder for a period of forty-six years.

Mr. Pierson filled a position of much influence in the community. In his business relations he was honorable, and governed by integrity in all his dealings. His judgment was unerring, and this fact in many instances caused his appointment as commissioner in the settlement of estates. In these matters his wisdom and integrity were conspicuous. He was largely instrumental in the improvement and adornment of Fairview Cemetery, and devoted much of his leisure to this object.

The death of Mr. Pierson occurred Dec. 23, 1878, and his portrait is contributed as a tribute of filial regard from his sons.

WILLIAM CLARK.

The ancestors of Mr. Clark were of English lineage, but the exact period of their emigration and the settlement of the family in New Jersey cannot be recalled. William Clark, the subject of this biographical sketch, was born in Westfield on the 17th of June, 1756. He at the age of seventeen entered the Revolutionary service, having been at his home weaving when the sound of British guns inspired his heart with patriotic impulses and impelled him to enroll his name as a defender of his country. Soon after the Hessians invaded the house, and ruin and devastation followed in their wake, the family residence having been speedily appropriated as the headquarters of Gen. Howe. Mr. Clark served until the declaration of peace, and, together with his brother Azariah, was confined a prisoner in the Old Sugar-House prison in New York City.

Mr. Clark was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Hatfield on the 8th of May, 1783, to whom were born children,—Andrew, whose birth occurred in 1786; William, born in 1789; Abigail, in 1790; Israel, in 1793; Job (1st), in 1796; Job (2d), in 1798; Betsey, in 1800; and Jabez, in 1802. The only survivor of this number is Betsey, who is still a resident of Westfield. Mr. Clark pursued the labors of an agriculturist during his lifetime, and displayed a praiseworthy ambition in the improvement and cultivation of his land. In his political predilections he was a Democrat of the Jeffersonian type, and ever eager for the advancement of the principles of his party. He was a staunch Presbyterian in his religious views, and one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church of Westfield, of which he was an early trustee, and both Mrs. Clark and himself members. He was averse to official honors, and declined many distinctions offered by his constituents. He, however, filled for years the office of justice of the peace with ability and discretion.

Mr. Clark was a gentleman of commanding presence, courtly and dignified in his demeanor, and affable in his manner. He possessed superior executive ability, was a marked exemplar of probity and honor, and in all business transactions manifested a soundness of judgment which made his opinions respected. His death occurred in the township of his residence Sept. 28, 1853, in his ninety-eighth year, and that of his wife Dec. 7, 1841, aged seventy-nine years.

MOSES TUCKER.

Three brothers of the Tucker family emigrated from England, the land of their birth, and settled respectively in Connecticut, on Long Island, and in New Jersey. Moses, who chose the latter location, was the grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, the spot he selected being in Union County, near the present city of Plainfield. He was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Ludlow, and had children,—Gideon, John, Moses, Cornelius, Henry, Susan, Phoebe, and Mary. Mr. Tucker was accidentally drowned in the vicinity of Elizabeth.

His son, Gideon Tucker, was born on the homestead, where his childhood was spent. At the age of fifteen he made New York his home, and having resolved upon a self supporting and independent career learned the mason's craft, which he followed successfully for a series of years. He married Miss Sarah, daughter of Charles Clark, of Westfield, and had two children, Moses and John. Miss Jenina Brevoort, of New York, became his second wife, to whom were born children,—Henry, George, Mary, William, Sarah, and Charles. The birth of Moses Tucker occurred in the city of New York Nov. 6, 1799, where his whole life was spent. After enjoying during his youth the advantages of the city schools, he on attaining his majority embarked in the hardware business, in which he was successfully engaged for a period of twenty years. Five years later he was elected president of the Jefferson Insurance Company, No. 50 Wall Street, which honorable and responsible position he filled until his death.

He was married Feb. 23, 1823, to Miss Anna E., only daughter of John Tucker, deceased. Their children are Sarah E., Mary Ann, John, William, Charles C., Anna E., Charles (2d), William (2d), Edward C., Alfred I., and Walter R., all deceased.

Mr. Tucker was in his political views for many years a Democrat, but subsequently espoused the principles of the Republican party. He was not a strong partisan, but supported candidates of probity and honor for official place irrespective of party. Though in no sense a public man, he filled for a term the office of alderman of New York City.

Mr. Tucker was in religion an Episcopalian, and a supporter of the worship of that denomination. His death occurred at his home in New York City November 23d, in his sixty-first year. His widow, who survives and contributes this memento of her late husband, is a resident of New York City.

CHAPTER L.

NEW PROVIDENCE.

Situation and Boundaries.—The township of New Providence lies in the extreme northwest part of Union County, being parts of the Passaic Valley and First and Second Mountain. The township originally belonged to Springfield township. In 1793, by an act of the Legislature, the inhabitants believing they would be better accommodated by being annexed to Springfield, this act was passed February 4th, providing "That all that part of the township of Elizabeth lying within the limits or boundaries herein described—that is to say, beginning where the line of the township of Springfield intersects the Passaic River; thence up said river to the line that divides the counties of Essex and Somerset; from thence on the line that runs between the two aforesaid counties until it comes to the head of the west branch of Green Brook; thence down said Green Brook on said line until it comes to where the east and west branches form a junction; thence up the east branch of said brook until it intersects the line of the township of Springfield at the northwest corner of the township of Westfield; thence on the line of the township of Springfield to the place of beginning—shall be and hereby is annexed to the township of Springfield."

This part of the township went under the name of Turkey until an act of the Legislature was passed, Nov. 8, 1809, when it was called New Providence, and erected into a township with the same bounds as mentioned, except on the Springfield line, which is thus described:

Beginning in the line that divides the township of Westfield and Springfield at the head of Green Brook; thence north twelve degrees and twenty minutes east to the south side of the road running from New Providence to Springfield and a little east of the dwelling of Amos Potter, Esq.; thence north forty-one degrees and fifty-five minutes west to the race of the saw-mill of Benjamin Bonnell, deceased; thence into the bed of the river Passaic, in the Morris County line; thence up the bed of said river, etc.¹

The boundary remained unaltered until the year 1869, when Summit township was taken from the northeast part, which left it about five miles long and two miles wide, bounded northeast by Summit township, southeast by Westfield township, south by Warren township, Somerset County, and northwest by Chatham and Morris townships, in Morris County. The Passaic River forms the western boundary.

Natural Features.—This oblong piece of territory, being parts of the First, Second, and Third Mountain Range, with its beautiful, picturesque valleys, contains an area of about thirteen square miles. Its formation and the outer slope and declivities of the First Mountain, along the ridges which form the dividing line from Westfield township, is of the trap rock, and many places rough and steep, forming ravines. Here the Green Brook takes its waters from the pond known as Felt's Lake, which covers many acres. The easterly slope of the Second Mountain is more abrupt, in many places with steep declivities, and presenting wild and picturesque scenery. It is covered with a heavy growth of hemlocks, cedars, oaks, hickories, and other trees, many growing to an immense size. On this easterly slope the village of Feltsville, formerly a busy manufacturing place, is located. The ascent up this Second Mountain is steep; the roads are covered with the debris of the drift-trap pebbles, which continue until we descend to the valley of the Third Mountain, known as the Passaic Valley, where the beautiful village of New Providence is located. Here we find an area of red shale and trap with some conglomerates, called the Morris County conglomerates, having a variety of tints colored by oxide of iron.

In this valley the soil is of a sandy loam, with occasionally the outcropping of red shales; for many miles through the valley there is no change. It contains many fine farms, the soil being naturally rich, easily cultivated, giving good crops of rye, wheat, and a general variety of vegetables. A large number of cattle and sheep are raised here. Fine orchards of apples, pears, and peaches are to be seen bearing choice fruit, and the forest trees of chestnut and hickory grow to a large size. As we go towards Union Village, in Somerset County, along the valley road (the Blue Hills, as they were called in the year 1690), the mountain range assumes a wider slope and is covered by a dense growth of timber until we leave the valley at the rise of Berkley Heights for Stony Hill, south towards North Plainfield township. Here we find a rough and abrupt declivity down the Second Mountain, large masses of trap rock, with a branch of the Green Brook running in the deep gorges which surround the Scotch Plains road. These public roads are kept in excellent condition with considerable expense, and are creditable to the road managers. In the extreme southerly part of this township the trap rock assumes a different crystalline strata, often forming columns jutting out of the hillside, and when loosened, form elongated cubes from one to five feet, four- and six-sided, presenting the appearance of having been lately smoothed by hand and having perfect edges, showing conclusively to the scientist that these mountains were much higher than at the present, and that these valleys were once under the influence of volcanic action.

¹ Bloomfield's Laws of N. J., p. 213.

In this beautiful mountain range, with its diversified scenery, can be seen fine farms with well-cultivated acres, having the appearance of thrift and contentment.

RIVERS AND STREAMS.—On the westerly side of New Providence township the Passaic River (at this point a mere mill-stream) finds its course flowing to the northeast and supplying many of the smaller mills until it reaches the city of Paterson, N. J., where manufacturing is carried on to a great extent. We find that Green Brook, which is in the valley of First and Second Mountains (being the easterly dividing line of New Providence township), is fed by numerous springlets, and at its head source Felt's Lake, called Blue Brook or Pond, near Peter's Hill.¹ There is a small stream, varying in depth, called the Salt Brook, of which mention is made as being historic at the time of the Revolutionary war. There are numerous springs of delicious water, some of them found nearly at the extreme elevation of the Second Mountain, but the most noted is the spring known as the "Cool Boiling Spring," upon the Bassenger farm, the water gushing up through a fine white sand. The other spring is known as the Sulphur Spring, upon the David H. Townley place. This is said to have been known as the Indian Spring,—the all-healing spring. On analysis made it was found to contain magnesia and iron, and is known as the Magnesian Sulphur Spring. The whole township is well irrigated.

Early Settlements.—There may have been settlers in New Providence prior to the year 1720, but there is no positive information of any at an earlier date. In 1720 came Peter Willcoxsie, John and Phebe Badgley from Long Island. Another account of Peter Willcoxsie says that he came from England, and there was surveyed to him by Joseph Morss, surveyor for the "Elizabethtown Associates," four hundred and twenty-four acres of land, lying along the east branch of Green Brook, called Blue Brook, and was known as Peter's Hill, now known as Feltville. This is in the easterly part of New Providence township. The first settlers located on the mountain because it abounded in heavy timber and game. It is said the first settler in the westerly part of this township was Daniel Vail, son of Isaac Vail, of Green Brook, near Plainfield. The early settlement of New Providence proper was in the year 1736-38. As we have stated, some few farms had been made previously, but at the latter date a second allotment of lands was made by the "Elizabethtown Associates," as many below the First Mountain began to move up and settle upon these allotments. The following list comprises the names of the first who came. They originally came from England, some few were from Wales and Scotland, while a number came from Long Island, who were descendants of the original colonists of New England. The earliest settlers were Jonathan Allen, Joseph Allen, John Badgley, James Badgley, Thomas Baker, Jr., John Bedell, Nathaniel Bonnell, William Broadwell, John Camp, Jonathan Carl, Jacob Carl, James Candwell, Elias Clark, Henry Connet, Daniel Day, Joseph Doty, Joseph Frazee, Jeremiah Hart, Uriah Hedges, Samuel Andrew, Anthony Littell, Jeremiah Ludlow, Jonathan Mulford, John Osborn, William Peirsons (Parsons), Benjamin Pettitt, John Pierson, Daniel Potter, Samuel Ross, Peter Rutan, Isaac Sayre, Ephraim Sayre, Richard Scudder, John Simpson, Aaron Thompson, Richard Valentine, Peter Willcoxsie, Edward Hedges, James Doty.

They were soon followed by others of the following names: Abner Bailey, Andrew Blanchard, Jacob Brittin, James Corey, Joseph Crane, Isaac Crane, William Crawford, Timothy Day, Philemon Dickin-son, Benjamin Force, Melancthon Freeman, Abraham Hendricks, Micah Howell, Uzal Johnson, David Lacy, Peter Lyon, Daniel Marsh, William Maxfield, Moses Miller, "Deacon Morehouse," "Lawyer Ogden," William Parrott, Andrew Prior, William Robertson, John Roll, Nathaniel Smith, John Totten, Kennedy Vance, Daniel Wood.

All these it is said came within the first forty years of the settlement; "and at the time of the Revolutionary war many more came up only for a short season."

These first settlers were religiously educated and inclined. From a record it appears that they not only tilled the land, clearing waste places and making homes for themselves, but held religious meetings prior to the time their first church was established. They were called the Turkey settlement on Long Hill, and went by that name until about the year 1809.

In a short account given of the drawers of the allotment of land it appears that Joseph Allen, Jr., drew No. 113; he married Sarah, daughter of Peter Willcoxsie (the family now spell the name Wilcox). Jonathan Allen, his father, owned one hundred acres, No. 28 of the Elizabethtown lots, surveyed above the First Mountain, where Joseph Allen afterwards lived.

Thomas Baker, Jr., emigrated from England with his father. He took part of a plot of ground, No. 50, of John Blanchard, March, 1738-39, of forty acres, and in 1761 he bought of William Maxwell lot No. 26, of ninety-nine acres, and also bought of Joseph Rolph and John Ocheltree lot No. 57, lying south of No. 50, and extending south to the Stony Hill road, and sold part of lot No. 57 to William Baker, and thirty-five acres adjoining Jacob Bedell to Jonathan Mulford, for his son, Cornelius Mulford, who lived upon it many years until he died.

¹ In 1734 named after Peter Willcoxsie.

Gabriel Baldwin (son of Ezekiel) removed from Connecticut Farms, north of the church. He married Rachel Littell, daughter of John or Henry Littell, of New Providence. He died in the eighty-sixth year of his age. Solomon Boyle emigrated from Ireland and married a French girl in this country. He purchased of the East Jersey proprietors six hundred acres of land west and adjoining the Berkley tract, a long piece between that tract and Passaic River. William Broadwell, Sr., drew lot No. 13 of the Elizabethtown survey, and probably built the house upon it by the brook where the Parsons family afterwards lived. He also drew lot No. 18, south of No. 13, where Isaac Meeker subsequently lived. Johannes Vancampen (in English called John Camp) owned between three hundred and four hundred acres, lots No. 50, 51, 52. Jonathan Carle had in 1729, adjoining Passaic River, 105 acres. James Colewell (spelled Cauldwell) came from Ireland in 1732 and settled here; he in the same year drew lot No. 30. Elias Clark owned lot No. 47. He married Betsey, daughter of Benjamin Clark, of Rahway, and had nine children. William Connet was deacon in the Presbyterian Church; owned land lot No. —, and died 31st August, 1771. Elias Coriell owned lot No. 1; he came from Piscataway township, Middlesex County, married Sarah Runyon, daughter of Richard Runyon, and had six children. Stephen Corwin lived between the mountains near Felville. He married Betsey Drew, daughter of George Drew, of Springfield township.

Elnathan Cory (sometimes spelt Corey) lived in a house where now stands the former residence of Rev. Waters Burrows. His wife's name was Hannah. He owned about two hundred acres formerly owned by Jacob Carle, and also about one hundred acres, No. 33 of the Elizabethtown lots, south of that tract. He died 8th October, 1766, in his sixty-fifth year. He left his lands to his five sons.

George Day came in 17— from Long Island.

The family of Daniel Dod came to New Providence, 1678. He was chosen deputy to the Provincial Assembly in 1692.

Joseph Doty came from the east end of Long Island, and owned part of lot No. 39 of the Elizabethtown lots on Stony Hill. He married Sarah Badgley, sister of John Badgley, and Peter Willcoxsie married the other sister, Phebe Badgley.

Thomas Hallock lived between the First and Second Mountains; he married Sarah Bedell, daughter of Moses Bedell.

Robert and Nehemiah, sons of Hezekiah Hand, removed from Westfield to New Providence about the year 1796.

Jeremiah Hart lived on the southeast corner of the forks of the road at the Presbyterian Church, New Providence. He was born 9th December, 1714, and died 17th November, 1749; his wife, Sarah, was born 11th June, 1718; they had four children.

Uriah Hedges owned lot No. 39. Joseph Doty owned part of said lot afterwards.

Charles Hole lived close by Blue Brook, between the mountains, and owned a large tract of land near Uriah Hedges and John Badgley.

David Lacy lived in a house west of the parsonage house, nearly opposite to Dr. Kent's. He married Martha Parrot, and had eight children.

John Littell was one of the freeholders of Elizabethtown, and obtained lot No. 6 of Corson's survey above the First Mountain, containing one hundred and ninety-six acres, adjoining and lying directly north of Peter Willcoxsie, a four-hundred-acre tract, surveyed 6th January, 1736-37.

Jeremiah Ludlow lived in New Providence, where James M. Morehouse lived. He died 1st August, 1790, aged ninety-one years.

Peter Lyon was probably a son of Ebenezer or Nathaniel Lyon, who are named in the list of the second generation of the "Elizabethtown Associates," admitted in 1699. He lived on Stony Hill nearly south of Littell's Bridge. He was born 1722, and died 23d September, 1781, aged sixty-two years. He married Joanna Clark, half-sister of Elias Clark; they had eight children.

Alexander Martin lived on the south side of Long Hill.

William Maxwell, son of John Maxwell, of Westfield, owned ninety-nine acres, and also a tract of land on Stony Hill.

Isaac Meeker (son of James) came to Turkey or New Providence in 1775, and settled on lot No. 18. He died 23d February, 1814, aged seventy-three.

Moses, son of Enoch Miller, of Westfield, married for his first wife Azuba Meeker, of Elizabethtown; second, Molly Riley, an Irish girl; third, Hannah, widow of Benjamin Bonnel. They lived on the borders of New Providence township, near Union village. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

Simeon Morehouse came up to this township from Elizabeth Town in the time of the Revolutionary war. He married Rebecca Meeker. Jonathan Mulford came April, 1740, "and bought of John Pierson four-score acres." His wife was Esther Conklin. John Noe came from Woodbridge, and lived on the extreme portion south of the township. He died 26th April, 1828, in his seventy-first year. Lewis Noe was brother of John, and lived near him. He died 5th April, 1838, in his seventy-third year. Ephraim Oakley was born 1700, and married Sarah —, who died the 9th April, 1761, in her fifty-second year. He died 3d April, 1761, and was buried in the New Providence churchyard. Smith Stratten Osborn came from Long Island, and owned land where Col. Israel Day lived. William Parsons, Esq., settled on lot No. 13. Matthias Parsons lived in Passaic Valley. John Pool lived on Long Hill. Benjamin Pettit, Esq., came about 1729, and purchased one hundred and five acres; he died in 1771. Samuel Potter came about the year 1734. Daniel Potter was a brother of Samuel, and owned lots Nos. 6, 26, 27 of the Elizabeth Town Associates. Abraham Price married Mary Anne Miller, daughter of Matthias Miller, and lived on Stony Hill. Jeremiah Raddin lived near Blue Brook, above Feltsville. Dr. John Rague lived and owned land in or near the village of New Providence. Zebulon Riggs had three sons. One of them, Preserve Riggs, of Mendham. Morris Co., had a son, Elias, born 1st April, 1770, who was the pastor of the Presbyterian Church. William Robison lived on Stony Hill about 1772. Nathaniel Roff lived in the Passaic Valley. Jonathan Buckman lived on Stony Hill, south of David Smalley, Esq. Peter Rutan owned two one-hundred-acre lots, Nos. 28 and 29, addition of the Elizabeth Town lots. David Samson lived on Long Hill; he had nine children. Ezekiel Sayer lived in 1785 on Stony Hill. Richard Scudder owned and lived on the farm of one hundred acres owned afterwards by John Littell, Esq. He also owned one hundred acres of the farm owned by the late Thomas O. Scudder. John Simpson came from Long Island and settled on lot No. 27, above the First Mountain. Ellis Squiers lived in New Providence. Jonathan Stevens lived where Samuel Squiers died. Ephraim Sutton lived on the Second Mountain west of William Allen's. Jacob Swain lived on Wolf Hill, near Union village. William Thomas lived on Stony Hill; he was a half-bushel maker. Aaron Thompson settled on lot 31 of the Elizabeth Town Associates. John Tilyou and Elizabeth Tucker lived on Stony Hill, in New Providence township. James Totten was probably the son of Sylvanus Totten, who lived in this township in 1765. Benoni Tremble lived on lot No. 61 of the Associates. George Townley lived on a farm in Passaic Valley. John Tucker married Catharine Line; he lived in the Stony Hill Valley. Daniel Vail lived on the extreme westerly limits of this township. Kennedy Vance resided where Samuel Squiers lived. Richard Valentine resided on the First and Second Mountain tracts of one hundred and eighty-four acres, lot No. 44; he also owned lot No. 35. John Williams' family lived in this township; he married Anna Spinning. He was born 10th August, 1768. Daniel S. Wood came to Passaic Valley about the year 1754.

The following genealogical or family sketches of some of these first settlers are taken from records and from statements made by some of the descendants of families now residing in this township. We give the different ways the names have been spelled, the first orthography being usually in the old manner of spelling them :

Ailward (Alivard), Henry, came from England and settled back of the Second Mountain in the Passaic Valley. He married a Miss Compton. They had three children,—David, John, and Henry. There are many of the name still in this township and in Morris County, N. J. Henry Alward, Jr., married Mary Cox, and had eight children. One of the grandchildren, Jonathan Pennington, who was born 21st July, 1812, graduated at Princeton College, studied theology, became a Presbyterian minister, married Catherine Fredenburg, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Fredenburg, of Somerville. They went to Western Africa as missionaries. He died in April, 1841, and she returned home.

Alling (Allen), John, was a man in humble circumstances, laboring by the day (bottoming chairs). His father, John, died intestate, 1685. (He was no relation to Samuel Allen, founder of the Newark family, who came from New Haven, Conn.) He was one of the Elizabethtown Associates in 1699. His sons, Jonathan and Joseph Allen, and perhaps a cousin, Daniel, who came to Turkey, now called New Providence, about the year 1671, or soon after. Jonathan owned one hundred acres (No. 28) upon the First Mountain, and some acres upon the Second Mountain afterwards owned by William Cory.

Baily (Bailey), Abner, was one of the earliest settlers in New Providence township. It is said that he came from Connecticut. He was a hatter by trade, and carried on the business in Passaic Valley. He married Margaret —, who died the 15th March, 1793, and for his second wife married a Miss Sarah Cochran, of New York. The record says that he died without children, Jan. 10, 1810. The name of Rev. Gamaliel Bailey, a Methodist clergyman, is mentioned in 1790, who preached in this section, then called the Elizabethtown Circuit. Again there is mentioned in 1664 one John Bailius, and also John Bayly, and are also mentioned as signers to the five hundred thousand acres bought of the Indians, and also again in contract with Governor Carteret for lots, and that he was one of the four patentees mentioned in this whole section. Abner may have been a descendant.

Balwin (Baldwin), Gabriel, lived in what was called Wade's Farms, and afterwards called Connecticut Farms, whence he moved to what was then called Turkey Hill, now New Providence township. He married Rachel Littell, who died Oct. 30, 1794, in her sixty-third year. He died —, aged eighty-six years. They had five children,—Mary, Susan, Nancy, Samuel, and David. Samuel Baldwin married 13th March, 1794, Johannah Squiers, and went to Ohio; Susan Baldwin married Nathan Halsey, of Parsippany; Nancy married Daniel S. Wood, son of Capt. Daniel S. Wood; David married twice two sisters, daughters of David Brant, by name of Phebe and Polly Brant.

Bebot (Bebout).—The name of the head of this family is not mentioned, but it is known that he came from Holland very early and married Mary Miller, sister of the Rev. Benjamin Miller, of the Baptist Church of Scotch Plains, and that he had two sons, John and Peter. Peter Bebout lived in New Providence, and married Dec. 1, 1767, Sarah Jewel, and had a son Ebenezer, who went to the West after arriving to manhood. For his second wife Peter Bebout married Sarah Darling, half-sister of William Parrot, Sr., and had nine other children,—Peter Bebout, Jr.; William, who married, 1st, Martha Tingley, 2d, Hannah Ogden, of Hanover, Morris Co.; Christian, who died at the age of eighteen years; Abigail, who married Isaac Potter, son of Col. Samuel Potter; Mary, married John Osborn, son of John Osborn; Martha, married 12th November, 1786, 1st, John Bedell, son of Jacob Bedell, and 2d, Luther Jones; Lewis, who died at the age of fifteen years; Stephen, who married Sally Cory, daughter of Elder Daniel Cory; and Nancy, who married, 1st, Simeon Dunn, 2d, Elisha Coriell, of Green Brook. Peter Bebout, Sr., died 13th January or 23d August, 1784. The statements differ. This family have lived in this township for over a century.

Bedel (Bedell), John, Sr., had a son, John Bedell, Jr., who was an elder in the church in Turkey (New Providence). He lived where Isaac Crane lived on the borders of the township. The lot No. 20 contained 114 acres, and No. 24 contained 100 acres. There also was an elder in this church by name of Jacob Bedell. The family is quite numerous. Jacob Bedell, son of John Bedell, married Avla Powers, and at his death, the 16th June, 1777, she married Capt. Jonathan Mulford. She died about 1803.

Bedford, Bradford (Bredford).—It is said that these three names are the same. I find that John S. Bradford was the son of Stephen Bedford, whose father's name was Timothy Bredford, or Bedford.

Bunnill, Bunell, Bollin, Bonul, Bonel, Bulen, Bunniele, and Bonnel.—Nathaniel came from Long Island (it is said there was one other family who came from Holland) to Elizabethtown, and was one of the Associates; from there he removed to Passaic Valley above Chatham, and there lived. He married Hannah Miller, of Westfield, and had seven children. Nathaniel Bonnel, the second son of Nathaniel the first, was born 1731, and died July, 1809. He married Elizabeth Allen, and had thirteen children. He was captain of the militia and a freeholder; and also in the list of ruling elders of the Presbyterian Church of New Providence, 1737, his name is recorded. He must have married the second time, but no children are named by this marriage. Nathaniel, the third by his first wife, born 3d day of June, 1756, married Martha Crane, daughter of Isaac Crane, and by this marriage there were eight children. He died 5th day April, 1814. His widow, Martha, died 20th June, 1846.

Boyle (Boyell), William, and Samuel Boyle are mentioned as early as 1696-97; most likely they emigrated from Ireland together. Solomon married a French girl in this county. He purchased of the East Jersey proprietors six hundred acres of land west, adjoining the Berkely tract in the Passaic Valley and along the Long Hill, crossing to the river. He had ten children. His son, John Boyle, built a grist-mill, saw-mill, and forge, which afterwards went by the name of Dunn's Mills. John Boyle married Hannah Frazee, and had five children. Solomon Boyle, Jr. (son of Solomon 1st), married Margaret Hull; they had eight children. Col. Solomon Boyle (fifth child of Solomon, Jr.) married Elizabeth Pierson, lived on the original tract of six hundred acres, and had only one child. There was a Dr. William Boyle (the sixth child of Solomon, Jr.); he married Maria Lafferty, and had three children.

Broadwell, William, first mentioned in 1677 as cordwainer at Elizabethtown, married Mary Morse. He is spoken of again in 1678 as being owner of land purchased from Luke Watson at Elizabethtown, William Broadwell, of Turkey (New Providence), must have been his son. He drew lot No. 13 of the Elizabethtown survey, and probably built a house upon it by the brook, where the Parson family afterwards lived. He also drew lot No. 18, south of No. 13, where Isaiah Meeker subsequently lived; he had three children. Josiah Broadwell is mentioned with William Broadwell, Sr., as a committee in 1757 to confer with the Rev. Jonathan Elmer respecting his settlement as a minister of the Presbyterian Church in New Providence. Previous to this "a scheme of a lottery in Turkey, in Elizabeth Town," was advertised Aug. 8, 1748, "to raise a sum of money [£152 5s. 0d.] for building a parsonage house, consisting of fourteen hundred and fifty tickets at 1s. each." The highest prize was £30. "The drawing to commence on or before the first Tuesday in November next, at the house of Benjamin Pettit, Esq., in Turkey, if filled by that time, under the care and management of Messrs. Benjamin Pettit, David Day, Elnathan Cory, John Badgley, Nathaniel Davis, and Josiah Broadwell."

William Broadwell's headstone is of the oldest date of any in the Presbyterian graveyard; it is of a red sandstone and in good state of preservation. The epitaph is as follows:

"Here lies ye body of William Broadwell, who departed this life March 11th, 1746, in the 64th year of his age."

Burrows, Waters, married Frances Meeker (daughter of James, son of Robert Meeker). They lived where Stephen Day lived. He died in 1815, aged sixty-nine years. He had a son, Rev. Waters Burrows, an esteemed clergyman in the Methodist Episcopal Church, who married a Miss Margaret Wood. He died in 1865, and is buried in the Methodist Cemetery.

Vancampen, Johannes (in English called John Camp). (There are other branches that spell the name De Camp.) He owned three hundred or four hundred acres of land, lots Nos. 50, 51, 52 of the Elizabeth Town Associates. He had a son by the name of Aaron Camp, who died in 1788, and his farm was divided among his children; and again the record has it that Aaron Camp died and his widow married Deacon William Connet. This may have been Aaron 2d, son of Aaron 1st.

Caldwell (Cauldwell), James, with his wife, Mary, emigrated from Ireland about the year 1732, when his son was six years old, and settled on Long Hill, on lot No. 30, addition of the Elizabeth Town lots, which he appears to have drawn. From tradition among the families it would seem, and I am led to believe, that James Cauldwell's wife was a Mary Gaston, sister of the father of Hugh Gaston, of Peapack, N. J. Hugh Gaston was brother of Capt. William Logan's wife, and probably also brother of the wife of Thomas Kirkpatrick, at Liberty Corner. His children called him "Uncle" Hugh Gaston, and the family claimed him kin to the Cauldwell family.

Cory (Cory). This family probably came from Southold, L. I.; one John Corey appears in 1700 as one of the memorialists. There were living in Southold, L. I., as early as 1662 Abraham, Jacob, and John Corey, and likely these three were brothers, and from this branch came the family of Coreys in this vicinity. Elnathan is made mention of in 1748. He lived in a house where now stands the residence of Rev. Waters Burrows. His wife's name was Hannah. He owned about three hundred acres of land; part was of lot No. 33 of the Elizabeth Town tract. He died the 8th October, 1766, in his sixty-fifth year. His headstone is still to be seen in the Cory lot in the Presbyterian burial-ground, well preserved. His wife died 24th January, 1785, and is buried in the same plot. He left his land to his five sons. The family tradition is interesting. Many of his children have settled not only in this State but in the West and South, where a large number of their descendants are to be found. Joseph Cory, his son, lived in 1775 in a house that stood in William Kindell's orchard, south of Benjamin Pike's house. John Cory, the grandson of Elnathan Cory, married, 15th June, 1774, Rebecca Rainond, and went with the militia to Ticonderoga during the Revolution war, and there died. George Cory, the eighth child of Ebenezer, married Rachel Price. He had ten children. William Cory, his fifth child, born 13th July, 1802, married Harriet Laforge, who was born 4th August, 1802, daughter of Abraham Laforge, of Somerset County, N. J. They have had four children,—Morrell Cory, born 1st August, 1828, who resides in New Providence, and physician there. He is considerable of a writer, and is now collecting the Cory family history. Mary Elizabeth Cory (who married Charles Ulrichs), born 31st August, 1835; William Ryckbeck Cory, born 8th April, 1837, resides in Camden, N. J.; and Apollos Elmer Cory, born April, —, resides in New York State. William Cory was killed while helping to remove a building, one of the timbers falling upon him, in the year 1873. He desired that he should be buried where the old church stood in the Methodist cemetery, just under the altar, which has been done by the family. His grandson, the only son of Dr. A. M. Cory, an estimable and beloved young man, lies near by his grave. The whole community were deeply affected by his early death. There is erected a fine block of Quincy granite, with the following epitaph:

"Cornelius Leveridge, son of Dr. A. M. & E. J. Cory, Born July 28, 1856, Died Oct. 21, 1875.

He said, Morality is a social Duty; Salvation is only in Jesus."

Day, George, came to New Jersey from Long Island and moved into this valley. The family are quite numerous throughout this township. David Day, Esq. (son of George Day), owned a farm where Peter Hill, William Crane, and John Littell lived. He sold fifty acres to Jacob Bedell. He had five daughters but no sons.¹ The Rev. James Caldwell, who was murdered by Morgan during the Revolutionary war, married Hannah Ogden, sister of Stephen Day's wife, Jemima Ogden, from whom a large family have descended. The following epitaph is in the Methodist Cemetery of the "Rev. Mulford Day, Born April 8, 1801, Died June 26, 1851."

He was the son of Capt. Stephen Day, of the militia during the Revolutionary war, and who did good service for his country. Rev. Mulford Day was a member of the New Jersey Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a useful and devoted minister of the gospel.

Note.—The Rev. James Caldwell, the father of Esther, the wife of the Rev. Robert Finley, D.D., was shot by a soldier standing as a sentinel at Elizabeth Town Point, the 24th November, 1781. (The sentinel was hung for the act.) He left nine children. His wife was shot the 25th of June, 1780, by one of a party of British passing through Springfield. The children, nine in number, were taken to the house of Stephen Day, Esq., whose wife was a sister of Mrs. Caldwell, where O. Day now lives.

De Haert (Hart), Jeremiah, lived on the southeast corner of the forks of the road at the Presbyterian Church at New Providence. He was born 9th December, 1714, and died 17th November, 1749. His wife, Sarah, born 11th June, 1718. They had four children. This is the branch of family the Harts in this valley are from.

Hole, Charles, came about the year 1763; lived close by the Blue Brook (Feltville); he owned a large tract of land near and adjoining Uriah Hedges, John and James Badgley. The family at one time were quite prominent in this township, and a large number of his descendants are now in the West (none of that name reside in this township now). He had a son, John Hole, who was one of the first physicians here, who married for his first wife Hannah Clark, and his second Mercy Ludlow, daughter of Jeremy Ludlow; they went to Ohio. The following epitaph is to be seen in the old burial-ground of the Presbyterian Church:

¹ Little's Passaic Valley.

"H.
Mary, Daughter of
Dr. John Hole and Maassee
Hole, Died July ye 12, 1787,
Aged 6 years, 16 Days.
A drop of fore long time i bore
Forfitions vere in vain
Till Gode aloof did hear my moan
And ease me of my pain."

Littell, Nathaniel, was son of David, son of Samuel, son of John, son of George, who emigrated from London, England, to Newbury, Mass., it is supposed in the year 1635. Nathaniel Littell, Esq., married Mary Caldwell, daughter of William Caldwell, son of James, who emigrated from Ireland in 1732. He bought the lot in 1786 of John Bedell, on which he built his house in 1787, where his son John lived, and where he kept a store till he died, the 18th February, 1811, aged fifty-eight years. He was a justice of peace, an elder in the Presbyterian Church of New Providence. Mary, his wife, was born 14th February, 1757, and died 8th January, 1823. They had nine children,—John, Hugh, Polly, Aaron, Luther, Nancy, Betsey Thompson, Huldah, and David Caldwell Littell. Their second son, Hugh, born 3d September, 1781, married 22d January, 1814, Susan W. Scudder, daughter of Dr. Benjamin R. Scudder, son of Richard Scudder. He was a master-mason in New York, was engaged in the erection of ten brick houses, when, on the 9th of November, 1822, he was ascending a ladder to the upper story of one of them, lost his balance, and fell to the curbstone of the street, broke in his skull, and died immediately. He had no children.¹

John Littell, first son of Nathaniel, son of David Littell, was born 28th November, 1779. He married the 6th May, 1809, Miss Mary Conklin, daughter of William Conklin, Esq., of Basking Ridge. He lived where his father did, in Passaic Valley, near Littell's Bridge, and with his brother Luther kept a store from 1811 to 1828, when he dissolved partnership, and he continued the store alone till 1838, when he sold out the goods to Mr. Jonathan Valentine, who continued it till 1839.

He was twice elected to the Legislature, viz., 1837 and 1838; was appointed justice of the peace and also judge of the court in 1814, and appointed justice of peace in 1828, and continued by reappointments till the year 1848; was then again elected under the new constitution, and was in 1849 appointed by the Legislature a commissioner of deeds, and by successive appointments continued many years in that office.

He was elected and installed an elder in the Presbyterian Church in 1835, and was appointed one of the delegates of the Presbytery of Elizabeth Town to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in 1835 at Pittsburgh, and in 1840 and 1846 at Philadelphia, and 1851 at St. Louis.

Mr. Littell was considerable of a writer, and many interesting incidents are told by the present generation of the olden time that he had told in years past of this early settlement. For many years arranging and compiling his genealogy of the early families, called by him "Family Records or Genealogies of the Passaic Valley (and vicinity) above Chatham, with their ancestors and descendants as far as can now be ascertained, by John Littell. Published at Stationer's Hall Press, Feltsville, N. J., David Felt & Co., Stationers and Printers, 1851."

This volume is an octavo, in cloth, of 504 pages, including an appendix. This genealogical work has now become scarce. The edition is exhausted, bringing a large price. Those families who possess it will under no consideration part with the work.

Mr. Littell was a gentleman of the olden times, looked up to by this community. Many acts of benevolence and kindness are recorded, many admonitions to the erring and to the community at large. He was respected and loved, and in death lamented.

In the Littell family plot in the burial-ground just back of the Presbyterian Church stands a white marble tablet, on which is inscribed his epitaph:

"John Littell,
Born Nov. 28, 1779,
Died Feb. 18, 1854."

The following is taken from his genealogical work, arranged by himself:

"John Littell (1st child of Nathaniel) and Mary Conklin had children:

"1. William Conklin born 15th April, 1810, and died 27th September, 1813.

"2. Mary, born 29th February, 1812, married, 25th July, 1838, Jonathan Valentine, son of Peter D. Valentine, and had children: 1, Samuel Ratan; 2, Luther Littell; 3, Eliza Littell; 4, William, who died in infancy; 5, John, who died in infancy; 6, Mary Abigail.

"3. William, born 10th October, 1815, married, 26th October, 1836, Mehetabel Bonnel, daughter of Jonathan C. Bonnel, son of Nathaniel Bonnel 3d. He keeps a store at the Summit of the Morris and Essex Railroad, and is postmaster there.

"4. Eliza, born 16th December, 1815, married, 9th March, 1842, James K. Hurin, a merchant of Lebanon, Ohio, and went there and died 19th May, 1843, leaving a young child named Eliza, who died at three months old, and he again married 5th June, 1845, Cynthia Halsey.

"5. Harriet, born 14th November, 1817, married, 16th May, 1848, John T. Wilcox, son of Jonathan M. Wilcox, son of Levi, and had a son George. He kept store in New Providence village.

"6. Susan, born 27th February, 1821, and married, 1st November, 1857, Charles Whitaker, son of Deacon Stephen Whitaker, of Cleveland, Ohio, and lives there.

"7. John, born 30th January, 1822, married, 24th September, 1851, Deborah Hall, born 24th December, 1821, daughter of Jonathan A. Hall, of Penn Yan, N. Y.

"8. Luther, born 21st April, 1824, graduated at Princeton College 25th June, 1844; studied theology at the Princeton Theological Seminary, and was licensed to preach 4th October, 1849, by the Elizabethtown Presbytery, and was ordained to preach the gospel, and installed over the church at Mount Hope, Orange Co., N. Y., the 25th September, 1850, by the Presbytery of Hudson.

"9. Huldah Rebecca, born 3d June, 1826, married, 2d May, 1850, to

¹ Little's Passaic Valley, p. 246.

John Thomas, of Hamilton, Butler Co., Ohio, and went there. Mr. Thomas was born 20th July, 1822, is a lawyer, a son of the Rev. Thomas Thomas, a native of Wales, who graduated at Oxford, England.

"10. A daughter not named, born 16th January, 1830, and died the same day."

Jeremiah Ludlow lived in New Providence, where James M. Morehouse lived. He died 1st of August, 1764, aged sixty-seven years. His widow died 12th March, 1790, in her ninety-first year. They had two children, from which sprang this numerous family.

Col. Cornelius Ludlow, the second son, married Catherine Cooper. He was first major (lieutenant-colonel) in the Morris County battalion, Jan. 13, 1776; a major in Col. Martin's battalion, Heard's brigade, June 14, 1776; lieutenant-colonel again of Eastern Battalion, Morris, May 23, 1777; resigned Nov. 13, 1777, disability. He had also a son Benjamin, who became major-general of the militia of New Jersey. The ancestors of the present Governor Ludlow, of New Jersey, came from this township, and Col. Benjamin Ludlow was his grandfather. He is buried in the graveyard of the Presbyterian Church. His epitaph reads:

"In memory of General Benjamin Ludlow, who died Jan. 27, 1817, in the fifty-fourth year of his age."

He was for many years judge of the court of Morris County, and was several times elected to the Legislature as member of the General Assembly. He married Eleanor Harris, and by her had eleven children. His wife died 4th September, 1819, in her forty-eighth year. His son Cornelius, who married Julia Anne Disborough, of New Brunswick, was also justice of peace and judge of County Court of Morris County. He had five children,—George, Jane, and three others. He died 24th November, 1836. 2d. Israel, born 1796, and died 21st December, 1819, unmarried. 3d. Mary, who married Dr. John W. Craig, of Plainfield, and died in 1846, without children. 4th. Martha, born 1801, and died 17th November, 1802. 5th. Susan, born 1803, and died 27th March, 1823, unmarried. 6th. George Harris, born 1805. He was successively in public offices. 7th. Martha, the second child by that name, married her cousin, George H. McCarter, 17th November, 1840; she died in 1845, without children. 8th. Eliza, born 1809, and died 19th March, 1838, unmarried. 9th. Charlotte, born 1810, died 22d July, 1830, unmarried. 10th. Eleanor, born 181—, and died 4th March, 1849, unmarried. 11th. Benjamin, born 8th August, 1814, and died the 17th November following.

Capt. Daniel S. Wood came from Long Island to Passaic Valley about the year 1754, and learned the blacksmith trade with a Mr. Moore. Mr. Wood, when he became of age, bought the farm of Mr. Moore, and set up business for himself, and lived on the farm till his death, which occurred the 8th day of February, 1832, aged ninety-one years. The farm is part of lot No. 20 of the Elizabeth Town lots, surveyed in 1736–37, above the First Mountain. He married Mary Potter, of Hanover, and had two children, who died young, and his wife died 18th February, 1768. He then married Sarah Johnson, sister to Uzel Johnson; she died 12th April, 1806, in her fifty-sixth year. He had nine children,—1st, John, who died young; 2d, Sally; 3d, Dacia; 4th, Daniel; 5th, Joseph; 6th, Samuel; 7th, Elizabeth A., who married Capt. Stephen Day, son of Benjamin Day, Esq., as his second wife; 8th, Margaret Williston, who married the Rev. Waters Burrows, son of Waters Burrows; 9th, David, who married Sarah Bonsal, of Spring Valley, Morris Co., N. J. He kept a grocery in Newark, N. J., and had four children.

Mention is made of John Carle, son of Jacob Carle, who lived on Long Hill, on the five-hundred-acre tract, which was divided between him and his brother Jonas. He was a justice of peace, a judge of the court, and several times a member of the Legislature of the State, and in 1783 was a member of the Privy Council. He married Providence Layton, and had three children,—Jemima, Sally, and John Carle (2d), who became a Presbyterian minister.

New Providence ceased to have any connection with the old township of Elizabeth Town Feb. 4, 1794, they believing they would be better accommodated by annexation to Springfield township, but it was not until the year 1809 that they became a distinct township. There is an area of about six thousand five hundred acres in the township.

Civil Organization.—This township did not until April 13, 1840, hold an election by ballot. Aaron Doty served as moderator at this election. There were polled at this time 140 votes, of which the Whig ticket had 73 votes and the Democratic ticket 67 votes. The Whigs carried the election by 6 majority. Daniel H. Wood had 72 votes, and was elected town clerk. Abraham Lockwood had 71, and was elected judge of election, and Dayton Badgley and Stephen Marshall were elected surveyors of highways. The pound-keeper elected was John Wilson. School committee, John Little, John S. Smith, and Amasa Denny. The first overseers of the highway elected by ballot were Benjamin Weed, John Little, Jonathan Potter, John Marshall, John Stephenson, Noah Willcox, John Wilson, John T. Wilcox, William Moore, Israel B. Long, Amos Morehouse, William Littell, Matthias Osborn. The assessor was Jonathan Valentine, and collector, John S. Smith.

The first grand jury men elected in this township were Amos Potter and Nathaniel Bonnel. The members of Legislature, John Littell, Jonathan Valentine (he also was surrogate of the county), Stephen Day, Jr., Daniel H. Noe.

The following have been justices of the peace:

John Littell, 1845–53.
John Wood, 1848–58.
John Valentine, 1845.
Israel O. Maxwell, 1879.
Simon Peter Debbie, 1879–80.

John Noe, 1858.
William Littell, 1860.
Jacob B. Maxwell, 1861.
William A. Ostrander, 1867.
Joseph C. Noe, 1874–79.

TOWN CLERKS.¹

Elias Runyon, 1810-12.
 Luther Littell, 1813.
 Jotham Potter, 1814-23.
 Peter D. Valentine, 1824-25.
 Erasmus D. Crossfield, 1826-28.
 Henry W. Tuttle, 1829.
 Apollas M. Elmer, 1830-33.
 Eugene S. Doughty, 1834-38.
 Henry W. Tuttle, 1849.
 Daniel H. Wood, 1840-41.
 Jonathan Valentine, 1842-43.
 John J. Wilcox, 1844-46.
 Jonathan Valentine, 1847.
 John Littell, 1848.
 John N. Doughty, 1849-50.
 Joseph W. Crane, 1851.
 George B. Ayres, 1852-53.
 Elias R. Morehouse, 1854.

John S. Vankirk, 1855.
 Israel O. Maxwell, 1856-59.
 John N. Doughty, 1860.
 John D. Martin, 1861-62.
 Maline M. Bonnel, 1863.
 Phillemont Tompkins, 1864-65.
 John M. Wilcox, 1866-68.
 William F. Meeker, 1869.
 John M. Wilcox, 1870.
 Edward Barnes, 1871.
 John Wood, 1871.
 Edward Barnes, 1872.
 William Stavers, 1873-76.
 Peter T. Wood, 1877.
 Samuel R. Valentine, 1878.
 Peter T. Wood, 1879-81.
 (Complete list.)

ASSESSORS.

Cornelius Mulford, 1810.
 Joseph Line, 1811.
 Coraelius Mulford, 1812-20.
 Luther Littell, 1821-23.
 Jonathan M. Wilcox, 1824-28.
 Levi Clark, 1829.
 Luther Littell, 1830-31.
 Jonathan M. Wilcox, 1832.
 Levi Clark, 1833-37.
 John Lyon, 1838.
 Jonathan Valentine, 1839-40.
 Jonathan M. Wilcox, 1841.
 Daniel S. Clark, 1842.
 Almond D. Atwood, 1843.
 Jonathan Valentine, 1844.
 Samuel Clark, 1845.

Stephen Day, Jr., 1846-48.
 Jonathan M. Wilcox, 1849-51.
 Joseph C. Noe, 1852-53.
 Stephen Day, Jr., 1854.
 Joseph C. Noe, 1855-56.
 Amos Potter, 1857-59.
 William Kendall, 1860-62.
 William R. Kendall, 1863-65.
 Amos Potter, 1866-68.
 Joseph C. Noe, 1872.
 Jonathan M. Wilcox, 1873.
 William Crane, 1874-75.
 Israel O. Maxwell, 1876-77.
 Joseph C. Noe, 1878.
 John Wood, 1879-81.

COLLECTORS.

Stephen Day, 1810.
 Stephen Day, 1824.
 Stephen Day, 1827.
 Stephen Day, 1829.
 Amos Wilcox, 1831.
 Daniel S. Clark, 1834-35.
 John S. Smith, 1840-41.
 John Wood, 1844-46.
 Daniel R. Valentine, 1849.
 Daniel R. Valentine, 1853-54.
 William Valentine, 1856-57.
 John T. Wilcox, 1859.
 Jacob B. Maxwell, 1863-64.
 John T. Wilcox, 1868-70.
 Elias R. Morehouse, 1875-77.

Daniel S. Clark, 1811-23.
 Daniel S. Clark, 1825-26.
 Charles H. Jackson, 1828.
 Charles H. Jackson, 1830.
 Charles H. Jackson, 1832.
 Apollas M. Elmer, 1836-39.
 Stephen Day, Jr., 1842-43.
 John T. Wilcox, 1847-48.
 Daniel H. Wood, 1850-52.
 Maline M. Bonnel, 1855.
 Maline M. Bonnel, 1858.
 Maline M. Bonnel, 1860-62.
 John A. McEachson, 1865-67.
 Joseph C. Noe, 1874.
 William E. Sanson, 1878-81.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS

Levi Clark, 1840-42.
 Apollas M. Elmer, 1840.
 John Littell, 1841, 1843-45.
 Jotham Potter, 1842, 1846.
 Isaac L. Wilcox, 1843.
 Henry Wilcox, 1844-47.
 Jotham Potter, 1847-48.
 Jonathan Valentine, 1848-49.
 Nathaniel Bonnel, 1850.
 Amos Potter, Jr., 1849-51.
 Stephen Day, Jr., 1850-52.
 John Wood, 1852-53.
 John Wood, 1853.
 John J. Wilcox, 1853-54, 1872-73,
 1879-80.
 Ezra Wilcox, 1854-56.

William Kendall, 1855-56.
 John S. Clark, 1856-57.
 Daniel H. Noe, 1857-58.
 Daniel R. Valentine, 1858-59.
 Jacob D. Mulford, 1859-60.
 Israel Doughty, 1860-61.
 Nathaniel Bonnel, 1861-63.
 Israel O. Maxwell, 1862-64.
 James C. Pitts, 1864-65.
 Maline M. Bonnel, 1865.
 Jonathan M. Murr, 1866-67.
 Isaac Meeker, Jr., 1866-67.
 John W. Clark, 1868-69.
 W. A. L. Ostrander, 1870-71.
 Coraelius A. Runkle, 1874-81.

The name of this township was changed from Turkey in 1778. The cause of this change is worthy of mention. Several years previous to this date, while the people were assembled in their unfinished house of worship, the beams of the gallery, only loosely covered, gave way, precipitating amidst falling boards and timbers that part of the congregation which were seated above upon those who were below, and all so suddenly as to afford no time to retreat or to make preparation for the event. Yet no one was seriously injured. This the people considered as a remarkable interposition of Providence for their preservation, and in pious remembrance of it resolved that this township and (church) should be called NEW PROVIDENCE.

The population of New Providence township from census report is 782; New Providence, about 500; Stony Hill and Feltville, 282. The whole number of votes in the township in 1853 was 182.

The township, April 8, 1844, was a tie in some of the offices, and the Township Committee broke the tie between John Littell and Israel Doty by the appointment of John Littell as chosen freeholder.

Villages and Hamlets.—New Providence is the largest village in this township, and was settled prior to 1794. It was formerly quite a business place. Hatteries, shoe-factories, and tanneries were carried on quite extensively. It contains at the present two churches (Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal), a large new school building which cost over ten thousand dollars, two blacksmith-shops, two grist-mills, one scroll and fancy wood mill, a tavern, two stores, post-office, and about seventy dwellings. Henry F. Barrill, Esq., has a fine collection of geological specimens and many fine specimens in natural history. He is the Third District school clerk of the township. The roads surrounding the village are kept in excellent condition, and with the fine hills surrounding the village make it quite picturesque and pleasing. The Passaic River passes in the northwesterly part of the town. Many of the old historic homes of the first pioneer settlers can be seen, and many of the same name, descendants of these families, still own and live here, tilling the same farms. The village proper contains a population of about 500 inhabitants. The names of the first who kept houses of entertainment (taverns) are, as far as can be learned, as follows:

Samuel Totten,² a brother of James Totten, who lived a little south of the corner store, south of the Presbyterian Church. He, it is believed, was the first tavern-keeper. He died the 25th of June, 1775; his widow died March 17, 1790. They had three children, —first, Samuel Totten, Jr., who married 9th of June, 1785, Martha Tuttle; second, Martha Totten, married 31st of July, Joseph Day; third, Jonathan Totten, married 15th of October, 1792, Esther Wood, daughter of Jeremiah Wood. He died 24th of February, 1837, aged sixty-eight years. We have found that Esay

¹ There are no records to be found earlier than the year 1810, they having been mislaid or destroyed. The list of those who enlisted and served as volunteers in the army during the Rebellion is not to be found.

² Passaic Valley.

Osborn kept tavern for some years, and was followed by Henry Schareman, a relative of Samuel Totten, and John Yeager, Nathan Van Kirk, Isaac Munn, Mrs. Creamer, Septimus Wilson; Isaac Munn (again for the second time), Augustus Wilson, Henry Agents, Alex. Allen, James Smith, Mrs. Munn, Julius Y. Bird, Augustus Wilson (for the second time), Mrs. Allen, and Bradford Jones, Jr., who now keeps a temperance hotel.

Among the shoe manufacturers was Elisha Jolley, who carried on the business of cordwainer, and also sold rum. He married Frances Tucker, daughter of Joseph Tucker, who lived near Union village. They had seven children. He was the son of Richard Jolley. Lloyd Ferris and Ezra Williams also carried on the manufacture of shoes.

John Little, the first son of Nathaniel, son of David, was one of the first store-keepers. He, with his brother Luther, kept a store from 1811 to 1828, when they dissolved partnership, and he continued the store alone till 1838, when he sold out the goods to Jonathan Valentine, who continued it till 1839.

The present store, kept by John T. Wilcox, was built in the year 1830, but prior to this Ezra Williams kept a store nearly opposite to the present one, some thirty or more years ago, which is now torn down. The present store has before this been occupied by Peter D. Valentine, Jonathan Valentine, Benjamin D. Lovell, Daniel R. Valentine, together with John T. Wilcox, Nathaniel and Maline M. Bonnell, and again by David R. and Samuel R. Valentine, and is now carried on by John T. Wilcox.

The other store, just above on the next block to the east on the same side, has been occupied by the following merchants: D. S. Wood, D. H. and John Wood, Benjamin Harris, M. M. Bonnell and Israel O. Maxwell, McEachron & Tompkins, James M. Morehouse, William Stavers, Daniel R. and Samuel Valentine, D. R. Valentine, John Brown (who instituted a cash system in New Providence), Mary J. Valentine, George W. Seamon, Philemon Tompkins, James W. Hozov, and Henry Blackford, the present proprietor.

The postmasters have been John Wood, Israel Maxwell, and John T. Wilcox, the present postmaster. The mail before this time was carried by stages, which passed through the village from Basking Ridge to Elizabeth Town Point, and was the general passenger route to the steam ferry at that place. Among the first were Patrick Matthews and David Ayres as stage-drivers to New York; the distance was sixteen miles to Elizabeth Town Point. An order of Sons of Temperance was formed in the year 1847, and is still in existence. The depot, called the New Providence station, is just outside of the township, on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. It has been established but a few years. A branch road, formerly called the West Line, now to be completed to the Delaware River, is now known as the Delaware and Passaic Railroad. There are two depots, called the Murry Hill and West Summit, for the village proper.

STONY HILL.—Nearly south in New Providence township, upon the Second Mountain, is a small settlement, mostly Germans, who till the soil, raising fine crops of wheat and rye, and orchards of apples, pears, and peaches, choice fruit for market. There is a church, called the St. Mary's Roman Catholic, also a store and brick-yard. In the valley below are some fine residences. This is considered a very healthy location, and the views from these hills are picturesque, and for many miles in Morris County villages and hamlets can be seen. A depot called Berkley Station is just in the valley, on the Delaware and Passaic Railroad. Most of the roads are kept in good condition. Large quantities of small trap-rock pebbles cover the ground, from which the hill takes its name. Among the first settlers here was James Marshall, son of James Marshall, of Rahway, N. J. He married Phebe Marsh, also of Rahway, and had six children,—Mary, who married Peter Allen, son of Joseph Allen, of Washington Valley; 2, Nancy, married March 10, 1790, William Allen, brother of Peter; 3, James, married Mary Moore, daughter of Isaac Moore, of Passaic Valley, lived and died at Pater-son; 4, Daniel, married Polly Frasee, daughter of Jacob, on the First Mountain, and went to Ohio; 5, Jane, married David Brant, of Morris County; he left her and went to Ohio, and she lived and died in New York; 6, John, born 1789, married Hannah Wilcox, born 1795, daughter of Daniel Wilcox; he lived on Stony Hill, on his father's place, and had three children,—Stephen, Deborah, born 1816, and May Jane, born 1822.

Joseph Doty came from the east end of Long Island, and owned part of lot No. 39 of the Elizabethtown lots in Stony Hill Valley, on which he lived. He married Sarah Badgley, sister of John and James Badgley, and had five children. George, his son, owned a mill. He lived on Stony Hill. He married Sibbe Howell. His brother, John Doty, son of Joseph Doty, who married Sarah Blatter for his first wife, and Sarah Clark for his second wife, daughter of Daniel Clark, lived west of his father's house, Stony Hill, and had nine children. Joseph Doty was one of the pioneer settlers on Stony Hill in the year 1730.

Jonathan Ruckman lived on Stony Hill south of David Smally's. He married Sarah Allen, daughter of Joseph Allen, Jr., and had seven children: 1, Stephen Ruckman; 2, Nathan, born 1777; 3, David; 4, Levi; 5, Jonathan, who died a young man, unmarried; 6, Phebe, married John Cory; and 7, Joseph, who married Mary Alward, and for his second wife Sally Kelly, of Mount Horeb, N. J., and had seven children.

FELTVILLE.—This was once known by the name of Peter's Hill, near Blue Brook; was settled by Peter Wilcox's in 1720, and belonged to this family of Wilcoxes until Mr. David Felt, of New York, purchased it for manufacturing purposes. It consisted of some six hundred acres. He erected a large mansion for his residence, wide avenues were laid out, shade-trees were planted, and some forty houses, store-house, church, and school-house, besides large buildings, engine-rooms, and dye-house for the purpose of marblizing of paper, which was one of his improvements, also of printing, stationery, and binding of books. Here was the hum and noise of busy wheels, as extensive machinery was here required; a large force of busy hands was kept continually at work, and at noonday and night these avenues were filled with them returning to their homes. All is now deserted, the buildings are in decay, the busy wheels are heard no more. These once occupied homes are deserted, the gardens and lawns are surrounded with a wild growth of briars and brambles. The fine old mansion, amid orchards and gardens and lawns, and surrounded by old trees, shows neglect now.

The location was selected by Mr. Felt, being two miles from New Providence and three miles from Summit Depots. Feeling that this beautiful location, with its fine views, high ground, mountain springs, that the inducements of those who were employed here by being situated in a village surrounded by many demoralizing tendencies, they would be free, and this once happy busy place, he endeavored to cultivate their minds as well as moral tendencies, having a circulating library, a good school, the church, and in no way that their means should be wasted, but saved to themselves and families. He had placed on the bluff above the factories their dwellings, wide avenues were laid out, gardens with fruits and berries, and everything done for their comfort; but now all is deserted, and the name of the "Deserted Village" has now taken the place of the once busy Feltville.

As you descend to the plain below, where the large factories stand, watered by the Blue Brook, as it was originally called (now Green Brook), fed by Felt's Lake, here you have a fine view of the upper part of Feltville. Still a few of the summer houses are standing on the edge of the bluff (this was once called the under mountain road to the powder-mill). Just by the well-trodden road across the bridge of Green Brook we come to a gorge in the First Mountain, having the appearance of some long-ago breaking into these rocks by an earthquake; a fine spring of cold water gushing through the cleavage of these rocks makes it inviting to many picnic parties who resort to this place. As we return up the foot-path, and passing by the church and mansion to the avenue leading to New Providence, we come to the old school-house, now fast decaying, where many children were taught. As we enter all is gloomy and lonesome. Here is where stood the master; here were the places for desks and benches. Doorless, windows broken, all is of the past.

"Beside yon straggling fence that skirts the way,
With blossomed furze unprofitably gay,
There in his noisy mansion skilled to rule
The village master taught his little school."¹

A visit to this charming spot and rock spring will be interesting to the lover of nature.

Since the death of Mr. Felt a change of ownership has taken place. This romantic spot is now owned by Mrs. S. P. Townsend, of Scotch Plains.

Schools.—It is recorded that the first settlers were desirous to have their children taught. A teacher by the name of Stephen Ayres is first mentioned in 1768, who taught school in Turkey. In those early times the clergyman was brought into requisition and catechised many of the children, who assembled for the purpose; and it was often the custom for the mothers to bring their children to the minister's house on a Saturday. These catechetical gatherings went under the name of "mothers' meetings." The New England Primer and the Shorter Catechism were gone through with. A Mr. Joel Jones is mentioned, who came from Massachusetts and settled on the line of the township. He taught school. This was in the year 1787. Mr. Jones married, 8th July, 1790, a Miss Jane Vance, daughter of Kennedy Vance. He died 13th January, 1792, a young man, at the age of twenty-nine years, leaving one child, who died young. Mr. Jones had a brother Luther, who came the next year. He was a widower, and kept a school near Little's tavern. He married 15th November, 1789, Martha, widow of John Bedell, daughter of Peter Bebout. By both marriages he had a family of nine children.

The first school building was said to have been of logs, and was also used for a session-room for the weekly meetings of the church until the present frame building was erected. At a meeting of the citizens of New Providence in 1822 for the purpose of arranging a system for the better maintenance of a school, the constitution of the "New Providence Academy" was drawn up, styled the New Providence Company, and was adopted at an adjourned meeting, April 30th.

The following is a partial list of teachers in this institution: Ezra Fairchild, Buel L. Bates, 1834; Ann or Anna Pugh, 1831-33; Daniel Young, Sarah Ann Burrows, Mary Francis Burrows, Emma Johnson, Miss — Valentine, Miss L. L. Lord, T. T. Colard.

The academy continued to be the school of the village until 1869. In that year their elegant new school building was finished at the cost of some ten thousand dollars. Present principal, J. W. Kennedy. A. V. Patterson, now a judge in California, served them in 1872-73, succeeded by J. H. Vansickle, S. C. Wheat, E. H. Schuyler, F. L. Stiles, E. Merritt, and the present principal, J. W. Kennedy.

There are three school districts in the township,

¹ Goldenmith's Deserted Village.

Nos. 16, 17, 18. The first district clerk was John U. Clark; the second, J. B. Bassenger; the third, now acting, Henry F. Barrill.

The first school-house was a log building in the township, then called Turkey; the second, the present session-rooms of the Presbyterian Church; the third, a new building costing ten thousand dollars, finished in 1869, on the main road in the centre of the village; has a fine school-lot, with shade-trees in the rear, and ample play-ground during the recess at noon for the scholars.

The district statistics are as follows:

District	Name.	Number of children.
16.	Feltville.	83.....Simon P. Debbie, District Clerk.
17.	Solon.	64.....Ed. C. Jones, " "
18.	New Providence.	116.....H. F. Barrill, " "

Miss Bessie Barrill, daughter of the now acting clerk of the district, has prepared and presented a valuable collection of natural history in cases, all named, numbered, and located. We append the list. For neatness and completeness this valued collection is worth five hundred dollars, and the township cannot too much appreciate this valuable donation of Miss Barrill:

LIST OF NAMES OF NATURAL HISTORY SPECIMENS IN NEW PROVIDENCE PUBLIC SCHOOL.

PREPARED BY MISS BESSIE BARRILL.

Falconidae or Falcon family.	Sylviidae or Warbler family.
Red-shouldered Hawk, f., 1.	Yellow-rump Warbler, m. and f., 2.
Strigidae or Owl family.	Yellow Red-poll Warbler, m. and f., 2.
Screech-Owl, m. and f., 2.	Black and White Creeping Warbler, m. and f., 2.
Short-eared Owl, 1.	Yellow-breasted Chat, 2.
Cuculidae or Cuckoo family.	Summer Warbler, m. and f., 2.
Yellow-billed Cuckoo, m. and f., 2.	Maryland Yellow Throat, m. and f., 2.
Black-billed Cuckoo, 2.	Black-poll Warbler, 2.
Picidae or Woodpecker family.	Scarlet Tanager, m. and f., 2.
Downy Woodpecker, m. and f., 2.	Nashville Warbler, m. and f., 2.
Yellow-bellied Woodpecker, m. and f., 2.	Blue Yellow-back Warbler, 2.
Golden-winged Woodpecker, m., 1.	Canada Flycatcher, m. and f., 2.
Hairy Woodpecker, m., 1.	Titlark, 1.
Trochilidae or Humming-Bird family.	Prairie Warbler, m. and f., 2.
Ruby-throated Humming-Bird, m. and f., 2.	Blue-winged Yellow Warbler, 1.
Cypselidae or Swift family.	Redstart, 2.
Chimney Swift, 1.	Pine-creeping Warbler, 2.
Coleopteridae or Flycatcher family.	Orange-crowned Warbler, 1.
Phoebe Birds, m. and f., 2.	Audubon's Warbler, m. and f., 2.
Kingbird, m. and f., 2.	Yellow-throated Warbler, 1.
Great Crested Flycatcher, m. and f., 2.	Golden-crowned Thrush, m. and f., 2.
Trail's Flycatcher, 2.	Kentucky Warbler, 2.
Least Flycatcher, 2.	Water Thrush, 1.
Acadian Flycatcher, 2.	Kirkland's Warbler, 1.
Western Wood Pewee, 1.	Black and Yellow Warbler, 1.
Turdidae or Thrush family.	Black-throated Blue Warbler, 1.
Common Robin, m. and f., 2.	Grace's Warbler, 2.
Eastern Bluebird, m. and f., 2.	Mourning Warbler, 1.
Olive-backed Thrush, 2.	Tennessee Warbler, 1.
Hermite Thrush, 2.	Hooded Flycatching Warbler, 1.
Ruby-crowned Kinglet, m., 2.	Blackburnia Warbler, 1.
Golden-crested Kinglet, m. and f., 2.	Hirundinidae or Swallow family.
Wilson Thrush, 1.	Baru Swallow, m. and f., 2.
Wood Thrush, m. and f., 2.	Bombycillidae or Waxwing family.
	Cedar Bird, m. and f., 2.

Laioide or Shrike family.	Sharp-tailed Finch, 1.
Red-eyed Vireo, m. and f., 2.	St. Lucas Sparrow, 1.
White-eyed Vireo, m. and f., 2.	Thynard Sparrow, m. and f., 2.
Yellow-throated Fly-catching Vireo, 2.	Chervink, m. and f., 2.
Blue-headed Vireo, m., 1.	Rose-breasted Grosbeak, m. and f., 2.
Butcher-Bird, m., 1.	Rufous Crowned Finch, 1.
Ditrichidae or Mocking-Bird family.	Henslow's Sparrow, 1.
Brown Thrush, m. and f., 2.	Cicereous Song Sparrow, 1.
Catbird, m. and f., 2.	Titlark Sparrow, 2.
Winter Wren, m. and f., 2.	Purple Finch, 2.
Certhidae or Creeper family.	Snow Buntings, 2.
White-bellied Nuthatch, m. and f., 2.	Icteridae or Blackbird family.
Red-bellied Nuthatch, 1.	Red-winged Blackbird, m. and f., 2.
American Creeper, 1.	Baltimore Oriole, m. and f., 2.
Paridae or Titmouse family.	Orchard Oriole, m. and f., 2.
Tufted Titmouse, 1.	Bob-o-link, m. and f., 2.
Black-capped Titmouse, m. and f., 2.	Cowbird, m. and f., 2.
Blue-gray Gnat-catcher, 1.	Rusty Crackle, m. and f., 2.
Fringillidae or Sparrow family.	Meadow Lark, f., 1.
Pine Finch, m. and f., 2.	Crow Blackbird, m., 1.
Savannah Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Cardinal or Crow family.
English Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Blue Jay, m. and f., 2.
Black Snow-Bird, m. and f., 2.	Common Crow, f., 1.
Tree Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Columbidae or Dove family.
Fox-colored Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Wild Pigeon, 1.
Seaside Finch, m. and f., 2.	Percinidae or Partridge family.
White-throated Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Quail, m., 1.
Indigo-Bird Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Ardeidae or Heron family.
Chipping Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Green Heron, 1.
Field Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	Night Heron, 1.
Yellow Bird, m. and f., 2.	Charadriidae or Plover family.
Swamp Sparrow, 1.	Scelopacidae or Snake family.
Lincoln Finch Sparrow, m. and f., 2.	American Woodcock, m., 1.
Grass Finch, m. and f., 2.	Wilson Snipe, 1.
There are 185 birds and 113 kinds or varieties.	Spotted Sandpiper.
	Solitary Tattler, 1.
	Anatidae or Duck family.
	Sheldrake, 1.

MAMMALS.

Chipping Squirrel, 1.	Eastern Skunk, 1.
Flying Squirrel, 1.	Musk-Rat, 1.
Cross Red and Gray Squirrel, 1.	Opussum, 1.
Gray Squirrel, 1.	Common Shrew Mole, 1.
Red Squirrel, 1.	Star-nosed Mole, 1.
Little Brown Bat, 1.	Gray-bellied Mouse, 1.
Red Bat, 1.	Meadow Mouse, 1.
Gray Rabbit, 1.

REPTILES.

Muhlenberg Tortoise, 1.	Spotted Tortoise, 1.
Wood Tortoise, 1.	Bull-Frog, 1.

In Alcohol.

Lizard Frog.	Yellow Salamander.
Wood Frog.	Water-Snake.
Green Frog.	Ring-necked Snake.
Peepers.	Striped Snake.
Fresh-water Lobster.	Clay-colored Snakes.
Blue Salamander.

Genus Scolietes.

" Formicarin.
" Ichneumonidae.
" Tremex.
" Tenthredinidae.
" Selandria.
" Cimex.

SUB-ORDER OF LEPIDOPTERA. Butterflies.

Papilio asterias.
" turnus.
Pieris cloracina.
Colias philodice.

SUB-ORDER OF HYMENOPTERA.

Apis mellifica.
Bombus (humble bees).
Xylocopa (carpenter bees).
Vespa crabro.
Genus Polistes.
" Odynerus.
" Eumenes.
" Crabronidae.
" Crabro.
" Philanthus.
" Bembex.
" Sphegidae.

Limenitis misippus.
 " arthenis.
Danae erippus.
Argynnis idalis.
Aphrodite argynnis.
Argynnis myrina.
Melites phaeotus.
Melites tharus.
Parnassius cardui.
 " Atlanta.
Vanessa antiopa.
 " J. alium.
Grapha interrogatiois.
 " commis.
 " C. argenteum.
Genus Satyrus.
Chrysophanus Americana.
Genus Lycaena.
 " Thecla.
 " Hesperide.

Moths.

Spink quinqueangulatus.
 " Carolina.
 " quadricornis.
Philampelus satellitia.
 " achemon.
Ellema Harrisii.
Smerinthus excecata.
Seia thysbe.
Tro chilium exitiosa.
Egeria curcurbitula.
Eudryas grata.
Deiopeia bella.
Callimorpha militaris.
Artia virgo.
 " Isabella.
Spilosoma Virginica.
Halesidota tessellaria.
Orgyia leucostigma.
Attacus cecropia.
 " promethes.
 " luua.
 " polyphemus.
Saturnia Io.
Cossus robinie.
Chliocampa Americana.
Genus Noctuella.
 " Leucania.
 " Mamestra.
Gortyna Zee.
Genus Anisopteryx.
 " Pyrallie.
 " Galleria.
 " Crambus.
 " Tortricidae.
 " Penthia.
 " Adacampsis.
 " Tinea.
 " Pterophori.

SUB-ORDER OF DIPTERA.

Genus Culicidae.
 " Tipularie.
 " Tabanidae.
 " Asilici.
 " Bombyliari.
 " Syrphidae.
 " Dolichopidae.
 " Estridae.
 " Gasterophilus.
 " Estrus.
 " Muscidae.
 " Musca.
 " Stomoxys.
 " Melophaga.

SUB-ORDER OF COLEOPTERA.

Cicindela vulgaris.
 " hirticollis.
Carabidae calidum.
Genus Gyrinidae.
Silpha Americana.
 " Necrophorus grandis.
Genus Staphyloidea.
 " Dermestes.
Lucanus dama.
Genus Geotrupes.
Macroductylus subspinosus.
Lachnosterna quercina.
Pelidnota punctata.
Buprestis Virginica.
Elatr oculatus.
Genus Lampridae.
 " Lyneuxillidae.
 " Tenebrionidae.
Cantharis vittata.
 " marginata.
 " Fabricii.
 " strata.

Bruchus pisi.
Genus rhynchaeus.
Prionus laticollis.
Clytus flexuosus.
Genus Lemia.
Saperda bivittata.
Lema trilineata.
Galeruca vittata.
Genus Chrysomela.
Eumolpus auratus.
Genus Cassida.
 " Hiopa.
 " Coccuelliidae.

SUB-ORDER OF HEMIPTERA.

Cicada septendecim.
 " canicularis.
Membracis bimaculata.
Genus Coccidae.
 " Notonectidae.
Coveldia tristis.

SUB-ORDER OF ORTHOPTERA.

Diaphomera femorata.
Genus Mantis.
Achetia nivea.
Genus Gryllus.
Cyrtophyllus concavus.
Conocephalus ensiger.
Genus Stenobothrus.
Caloptenus femur rubrum.
Genus Acrydium.
Edlipoda Carolina.

" phoenicoptera.
 " sulphurea.
 " nebulosa.

SUB-ORDER OF NEUROPTERA.

Genus Perlaria.
 " Ephemera.
 " Libellula.
 " Aeshna.
 " Agria.
 " Corydalis.
 " Mantispa.
 " Myrmeleon.
 " Neuronia.

ORDER OF ARACHNIDA.

Genus Lycoss.
 " Phalangita.

ORDER OF MYCOAPODA.

Genus Julus.
 " Litholius.

Churches.—PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, NEW PROVIDENCE.—There are but few records that can be reached in this village in relation to the early church. The Rev. W. H. Burroughs gave a short account in an historical article about the year 1834, and from this and other sources we give the following:

It appears that A.D. 1737 the inhabitants of New Providence, then called Turkey, formed themselves into a congregation for religious purposes, and solicited the patronage of the Presbytery of New York, under whose care they were received, and within whose limits they were then embraced. Whether they had been accustomed to meet together previous to this date for religious worship is not known. It is, however, more than probable they had, since the present house of worship was not erected till 1739, and one built of logs had been occupied for the same purpose at an earlier period. It is believed, however, to have been during the ministry of the Rev. Joseph Lamb, who was called to New Providence in May, 1742, and remained about two years. This church, which was taken down in the year 1834, had no steeple, and shingled on the sides, was nearly square, and stood where the present one now stands. The men who composed the first session were Messrs. Joseph Allen, John Pierson, and Daniel Day. The name of the church was changed in 1778 from the Turkey Christian Church to the Presbyterian Church of New Providence, from a circumstance of the escape of the congregation in parts of the gallery giving away. From this event it was considered by the people as a remarkable interposition of Providence for their preservation, and in pious remembrance of it resolved that the church should be called the New Providence Church.

The following is a list of ministers who have labored steadily in this congregation, together with the year in which their labors respectively commenced: Rev. John Cleverly, 1737; Rev. Azariah Horton, 1739; Rev. Joseph Lamb, 1742; Rev. Timothy Symms, 1746; Rev. Timothy Allen, 1752; Rev. Jonathan Elmer, 1757; Rev. James G. Force, 1796; Rev. Elias Riggs, 1806; Rev. James B. Hyndshaw, 1825; Rev. William H. Burroughs, 1833; Rev. Thomas Cochran, 1834-46; Rev. John T. M. Davie, 1846-47; Rev. Elbridge Bradberry, 1847-51; Rev. Charles Milne, 1852-55; supply by James McDonall, 1855-56; Rev. John Abelle Baldwin, 1857-63; Rev. William S. Moore, 1864-70; Rev. Elias R. Fairchild, D.D., 1870-75; Rev. Henry Martin Grant, 1877-79; supply by Albert King, January, 1879, to October, 1879; Rev. Dwight M. Seward, 1880-81. They are at present without a stated pastor, but are having regular supplies on each Sabbath.

Mr. Cleverly appears to have remained but a short time. Nothing of his subsequent history is known.

Mr. Horton probably continued something longer. He was afterwards settled in South Hanover, where he ended his days.

Mr. Lamb, it is said, remained about two years. He was subsequently the pastor of the church at Basking Ridge, where his remains are interred.

Mr. Symms preached alternately at New Providence and Springfield. He appears to have been the first who was regularly installed over the church of New Providence, which event took place 1746. He was dismissed December, 1750, having served as pastor a little more than four years.

Mr. Allen was installed in March, 1753, and dismissed some time in 1756. He appears to have been an acceptable preacher, but of an unstable mind. He afterwards settled in a congregation of Separatists on Long Island.

Mr. Elmer was installed Nov. 13, 1765, a little more than eight years after he came to New Providence. He was dismissed Oct. 14, 1798, and was never afterwards settled.

In the early part of his ministry, and for nearly twenty years after his coming to New Providence, Mr. Elmer was unanimously beloved and esteemed by the people of his charge, and not a little admired in neighboring congregations. What were the causes which led to the unhappy and much-to-be-lamented alienation of feeling which was subsequently manifested by a part of the congregation towards their pastor it were useless and worse than useless now to inquire. Mr. Elmer was unable to preach for several years previous to his death. He died at New Providence, June 5, 1807.

There are two names which should be mentioned here, viz.: Mr. William Jackson, a licentiate from New England, and the Rev. John Richards, from Wales. Mr. Jackson came to New Providence towards the close of the year 1794, and remained about six months, but could not be prevailed on to settle. He afterwards settled in Brentwood, Mass.

The eyes and the hearts of the people were next directed towards Mr. Richards. He came to New Providence in the summer of 1795, and preached five times to the great satisfaction of the people. They regarded him as a pious, humble servant of Jesus, and were entertaining high hopes that in him they should obtain a faithful and affectionate Christian pastor. They were taking measures for his settlement when his Master suddenly called him from his earthly labors. He died Sept. 9, 1795, and was buried in the graveyard by the church.

Mr. Force was ordained and installed as pastor of this congregation Nov. 20, 1796, and dismissed Oct. 6, 1802. He found the congregation in a divided and distracted state and left in a condition almost helpless.

They next united in calling the Rev. Elias Riggs. He began his stated labors on Lord's Day, Oct. 19, 1806, and was installed the 16th of June following. "He was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." His cool and dispassionate judgment, his unaffected simplicity of manners both in public and in private, his Christian prudence and meekness, his abundant and disinterested labors in behalf of his much-loved charge, and, above all, his humility and heavenly-mindedness eminently qualified him for the arduous work to which he was called. For the honor of his Master and for this people he lived, and with them he died. All who knew him loved him. He was called to his rest Feb. 25, 1825, in the midst of a highly interesting state of religious feeling in the congregation.

Mr. Hyndshaw commenced his stated labors with this people in the fall of 1825, and was ordained and installed Jan. 10, 1826. He was dismissed from his charge on the 1st of May, 1832, though he continued at the request of the congregation to supply the pulpit for six months after his dismissal.

Mr. Burroughs was licensed by the Presbytery of Elizabethtown on the 19th February, 1833, and appointed as a stated supply for this congregation. At the request of the congregation he was ordained in April, 1833, and having a call to become their pastor he was installed Oct. 8, 1833, and remained till 1834, when the Rev. Thomas Cochran came. We have followed the earlier pastors of this historic church, and now will give more details of its history as a church.

During the year of Mr. Elmer's ministrations, 1764, which has been designated as the year of great revival in this country, a large number were added to this church, and from this time the church and congregation assumed a more pleasing and prosperous appearance than ever before.

In 1773 the house of worship was found too small to accommodate the people, and they determined to enlarge it. An addition was put up and inclosed, but the disasters of the Revolutionary war coming on prevented its completion till the year 1782. The house thus enlarged was for a season filled with attentive hearers.

In 1803 pecuniary embarrassments became pressing, and it was thought advisable to sell the lands belonging to the parish. The sales were actually commenced, but through the influence of some of the friends of the church they were stayed for the present, and an arrangement made with the purchaser to permit what had been sold to be redeemed. A strenuous effort was made to procure the requisite aid by subscription, but without the desired result. Under these circumstances, in January, 1804, a vote to sell the lands was passed, and the friends of the church in despondency yielded the case as hopeless. At this juncture, on the 13th February, 1804, the Rev. Robert Finley, of Basking Ridge, and the Rev. Edward D. Griffen, of Newark, met at New Providence by appointment and preached to the people. Their subject was the mourning of the captives in Babylon for the desolations of Zion, Psalms clxxxvii. 1. This was a memorable day to the church of New Providence. Through the influence of these servants of Jesus, who by their exhortations and by their liberality favored the object, the drooping spirits of the people were revived, and before the sun was set subscriptions were obtained which were well-nigh adequate to the exigencies of the church, and in the course of a few days they were so augmented that if the money subscribed could have been collected every demand against the congregation might have been paid. But to collect these subscriptions at once was found impracticable, and the desired object was not fully obtained till Jan. 28, 1809.

In the spring of 1806, and while the congregation was destitute of any one steadily to break to them the bread of life, it pleased a gracious God in mercy again to visit this church. A spirit of prayer was excited among Christians and a spirit of serious inquiry among the impenitent which continued through the following summer. Mr. Riggs commenced his labors in the autumn of this year, and had the happiness to see this good-begun work constantly though slowly progressing for more than two years. As a fruit of this gradual but solitary work forty-four were added to the church. Thus the sinking hopes of Zion's friends were revived and their mourning exchanged for joy and thanksgiving.

The next considerable work of grace commenced in the spring of the year 1813. This work continued about six months, during which time very few in the congregation remained careless spectators. "It was pleasing," says Mr. Riggs, "in the intervals of worship on the Lord's Day, as well as on other occasions, and especially at the close of prayer-meetings, to see the youth flocking in crowds around the elders and other experienced Christians in the church and listening to their pious and paternal counsels." As the results of this good work the church received to her communion an accession of forty-five members.

About the commencement of the year 1825 the religious state of the congregation assumed a very encouraging aspect. A considerable number were heard to inquire, "What must we do to be saved?" and some were hopefully rescued as brands from the burning. But how inscrutable are the ways of Providence! At the very time when all eyes and hearts appeared to be directed towards their spiritual guide, the Rev. Mr. Riggs, and when his pious instruction seemed to human wisdom to be indispensable, he was suddenly called from the toils and labors of the church militant to join the church triumphant. The special religious interest soon subsided, though not until fourteen, as its fruits, were added to the visible church.

In November, 1831, and during the labors of the Rev. Mr. Hyndshaw as pastor of this church, the Lord again appeared to revive his people and to build up Zion. The work commenced near the close of a protracted meeting. It was preceded by no very visible tokens of God's presence other than a general solemnity which appeared to pervade the assembly, and a wrestling spirit of prayer on the part of some of God's people. As the protracted service was about to close and the people to retire, "suddenly the spirit of God seemed to descend like a rushing mighty wind and to fill the house where they were sitting." "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" was the instant inquiry of many, while saints, deeply abased, saw with wonder what God had so evently wrought. As the fruits of this glorious work about thirty were added to the church.

We have brought down the history of this first pioneer church in these mountains; much of its history we are indebted to the researches of the late Rev. Elias Riggs, and also to the late pastorate in 1834 of Rev. William H. Burroughs.

The following is a list of ruling elders of this church since 1737:

Joseph Allen, Joseph Doty, ordained Jan. 17, 1808.
John Pierson, Joseph Tompkins, ordained Jan. 17, 1808.
Daniel Day, Gabriel Johnson, ordained Jan. 17, 1808.
Samuel Ross, Cornelius Williams, ordained July, 1822.
William Johnson, Joseph Ludlow, ordained July, 1822.
William Jones, David Noe, ordained July, 1822.
Benjamin Bonnel, David Freach, ordained July, 1822.
William Caulwell, Amos Lum, ordained July, 1822.
John Clark, David Howell, ordained July, 1822.
Alexander Simson, Jotham Potter, ordained Nov. 30, 1828.
Thomas Osborn, Sylvester Andrews, ordained Nov. 30, 1828.
Jacob Beidel, Matthias Osborn, ordained Nov. 30, 1828.
Stephen Morehouse, Amos Potter, ordained 1847.
Abraham Rutan, Israel Doty, ordained 1847; died Jan. 10, 1879.
William Connet, Daniel L. Bonnel, ordained 1847.
Benoni Trenbly, John N. Doty, ordained 1858; died Jan. 8, 1875.
Timothy Whitehead, Elias R. Morehouse, ordained 1849.
Daniel Cory, Matthias Doty, ordained 1859.
Samuel Potter, Isaac Meeker, ordained 1859.
John Caldwell, John Little, Jr., ordained 1859.
Nathaniel Littell, Edwin Schuyler, ordained 1879.
Jacob Potter.
Nathaniel Bonnel.
William Sears.
Moses Miller.
Thomas Baldwin.
Abner Stiles, ordained Jan. 17, 1808.

This completes the list of ruling elders to the present time. The records of membership have been kept, and many of the families from the first are still represented by name. In May, 1870, a church was formed at Summit called the Central Presbyterian Church, and also again in June, 1870, a church was formed at West Summit, offshoots from this New Providence Church, taking many members with them, weakening the mother-church. Some years before this a church was established at Sterling, in the Passaic Valley, in Morris County. Some few members went with others and formed there a Presbyterian Church.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The first Methodist preachers in New Providence were upon a circuit called the Elizabethtown, and occasionally preached in this neighborhood, whose ministers belonged to the Philadelphia Conference, and were the Rev. Robert Cloud, Thomas Morrell, 1787, Gamiel Bailey, 1790, Robert Hutchison, Joseph Totten,

George Woolsey, in or before the year 1798, when Peter Vannest, David Bartine, Sr., Samuel Budd, Benjamin Iliff occasionally came. Rev. Elon Genung, Stephen Day, and John Hancock, local preachers. These clergymen held meetings from house to house, and not until 1798 was the Methodist Church fully established in Turkey (now New Providence). A class of members was formed at the house now owned by a Mr. Beach at West Summit. Mr. William Robertson was the first leader. From this start was established the Turkey Methodist Church, as it was called. The Revs. Lawrence McComb and Thomas Morrell preached here until, up to the year 1807, Revs. William Smith, Peter Vannest, and Thomas Morrell preached. It was called the Turkey Circuit, comprised all the Passaic Valley over the Long Hill, and Springfield to the east, and belonged to the Philadelphia Conference. They erected their first church in 1801, nearly opposite to where their new one stands. They were but few in number, and built a plain building about forty by sixty feet, without steeple. It stood nearly on the line of Edgar Samson's property, adjoining the cemetery. There many of the shining lights of Methodism preached. Here, where hundreds of the inhabitants attended church, where the right hand of fellowship was given, and around this old church lay the dead,—their fathers and mothers, many of their children. The ground is kept in good order, and we find that great respect is paid to all those who once walked these streets and communed with them in their households, who now lie sleeping their last sleep in this old graveyard. They are revered and esteemed by their surviving children and neighbors.

Mr. George Cory gave the lot for their church and burial-ground, about one acre. This old church was taken down in 1857, and the present beautiful church was completed and occupied through the efforts of the Rev. Abraham M. Palmer and their efficient board of managers. We find at the time the Rev. James K. Shaw, a much-beloved pastor: that they had one hundred and fifty members, a number of local preachers, leaders, and exhorters. We find the following record: At a meeting of the Conference in Philadelphia, 1834, New Providence, which formerly was a station, was connected with Springfield, Chatham, and Genung Town, and called the New Providence Circuit. Union village was included.

Official members, 1834: Rev. James K. Shaw, pastor; John Hancock, Henry R. Hedges, Stephen Day, local preachers; Jonathan Totten, Ammon Bamans, John Wesley Hancock, exhorters.

The leaders were Stephen Day, Benjamin Weed, Philemon Dickinson, Aaron F. Ross, John W. Hancock, Farrand Ward, William M. Kitchell, Alfred Morehouse, Matthias Swain, Thomas Osborn Scudder, David French. The stewards were Enos B. Townley, Stephen Day, Philemon Dickinson, Matthias Swain, Wickliff H. Genung.

The following names have been added to the list since this year (1834): Stephen Day, Jr., David Morehouse, John Crane, Benjamin Wood, John Wood, David Wood, Mulford Wilcox, Lewis Noe, William Cory, Henry Wilcox, William Clarke, Daniel H. Wood, William M. Clark, Linus Tucker, Samuel T. Day, Martin Ruckman, Stephen S. Sampson, Gabriel Johnson, 1840; — Griffin, Jeremiah Totten, Moses M. Alward, John Crane, Daniel Magie, John Lacy, Asa Osborn, Thomas Parrott, 1800; Ephraim H. Pain, Waters Burrows, Theodosie Elmer, Robert T. Wilson, Asher W. Morehouse, Enoch Vreeland, 1796; David Morehouse, Jonathan Curtis, George Cory, 1798; Robert Wilson, Levi Wilcox, 1810; Dennis Lundy, Stephen Monro, Abraham Bryant, John V. Allen, Jonathan Totten, 1839; David Curtis, William Titis, George Brown, Jacob Drake, 1836; Cornelius Williamson, David Dow, William Totten, Amos Wilcox, Samuel Wood, David Hand, Abraham Morril Cory, David A. Oakley, James H. Pierson, Squire Parrott, 1852; David Smalley, Charles Pool, Isaac Crane, William R. Cory, John R. Bennett, Theodore K. Wilkes, Rev. William A. Wilmer, 1839–40.

The Rev. Joseph Chattles became pastor in 1844.

Rev. Henry Trumbower, 1850–52. He remained two years, and was followed by Rev. Sedgwick Rusling, 1840–41; Rev. Isaac Cross, 1849; Rev. Mulford Day, Rev. George Hitchens, 1848; Rev. Isaac N. Felch, 1855; Rev. Daniel Parish, Rev. Abraham H. Palmer, 1857; Rev. Rodney Winans, Rev. Thomas Pierson, 1865; Rev. James Ayres, Rev. J. H. Heward, 1879–80; Rev. Samuel B. Rooney, the present pastor, 1881.

The first Sunday-school in New Providence of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1818, according to statement of Jesse F. Pitts, one of the original members. There are two schools connected with this church at the present, 1881. Rev. Stephen Day and Benjamin Weed were among the first superintendents. The Secretary, Mr. Apollos, Morrell, Elmer beautifully engrossed the organization rules, by-laws, and membership in 1832. The list is before me, but a few of the names can be given.

John Crane, Daniel S. Clark, Squire Manning, David Wood, Harriet Cory, Jonathan Totten, Jonathan M. Meeker, Stephen Day, Jr., Jesse F. Pitts, Rachel Ayres, Benjamin Weed, Catherine Clayton, A. Doty, William M. Griffen, Rebecca Morehouse, Samuel F. Day, D. S. Wood, Sally Meeker, Levi Clark, Sarah Jackson, Stephen Monroe, Jane Perrine, Thomas Parrott, Amy Elmer, Catherine M. Marsh, D. S. Wood, Levi Wilcox, and others.

ST. MARY'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.—No very long or detailed history of this church at Stony Hill can be given, as the records do not seem to have been kept from the first commencement of this mission. It appears that in the year 1847 the Rev. Mr. Refferin was called to collect a number of families who desired to have a regular service. This parish embraced all along the First and Second Mountain down to the Passaic Valley; and, with the occasional visits also of Rev. John Hespelien, this mission was formed Jan. 17, 1848. A lot was purchased and a church built and consecrated. The following list is given by the present clergyman: Rev. Mr. Lonei, 1849; then came Rev. Father Kleineidom, of Forty-third Street Redemptionist Fathers; in 1852, Rev. Mr. Mauness, and again Rev. J. A. Koenig, when it was formed with the Newark brotherhood, 1858, and was supplied by them until the Rev. Mr. Lonei, in 1874, returned, and remained until Rev. A. Bergmand came, June 11, 1878, and remained until the present incumbent, the Rev. John J. Schandel, who now has under his care some sixty families.

Sons of Temperance.—The charter for the New Providence Division of the Sons of Temperance was granted Sept. 12, 1850, signed by Darius Wells, G. W. P., and H. W. Howell, G. S.; the charter members, A. M. Cory, M.D., Amos Potter, Philemon Tompkins, S. B. Jennings, E. R. Morehouse, W. G. Marsh, William Stites, James D. Clark, William Ayres, William M. Day. The institution has never relinquished its charter, and is now thirty years old. Its influence has been felt strongly.

In 1873 two of its members, Dr. A. M. Cory and J. B. Bassenger, Esq., delegated by the citizens, went to the county-seat and secured the abrogation of the customary license, since which time, excepting for a short time by stealth, the entire township has been free from the curse of liquor-selling of any kind by license; and such has been the cultivation and establishment of public sentiment that the promise of perpetuity of temperance principles is good. The labors of these temperance workers, who have been so faithful, have been greatly blessed to the community.

The First Tanner.—John M. Stites was a tanner and currier in New Providence. He was born the 2d of September, 1797. He married his cousin, Jane Bonnel, daughter of Nathaniel, son of Nathaniel the second. She was born the 3d of July, 1795. They had two children,—William Crane Stites, born Nov. 16, 1829, and Huldah, born July 24, 1833. He was a worthy citizen, and stood high in the community. He was elder in the Presbyterian Church.

Burial-Grounds.—There are four burial-grounds in the township, the oldest being that of the Presbyterian Church. There are many dates showing that the pioneers lived to an old age. The oldest stone now standing is that of William Broadwell, who died in his sixty-fourth year, March 11, 1746. Here also is the stone of Gen. Benjamin Ludlow, the grandfather of the present Governor of this State. The general died Jan. 27, 1817. Here also is the grave of Col. Samuel Potter, who died July 11, 1802, in his seventy-sixth year.

At Feltsville is the burial-ground of those inhabitants who lived upon Peter's Hill and neighborhood, as it was originally called. Many old graves can yet be seen, although the fences have long since gone to decay, and quite large trees and underbrush cover the grounds. Many who died while Feltsville contained a population are buried here. We copy the following epitaph:

"In Memory of Mr John Willcocks he decess'd Nov em^r The 22d 1776 aged 49 years."

He was the son of the first settler, Peter Willcoxsie, who married a Miss Badgley, and from whom the name of Peter's Hill is taken.

The burial-ground of Strong Hill, belonging to St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, was consecrated for burial purposes in 1848.

The burial-ground of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New Providence was first opened in the year 1798. This ground is kept in pretty good order, and contains the remains of a large number of the first members of this church with their former pastors, and also some of the patriots, officers, and soldiers at this time of the Revolutionary war. The first church of the denomination stood on the ground at the line of Mr. Sampson and the main road. It was removed in the year 1857, having stood nearly sixty years.

The following stone was erected by John Littell, Esq., to this old soldier, who, however, was no relation to Mr. Littell:

"Ebeneser Littell, died May 9, 1852, aged 88 years, 8 months, and 16 days. He fought manfully the battles of his country, lived many years a constant Christian, and with his expiring breath expressed a strong desire to meet his friends in heaven."

"Rev. Stephen Day, died Aug. 19, 1864, in his 86th year. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."

There is no stone to the grave of

"William D. Bedford, one of the heroes of Perry's victory. He died 1874, in his 90th year."

It is said that Mr. Dickerson provided in his will that one thousand dollars should be spent for a monument in his plot. There has been placed a fine Quincy granite carved block, surrounded by a railing, with stone posts, with the words,—

"Dickerson.—Caleb Dickerson, born May 4, 1773, died Aug. 26, 1844."

"Rev. Waters Burroughs, died July 5, 1805, in his 69th year. His son, Rev. Waters Burroughs, died March 4, 1869, in his 79th year. Having served the church as an acceptable minister of the gospel for half a century."

Powder-Mill.—For many years the making of powder was carried on at the place now known as Feltsville (called Peter's Hill, after Peter Willcoxsie, who settled there in 1720). The mill was built in a ravine just by the Green Brook (Blue Brook). The building was burnt but a few years ago. It was standing in 1857. A firm manufactured powder there in 1812, and also a company (Decatur & Atwater). Among them was a brother of Col. Decatur. It was a good place for the purpose, and hid from the enemy who were in the valley below the First Mountain, and but a few miles off, in 1780.

Salt Brook is of Revolutionary fame. This brook passes through the centre of New Providence village, and to the Passaic River through the farm of Mr. Charles Ulrick, and the rear of the residence of Dr. A. M. Cory. It is said from tradition that at the time the British forces lay in camp in the valley below the First Mountain word came that they were to march on to Morristown by or through this village. Salt had been stored by the inhabitants for their use and the Continental soldiers who were with Gen. Washington at Morristown, and encamped close by towards Washington Valley (now called) in 1780, when all their salt was emptied in this brook, their object being the preventing of its getting in the hands of the British forces.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

MAJ. JOTHAM POTTER.

Samuel Potter, the ancestor of the Potter family in this country, came from Wales. Daniel, second child in a family of eight of Samuel Potter, was born in 1692. Daniel 2d, son of Daniel, born 1723, died by accident Oct. 15, 1774. Jacob, fourth child of Daniel 2d, was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. Amos, fifth child and brother of Jacob, married Sarah his apprenticeship at Chatham, N. J.; followed this business some twenty years; manufactured principally the old style two-wheeled gigs, which business he left and went to farming at Summit, present site of Summit, owning some two hundred acres. When M. and E. road was surveyed he sold out and moved to New Providence, on the farm now owned by Amos, his son, then his wife's property (Jotham's). Mr. Potter

Jotham Potter

Clark, to whom was born five children. Jotham, the only son and subject of this sketch, was born Oct. 3, 1781, and married, May 6, 1810, to Phebe Pettit, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Pettit; to them were born eight children, viz.: Benjamin Pettit, Betsey Day, Sarah C. and Amos, Ludlow Day, Mehetabel M., Phebe Pettit, and Harriet Newel. Mr. Potter (Jotham) began life as a wheelwright at Summit, N. J., serving served two terms in the Legislature during Governor Haines' administration, was justice of the peace many years, and gave much of his attention to military affairs, being commissioned as major, which office he held many years, keeping a horse for the express purpose; was agent of the Chancellor Kent property when owned by Mr. G. H. Van Wagenan for years, lived in house built just in front of the old Edgar residence, present property of I. E. Doynig; was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, a Whig, and latterly Republican in politics, took an active part, and died Sept. 2, 1861, nearly eighty years of age.

Amos succeeded to the homestead of his mother; was married in 1871 to Louise, daughter of John Conselyea, of French extraction, who was born at Caldwell, Essex Co., N. J.; they have one child, Amos A., born September, 1873. Mr. Amos Potter has been a farmer since arriving at the years of manhood, owns one hundred and fifty acres, is a member and elder in the Presbyterian Church; a Republican in politics, having taken active part, has held the several offices of freeholder, town committeeman, and assessor several years; was a delegate to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Cincinnati, Ohio, appointed by the church in May, 1867.

CHAPTER LI.

SPRINGFIELD.

Original Boundaries.—Application was made to the Legislature in the year 1793, and an act was passed May 27th, providing "That all that part of the township of Elizabethtown and the township of Newark lying within the following line: Beginning on the bank of the Rahway River in the line which divides the wards of Springfield and Westfield; thence running in the said line to the top of the mountain, and from thence to New Providence Meeting-house, and thence to Passaic River; thence down the said river to the bridge commonly known by the name of Cook's Bridge; thence down the old road to the top of the mountain; thence on a direct line to Kean's Mills; thence on a direct line to a bridge which crosses the east branch of Rahway River, commonly known by the name of Pierson's Bridge, by his mill-dam; and from thence down the said river to the place of beginning, shall be and is hereby set off from the townships of Elizabethtown and Newark, and made a separate township to be called by the name of Springfield township."¹

This act remained in force until Nov. 8, 1809, when New Providence township was taken from the township of Springfield, and on the 17th day of March, 1869, part of Summit township was formed from the westerly portion of the township of Springfield.

The township is now bounded as follows: On the south by Westfield, on the easterly by Union, north-easterly by Milburn, in Essex County, and north and westerly by Summit and part of Westfield township, in Union County. It is about five miles long and two miles wide.

Natural Features.—The natural features of this township are nearly a level plain with the exception of the Short Hills, being parts of the edge of the First Mountain adjacent to Summit township, and near the Huntly Station on the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad. At this point can be obtained a beautiful view of the surrounding country for many miles, and it is the late Bishop Hobart's country-seat of many acres in Milburn township. The geological features are mostly of the triassic formation, and in many places showing igneous or volcanic action, and as we descend to the level many changes may be observed, the clay and silicious with many conglomerates interlying the strata until we reach the branches of the Rahway River. The township has a sufficient supply of springs and small streams, including the head source of the Rahway River, and hence the name of Springfield is properly given to it.

Early Settlements.—The settlement of this township dates back to the year 1717, when the Briant family made it their home, coming hither from Hackensack. The Stites, Denman, Whitehead, and Van Winkle families followed. Others moved up from "the Farms." Imagine if you can only three families between Morristown and Elizabethtown, on this extensive tract of country now so thickly populated, and seamed with railroads, and dotted over with villages, and covered with great mills and factories. Think of it with only three houses in it! These broad fields uncultivated, these hills covered with dense forests, these streams hidden by the wild growths of nature, and only one road (more nearly resembling a modern cart-path at that) threading its uncertain way from one town to the other. The greater part of the original settlers were from Elizabethtown and Newark, and we find that this township was not settled until fifty-three years after the settlement of Elizabethtown. The province had at the time something over forty thousand inhabitants.

John Stites was born in England in the year A.D. 1595. Tradition says that he emigrated from London to New England in the time of Oliver Cromwell. He finally settled on Long Island, and died there in 1717, aged one hundred and twenty-two years.

Richard Stites, son of John, was born 1640. He lived at Hempstead, Long Island, and died 1702, aged sixty-two years.

William Stites, son of Richard, was born at Hempstead, Long Island, in 1676. He removed to Springfield, N. J., and died there May 13, 1727, aged fifty-one years. His wife died April 21, 1728, aged fifty-one years. They had seven children,—John, born 1706; Hezekiah, born 1708; Richard, born 1715, died young, May 15, 1727; Rebecca, born 1717, and married Jacob Carle; William, Jr., died at Mount Bethel in his ninety-first year; Elijah, born 1721, and died at Scotch Plains, 1765; and Benjamin, married Betsey Wilcox, daughter of Peter Wilcox, Jr., and lived and died at Scotch Plains.

¹ Paterson's Laws of New Jersey.

Abner Stites, son of Elijah, son of William Stites, Sr., lived at Scotch Plains. He had nine children by Huldah Crane, whom he married April 18, 1786, daughter of Isaac Crane, of New Providence. He was a captain of militia, and an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He died 29th April, 1831, in his sixty-seventh year. His wife died June, 1835, aged seventy years.

Their first child was named Miller Stites, but died young. Elijah, their second child, was a merchant in Springfield. He married Jane Wade, daughter of Jonas Wade, Esq., of Springfield. He was quite a prominent man in the township. He died 10th of October, 1857, in his sixty-seventh year. William Stites, his third son, was a paper-manufacturer of Springfield, was a justice of peace, a judge of the court, a member of the new Constitutional Committee of the State in 1844, has been a number of terms a member of the Legislature. He married Hannah B. Smith, daughter of Capt. John Smith; has an only daughter, Jane Robinson, who married Dr. John C. Elmer, of Mendham, son of Dr. Horace Elmer. He died, lamented by his neighbors and the church, 30th of June, 1871, in his seventy-ninth year.

His fourth child, Huldah Grant, married John Thompson, son of Jabez Thompson. They had five children,—Jabez (who died a young man), Silas Stites, Jane Stites, Cornelia Elmer, Ezra Fairchild. She died 21st of August, 1832, aged thirty-six years.

His fifth, a son, John M. Stites, was a tanner and currier in New Providence. He was an elder in the church there. He married his cousin, Jane Bonnel, daughter of Nathaniel 3d. He was born 2d of September, 1797. She was born 3d of July, 1795. They had two children,—William Crane, born 16th of November, 1829, and Huldah, born 24th of July, 1833.

His sixth child, Chloe Jefferson, who married Ezra Fairchild, of Mendham. He for many years was principal of a classical school on Long Island. They had three children,—1. Elias Fairchild, who married, 16th of March, 1850, Agnes Anderson, daughter of Robert Anderson, Esq., of Plainfield; she died about nine months thereafter. 2. Emily Fairchild, married Mr. Allen P. Northrup. 3. Rev. Elijah S. Fairchild.

Abner Stites, his seventh child, was born 24th of September, 1803, and was a merchant and postmaster in Springfield for a number of years, and elder in the Presbyterian Church, and held many township offices. He married Charlotte Bonnel, who was born 27th of August, 1814, daughter of Sylvanus, son of John Bonnel, and have children,—1. Edward More, born 12th of October, 1847; 2. Charlotte Morrell, born March, 1850, and is married and lives in Newark. Mr. Stites died 25th of June, 1867. Their eighth child, John, who died young; and their ninth, Approlas, who married Mary Bryant, daughter of Simeon Bryant, of Springfield, lived in New York, and has two children,—Theodore and Matilda.

The following epitaphs are to be seen in the old Revolutionary burying-ground on the Matthias Denman farm, Springfield. (Contains about three acres, and belongs to the Stites family.)

On a flat stone:

"Here lies interred ye body of John Stites, Esq., who departed this life April the 21st, Anno Domini. 1782, in the lxxvi. year of his age. He lived beloved and died lamented by Church & State, also ye body of Mrs. Margert, his widow, who died Sept. 6, a.d., 1748, in her 69th year of age."

On a double stone:

"William Stites. Died ye 13 May, 1727, in his 51st year.

"Mary, wife of William, died April ye 21, 1728, in her 51st year."

On a double stone:

"Here lies Ezekiel and Richard Stites, deied May 15, 1727, ye 12th year, and Feb. 10, 1728, ye 20th year."

Among the early settlers were the name of Blacks, but now the name is extinct in the township; an old homestead is known as the Blacks' house or place. Also the name of Byram or Byrams; he was an inn-keeper before and during the Revolutionary war, "and the record goes on to say Gen. Greene put up at Byram's tavern." The name of Van Winckle is also mentioned, and also in 1738 it is believed that there were only three houses in the village of Springfield,—one occupied by Van Winckle family, one also by Thomas Denman, and the other by the Whitehead family.

The second house east from the church, one of the four which was left standing after the burning of the village by the British, 1780, and is now standing at this time,¹ we are told that Hon. Abraham Clark, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, resided for a time. The family of Reeves were among the early settlers; they lived on the north side of the First Mountain. Capt. Isaac Reeves was connected with Col. Dayton's regiment during the Revolutionary war, having a company doing good service. His remains lie in the old Revolutionary burying-ground, but the stone is gone. His wife, Catherine, died March 3, 1783. Watts Reeves is also mentioned 1798. Also epitaphs to the family of Brookfields are buried in this old ground:

"Erected to the Memory of JACOB BROOKFIELD, Esq., who departed this life Jan. 4, 1782,
in the 60th year.

This body in the grave we lay,
The to God has winged her way.
We hope in Christ they yet will meet
And reign in him with joy complete

In Memory
of William Brookfield, who departed this life
Oct., 1779,
In ye 30th year of his age."

We find that Jacob Brookfield was captain.² An account given by Col. Symmes says, "Capt. Brookfield, who commanded the flanking on the left, made the first onset on the right of the enemy, extending from the church up the Vauxhall Road." This was at the battle of Springfield, June 23, 1780.

¹ Mrs. Dr. Elmer, of Springfield.

² Hatfield's Elizabeth, p. 452.

John Smith is mentioned as Capt. Smith. He had a daughter Hannah, who married William Stites, of Springfield.

From an old Centinal newspaper, in the year 1820, is the following: "Walter Smith, born in the year 1723, now in his ninety-seventh year, has eight children living, eighty-nine grandchildren, ninety-three great-grandchildren; total descendants, 182, besides forty sons- and daughters-in-law who have married in the family, and, what is more remarkable, within four years the whole family except two lived within the sound of the parish church-bell." Walter Smith held many important trusts in the township; was for many years chosen freeholder, and interested in many improvements in the township. Samuel C. Smith, now living on the road from Summit to Springfield, is an elder in the Presbyterian Church; has also held many important trusts, been assessor eight years, collector four years, town committee two years, and has for twelve years past been chosen freeholder. There are but few of his age in the township, and has lived to see neighbor after neighbor pass away until he is about the only one left of the past generation.

The Denman family were among the first. Philip Denman is recorded as having held the office of chosen freeholder for many years from the year 1801. He must have been the son of Thomas Denman, who first settled here in 1738. Matthias Denman resided nearly opposite the Presbyterian Church. He married Phebe, daughter of Capt. Enos Baldwin, son of John Baldwin, who lived in Livingston township, and had eight children,—1, Sally Denman, who married William Parcel, had no children; 2, Samuel Denman, lived and died in Philadelphia; 3, Aaron Denman, married a Miss Mulford; 4, Elizabeth Denman, married Col. Abraham K. Woolley, son of Col. Abraham Woolley, of Springfield; 5, David Denman, married Miss Lyon, daughter of Elijah Lyon; 6, Phebe Denman, married Oliver Wade, son of Jonas Wade, Esq.; 7, Mary Denman, married, first, Mr. Tenbrook, second, Charles Atwater; 8, Charlotte Denman, married Rodney Wilber, Esq., of Newark.

The Wade family are a branch lineage of the Benjamin Wade branch, who settled at Connecticut Farms in 1675. The upper portion adjoining the township of Springfield was called the Wade Farms, now part of Union township. Capt. John Wade is mentioned, and who held position in the township; also Uzal Wade, who was town clerk for many years from 1804. Jonas Wade and Nathaniel Wade have also held township offices. They have been active in all the interests to promote the welfare of the Old Church. (For Wades see Union township.)

Woolley. This family came from Southampton, L. I., about the year 1683. Robert Woolley was one of the Elizabeth Town Associates in 1699. John,

William, and Edward were doubtless sons of Emanuel, but it is not known if at all Robert and Emanuel were related. A branch of the family settled in Springfield. Col. Abraham Woolley is mentioned as inn-keeper in 1793. He held many important offices in the township. His son was also a Col. Abraham K. Woolley, who married Elizabeth Denman, daughter of Matthias Denman.¹ Jacob Woolley, Sr., of Springfield, married Hannah, daughter of Abner Thompson. They had eight children,—1, Polly Woolley, who married Charles Thompson Day, son of Thaddeus Day; 2, Abner Woolley, who was killed by the fall of a tree in Michigan, aged twenty-seven years; 3, Jacob Woolley, Jr., married Mary Burnet, daughter of Capt. Jonathan Burnet, and had four children; 4, Betsey Woolley, married Jacob Miller, son of Enoch Miller, of Westfield; 5, Thompson Woolley, married Elizabeth Dean, daughter of William, son of John Dean, and had three children; 6, Hannah Woolley, married Squire Woodruff, son of Reuben; 7, Charlotte Woolley, married Samuel Mooney, son of Nicholas; and 8, Abraham Woolley.

We also find the names of Elias Van Arsdale, 1794; William Steele, 1796; David C. Baldwin, 1806; Israel Day, 1811; Elias Wade, 1822; Caleb S. Miller, 1823; Matthias Meeker, 1794; Moses Ball, 1804; Stephen Monrhouse, 1807; Samuel Bailey, 1817; Caleb Woodruff was collector from 1809 to 1827, being nineteen years, besides holding many other offices in the township; Daniel S. Briant, 1821; Samuel Tyler was justice of the peace in 1803; Joseph F. Hardy, 1803; Samuel Parkhurst was prominent in the township, elder in church, justice of the peace, 1800; Abner Ball, 1806; Philemon Dickerson was a justice of the peace; William Brown, 1808; Elias Tooker, Joseph Pierson, 1793; John C. Crane, 1801; Benjamin Bonnel, 1809; Samuel Colie, 1819; Abraham Parkhurst, 1820; Israel D. Condit, 1827; Cyrus Durand, 1821; Isaac Brookfield, 1829, as town clerk; Enoch Ball, 1816; Stephen Townley, 1822; Benjamin Day, 1810; William Parcell, 1812; Samuel Clark, 1801; Samuel Potter, 1798; Elijah Squire, 1790; Nathaniel Littell, 1804; Abraham Parkhurst was chosen freeholder, 1817 to 1826; was a prominent citizen of the township.

Many of the above names are the first settlers or sons, and the dates named are when mention is first made in this township before Milburn and Summit were set off, and mention is also made in these said townships of these old families.

Civil Organization.—Springfield was formed from Newark and Elizabethtown (then Essex County) in 1793. The first record of this township made in the town books is as follows:

"At a town-meeting held at the house of Mr. Abraham Woolley, Innkeeper in Springfield, the 14th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1794, pursuant to an act of the Legislature of New Jersey passed at Trenton the 27th of May, 1793, the following officers were duly elected:

¹ Littell's Passaic Valley.

"Samuel Potter, Esq., moderator, and Elias Van Arsdale, town clerk; Freeholders, Walter Smith and Elijah Squier; Commissioners of Appeal, Nathaniel Little, Samuel Tyler, and Jeremiah Mulford; Assessor, Matthias Meeker; Collector, Abraham Woolley; Surveyors of Highways, William Steele and Matthias Denman; Overseers of the Poor, Ezra Baldwin, Samuel Potter, and Joseph Pierson; Pound-keeper, John Woodruff; Constables, Nathaniel Budd, Stephen Morehouse, and Isaac Sampson; Overseers of the Highways, Amos Potter, David Pierson, Joseph Duty, Caleb Potter, Otadiah Wade, Benjamin Pettit, Ephraim Little, John Wilcocka, Stephen Denman, Jacob Brookfield, Uriah Smith, Simeon Squier, Enos Baldwin, Aaron Carter, Stephen Lyon, Walter Smith, Briant Durand, Watts Reeve, John Smith, John Squier, Jonathan Meeker, Isaac Halsey, Philip Denman, Isaac Sayre, Jr., Cornelius Williams, and Samuel Tyler.

"The town-meeting was then adjourned to meet at the house of Abraham Woolley, innkeeper, on the second Monday in April next as the law directs."

TOWN CLERKS.

Elias Van Arsdale, 1794-97.
William Steel, 1796.
Watts Reeve, 1798-1803.
Uzal Wade, 1804-8.
David C. Baldwin, 1806-7.
John Wade, 1809-10, 1814-21.
Israel Day, 1811-13.
Elias Wade, Jr., 1822, 1824-25.
Caleb S. Miller, 1823.
Samuel C. Smith, 1826-32.
Abner Stites, 1833-47.
Wickliff S. Condit, 1847-48.
Edwin A. Crossman, 1849.
Job S. Williams, 1850.

Thomas C. Bradbury, 1851-52.
Rufus Rand, 1853, 1875-79.
George Mulford, 1854-55.
Hornace Park, 1856.
Thomas P. Toole, 1858-61.
Judah A. Smith, 1862-64.
Joseph H. Doyle, 1865.
Reuben G. Marsh, 1866-73.
J. Edgar Meeker, 1874.
Reuben G. Marsh was appointed town clerk by Town Committee, Aug. 19, 1879, to fill the unexpired term of Rufus Rand.
Reuben G. Marsh, 1880-81.

ASSESSORS.

Matthias Meeker, 1794-98.
Elijah Woodruff, 1799, 1803, 1805-6.
Moses Ball, 1804.
Stephen Morehouse, 1807, 1814-16.
Stephen Towley, 1808-9, 1811-13.
Abner Ball, 1810.
Samuel Bailey, 1817-31, 1833-44.
Jacob French, 1845-47.

Theodore Pierson, 1848-53, 1859-64.
Samuel C. Smith, 1854-58, 1866-68.
Joseph H. Doyle, 1865.
George Mulford, 1867, 1872-80.
George R. Baker, 1870.
Nicholas C. Cox, 1871.
William B. Stites, 1881.

COLLECTORS.

Abraham Woolley, 1794-97, 1803-5.
Isaac Roll, 1798-1801.
Uzal Wade, 1806-8.
Caleb Woodruff, 1809-27.
John Smith, 1822.
Daniel S. Briant, 1828-31.
Elijah Stites, 1832-45.

Samuel C. Smith, 1846-49.
Albert D. Traphagen, 1850-51.
Aaron H. Burnet, 1852-55.
Ziba H. Sicky, 1856, 1858-64.
Aaron D. Sopher, 1865-73.
Asa T. Woodruff, 1874-81.

JUSTICES OF PEACE.

Samuel Tyler, 1803.
Abraham Woolley, 1806, 1808-10.
Abner Ball, 1806-9.
William Brown, 1808-10.
Joseph T. Hardy, 1809-10.
Samuel Parkhurst, 1810-18.
Caleb Woodruff, 1818.
Philemon Dickerson, 1836.
Aaron A. Burnet, 1850, 1855, 1860.
Thomas W. Reynolds, 1850.

Elias Tooker, 1852.
David Brison, 1855.
David B. Sayre, 1856.
Abner Stiles, 1856.
Theodore Pierson, 1861.
Ziba H. Sicky, 1861-71.
William S. Smith, 1871.
John L. Currie, 1881.
George Mulford, 1881.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

Grover Coe, 1798-1800.
Abraham Woolley, 1798-1802.
Joseph Pierson, 1798-1800.
Abner Ball, 1798-1809.
Samuel Potter, 1798-1800.
Israel Day, 1800, 1806, 1808.
William Brown, 1806-20.
John C. Crane, 1801-5.
Samuel Clark, 1801-2, 1804-9.
Caleb Woodruff, 1803-8.
Benjamin Bonnell, 1807.
Joseph J. Hardy, 1809-12.

Uzal Wade, 1809-23.
Samuel Parkhurst, 1810-15.
Stephen Towley, 1810-11.
William Parcell, 1812-16.
Stephen Baldwin (Capt.), 1813-34.
Samuel Bailey, 1816.
Enoch Ball, 1816.
Daniel S. Briant, 1817-26.
Benjamin L. Day, 1817-21.
Cyrus Durand, 1821.
Philemon Dickerson, 1822-41.
Samuel Colie, 1822-35.

John Wade, 1824-27.
Elijah Stites, 1827.
Abraham Parkhurst, 1828-29.
Jonas Wade, 1828.
Isaac Brookfield, 1829-35.
Israel D. Condit, 1830.
Walter Smith, 1831-32.
Samuel Halsey, 1832, 1835-44.
Isaac D. Smith, 1833-34.
W. W. Parkhurst, 1835.
Samuel C. Smith, 1876, 1852.
Noah Clark, 1836-41, 1845.
Solomon Dean, 1836-37.
Ezra S. Gardner, 1837-43, 1848-56.
Daniel Mulford, 1838-41.
Andrew W. Browne, 1842, 1844, 1874-75.
Richard Tuers, 1842-50.
Daniel Balwin, 1842.
Daniel Balwin, 1843.
Thomas W. Reynolds, 1843-44.
Isaac Lyon, 1844.
Wickliff S. Condit, 1845.
Cyrus Parkhurst, 1845, 1848-50, 1869-70.
John Carter, 1845-47.
Stewart C. Marsh, 1846-47.
Aaron H. Burnet, 1846-50.
Edward S. Hand, 1846-47.
Job S. Williams, 1848-49, 1851.
John M. Tooker, 1850-51, 1859-63.
Abner J. Reeve, 1851-54.
William H. Smith, 1851.
John Crowell, 1852.
William H. Parcell, 1852.
Samuel M. Bailey, 1852, 1855-56.
Samuel Bailey, Jr., 1853.
Edwin A. Clayton, 1853-54.
John D. Crowell, 1853.
Henry W. Morehouse, 1853.
Benjamin S. Dean, 1854, 1858-64.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

Walter Smith, 1794-1800.
Elijah Squier, 1794-1800.
Philip Denman, 1801-5, 1807-8.
Israel Day, 1801-3, 1806-21.
Nathaniel Little, 1804-5.
Ezra Baldwin, 1806, 1809-11.
Samuel Parkhurst, 1812-16, 1828-31.
Abraham Parkhurst, 1817-26.
John Wade, 1822, 1832-36.
William Stites, 1823-31, 1840-44, 1854-58.
William Parcell, 1827.
Daniel Balwin, 1832-35, 1837-38, 1844-49, 1853-54.
Israel D. Condit, 1836-38, 1840.
Calvin D. Bonnel, 1839.
Isaac M. Hand, 1839.

William H. Briant, 1854.
Theodore Pierson, 1850-56.
Jacob French, 1855-56.
Aaron F. Ross, 1856-56.
Rufus Rand, 1858.
John C. Sicky, 1858-60.
Isaac Bannister, 1858.
James J. Bradley, 1858.
John Richards, 1859.
George Mulford, 1859, 1863-64, 1867-68.
Theodore Overmiller, 1860.
Jacob M. Vanwagener, 1860, 1862.
Lewis A. Denman, 1861, 1865.
John Pudney, 1861-62, 1866-68.
William S. Donican, 1861-62.
George W. Brown, 1863-64.
James M. Woodruff, 1863-64, 1866.
Henry Morgan, 1864-72.
John L. Currie, 1865.
William S. Smith, 1865.
George R. Baker, 1865.
George M. Tingley, 1866-68.
David W. Alling, 1866.
Charles H. McCormick, 1867-68.
William Hastings, 1869-70, 1872-73.
Theodore L. Currie, 1869, 1871.
Henry M. Graves, 1870-73.
Henry Munker, 1870-72.
James Farrow, 1871-73.
J. Martin Roll, 1873, 1876-81.
Sylvanus Lyon, 1873-78.
Theodore D. Sicky, 1874.
N. C. Cox, 1874-75.
William C. Corly, 1874-77.
Jonathan Edgar Meeker, 1875-81.
William Corby, 1875-76.
William B. Stites, 1876-78, 1880.
George W. Cain, 1878-79.
Charles T. Corly, 1880-81.

In the year 1829 a committee was appointed to arrange for a seal of the township. They made the following report, which was adopted:

"The committee for the township of Springfield met at the house of William Starkweather, inn-keeper, on Saturday, September the twelfth, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, for the purpose of agreeing upon device which should be known as the common seal of said township. The committee did resolve and agree that the impression of the eagle side of an American half-dollar should be known as the common seal of said township.

"In witness whereof the committee have herewith subscribed their names the day and year above written.

"PHILEMON DICKERSON, "ISAAC BROOKFIELD,
"ABRAHAM PARKHURST, "SAMUEL COLIE,
"Town Committee."

Present Census.—The report of census committee, 1880, of this township, that it contains a population of 845, and of children attending the public school, 287.

The Village of Springfield.—In 1738 it is believed that there were only three houses in the village of Springfield, which were occupied by Thomas Denman and the Van Winckle and Whitehead families. The First Presbyterian Church was built about the year 1747. Tradition says the church was built of logs, and the second meeting house built in 1761 upon the spot where the present one is standing, and stood until destroyed by the hands of the British soldiers on 23d day of June, 1780, and the present edifice was erected in 1791. The present Methodist Episcopal Church was erected in 1833. The present Union Academy was built in 1857, the upper part being used as a town hall. The village contains two houses of entertainment, one of which has stood for many years, called the Washington Hotel, and the other to the west of the village facing the Westfield road, called the Springfield Tavern. There are at the present about one hundred and twenty-five dwellings and stores, with a population of six hundred. The following names of those who are engaged in business at the present time:

Ziba H. Sickly, Tunison & Terry, general merchandise.

Ziba H. Sickly, coal- and lumber-yard.

N. P. Marsh, oysters, confectionery, and ice cream.

Asa H. Woodruff, postmaster.

Denman & Sons, carpenters.

Theodore Reeves, carpenter and builder.

J. Edgar Meeker, Henry Bidwell, paper-mills.

James Farrow, Hugh Morrison, wheelwright- and blacksmith-shops.

William Ford, fancy store.

Nicholas Jobs, M.D.

John L. Currie, George Mulford, justices of peace.

Samuel C. Smith, undertaker.

Rev. Henry W. Teller, pastor Presbyterian Church.

Rev. Samuel P. Lacey, pastor Methodist Episcopal Church.

This beautiful historic village is situated in a level plain, having parts of the Orange range and parts of First Mountain in full view. It is one mile from Milham depot, in Essex County, on the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad, and about six miles from Elizabeth and seven from Newark, a branch of the Rahway River passing through the centre of the village.

POSTMASTERS.—There were no facilities for forwarding communications from this village until some time in the year 1810, and prior to this by stages which passed through once or twice a week to Newark or Elizabethtown. Occasionally a post-boy was sent with a dispatch of some importance, and then he would collect all that was left in the store to be forwarded, and many very tender messages by word of mouth were said to him to be communicated to the interested one as he passed her domicile on the turnpike, and for one shilling it is said he would go sometimes a little out of his way to deliver it.

The first regular appointed postmaster was the late Caleb Woodruff, who held it for a number of years. Abner Stites, the store-keeper, was appointed about 1837; Aaron H. Burnett, Ziba H. Sickly, and the present postmaster, Asa N. Woodruff, who has held the position for some seventeen years.

"ONE CENT REWARD.

"MERELY TO ANSWER THE LAW.

"RAN away from the subscriber on the 13th January 1828 last an apprentice to the shoemaking business named Alexander Brown. Had on when he went away blue coat and pantaloons striped Marsell's vest and fur Hat, all in good condition. He is about 17 years old and about five feet and a half high uncommonly round shouldered pretty thick lips face considerably freckled very light and straight hair, goes with his head hanging down, a mark in his forehead nearly over the right eye, received from an oyster rake on a Sunday frolic. Said boy is very talkative but scarcely speaks the truth &c is as lazy as he is deceitful. All persons are forbid harbouring said boy, or of employing him, if he should overcome his lousiness sufficiently to apply anywhere for work.

"The Above reward but no charges will be given to any one who will return him to the subscriber.

"JOHN SMYTHE."

The above advertisement was printed upon a hand-bill and tacked in the stores throughout Essex County, and also published once according to a law passed, and the above heading reads, "Merely to answer the Law."

Schools.—As far as present recollection goes the first school-house was built of logs, and the only one prior to 1778 in this township, then being the north-westerly parts of Elizabeth Town borough. Here the first teacher taught, and it is more than probable that the pastor of the church took an interest in the school, as the children were once or twice a week brought before him for examination and were severely catechised. One of the first lesson-books used here was a reprint of the New England Primer. It contained illustrations, and also the Shorter Catechism. Our Puritan fathers brought this catechism with them across the ocean and laid it on the same shelf with the family Bible. They taught it diligently to their children every Sabbath. And while a few of their descendants now in the evening of life remember every question and answer, many not yet advanced to life's meridian can never forget when every Saturday forenoon they had to take a regular catechising in the common school, commencing with a, b, c, oaken-bench class, "What is the chief end of Man?"¹

This small primer was used until the necessity arose for a more elaborate selection, and in the year 1802 "The American Preceptor," "Daboll's Schoolmaster's Assistant," including the Constitution of the United States, the Declaration of Independence, and Washington's Farewell Address, 17th of September, 1796, were introduced as text-books.

¹ From Ira Webster's account, 1843.

The following is found in the records :

"In pursuance of a Notification given at the Meeting-House the 27th of July, 1800, a meeting of a number of the Inhabitants of Springfield was held on Monday the 28th at the old School-House, where Abraham Woolley, Esquire, being chosen moderator and William Steele clerk a vote was taken whether the lot of Ground and materials of said house should be disposed of, which passed in the affirmation without a dissenting voice."

The premises were accordingly exposed to public sale by Elijah Woodruff, auctioneer. The building was sold for forty-two dollars, and the lot to Elijah Woodruff for forty-six dollars, and a committee was appointed to purchase a new lot, and also to build a school-house, employ teachers, and discharge them at their discretion. Abram Woolley, Esq., Matthias Denman, Grover Coe, Daniel Sutfin, and William Steele were appointed said committee, and at their next meeting, Sept. 80, 1800 :

"They decided to build a School-House 2 stories High, 20 ft. Post, 20 wide, and 40 ft. long to contain 4 windows of 15 panes 8 by 10 each side and in the Lower story 5 do on each side and two windows in one end and 4 in the other. So we perceive that they had decided to build before they had secured a lot, as Rev. Mr. Van Arsdel had a Lot for £50 which he was to give answer to-morrow."

At their next meeting they decided to divide the "Academy" into one hundred and seventy-five shares of eight dollars each, and at their next meeting, which took place Dec. 14, 1802, Messrs. William Steele, Halsted Coe, and Grover Coe were appointed to draft a constitution, and at their next meeting, December 27th, a board of trustees was elected, consisting of William Steel, Samuel Tyler, Esqs., Halsted Coe, Gershom Williams, and Uzal Wade, "who constituted the number by ballot." The constitution was adopted, and the institution took the name of "The Springfield Union Academy." It is further stated in the records that the "Academy lately erected upon such a footing as will afford the easy and regular means of Education to the youth in this vicinity, and add respectability of the Place."

The first mention made of a teacher in the old record book is as follows :

"SPRINGFIELD, March 4th, 1805.—The trustees of Springfield Union Academy met at the house of Rev. C. Williams in order to have some conversation with Mr. Joseph Stewart, who offers his services as a tutor to the lower Room. The trustees having satisfied themselves as to his capacity to teach have agreed to employ him. The number of Scholars shall be 40, no more, and the price of tuition shall be twelve shillings for those who read and write only, and fourteen shillings for ciphering and English Grammar."

In the year 1808, Miss Beach is mentioned as a "tutress," and again in 1811. At a meeting, 10th day of December, 1813, the teacher, Mr. Tallman, was dismissed, and mention is made, 13th of April, 1814, of the continuation of Mr. Isaac Ross, and that a "Madam school be in the upper part of the Academy." Mr. Condit is mentioned in 1820 as having been taken sick at Orange, and desiring the trustees to "delay the school for a week or two." In the year 1821, at a meeting in the spring, the stockholders agreed to let a "Mrs. Leary have the use of the Globe for her private school when the Academy did not use it," and again it mentions, 9th of April, 1821, "that Mrs. H. Leary [in the other resolution Mrs. Leary is mentioned] have the use of the Globe on Mondays and Tuesdays of each and every week." In 1825, Mr. Daniel Colie declines being a teacher in the academy, "of course leaving the school vacant," and Mr. Sylvester Cook is invited to take charge as teacher. Mr. Bowdis was named and appointed teacher March 12, 1827. Mr. Boughton and Mrs. Addington, Nov. 11, 1829, are teachers, and on Jan. 20, 1830, a Miss Alroy is appointed teacher "if she can get 20 scholars, and to come as soon as practicable," and March 13th, same year, Mr. Boughton resigns, and it is voted that Mr. John Lyon be employed as a teacher until the next annual meeting of stockholders. April 17th, Mr. Samuel H. Page is selected from several persons as being competent to teach. Mrs. Alroy (or Alroyd) gave up the school Jan. 19, 1831, having taught one year. April 24, 1834, Mr. Samuel E. Rice is named, "they being satisfied of his being competent," and a Miss Bonnell is also mentioned.

Oct. 8, 1834, they resolved to advertise for an extra teacher for the winter months in the Newark paper,— "A good schoolmaster wanted." It seems by this a Mr. Volney Ross presented himself and was examined and appointed, and to open school on Monday next, which he concluded so to do. Mr. Samuel E. Rice then relinquished the school. He married a daughter of Col. John Wade, and in 1838 moved to Baltimore.

Mr. William Willis, April 13, 1835, rendered his bills for the last two years for repairs done the academy, amounting to five pounds thirteen shillings and three pence (£5 13s. 3d.).

Mr. Denny has been assistant with Mr. Rice, and has declined April 28, 1835, and they again advertise for a teacher. Many of the bills were made out up to this time in English currency, viz. :

	£	s.	d.
To hanging a door.....	0	2	6
Repairing a lock.....	0	2	0
3/4 day repairing windows.....	0	7	6
Paid postage for letters.....	0	4	6
From Rev. Mr. Hart.....	1	19	10
	£2	16	3

Oct. 6, 1835, Mr. John Scheller is appointed for the lower school, and on the 9th October a special meeting to employ a "Maddam"; but Mr. Lathrop was appointed, and again they met, as Mr. Scheller had resigned, and Mr. Frederick Merrill agreed to open school April, 1836, at fourteen shillings per "scollar." Saturday evening, April 16, 1836, the "Revd. John C. Hart made application to have a select Maddam School for young ladies" taught in the upper room of the academy, and the trustees agreed to employ Mrs. Hart to take charge of said school. Aug. 24, 1837, Mr. Allen was made teacher in lower room, and again Dec. 6, 1837, Mr. A. N. Merriam was agreed upon by the trustees as teacher. Oct. 7, 1840, Mr. Dayton Kellogg came and was allowed to take the school on his own responsibility, collect his own bills, and charge two dollars per term for each scholar.

Prior to this Mr. William R. Perrine was teacher, but the record has no account, only mentioning their indebtedness to him of ten dollars at the time of Mr. Perrine's appointment, and for the first time the common school fund is mentioned this year. "They agreed to apply $45 of the public school fund money," and Jonas Wade and S. C. Smith were appointed a committee to see that the same was carried out. Mr. Thomas Smith was teacher about this time, or probably a year or so earlier, but no date is given. Also Mr. William D. Shipman was appointed in the year 1841, but taught for a few months. He married while here one of the granddaughters of Capt. John Wade, and now is the judge of the Southern District of New York. After he left, Mr. Wing and Thomas Smith taught. In the year 1852, Mr. H. N. Conger was appointed teacher, but remained for a short time and went to Newark, and edited a newspaper called the Newark Courier, and was afterwards Secretary of State during Governor Olden's term, and afterwards minister to China.

In the month of November, 1856 (no date given), Union Academy was burned.

Sept. 6, 1858, the board of trustees elect of the Springfield Union Academy on motion adopted a seal for the corporation, and the eagle side of the American quarter-dollar was concluded upon as the said seal.

Elijah L. Bunnell, Oliver Wade, Uzal N. Wade, Abner Stites, Daniel R. Smith, trustees of the Union Academy, Springfield, N. J.

We have followed the record up to the year 1858, and here it closes, making mention of the securing of a lot and a resolution to commence to build a new building larger than the old one, and part of it to be used for the town hall, where all public meetings should be held in the future.

The present New Union Academy was built and finished in the fall of the year 1857. At this time Mr. J. F. Holt was the principal, and remained until Mr. Alford came in 1858; Alfred Hand, 1860; and at this time a public school was established in the basement of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Benjamin Kelly had charge for a short time, when this school was given up, and Daniel Baker came and acted as principal. In 1862 he left, studied for the bar, and died a short time after. A lady by name of Ripley in 1863 for a short time kept a select school. In the year 1867, Mr. Chauncey Ripley was made principal of Springfield Union Academy, and remained one year, when his brother, John Ripley, came in 1868; Stephen M. Blazier, 1869-73; Theodore D. Sickly, 1873-75; Frederick D. Currie, 1875-77; E. T. Dunham, 1877-79; and Josiah G. Brown, 1879-81. Union Academy School District, No. 22, George Mulford, district clerk; children, 205; and at the Union School-house, District No. 21, being on the line of Springfield and Westfield townships, A. M. Parkhurst, district clerk, there are enrolled eighty-two children. (For list of teachers of District No. 21, see Westfield township.)

Before closing the account of these schools we would just remark that in the records that have been preserved we have noticed the manner and also the handwriting in which they were registered from the first record, some looking like copper-plate engraving; every line, every stroke of the quill is perfect (they did not use steel pens then), and as we follow the record we do not find so good penmanship as the first years; but they are kept as a history of the past, and have so been looked upon for the last one hundred years.

The oldest deed of school property in this township is as follows: "Abraham Woolley and wife and others, William Steele and others, trustees of the Union Academy, Springfield." Book F. 6 of Deeds, p. 168, etc., Newark, N. J., deed dated 25th April, 1803, recorded 6th March, 1845.

Presbyterian Church, No. 1.—The following account of this historical church is from a sermon preached by the Rev. Henry W. Teller, pastor, on Sunday, July 16, 1876:

"It was in those early days that the people in all these regions round about Elizabethtown, having but the one church to worship in, used to walk to it from Rahway, Westfield, Springfield, and Connecticut Farms. Whether they were in the habit of going to and fro to both services, or of attending as regularly on rainy Sundays as clear ones, we have no means at this late day of determining. The church in Springfield (which is the only child of the Connecticut Farms Church, and one of the grandchildren of the First Church of Elizabeth) was organized twenty-nine years after the first settlement here. It belonged originally to the Presbytery of New York. A house of worship was immediately built, and was situated about half-way between the present parsonage and the Wilburn depot. It was very near if not on exactly the same spot where Mr. John Meeker's store is now standing. There was also a graveyard there. Tradition says the church was built of logs. It was completed, and the first pastor, Rev. Timothy Symms, was installed in 1746, just one hundred and thirty years ago. Mr. Symms had charge of this church in connection with the one at New Providence. . . .

"Mr. Symms was pastor of the church for four years until 1750, after which there was a vacancy for thirteen years. While he was pastor and the first church was still standing there was given to the congregation a tract of land consisting of one hundred acres in the following way and upon the following conditions. I quote from the original deed as it was given by James Alexander. The deed bears date March 29, 1751, and reads as follows: 'And as to the other one hundred acres of the premises' (one hundred acres were first deeded to Rev. Timothy Symms as his own private property), 'the same is to be to the sole and only proper use, benefit, and behoof of the said Timothy Symms and Peter Dickinson, their heirs and assigns, rendering therefor yearly one pint of spring water when demanded on the premises. Provided always and it is hereby declared that the last hundred acres is to be held by the said Timothy Symms and Peter Dickinson, and the survivors of them and their heirs, in trust, to be a glebe for the use of the minister of the said parish of Springfield—for the time being—forever, and never to be sold or disposed of to any other use. But the said trustees and their assigns shall and may from time to time at the request of the minister and the vestry of the said church of Springfield—for the time being—grant and convey the same to such other trustees as they shall from time to time name for the use and purpose aforesaid and no others.'

"For years the chief value of this land was in the forests that covered it, which enabled the church to add to their other inducements to seeking a pastor an abundance of firewood.

"Whatever became of the first log house of worship I have not been able to learn. There is no record of it save the single fact, stated in an old manuscript, that it was built. It might have been destroyed, or very likely it was abandoned as soon as they were able to put up another. We know very well the Puritan principles of our forefathers would not suffer them to worship very long in a temple of logs while they dwelt in their ceiled houses.

"The second meeting-house was built in 1761, fifteen years after the first, upon the spot where the present one is standing, and stood here for nineteen years.

"In 1763, Rev. Mr. Ker was installed, and was here two years, when there was a vacancy of nine years. There is no account of any of the events transpiring in all that time except that the first parsonage was⁸ leased Aug. 22, 1764. When the record is again resumed it is at a period immediately preceding the Revolution, for this second church was the centre of Revolutionary interest for the town of Springfield.

"In November, 1778, it was so taken up with public stores that the congregation abandoned it for the time being and fitted up the garret of the old parsonage as a temporary place of worship. Thus was the building itself dedicated to the country's service in the name of the God of battles. How small and mean the spirit of revenge that afterwards burned it to the ground, and yet a spirit worthy the tyranny that employed mercenary troops and savages to carry on an unholy war.

"On Oct. 12, 1773, a call was given Rev. John Close. He was offered two hundred and fifty dollars, besides the parsonage and firewood, but for some reason kept secret from the ages the offer was not accepted. Perhaps he was a young man and modest and the offer seemed too great. During this year Rev. Mr. Caldwell—who was called the 'high priest of the Revolution,' whose wife was shot at Connecticut Farms shortly before the battle of Springfield, and who was himself murdered the year following at the Elizabethtown Ferry—preached several times to this congregation.

"On Oct. 10, 1774, Rev. Jacob V^a Artsdalen,¹ whose remains are resting in our cemetery, came before the people and 'preached a lecture,' as the record has it, which was so well received that it secured him a call at once. He came in December of the same year upon a salary of two hundred and fifty dollars, together with the use of the parsonage and the inevitable firewood, which was to be drawn to his door. The salary was afterwards increased to three hundred dollars.

"The meagre support received from the churches had a tendency to make some of the pastors pretty sharp financiers. As an illustration of this there is still in existence a fifteen-hundred-dollar bond given by the trustees of the church to Mr. V^a Artsdalen, upon the condition that if the trustees paid 'promptly every year,' in 'quarterly payments,' their pastor's salary, and well and truly 'provided a sufficient quantity of firewood,' and kept him 'in quiet and peaceable possession' of the parsonage 'with all the appurtenances,' and kept 'the same in good repair,' according 'to the true intent and meaning' of their agreement, then the obligation of the bond was 'to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and virtue.'

"It does not prove the pastor avaricious, but only that his salary was so small that he could not afford to run any risks. He evidently did not consider their word quite as good as their bond. Let it be said, however, to the credit of the church that every obligation was promptly met, and in due time the bond was canceled. Mr. Van Artsdalen served the church faithfully for twenty-seven years, and resigned his charge when failing health compelled him to do so. One evidence of the people's affection for him is the fact that in May, 1778, they gave him a vacation of six months and continued his salary. You must remember that that was not as much the practice then as it is now. It was something more than mere conventional courtesy or a forced concession to a growing custom that led a people in those days to grant their pastor a leave of absence. He was ardently devoted to his country and to the work of the Master. The time of his ministry included the whole period of the Revolution. He saw his church, together with many of the homes of his parishioners, reduced to ashes, but nothing daunted he continued his work. He gathered his scattered flock together again, as a father would gather his children, and releasing them from their bonded obligation to pay him a stipulated salary, he hired to them from year to year, accepting just what they could afford to give. After the burning of the church we next find him preaching to his heroic band of Christian patriots in the old parsonage barn. Why they did not return to the garret we are not informed, but very likely the congregation had by this time outgrown it, or, what is equally probable, they might have thought that as they were now driven out of their church indefinitely the barn would be more convenient. They certainly had the grace and the good sense to make the best of the situation.

"They were 'cast down but not discouraged.' As soon as they fixed upon their place of worship they agreed to ceil it up to the plate and gable end beams. In the following year they had put in galleries, with the foremost seats on the right-hand side of the pulpit reserved for the siders. In this rudely fitted up temple they must have worshiped ten years.

"Sept. 25, 1786, four years after the barn was fairly fitted up, the church was incorporated under the name of the 'First Congregation of the Presbyterian Church in Springfield.' The seal of the church, a dove with an olive branch, was not adopted until December, 1792. In 1785 they began to talk of building for themselves the third house of worship. Four years at least were spent in working up an interest and laying plans and devising means before the building was fairly begun. It was first agreed to build of brick and stone.

"A burnt child dreads the fire.' They wanted something that wouldn't burn; but the first plan was given up as too expensive for their limited means. Twelve months after they concluded upon cedar shingles, and finally, in 1791, the frame went up. It was a time of general rejoicing to both pastor and people. Work and material were contributed by the members of the congregation as they were able. Men came bringing their tools and the best timber their farms could furnish. Booths were erected on the ground, where the women prepared meals for the volunteer workmen. Contributions were solicited from the churches of the Presbytery of New York. The bell was contributed by Mr. Samuel Tyler, and thus the work went forward to completion, and grand old Jacob Van Artsdalen was the first to preach in the new church as he had been the last to preach in the old.

"Some of you will remember this church as it was originally, just as it came from the hands of that earnest band of workmen. You have in your memory an unfading picture of its old-fashioned, straight-backed pews, its broad centre aisle, its middle seats that had no partition running through them as these have, its narrow side aisles which made a passage for the benefit of the wall seats only as they only opened into them, the centre being closed up at the ends nearest the walls. You have not forgotten either the quaint old circular pulpit, mounted upon a high column like a huge barrel, elevated so as to overlook the back of the church, and at the same time sweep the galleries. And you will remember also the great sounding-board back of the pulpit and directly over the preacher's head, that caused you always to think of the wings that overshadowed the mercy seat, though it never bore to them the slightest resemblance. Such was the primitive glory of this latter house as some of you well remember. In it Mr. V^a Artsdalen preached as long as he was able, and finally, when he could come no longer, he was brought one day by loving hands that his sorrowing people might look upon his face once more and for the last time.

"On the 1st of May, 1800, he stopped preaching, but he remained in the parsonage, and his salary was continued. On May 1, 1801, he was dismissed, and one year's further salary was voted to him. In 1803 he entered into his rest.

"It is recorded that near the close of his ministry Rev. Jonathan Elmer preached for him; and as he was without charge he requested a contribution, which was accordingly taken up, and amounted to eight dollars and some cents. It may seem to us an unimportant item to be made a matter of record, but we must acknowledge that he was a better judge as to its importance. In March, 1801, it was decided to hire Rev. Gershom Williams for one year from May 1st. In October of the same year a call was given him, which he seems to have had under consideration for a long while, for the first communion after his acceptance of it was on the 23d of May, 1802. His ministry here was marked by the most powerful revival that ever occurred in this church. He has left on record in his own handwriting two bits of personal experience that are as windows looking into the heart of the man, and disclosing something of the spiritual moods to which he appears to have been subject. Like the Psalmist David, he was susceptible of the highest exaltation and deepest depression. On Sept. 9, 1804, he went home from the Lord's Supper and wrote in the bitterness of his spirit, 'Not one new member admitted. O melancholy instance, once repeated since my public ministry began. May this evidence of barrenness humble me and lead all the disciples to ardent prayer.' Four years the leanness continued, and there were but nine added to the church in the whole time. Then there was an addition of thirty at one communion, and at another in the same year of fifteen. After that there was no general work of grace until 1814. On May 8th of that year the faithful pastor goes from the breaking of bread to his study in a far different mood from that which carried him there on that dark September day ten years before. The fruit is at length ripening and dropping into his hand, and his heart is full. He sits down and writes a long list of names, every one of which he counts as a star, and then under the list he writes, 'The above one hundred and one names were all added to the church in one day, of whom forty-one then received baptism. Wondrous day of the Lord, never to be forgotten!

¹ I give the name as I find it in his handwriting. It was afterwards written Vanarsdalen, and still later Vanarsdale or Vanarsdal.

"It was, indeed, a wondrous day for the church at Springfield. These galleries were packed until it was feared they would break down; these seats and aisles were crowded to overflowing with penitent sinners and sinners that had been alike quickened into new life. Do you think that pastor's joy could have been measured that day by any earthly measurement? There are many treasures in this world that men reckon of priceless value, and count with pride and delight, but there are none like the souls that are saved for Jesus. We know nothing of the fullness of joy until we sit down to number the saved through our instrumentality, who shall shine as stars hereafter in our crown of rejoicing.

"Just at the close of Mr. Williams' ministry, in 1818, the first Sunday-school known in this part of the country was started by Miss Catherine Campbell in a room fitted up for the purpose on her father's premises. The school began with three teachers,—Miss Catherine Campbell (now Mrs. Willbur, of Orange), Miss Eliza Campbell, and Miss Duyckinck,—and with one hundred scholars. Miss Eliza taught forty of the larger boys, Miss Catherine twenty-five of the larger girls, and Miss Duyckinck took the remaining boys and girls. A few months later the schools more immediately connected with this church were organized by Mrs. May Ten Broeck (now Mrs. Atwater, of New Haven) and a young lady (now Mrs. Samuel Halsey, of Newark). It began with about five teachers and a hundred scholars. Neither schools had any male teachers at the beginning. The good brethren wanted to see the innovation a success before they lent it any assistance that would be likely to compromise their Christian standing.

"Sunday-schools were then a new thing under the sun. A good many of the churches, and not a few of the pastors, regarded them suspiciously as calculated to draw away the general interest from the long-established means of grace and methods of salvation. The people also shared this want of confidence in them, or else were at a loss to know just what was intended by them. Some had the impression that it was a money-making operation. One woman, to whom one of the teachers went asking if her children could attend, wanted first to know 'how much she was going to charge a quarter?' There were difficulties to overcome, but the schools were successfully established, and from the first were greatly prospered and blessed. They are not yet done bearing fruit.

"Rev. James W. Tucker, who succeeded Mr. Williams, came here from New England. He was installed Aug. 4, 1818, and was here but a few months. He died suddenly Feb. 11, 1819. He is described as a man of remarkable pulpit ability, having few equals in his day in this respect. He was warmly in sympathy with the two infant Sunday-schools, and greatly endeared himself to the earnest workers of the church during his short stay among them.

"Following him in 1820 was the Rev. Elias W. Crane. He was installed January 5th, and preached here six years. He was dismissed Oct. 17, 1826. A large number were added to the church during his ministry. While here he preached the first historical sermon, but there is no copy of it to be found at present. It was during his time that a decided novelty in the shape of a stove was introduced into the church. Hitherto foot-stoves heated with coals and flat stones well roasted and wrapped up, together with the warming power of the pulpit and the inward heat of the spirit, had been relied upon. But the people were getting more tender or fastidious or both. There seems not to have been, however, as much opposition here to the ungodly thing as in many other places. It came and took peaceable possession of the centre aisle about one-third of the way from the door. The pipe ran straight up towards the pulpit to within a few feet of it, and then sent out two arms at right angles that were thrust out through these side windows. As there were no chimneys you can imagine the condition of the church on windy Sundays. The stove was paid for by voluntary contributions. An incident connected with this fact has been preserved to illustrate the generous spirit of those good old times, of which we delight to hear, if it is not too frequently thrust upon our notice, as in sharp contrast with the more penurious spirit of the present age. One liberal-minded young man, when the contribution-box was passed around, dropped twenty-five cents into it, and a near neighbor, witnessing his ruinous liberality, nudged him, and inquired, reprovingly, 'What did you give so much for?'

"During the last year of Mr. Crane's ministry the people of the township met in this church to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the nation's independence, and to listen to an able and eloquent oration delivered by Mr. Sylvester Cooke, then a young man, and a teacher in the public school, now a venerable minister of the gospel retired from the active work.

"Rev. John D. Paxton followed Mr. Crane, and was here little less than a year. He was never installed. He was moderator of the session from Oct. 27, 1826, to June 25, 1827.

"Rev. William Gray was settled Feb. 6, 1828, and was here about a year. He left some time in 1829.

"In the sessional records, as kept by these earlier pastors, I find that whenever there was a meeting of the session, if one of the elders was absent he was called to an account at the next meeting, or even if he was late he must give his reasons. It was considered a matter of sacred duty in those days that every elder should be present at every meeting of the session. It was a custom that might be practiced to advantage in our day.

"Rev. Horace Doolittle was installed in May, 1830, and dismissed in April, 1833.

"After Mr. Doolittle's time the church was without a pastor, except as supplied by Rev. Mr. Woodbury, until 1835. On April 26th of that year Rev. John C. Hart was installed, and remained eight years. He was dismissed Sept. 1, 1843. Mr. Hart is remembered as an earnest preacher and most excellent pastor. There were large accessions to the church during the time of his ministry here. He preached a historical sermon, July 1, 1840, to which reference is made in the 'Historical Collections of New Jersey.' From his manuscript we learn of a thrilling incident that occurred during the battle of Springfield.

"When the alarm was sounded upon the mountain, a family living where Mrs. Daniel Smith is now living began to hide away their more valuable household goods. While they were all thus busily engaged the two armies were posted for the fight on either side of the Rahway River. They themselves were directly between the contending forces. They could not go down the road to cross at the bridge without exposing themselves to the fire of friend and foe. So they sought the shelter of the woods in the rear of the house, and becoming separated from each other, one of the family, a young girl, fourteen years old, found herself alone with a little sister in her care. Taking the baby in her arms, she bravely forded the river while the battle was raging, and ran with it past the church on the road to Millburn, until she sank down exhausted. There the father and mother soon found her, and they all continued their flight to a place of safety among the Short Hills.

"Mr. Hart was succeeded by Rev. Edward E. Rankin, who was installed April 23, 1844, and dismissed in 1850. He is spoken of as a man of fine personal appearance, having a clear pleasant voice, which while it was not loud was always easily heard. His ministry here was largely blessed. During his pastorate he took a trip to Europe, and Rev. Mr. Starkweather supplied the pulpit in his absence.

"Rev. William E. Locke, formerly a preacher in the Baptist denomination, succeeded him. He was installed May 28, 1851, and dismissed in 1852.

"Of his successor, the Rev. O. L. Kirtland, who was installed May 3, 1853, and dismissed at his own request on account of failing health April 17, 1872, it is not necessary that I should speak even to the children of this congregation. It is not to be expected that the words of one who was a stranger to him can make any more dear or fragrant that name of blessed memory to you all. How many hallowed associations are clustered around it in your hearts and homes? He is the man who for twenty years was your sympathizing friend and spiritual adviser. In the very nature of the case no other can ever take his place to many of you. He married you, he baptized your children; he stood with you at the grave of your loved ones, he sought to soften the sorrow by words of holy comfort; he has been in your homes a frequent and honored guest; his memory is associated with days that were bright and days that were cloudy; he has been to you father and brother and friend; and such friendships are formed but once in a lifetime. There were one hundred and fifty-eight added to the church during Mr. Kirtland's pastorate here. In the early part of his ministry the lecture-room was built, and near the close of it the church was remodeled to its present appearance and the organ put in its place. Two years after his resignation he fell asleep in Jesus.

"On the 24th of October, 1872, Rev. Mr. Bowen was installed pastor of the church, and dismissed in April, 1874, to enter upon the Turkish mission, where he now is.

"The present pastor was called and began the supply of the pulpit in May, 1874, and was installed October 28th of the same year.

"During the past year (1875) an infant class-room has been built upon the lecture-room, and the lecture-room repainted at an expense of about eight hundred dollars. The church has had since its beginning fifteen pastors. Of the men who have served you in the gospel ministry several took this as their first charge and were ordained here. One was married here, two died and were buried here. From the membership of the church three young men, Alfred Briant, William Townley, and William D. Reeve have entered the ministry. One young lady has gone out as a foreign missionary, Miss Relekeh Smith, who went as the wife of Rev. Mr. Forbes to one of the Sandwich Islands. Thus have we endeavored to give as concisely as possible but faithfully as to facts and dates the history of this church. . . ."

Henry H. Teller

We have thus given a large part of the historical sermon of the Rev. H. W. Teller. The church was burned by the British in 1780 and rebuilt in 1791. Sittings, 500; communicants, 161; Sunday-school scholars, 175.

REV HENRY WILDEY TELLER.—The family of Mr. Teller are of English extraction, and first settled at Teller's Point (now Croton Point), on the Hudson. The earliest representative was William Teller, one of whose descendants was Daniel, the grandfather of Henry Wildey. He married and had children,—Joshua, Harrison, Smith, John, James, and Julia, who became Mrs. Lonsberry.

Joshua, of this number, was born at Yorktown, Westchester Co., N. Y., and married Miss Martha Nemire, whose family were of Dutch descent and resided in the city of New York. Their children were William, Louisa, Lewis, Esther, Griffith, Daniel, Julia, Sarah, Henry, Jenny, Mary, Martha, and one who died in infancy.

Mr. Teller removed in 1855 to Mount Kisco, where his death occurred Dec. 19, 1875, in his seventy-third year. Mrs. Teller still survives her husband. Their son, Henry W., was born July 16, 1843, at Croton Falls, N. Y., and with his parents removed to Mount Kisco in his boyhood, which was devoted to study. He later pursued a preparatory course of instruction under the direction of Prof. Burroughs, of the Nassau Preparatory School, at Princeton, N. J., and entered the Connecticut Theological Seminary at Hartford, Conn., in 1867, from which he was graduated in 1870. Essex, Conn., was his earliest field of labor, from whence he was called to his present charge in 1874. During his pastorate the Presbyterian Church at Springfield has enjoyed great prosperity.

Mr. Teller has been especially devoted to Sunday-school work. The old chapel connected with the church has been remodeled for Sunday-school purposes, and a decided interest awakened among his people in this department of Christian labor.

Mr. Teller was married June 11, 1873, to Miss Ida S., daughter of John and Mary Elizabeth Smith, of New York City. They have two daughters, Irma and Edith. Mr. Teller is favorably known as a contributor to many of the religious periodicals of the day, both in prose and verse, prominent among them being the Illustrated Christian Weekly and the Christian at Work.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—It is recorded in the trustees' book of Springfield Union Academy, Aug. 4, 1828, that an application was made to the trustees by though this Board feel personally disposed and would cheerfully unite with them in Christian fellowship and devotion, yet for the peace of unity and the good of the church already established in this place the Board deem it inexpedient to grant the request; Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolution be forwarded to Mr. Dickerson, signed by the President and countersigned by the Secretary.

"WILLIAM STITES, Sec."

"ABRAHAM L. DUMEL, President."

A mill that stood just east of the present church, which had stood unoccupied for some time, was offered Mr. Dickerson and accepted; there they congregated for some time, and Col. Wade's place is also mentioned their holding religious meetings. A class at this time was organized, and in the year 1833 the Rev. William Hanley was sent them as their preacher, when they were organized as a church with the following members: Philemon Dickinson, Hetty Dickinson, Ammon and Catherine Bannan, David C. Headly and his wife Charlotte, Hannah Headly, Mary Brown, Calvin H. Gardner, Mary Gillam, Maria Hallett, Nehemiah Taylor, Margaret Taylor, Mary Whitehead, Jotham Taylor, Job Swain, John S. Campbell, Catherine Bailey, Hannah Briant, Mary McChisney, Josiah Cahoon, Mary Cahoon, George Hoyt, Jacob Lacey, Lucy Lyon, Harriet Miller, Agnes Denman, Jane Edwards, Thomas Lyon, Aaron F. Ross, Hannah Ross, Mary Drew, Mary Taylor (Senior), Mary Taylor, Joanna Taylor, Reuben Miller, Parmelia Tichnor, William P. Dickinson, Abner Reeve, Nelson Sharp, Sarah Ann Dickinson, Julia Ann Meeker, Sarah Sharp, Susannah Sharp, Harriet McChisney, Mary Crane, Aaron B. Edwards, Elenor Sharp.

In the year 1834, at the Conference held in Philadelphia, Springfield, New Providence, Chatham, and Genungtown were comprised in a circuit, and Stephen Day as deacon; William W. Loder, preacher; and Jonathan Totten, exhorter.

The present church was erected in 1838, and altered in 1873. The former pastors, Revs. W. Hanley, — Wilmer, — Decker, T. T. Campfield, C. S. Vancleave, A. Van Dewater, H. Trumbour, Curtis Talley, J. Challels, J. Canfield, Morcudi Stokes, J. P. Daly, J. Daved, S. T. Moore, W. Chamberlain, C. Wambold, J. W. Barrett, G. Winans, A. H. Brown, J. E. Hancock, J. Cowan, Fletcher Loomis, W. H. Dickerson, and the present pastor, Rev. Samuel P. Lacey. Stewards and trustees, George Mulford, S. B. Brown, Samuel Ball, A. Reeves, Z. H. Sickly, J. Kent, J. Sellick, A. Brill, C. Woodruff, C. Van Wort, and D. J. Mundy. Superintendent Sabbath-school, George Scott. Sittings, 250; communicants, 120; Sunday-school scholars, 160.

The Centennial in Springfield, 1876.—Wednesday evening, June 10th, at a regular meeting of the Town Committee at Town Hall, it was resolved and carried that a small appropriation be made for the celebration of the Centennial Fourth, and a committee appointed to make collections, with a proposition to report Saturday evening.

Saturday evening, June 13th, a small meeting, with "Philemon Dickinson for Permission to admit our Methodist Brethren to hold their Religious meetings in said Academy, Resolved, Al-

S. Lyon, chairman; H. M. Graves, secretary. Rev. H. W. Teller, A. D. Bailey, A. T. Woodruff, N. C. Cox, and others attended, and after informal business adjourned to meet Monday evening.

Monday evening, June 15th, a large and enthusiastic meeting, with S. C. Smith, chairman; H. Graves, secretary; numerous speakers and others. The following committees were appointed to make preparations for the celebration of the Centennial Fourth in Springfield, viz.:

General Committee, with full supervision of proceedings and celebration, Samuel C. Smith, chairman; Henry M. Graves, secretary; Ziba H. Sickly, treasurer; Sylvanus Lyon, Asa T. Woodruff, managers.

Marshals, David W. Fairchild, grand marshal; Wm. Morrison, James M. Sickly, Albert Sickly, W. B. Denman, his aides.

Committee on Street Parade and Carriages, J. Martin Roll, H. E. Agens, C. T. Corby, Charles H. Roll, Eli M. Barber.

Committee on Decorations, James Farrow, D. F. O'Brien, A. D. Bailey, N. C. Cox.

Committee on Church Music, George Mulford, Theo. H. Sommers, J. Fred. Chamberlin.

Committee on Band, Asa T. Woodruff.

Committee for U. S. Six-pound Cannon, Wm. Taylor, Daniel Day, William Day, John W. Shevill, Wm. McCormick, Abram J. Kolster, Augustus T. Tappan.

Committee on Finance and Soliciting, Sylvanus Lyon, Asa T. Woodruff.

Committee on Fireworks, Sylvanus Lyon, George Mulford, N. C. Merwin.

Committee on Relics, George Mulford, James Farrow, Sylvanus Lyon.

For Notes of Celebration and Publication, Sylvanus Lyon, Henry M. Graves.

The day was ushered in with the sound of cannon, ringing of church-bells, and the rejoicing and happiness of the people, making it an ever-memorable day.

A large and imposing procession of one hundred carriages, riders, troupe of fantastics, fine decorations, and a large concourse of the people met promptly at the town square at 9 A.M. After forming line, the procession marched past the old Revolutionary house to scene of battle at the Rahway River, returning through Millburn, passing W. Campbell's, S. Lyon's, and Hartshorne's corner to Summit line, and returning to the Presbyterian Church. Most of the houses were gayly decorated, and the people all along the route cheered and smiled enthusiastically.

ORDER OF PROCESSION.

Grand Marshal (as Washington), David W. Fairchild; W. Morrison, Albert S. Sickly, W. B. Denman, Jas. M. Sickly, his aides.

Carriages with invited guests: Rev. Lewis H. Clover, St. Stephen's Church, Millburn; Rev. Dr. J. D.

Rose, St. Stephen's High School, Millburn; Rev. Wm. H. Dickerson, Methodist Church, Springfield; Hon. Israel D. Condit, Millburn, N. J.; Rev. Charles H. Babcock, Millburn Baptist Church; Father R. P. S. Dagnault, St. Rose of Lima, Millburn.

Joseph Solano's brass band, Orange, N. J.

Bearer of cap of liberty, Abram Reuck, Esq.

Color-bearer, Eli M. Barber.

Triumphal car with thirteen States (thirteen young ladies of Springfield, dressed in costume and with State emblems): New York, Miss Frances Barber; Pennsylvania, Miss Jennie Headley; Virginia, Miss Carrie Sickly; Georgia, Miss Lizzie Headley; Massachusetts, Miss Mary Fairchild; North Carolina, Miss Loraine Pierson; South Carolina, Miss Gertrude Fairchild; New Hampshire, Miss Lilly Wolcott; Maryland, Miss Mary Wade; New Jersey, Miss Lottie Lawrence; Connecticut, Miss Nealie Woodruff; Delaware, Miss Vinnie Dickerson; Rhode Island, Miss Ada Denman.

The car with Public School No. 22 (decorated), of Springfield, N. J., Prof. A. D. Bailey and Miss Susan W. Stiles, teachers, and fifty scholars.

The car of liberty (with canopy of flags, American shields and colors): Goddess of Liberty, Miss Adele C. Lyon; Uncle Sam, Howard K. Lyon.

Millburn, N. J., guests: Roger Marshall, Esq. (six-horse team, with citizens of Millburn, N. J.).

Troupe of fantasticals: Spirit Beauty, S. Lyon.

Colored dame (immensely dressed, with huge broadsword, and riding a lamb's mule): Mephistopheles, Voziferei Sayer; Sioux Indian, Stewart Marsh; Old Veteran, Samuel Taylor; White Domino, A. McCormick.

The evergreen car: Henry Monker, with invited guests.

The fancy mule-team of Fred. Farley.

Carriages, riders, etc.

The Old Presbyterian Church, memorable for its record of Revolutionary times, looked brilliant and festive, filled with patriotic citizens, and gayly decorated with festooned colors, flags, emblems, lanterns, and flowers. There was a large shield back of the altar, with a picture of Washington at its crest, with sacred trophies in front, and a pyramid of red, white, and blue flowers for bouquet.

The trophies and relics were as follows: Pyramid of cannon-balls from Springfield battle-ground; old British sword captured at Trenton (Dr. J. D. Polhemus); old British sword captured at Springfield (A. T. Woodruff); battle-flag captured at Chancellorsville, Va. (Rev. Dr. J. D. Rose); American eagle shot on Springfield Mountain (S. Lyon); young American eagle (V. Sayer).

The programme of exercises in the Presbyterian Church was as follows: Prayer, by Albert Graves, Esq.; reading of Declaration of Independence, by Alderman William Wade, of New York; together with the following pieces of music: "The Star-Spangled Banner," "America," Whittier's Centennial Ode, Graves' Centennial Chorus.

William Stites

The choir was composed of Miss Amelia Park, organist; Mr. Theo. H. Sommers, Mr. J. Fred. Chamberlin, Mr. G. W. Chamberlin, Mr. Wilbur Sopher, Mrs. M. Faitoute, Miss Pamela Graves, Mr. and Mrs. Ball, and Miss Ada Graves.

The gunners again at close of the day made vocal music with salute of United States six-pounder, and the inhabitants gathered on the magnificent grounds of Beers and Shirley to witness the splendid display of fireworks, consisting of rockets, wheels, pieces, balloons, and ending with head of Washington and batteries, and thus the memorable day was ended.

The pyrotechnists were Messrs. Roll, Graves, Lyon, Merwin, Hull.

The celebration was noticed in the following manner by some of the leading journals:

"SPRINGFIELD, N. J.—This village, noted for stirring incidents and a battle of the Revolution, celebrated its centennial in a truly patriotic grand style. A new flag and staff for Town Hall. Band, cannon, grand procession, with marshal, aides, and fanfaticale. The Rev. H. W. Teller delivered the oration. Alderman W. Wade read the Declaration. The church and dwellings were tastefully decorated, and a fine display of fireworks on the grounds of Beers and Shirley made this a truly memorable Fourth."—New York Tribune.

"SPRINGFIELD, N. J.—This old town celebrated its centennial in a truly patriotic manner, recalling its Revolutionary incidents. The decorations were fine. A large procession, with marshal and aides, fanfaticals, and emblematic carriages, with an oration in the church and fireworks, made it a glorious Fourth for Springfield."—New York World.

"THE FOURTH AT SPRINGFIELD.—The Centennial Fourth was celebrated in grand style in this village by raising a flag-pole on the Town Hall, and with a new flag; a large procession with brass bands through Springfield to the old battle-ground and the house celebrated by Revolutionary incidents; thence passing through Millburn to Summit line and returning to the Presbyterian Church. This was decorated in fine taste, and was filled to hear the oration of Rev. H. W. Teller, and the Declaration of Independence read by Alderman William Wade, of New York. The oration was eloquent, the singing fine, and the whole programme at the church good. Mr. D. W. Fairchild as Washington was grand marshal, with Sickly marshal, and Denman and Sickly as aides. There was a fine procession of 'fanfaticals,' which caused universal fun and hearty cheer. Each house was decorated, the inhabitants jubilant, and the old patriotic fire filled each soul. This great day closed with a splendid exhibition of fireworks on the farm of Messrs. Beers and Shirley in Springfield."—Newark Daily Advertiser.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

WILLIAM STITES.

The name of Stites has long been identified with the history of the early settlement of the town of Springfield.

The progenitor, John Stites, M.D., was born in England in the year 1595, and came from London to this country as the surgeon of a band of colonists who emigrated on account of political and religious disturbances throughout England during the time of Cromwell, having placed a higher value on the liberty of thought and speech than on the comforts of home and native climate.

He settled at Hempstead, L. I., and died in 1717, aged one hundred and twenty-two years. Family tradition says of him that he had an iron constitution and great powers of physical endurance. When nearly one hundred years of age he walked a distance of over forty miles in one day to visit relatives.

Richard, son of Dr. John, was born in 1640 in London, England, and resided at Hempstead, L. I. He died in 1702, aged sixty-two years. The records of the town of Hempstead inform us that in 1685 he with others "paid a tax to defray the expenses to obtain a patent for the lands in that town." The amount of the tax was "two and a half pounds sterling per acre." He was taxed for one hundred and fifty-two acres.

William, son of Richard and grandson of Dr. John, was born at Hempstead, L. I., in 1676. He came to Springfield, N. J., then in the borough of Elizabeth, and purchased seven hundred acres of land on the south side of the road and west of the Rahway River, where he built his log house, there being but few dwellings in the town at this time.

He died at Springfield in the year 1727, aged fifty-one years, and was buried in his own private burial-ground on the farm, since called the "Revolutionary burial-ground."

Mary, his widow, died in August, 1728.

The following is found in the family record of William Stites, his great-grandson. "In the old graveyard on the south side of the road in Springfield is now standing a double headstone, on which is engraved, and yet plain and intelligible, the following inscription, to wit:

"Here lies ye body of Mr. William Stits, died May ye 13th, 1727, aged 51 years."

"And opposite,—

"Here lies ye body of Mary, wife of Mr. William Stits, died Aug. ye 21st, 1728, aged 51 years."

"This man was the great-grandfather of the present owner of this Bible, and was undoubtedly the primogenitor of the Stites family in East Jersey.

"Springfield, Essex County,

"December 28th, 1828.

"Ego scribo, William Stites."

William's children were John, Hezekiah, Richard, Rebecca, William, Elijah, Benjamin.

His 1st child, John, was born in 1706, and died in Springfield, N. J., April, 1782, aged seventy-six years. He was an alderman of the borough of Elizabeth, and lived on a farm of two hundred acres, owned and occupied in later years by Mr. David Higgins and his descendants.

2d child, Hezekiah, died in Springfield in July, 1728, aged twenty years.

3d child, Richard, died May, 1727, aged twelve years.

4th child, Rebecca, was born in 1717, and married Jacob Carl.

5th child, William, died at the age of ninety-one, and was interred at Mount Bethel, N. J.

6th child, Elijah, was born in 1721, and died in the year 1765, aged forty-four years, and was buried in Scotch Plains, N. J.

7th child, Benjamin, removed to Ohio. His wife was said by the natives to have been the first white woman who set foot on the soil where the city of Cincinnati now stands.

Elijah, who was buried at Scotch Plains, N. J., and the 6th child of the aforesaid William, was deprived by death of both parents while at a very early age. He married, and built his house on that portion of his patrimony lying on the southwest side of the Westfield road, and opposite the present road leading to Milltown.

Elijah had seven children. His youngest child, named Abner, participated in the Revolutionary battle of Springfield, which occurred June 23, 1780, and although only sixteen years old carried a rifle and fought by the side of men of older years.

Abner was married Feb. 18, 1786, to Hulda Crane, of Turkey, now known as New Providence, and settled there. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and a man of exemplary morals. He died in August, 1831, and his wife in June, 1835. His children were as follows: Elijah, William, Hulda Grant, John M., Apollos, Chloe Jefferson, and Abner.

1st child, Elijah, came to Springfield from his early home in New Providence in the spring of 1808 as a clerk in the store of Capt. Jonas Wade. He married Jane, a daughter of Capt. Wade, and became his father-in-law's successor in mercantile pursuits. He was successful in business, popular, kind to the poor, and very useful and much beloved in the Presbyterian Church, of which he was a member and trustee, as also in the family circle. For many years he was a leading director in the State Bank of Elizabeth. He died in October, 1857, aged sixty-seven years.

2d child, William, was born Sept. 5, 1791, in New Providence. At the age of fifteen he commenced a course of study preparatory to the legal profession, but in consequence of a casualty which threatened to deprive him of eyesight he was compelled to abandon his books in 1809, and adopt, contrary to his wishes, a mercantile life.

In the spring of 1810 he came to Springfield as a clerk in the store of Capt. Jonas Wade. He soon after began the career of a merchant in the village, where he remained until his removal to Elizabeth, where he embarked in general merchandising with his partner, Smith Halsey.

He married Hannah B., youngest child of Capt. John Smith, of Springfield. At the termination of the partnership of "Halsey & Stites" the two brothers, Elijah and William Stites, entered into business relations in Elizabeth.

About 1819, William Stites, in company with Col. Aaron Ogden and others, became joint owners of a line of post-coaches running from New York to Philadelphia, and also of the steamboat "William Penn," plying between New York and Amboy for the conveyance of passengers and freight.

In the spring of 1821 he returned to Springfield and purchased a portion of the original homestead, where he spent the remaining years of his life, actively engaged in business and manufacturing.

In 1824 he was elected on the Whig ticket a member of the State Legislature, and was returned for four years. After an interval of a few years he was again elected for a succession of years, and in 1839-40 was chosen Speaker of the House.

In 1839 he was a member of the "joint committee to whom were referred the resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut relative to the public lands of the United States."

He was also twice appointed by the Legislature one of the "commissioners for the sale of the State lands at Paterson." He was chosen as one of the committee to appraise the damages on the Erie Railroad at Ramapo, as also on the line of the New Jersey Central Railroad.

For many years he held the appointment of judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Essex County.

Mr. Stites was also for years a member of the board of chosen freeholders of the county, and for several years director of the board. He was elected a member of the convention to frame a new State Constitution, which convened May 14, 1844. He was in politics a Republican, and as a politician was careful in his investigations, honest in his convictions, and uncompromising in a cause that he considered just, yet kind and honorable to his opponents.

As a citizen he was public-spirited, active, and ready to assist or lead in every enterprise that promised benefit to the township. In the Presbyterian Church, of which he was a member from his early youth, he was a zealous worker in matters both spiritual and secular, and ever ready to render aid either in the capacity of private member or trustee.

In the family circle he was seldom demonstrative, yet a man of strong affections and sympathetic feelings. His intellect was strong, his perceptions clear, and his memory retentive.

His mind remained clear and bright until the last moment of his life, his patience being remarkable during the last months of his great physical suffering. The Christian hope which had sustained him in many vicissitudes of life supported him in the last trying hour. The end was peace. He died June 30, 1871, in his eightieth year, the death of his wife having occurred Sept. 30, 1865. He had but two children,—a son William, who died in early childhood, and a daughter, Jane Robinson, who is the widow of John C. Elmer, M.D. She with her only surviving child occupies the old homestead. To resume the record of the children of Abner:

3d child, Hulda Grant, was born in 1795, and mar-

JOHN RICHARDS.

Samuel L. Smith

ried John Thompson. She died at her home in Basking Ridge in 1832, and left five children.

4th child, John M., born 1797, and married Jane Bonnel. He died at his home in New Providence in 1855. Two children survive.

5th child, Apollos, was born in the year 1799. He married Mary Bryant in 1825, and died in the year 1853, leaving two children.

6th child, Chloe Jefferson, born 1801, married Ezra Fairchild, the principal of Flushing Institute, and died in 1853. She left three children.

7th child, Abner, was born in the year 1803. After leaving his home in New Providence, and after several years spent in Elizabeth, he came to Springfield, and for many years was actively engaged in business and manufacturing with his elder brother, William. Subsequently he continued the business alone. He was a very useful member of the Presbyterian Church, superintendent of its Sunday-school, and one of its trustees. Abner Stites was a zealous advocate of all the best interests of the community. At the time of his death he was a director of the State Bank of Elizabeth. He was a strong Republican in his political predilections. Mr. Stites married Miss Charlotte Bonnel. His death occurred in 1867, and a widow and two children survive him.

JOHN RICHARDS.

The Richards family are of English extraction, Samuel Richards, the earliest representative of this branch in America, having emigrated from Nottingham, England, and settled in New York City, where he followed his craft as a master-builder. He was united in marriage to Miss Mary Havens, of New York, and became the parent of eleven children,—Elizabeth, Samuel, Mary, Julia, Theophilus, Augustus, Jane, John, William, Sarah, and Matthew. Mr. Richards later in life removed to Springfield, where his death occurred, Mrs. Richards having also died at their country home. Their son John was born Nov. 6, 1800, in New York, on the present site of the New York Stock Exchange. His early life was devoted to study under the best tutors the city afforded, after which, having determined to acquire a trade which might render him independent of the vicissitudes of a changing fortune, he served an apprenticeship of five years as a saddler and harness-maker. At the age of twenty-one he chose the life of a farmer, and repaired to his father's land at Springfield, which he cultivated and improved. On the death of his parent he purchased the farm which is now the homestead.

Mr. Richards was married in 1822 to Miss Mary D., daughter of Col. John Wade, of Springfield. The colonel was a soldier in the war of 1812, and stationed at Sandy Hook, where he rendered valuable service. To this marriage were born children,—Mary C. (Mrs. Crossman), Sarah R. (Mrs. Shipman), Samuel R.,

John W., James C., Charles E., Charlotte W. (Mrs. Ayers), Matilda A. (Mrs. Parkhurst), Henry H., Seaman P., and Ella V., deceased.

Mr. Richards was in his political affiliations a Democrat, but extremely liberal in his opinions. He held at various times township offices of more or less importance, but cared little for the distinctions conferred by his constituents, his life having been wholly devoted to the cultivation of his landed interests. He was a Presbyterian in his religious preferences, and a worshiper at the church of that denomination in Springfield.

The death of Mr. Richards occurred at his house on the 1st of July, 1874. Mrs. Richards still survives, and resides at Elizabeth, while the homestead is occupied by his son, Henry H. Richards.

SAMUEL C. SMITH.

The great-grandfather of the subject of this biography was Walter Smith, who was of German parentage, and resided in Milburn, Essex Co., N. J. He married, and had among his children a son William, who was twice married, first to a Miss Reeve, to whom were born four children, one of whom was Moses Smith, whose birth occurred in 1774, in Milburn, where he spent his life and where he died.

William Smith was a second time married to a Miss Woodruff, who became the mother of twelve children. Moses Smith was united in marriage to Miss Abby Colie, and had children,—Samuel C., Oliver R., and Isaac P., all of whom are living, the latter in New Albany, Ind., and Oliver R., in Newark, N. J. Samuel C., the eldest of these brothers, was born in June, 1802, at Milburn, where his boyhood was spent. He availed himself of the advantages of the public school, and later became interested in labor on the farm. At the age of sixteen he removed to Springfield, and served an apprenticeship as a tailor, which trade he followed for many years. He subsequently engaged in the business of undertaking, which is still his occupation.

Mr. Smith was married to Miss Eliza, daughter of Daniel Ayres, of Springfield, who was born, lived, was married, and died (the latter event occurring in 1879), in the house now occupied by the family. Their children are George, deceased; Moses; Mary E. (Mrs. Wade); Emma (Mrs. Parkhurst), deceased; Maria, deceased; and Henry C.

Mr. Smith is in politics a Republican. He was elected to the State Legislature for the years 1842–43, has been freeholder of his township since 1869, and held numerous other minor offices. He is a Presbyterian in his religious convictions, and has been for a period of twenty years a member of the church at Springfield, of which he is also a trustee. Though advanced in years, Mr. Smith still occupies an influential position in the township of his residence.

CHAPTER LII.

UNION TOWNSHIP.

THIS township remained a portion of the borough of Elizabethtown until the passage of an act for its erection into a separate township, Nov. 23, 1808.

Physical Features.—The surface of this township in the southeast part is nearly a level, and above the Elizabeth River to the Springfield line, bounded by Rahway River westerly, it is undulating. The soil is a clay loam, with occasional outcropping of red shale, but it is generally rich and easily tilled, producing excellent crops. There are fine growths of timber scattered throughout the township. It is well watered by branches of the Rahway and Elizabeth Rivers. It is said that when Gen. Washington was passing through this section he pronounced it the "garden of New Jersey," on account of its beauty and fertility.

There are large tracts of turf meadow in this township, containing probably about five hundred acres, the largest of which lies directly south of the church. This turf or peat has up to within a few years been dug or cut out in summer and piled in sheds built for the purpose, erected in the meadows, to be dried, where it remained for some months, when it was used extensively as a fuel, giving an excellent heat and cheerful blaze in the open fireplaces. But when stoves came into general use peat as a fuel was generally abandoned. It has been a surprise to many that it was ever used while large tracts of woodland were covering hundreds of acres in the township. The use of lime has been tried within a few years upon this clay soil, and found beneficial in raising good crops of grain, hay, and garden vegetables for the markets at Elizabeth and Newark. Large numbers of cattle are kept upon these lands, and fine orchards of choice fruit, as well as of berries, are extensively raised. The roads are kept in good order, and many resort to this township during the pleasant weather from the cities near by.

Early Settlement.—During the summer and autumn of 1667 the Rev. Abraham Pierson, with the families of Bonnel, Meeker, Crane, Headley, Wade, Townley, and others, from Branford and Guilford, Conn., settled in that portion of the township known as Connecticut Farms, and which still bears that appellation. Many hardships were incident to the settlement of a new plantation in the midst of savage tribes, upon whose friendship little dependence could be placed. The situation necessarily made these early settlers watchful; though few in numbers, they were ready upon the first alarm to defend themselves. But little annoyance was experienced from the Indians after they had disposed of their lands in this section to the Elizabethtown Associates, who purchased them in 1664. Respecting the period immediately preceding this a writer says,—

"It was not safe, and had not been to the time of the conquest by the English in 1664, to venture far into the interior. It would have been exceedingly hazardous for a few families to plant themselves on these outskirts of civilization as residents and occupants of the land unprotected."

We find among the names of the first settlers at Connecticut Farms Ball, Bonnell, Meeker, Headley, Crane, Wade, Townley, Miller, Woodruff, Potter, Jagers, Littell (Litell), Searing, Earls, Mulford, Terrill, Winans, Hays, Williams, Thompson, Bond, and a few others. Many of these names are not known here now. Stephen Ball, a merchant from London, Ezekiel and David Ball are early mentioned. The name is now largely distributed all over this township and adjoining ones. Samuel D. Ball has held many offices in the township, and with his father as toll-keeper on the turnpike, he keeps a store now on the road from the Farms to Springfield. Nathaniel Bunnell (Bonnell) was born in New Haven, Conn., and went when young (in 1669) to Southampton, L. I. It is probable that William and Benjamin Bonnell, of that place, were brothers. Nathaniel was one of the first company of the "Elizabethtown Associates." He married Hannah Miller, of Westfield, and had seven children,—1, Benjamin, who was a justice of peace, married Rachel Van Winkle; 2, Nathaniel, who was a captain; 3, John, who married Sarah Carter; 4, Sarah, married Samuel Roberts; 5, Betsey, married Capt. Isaac Ward; 6, Abigail, married a Mr. Gardner, and 7, Mary, married Elijah Woodruff. Mrs. Nathaniel Bonnell had an allotment of one hundred and twenty acres "lying upon the south branch of Elizabeth Town Creek (Wade's Farms), and ye plaine which said above mentioned creek passeth through;" also "twelve acres of meadow lying in the great meadows (salt meadows) upon John Woodruff's Creek."

Meeker, sometimes spelt Meaker or Mecar. This family came at an early date from New Haven, Conn. The record has the date of July 1, 1644, "where he took the oath of fidelity." He was propounded Oct. 7, 1646, to "be loader to mill for a 12 month, to goe in all seasons except unreasonable weather." Frequently he appears in the records as "Meader," or "Mecar." William Meeker owned a large number of acres of land, and also "His House-lot containing six acres, Bounded N. by Henry Norris, W. by the Highway, south by his son Joseph, and east by the swamp, and also 13 acres by his son Benjamin's,"¹ and in all one hundred and fifty-two acres. He died in December, 1690. He was constable of the town at an early date (Oct. 13, 1671). His sons Benjamin and Joseph are numbered among the "Elizabethtown Associates." Joseph, it is recorded, kept a store, and perhaps was one of the first in this township near the church at the Connecticut Farms. He had three sons, Robert Meeker, Stephen Meeker, and David

¹ New Haven Col. Records.

WILLIAM BRANT.

As nearly as can be determined the Brant family emigrated from Holland to New York about the year 1600, where the first William Brant located. His son William removed to Newark, and from thence to Springfield, within the bounds of Newark parish, where the family attended church services. He had three sons,—David, Lewis, and William—and three daughters. David Brant settled in Morris County, and had several sons. Lewis located at Rahway, and had two sons, Lewis and David. William Brant (3) married Elizabeth Osborn, and had one son and three daughters. He located at Connecticut Farms in 1721, and died in 1747. His son William (4) lived upon the homestead, where his death occurred in 1798. His children were Jonathan, William (5), Matthias, Mary, and Hannah.

Matthias Brant, father of the subject of this biography, who was a Revolutionary soldier, was born April 21, 1762, and on the 30th of November, 1786, was married to Miss Prudence Baker, to whom were born children,—Hannah, whose birth occurred Nov. 20, 1788; Mary, born Sept. 22, 1790; Elizabeth, born March 25, 1793; William, whose birth occurred July 2, 1797; Sarah Lum, born June 9, 1800; and Matthias, Jr., born March 5, 1802. The death of Matthias Brant occurred Feb. 4, 1845, in his eighty-fifth year. William, his son, spent his life in Union township, and the dwelling in which his birth occurred was also the scene of his death. He inherited the family taste for farming employments, in which he was eminently successful. Mr. Brant was in early years an Old-Line Whig, but at a later period became a Democrat, and advocated with much zeal the principles of the party. He had little fondness for official life, but devoted more attention to military life, and was prominent in the State militia during his early years. He was in his religious preferences a Presbyterian, and worshipped at the Connecticut Farms Presbyterian Church, of which he was for years a trustee. He manifested much interest in the cemetery adjoining, and devoted both time and labor to adorning and improving it. He was a man of much public spirit, and extended a willing and helping hand to all worthy appeals for aid.

Mr. Brant was a man of much force of character, and occupied a position which enabled him to exercise a commanding influence in the community. He was, however, free from ostentation, and wholly unobtrusive in his manner. His death occurred Nov. 27, 1881, and his interment took place at the Connecticut Farms Cemetery, to the embellishment of which he had so largely contributed. His grandson, William Brant Burnet, represents the sixth generation who have borne the name.

Meeker. Part of his family settled in "Turkey" (New Providence), 1720, where a large number of his descendants are to be found. Benjamin, brother of Joseph, was a "carpenter as well as a planter."¹

Headley. This family are among the first who came in 1665, but no memorial is left of his origin. Leonard Headley had surveyed "in the right of himself" one hundred and fifty acres, Oct. 14, 1678, and must have been one of the "Associates," and owned other lands by the Elizabethtown Creek. He was a weaver also, and said to have also owned a saw-mill. He died February, 1683, and Sarah Smith administered on his estate. Headleytown, situated on the Springfield road, is named from the family.

Wade. This branch of the early settlers came not later than 1675. Benjamin Wade was a clothier. He doubtless was of the family (probably a son) of Robert Wade,² who came from Dorchester, Mass. He died 1698.³ The family is well represented in the township, and by many who have removed to the West.

Townly. The name is first mentioned in 1684, when Richard Townly first took up his abode in this settlement. He was the eighth son of Nicholas Townley, of Littleton, England. His lineage can be traced back for centuries, and until the days of William the Conqueror. It is said no other family in the town had a higher social position.

Woodruff (Woodrofe, as it was originally spelt) came with the Southampton, L. I., colony. He was a constable, Dec. 11, 1674; ensign, July 15, 1675; and sheriff of the county, Nov. 28, 1684. "He had a farm containing two hundred and ninety-two acres" by a great swamp, east by the common meadow, and south by a small brook and John Parker; also fourteen acres on the north neck; also five acres bounded by the common pasture, his own land, a small brook, and Leonard Headley's; also eight acres of upland bounded by the Governor and Jonathan and Joseph Ogden's house-lots; and six acres of upland joining John Parker's house-lot "at the Farmes." He also at a later date bought large tracts of land in this township.

Potter. This name is first mentioned in 1641, in New Haven, Conn. Samuel Potter, born Jan. 2, 1675, son of John Potter, of above place. He first settled at Newark, N. J., and eventually came to Connecticut Farms. He was in his eighty-fourth year when he died, Feb. 5, 1756. He owned a large amount of real estate. He was a justice of the peace and one of the elders of the Presbyterian Church of Connecticut Farms. The family is largely represented throughout the county.

Jagers. This family came from Long Island, and settled at what is now known as Lyons Farms, in this township, at an early date, and owned a large tract of land, which was allotted to them by the Elizabeth Town Associates.

Searings was among the first who came. They lived west of the Presbyterian Church (and owned a tract of land). The family are not numerous in the township.

Earl. This family are well represented at a very early date, from Leicester, Mass. Aaron, David, Edward, Henry, and Thomas Earl were the sons of the first settler, and are spoken of as doing valiant service in the Revolutionary war. The family have been identified with this township from its first settlement. One of the sons was a store-keeper.

Terrill. In the year 1675, Thomas Terrill had considerable estate. He was a blacksmith by trade.⁴ He died in 1725.

Hays. This family came with the other colonists from Long Island, "and settled near the Elizabeth Town Creek." Samuel Hays resided for a time at Newark, N. J., and his children near Salem, this township.

Leveridge. They owned lands here at an early day. William Broadwell sold, Oct. 24, 1684, to Samuel Leveridge (a son of Rev. William Leveridge, first Presbyterian clergyman on Long Island); afterwards he sold it to Capt. Andrew Browne. It adjoined Leonard Headley's lands. In 1703, Mr. Leveridge removed to New York City, and the record has it "with a considerable family."⁵

Williams. The first mention made of Samuel Williams "as one of the memorialists of 1700, together with his son Joseph." His name is in no earlier document. He came from Wethersfield, Conn. His father's name was Matthew Williams. The family located on the Westfield road, and gave the name "Williams Farms" to that locality, and several of the family still occupy portions of the old plantation. Samuel Williams died in 1706, leaving five sons,—Joseph, Samuel, Nathaniel, David, and Josiah,—and three daughters,—Susannah, Sarah, and Hester. His wife is not named in his will, and had probably died before.

Thompson (and spelled Tomson), one of the deputies of Elizabeth Town, is spoken of in the Legislature of 1672. He was active in opposing the arbitrary measures of Governor Carteret, and was "mulcted for his patriotism." He owned lands upon the "Rawack Meadow," also on "Moris Creek," in all one hundred and eighteen acres. His three sons were among the original Associates. Moses, who took the oath in February, 1666, had a warrant for one hundred and eighty acres, but the survey is not on record. Aaron came into possession of the homestead at his father's death, September, 1676, and had a warrant for sixty acres in his own right, of which no return was made. Hur has a house-lot containing four acres. The

¹ E. J. Records.

² Hatfield's Elizabeth, page 172.

³ E. J. Records, i. 71-72.

⁴ Hatfield's Elizabeth, p. 272.

⁵ E. T. Bill, p. 102. Riker, pp. 350-54. Valentine's N. Y., p. 354.

father's estate at his death was valued at £152 15s. 6d. The Thompson saw-mill has been in the family for a number of years. It is situated on the Rahway River, on the road to the Farms.

Bond. This family settled at the Lyons Farms at an early date. They came originally from Lynn, Mass., and were doubtless of the same stock with the Waterman family. Robert and John Bond are spoken of as early as 1662. Robert was appointed, March 13, 1676, a justice of the peace. His first wife was Hannah, a sister of John Ogden. After her death he married at Newark, in 1672, Mary, the widow of Hugh Roberts. They owned a large amount of land in the easterly part of the township. Joseph Bond is mentioned in 1677 as having received a warrant for one hundred and sixty acres.

Winans. Wynes, Waynes, Winons, Winnons are a few of the modes in which this name was spelled, but no record is found of its being spelt Wynants, which was the original manner the first families who came over spelled their names; but this was the correct manner of spelling. They owned lands "at Rawack River" and "Elizabethtown Creek," in all two hundred acres. John Winans died 1694. His estate was valued at £271 15s. 8d.

The following is an interesting list of freeholders and residents in this township from the year 1772 to the 20th of March, 1829, and the number of acres of land:

Thomas C. Allen (82 acres).	Joseph Bonnel (22 acres).
James Attridge (120 acres).	David Ball (21 acres).
David Ayres.	Clark Brown (88 acres).
James Alexander.	Joseph D. Brown.
Thomas Attridge.	William Brown (38 acres).
Joshua W. Attridge.	Jehiel Brewster.
Morris Allen.	Isaac Bozworth.
David Ayres, Jr.	Matthias Brant (86 acres).
David Allen.	Daniel Bozworth (25 acres).
Washington Adams.	Elihu Bond (44 acres).
Jabez Alley.	Benjamin Brown (17 acres).
Prescot Brown.	Timothy Burnet.
Stephen Baker.	Thomas Baker.
Jacob Bozworth.	Henry Brown (43 acres).
Thomas Brant.	Moses Baker (80 acres).
William J. Bonnell (16 acres).	Moses O. Baker.
James Brown.	Matthias Burnet.
Enos Bonnell.	William Brant.
James Ball.	John T. Brown (35 acres).
Aaron W. Burnet (25 acres).	Bartholomew Bonnell.
John Burnet (25 acres).	Waldo Brown (18 acres).
Jonathan Burnet (41 acres).	Stephen Baker (21 acres).
Daniel Burnet (65 acres).	Elihu Bond, Jr.
John B. Bonnell.	Ogden Brown.
George K. Burnet.	Elijah W. Brown.
Ephraim Baker (80 acres).	Elias Brown (10 acres).
William Baker (46 acres).	Jedediah Baldwin (72 acres).
Elijah Baker (90 acres).	Henry F. Baldwin (47 acres).
Charles Brewster.	John Baldwin.
Author N. Bonnel.	Caleb Bonnell.
Albert A. Bonnel.	James O. Baker (25 acres).
Henry Banks.	Benjamin Brewster (100 acres).
Joel Bonnell.	Benjamin Brewster, Jr.
Stephen Blake.	Aaron N. Baker (46 acres).
Albert Baldwin.	Daniel Crane (14 acres).
Oliver Bonnell (12 acres).	Phineas Crittley.
Israel Brown.	Stephen Crittley (8 acres).
Silas Baldwin.	Daniel M. Chaudler.

David Chandler (20 acres).	Richard — Fox.
William Clark.	Jacob Garthwait.
Job Clark (80 acres).	Samuel Gill.
George Crane.	William Gillum.
John B. Crane (23 acres).	Theodore Gillum (11 acres).
Elihu Crane (58 acres).	Peter Gutting.
Thomas Crane (12 acres).	John Golder.
Joshiah Crane.	Nehemiah Garthwait.
Gideon B. Clark.	Calvin Gardner (5 acres).
Samuel Clark.	George Grunsbeck (40 acres).
Francis Casteline.	William Gillum.
John Cole.	George Gilmore (27 acres).
Alexander Crane.	James Garthwait.
Moses M. Crane (12 acres).	Fritriance Gating.
Thomas Colewell.	Moses M. Headley.
James Carpenter (108 acres).	John Hicks.
David S. Crane.	Hall Holton.
Aaron Carpenter (14 acres).	William C. Headley (10 acres).
Elias B. Campbell (11 acres).	Andrew I. Headley.
Jeremiah Crane (33 acres).	Jahes Headley (65 acres).
Nash Clark (4 acres).	Caleb Headley (11 acres).
Daniel Compton (15 acres).	Benjamin Headly (10 acres).
John Chetwood (5 acres).	Stephen Headley (2 acres).
Thomas Cernford.	Jonathan H. Harrison (12 acres).
Amos Clark (20 acres).	Elizabeth Haines.
William Crane (12 acres).	Timothy Headley (51 acres).
John Couklin (11 acres).	Samuel Headley (76 acres).
John Crane.	Davis Headley (68 acres).
William Courter (14 acres).	Stephen B. Headley (9 acres).
Joseph Collet (11 acres).	Ira Headley.
Matthias Crane (24 acres).	Stephen Headley, Jr. (47 acres).
John B. Clark.	William S. Headley (45 acres).
Thompson Chandler.	Daniel Hand.
Robert M. Crane.	Isaac S. Headley (30 acres).
Stephen H. Crane.	John I. Henderson (93 acres).
Caleb Camp.	Frazer Haines (22 acres).
Joseph Carpenter.	John Headley.
Jonathan T. Crane.	David S. Higgons (170 acres).
James Crane.	Moses Headley.
John W. Crane.	Samuel D. Headley.
William M. Crane.	Edwin Headley.
Thomas Davis.	Silas Headley.
William Day (180 acres).	James Ireland (22 acres).
William E. Day.	Alexander Johnson.
Foster Day.	George Jewel.
Levie F. Day.	James Jewell (2 acres).
Moses Doty (30 acres).	Caleb Jeffreys.
Caleb M. Dulia.	Aaron Jeffrya.
Joseph Dunham (80 acres).	Samuel Jones.
John De Hart (20 acres).	David M. Jones (22 acres).
John De Hart, Jr. (13 acres).	Daniel Juggars (29 acres).
Samuel Day.	David Juggars (31 acres).
Foster Day, Jr. (22 acres).	William Johnson (16 acres).
Matthias Denman (10 acres).	Obediah Jagers.
David Dunham (14 acres).	James W. Jagers.
Edwin S. Day.	Matthias Jud.
John Davis.	John Keen (114 acres).
Caleb Durand.	Obediah Kitchel.
John Dun.	Sylvester P. Looker.
William F. Day.	David Little (12 acres).
Jeremiah Eiles (10 acres).	John O. Lum (62 acres).
Obediah Elliot (95 acres).	David B. Lum (81 acres).
Robert C. Earl (30 acres).	Philemon E. Looker.
Edward Earl (20 acres).	David Lyon (50 acres).
Morris Earl.	Lewis Linsley.
William Edwards (7 acres).	John Leary.
James Fatout.	James McKaib.
Henry Fatout.	Albert R. Meeker.
Elizabeth Foster.	John O. Miller (73 acres).
Isaac French (6 acres).	John B. Meeker (27 acres).
Edward Fatout (30 acres).	Joshiah Miller (61 acres).
Aaron Fatout.	Stephen Myers (16 acres).
Johnathan Fatout (13 acres).	Linion Marcell.
John Fox (20 acres).	Samuel Miller (42 acres).
Moses Fatout (115 acres).	Joel W. Magie.
Oliver T. Fox (22 acres).	George Maxwell (45 acres).
Clark Fatout.	Nathan Meeker (180 acres).

Daniel Burnet

Daniel Burnet was born May 22, 1788. He received a plain but substantial education in the district school. The simplicity of those early times gave coloring and shape to his character, and marked his course through life. He was modest, unostentatious, and without guile. He never sought notoriety, but he could not be hid. Deeply interested in the military affairs of the country, he was elected at the early age of twenty-four "to be ensign of the second company of the first battalion, in the fourth regiment of the Essex brigade, of the militia of New Jersey." Such is the record of his commission, signed by the Governor and Secretary of State. He was successively elected lieutenant in 1818, captain in 1822, major in 1826, and in 1828, for his "patriotism, valor, conduct, and fidelity," he was elected colonel of the same regiment.

By his uprightness, intelligence, and courteous spirit he won the confidence of the community, and without seeking preferment he was chosen to important offices of the township, which he filled to universal satisfaction.

He was kind, courteous, of uniform temperament, and a warm personal friend. He was methodical even in his pleasures, having at least one evening of each week set aside for the reception of his friends.

His last illness was of short duration, his death occurring April 10, 1854. His excellent wife, a congenial spirit, survived him many years, and died at the age of eighty-nine. They had four children, three sons and one daughter, the latter the only one now living.

Col. Burnet and his estimable wife were worthy members of the Presbyterian Church at Connecticut Farms, with which they connected themselves in 1837.

Aaron W. Burnet

The subject of this biography was the son of Col. Daniel Burnet, whose portrait adorns one of the pages of this volume. He was born Dec. 16, 1812, on the homestead in Union township, and devoted his early life to study at the public school of the district. He decided to pursue the vocation of his father, that of a farmer, whom he assisted for a period of years. On his death came into possession of the farm the family now occupy, which was the early residence of Col. Burnet.

He was, on the 31st of January, 1838, united in marriage to Miss Charlotte, daughter of James and Phebe Garthwait Mooney, of Westfield, to whom were born two sons, James A. and Edward M., and one daughter, Jane H.

Edward M. is married to Miss Eliza A. Doty, and has one son, Aaron W.

Mr. Burnet was in his political preferences a Democrat. He for many years held the offices of assessor and collector of his township, and had many other opportunities for official advancement proffered him, which were declined. He was a Presbyterian in his religious convictions, and worshiped at the Connecticut Farms Church, of which Mrs. Burnet and her sons are members. His death occurred Feb. 14, 1875, at his home in Union township, after a life of integrity and great usefulness.

Obad Meeker (29 acres).
 Amos Miller.
 Silas Miller.
 Ogden Magie (36 acres).
 John Magie (85 acres).
 Jonathan Magie (35 acres).
 David Magie (100 acres).
 Lewis Mulford (30 acres).
 John S. Miller.
 Jacob W. Meeker (16 acres).
 Joseph Meeker (11 acres).
 Benjamin Mills.
 Abraham Miller (87 acres).
 Timothy Miller.
 Joseph S. Meekers (50 acres).
 Jonathan Mulford (118 acres).
 Michael Meeker.
 Stephen S. Meeker (115 acres).
 Elias Mott.
 John C. Mooney (20 acres).
 Enos Meeker.
 Elias C. Mooney.
 Aaron B. Meeker (5 acres).
 Thomas Muddle.
 Jonas Miller.
 Richard Meriell.
 Francis Mariell.
 David M. Meeker (33 acres).
 John Marther (11 acres).
 James T. Meeker.
 Aaron S. Meeker.
 Jonathan Miller (40 acres).
 Samuel Myers.
 Edward Mirthal.
 Ogden Meeker.
 John Nicoll.
 Joshua Nelson.
 Elias Norris (100 acres).
 Jonathan Osborn.
 David Osmin (67 acres).
 Thomas R. Osmin.
 Daniel Osmin.
 Andrew M. Parsel.
 Lewis Pairis.
 Joseph Pierson (4 acres).
 Stephen Parker.
 John Potter, Jr. (32 acres).
 Abner Parsel (29 acres).
 Wale Parsel.
 William C. Parsel.
 William B. Potter (90 acres).
 John Potter (60 acres).
 William H. Perine (15 acres).
 Joseph Potter.
 Robert Pierson (12 acres).
 David M. Potter.
 Enos Price (16 acres).
 Elihu Price, Jr.
 Abraham Post.
 David Pyke.
 James Rell.
 Nathurin Rainer.
 Isaac Rose (15 acres).
 Gaspin Richards.
 William Reid.
 William D. Reives (30 acres).
 Aaron Richards (16 acres).
 Joseph Rather (30 acres).
 John S. Smith.
 Ezra Sayre.
 John Stansfield.
 Rev. Robert Street.
 John Sparks (13 acres).
 Peter Sparks (34 acres).
 David Sayres (38 acres).
 Daniel R. Sayres (200 acres).
 Benjamin Scudder (60 acres).

Augustus Spencer.
 John P. Sayre (68 acres).
 John Schomprie.
 James Vanwart.
 Samuel M. Stratton.
 Israel Stoddard.
 John N. Scudder.
 Peter Shepherd.
 William W. Linsey.
 Andrew Compton.
 Moses Egbert.
 George W. Sauer (38 acres).
 William Nys.
 John N. Scudder (10 acres).
 Marina Sayre (70 acres).
 Samuel W. Searing (85 acres).
 Joel Searing (65 acres).
 John Smith (19 acres).
 Oliver Stiles (13 acres).
 Elias W. Stiles (39 acres).
 Morris Stiles (5 acres).
 John Stiles (37 acres).
 Daniel R. Smith (90 acres).
 William Stiles (15 acres).
 Willet Stephenson (34 acres).
 William Stevenson.
 John Saxon (47 acres).
 Hannah Sherwood (24 acres).
 Nehemiah B. Sayre.
 Eston Savoy (30 acres).
 William Skillin.
 Isaac Smith.
 Joseph Stanley (27 acres).
 George Stewart.
 John Scudder (20 acres).
 Noah P. Swain.
 Isaac Smith.
 Elias C. Thompson.
 John S. Taylor.
 Charles Tilton.
 Abraham Townley (14 acres).
 Hervey Thompson (65 acres).
 Jonathan Thompson.
 Richard Townley (179 acres).
 Jonathan Townley (17 acres).
 John M. Towley (33 acres).
 Jacob Thompson (13 acres).
 Nathaniel Thompson (22 acres).
 Moses Thompson (19 acres).
 Isaac Thompson (15 acres).
 Ezekiel I. Tucker (21 acres).
 Malon A. Tucker (16 acres).
 Warner Tucker (110 acres).
 Clark Townley.
 Edward Towley.
 Joseph Tucker (122 acres).
 William Townley (16 acres).
 Albert Townley.
 Henry Townley (35 acres).
 Hezekiah Thompson.
 David E. Tichenor (14 acres).
 William M. Townley.
 Benjamin Townley.
 Isaac C. Tichenor (29 acres).
 Elsom C. Townley.
 James Taylor.
 David B. Thompson (65 acres).
 James Towley.
 Usual A. Tucker.
 Elias Wimsos.
 Michael M. Williams (18 acres).
 Jacob A. Wimsos.
 Caleb Wimsos (104 acres).
 David E. Woodruff (37 acres).
 Thompson Wade (23 acres).
 Levi Williams (16 acres).
 Benjamin Wimsos (44 acres).

James Woodruff (15 acres).
 Elihu Wilcox.
 David M. Woodruff.
 Thomas Woodruff.
 Samuel Williams (104 acres).
 William S. Williams (98 acres).
 James M. Wade (32 acres).
 David Wade.
 David Williams.
 David M. Wooley.
 Moses Williams (72 acres).
 Benjamin Williams (78 acres).
 David A. Williams (30 acres).
 Henry Woodruff (18 acres).
 Samuel R. Wimsos (19 acres).
 Jonathan Wimsos (33 acres).
 Timothy Woodruff (54 acres).
 Stephen Woodruff (26 acres).
 John Woodruff (47 acres).
 Daniel Woodruff (25 acres).
 Silas Ward (18 acres).
 James Wilcox (46 acres).
 Tremble Watkins (90 acres).
 Jonathan Wimsos, Jr. (46 acres).
 Wade and Bonnell & Co.
 Noah Woodruff (16 acres).
 Henry Wade.
 Samuel D. Woodruff (2 acres).
 Job S. Williams (10 acres).
 Matthias Wade.
 James B. Wade.
 John N. E. Woodruff (160 acres).
 Aaron H. Wimsos.
 Matthias Woodruff.

Charles Woodruff.
 Andrew Wade.
 Ezra Willis.
 John Wimsos.
 William West.
 Phineas M. Wade.
 Charles Watters.
 Ezekiel B. Woodruff.
 William T. Wade.
 David Wade, Jr.
 John H. Wimsos.
 James Wimsosoa.
 Caleb Wimsos.
 Usual A. Young.
 Francis Wiedfall.
 Samuel Keethum.
 David Williams, Jr.
 Jonathan T. Brown.
 John Sexton.
 Jacob Thompson.
 Charles Tilton.
 Elias C. Thompson.
 Robert W. Towley.
 Aaron Richards.
 Wm. C. Headley.
 Aaron H. Wimsos.
 Nathaniel Fritz.
 Robert Kiogslaad.
 D. Meeker.
 James Smith.
 George W. Williams.
 Edward Cooper.
 Israel Woodruff.
 Daniel Towley.

In the above list of names are many who served during the Revolutionary war, and at this present date there are but few that are now living. They rest from their labors, those who built these houses, tilled the soil, planted out many of these fine orchards of choice fruit for which this township is noted. They are known no more to the inhabitants; many of these farms are now owned by strangers, the farms made smaller, and where there was but one church and one school-house there are fine churches and schools and children to fill them, showing that this beautiful township has increased in population and wealth.

Census Report, 1880.—The population of Union township in the report given numbers nearly 2500,—males, 1297; females, 1120; total, 2417.

Civil List.—This list dates from the thirty-seventh annual meeting of the township of Union, N. J., held the 14th of April, A.D. 1845, and ends at the seventy-second annual meeting, the 9th day of March, A.D. 1880.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

Moses M. Crane, 1845-50.
 John Headley, 1845, 1848-49.
 William E. Day, 1846, 1851-52.
 Aaron W. Burnet, 1847.
 James T. Meeker, 1850-51.
 Abner Parcel, 1852-61.
 Matthias T. Wade, 1853-58, 1863-65.
 Job S. Williams, 1859-62.
 J. Williams Crane, 1862-64.
 Noah Woodruff, 1865-67, 1870-75.
 Noah W. Parcel, 1866-69.
 George W. Doty, 1876-80.

JUDGES OF ELECTION.

Daniel D. Benjamin, 1863.
 William E. Day, 1864-64.
 John Potter, 1866, 1878-79.
 Aaron W. Burnet, 1868-71, 1873-74.
 Job S. Williams, 1872.
 George Maxwell, 1875-77.
 Noah W. Parcel, 1880.

TOWN CLERKS.

John C. Mooney, 1845-50.
Ogden Brown, 1851-54.
Lewis H. Wade, 1855.
Samuel D. Ball, 1856-58.
John N. Earl, 1859-60, 1870.

Jonas W. Lum, 1861-62.
George W. Cooper, 1863.
Daniel H. Sayre, 1864-69.
Arthur D. Miller, 1871.
Abraham M. Woodruff, 1872-81.

ASSESSORS.

Noah Woodruff, 1845-52, 1855-59, 1862, 1867-68.
Samuel R. Winans, 1853.
Aaron W. Burnet, 1854, 1863.

J. Lawrence Benedict, 1860-61, 1869.
David J. Meeker, 1864-66.
Daniel H. Sayre, 1870-80.

COLLECTORS.

Edwin Headley, 1845.
Caleb Jeffries, 1846.
Samuel R. Winans, 1847-49.
George Maxwell, 1850-51.
Samuel D. Ball, 1852, 1863-64.
Noah Woodruff, 1853-54.

Aaron W. Burnet, 1855-58.
Lewis H. Wade, 1859-60.
David J. Meeker, 1861-62, 1868-72.
John N. Earl, 1865-66.
George Maxwell, 1867.
Job S. Williams, 1873-80.

COMMISSIONERS OF APPEAL.

Henry Brown, 1845-48, 1850-51.
Ephraim Meeker, 1845.
Ephraim Baker, 1845-46, 1849-50, 1852, 1854, 1857-70.
Jeremiah Edes, 1846.
Hull Holton, 1847.
Thompson Wade, 1847.
Caleb Jeffreya, 1848.
Moses Faitout, 1848-50.
Jonathan Winans, 1849.
John C. Mooney, 1851.
Samuel R. Winans, 1851.
David Ball, 1852-54.
Daniel Burnet, 1852-53.
Aaron W. Burnet, 1852, 1855, 1862, 1867.
William S. Williams, 1854, 1859-60, 1869-71.
John Crane, 1855-56, 1872.

George Maxwell, 1855-58, 1866, 1868, 1873-74.
Ogden Brown, 1856-58.
William E. Day, 1859.
Ezekiel B. Woodruff, 1860.
John Boylston, 1861-64.
David B. Lum, 1861.
Stephen T. Baker, 1863-64, 1873-80.
William C. Headley, 1865-69.
Daniel D. Benjamin, 1865.
Noah Woodruff, 1870.
Noah W. Parcell, 1871-73, 1876-77.
Job S. Williams, 1871-72.
John Leonard, 1874-79.
John Courter, 1875, 1879-80.
Isaac M. Dunham, 1878.
William T. Woodruff, 1880.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

Jonathan Winans, Sr., 1845, 1847-48, 1851-53.
Jacob W. Meeker, 1845-46, 1848-50.
Daniel Burnet, 1845.
William S. Williams, 1845-52, 1854-55.
Daniel R. Sayre, 1845.
Moses Faitout, 1846, 1855-56.
Benjamin Williams, 1846.
Samuel R. Winans, 1846, 1857, 1860-61, 1863, 1868.
David Ball, 1847-48.
Oliver Bonnell, 1847.
William E. Day, 1847, 1856-57, 1861-62.
James W. Halsey, 1848-50, 1853.
George Maxwell, 1849, 1852, 1862.
Jonathan Winans, Jr., 1849-50, 1855, 1862.
John E. Woodruff, 1850.
John T. Brown, 1851, 1854-55, 1862.
William Day, 1851-52.
James L. Benedict, 1851, 1862-68, 1870.
Noah W. Parcell, 1852-54, 1868-69, 1865, 1870-73, 1876-78.
John Seaton, 1853, 1859-60, 1864-65, 1872-73.
Jonas Miller, 1853.
Abraham C. Miller, 1854.
Samuel D. Ball, 1854.
William C. Headley, 1855-56, 1860-61.
James T. Meeker, 1866-68.

Ephraim Baker, 1856.
Job S. Williams, 1857-58, 1861.
John S. Smith, 1857.
Clark Brown, 1858-61, 1864-75.
Ogden Brown, 1858.
William Earl, 1859.
Ambrose Crane, 1859.
John Potter, 1863.
John Williams, 1861.
James K. Miller, 1863-64, 1866.
William E. Mooney, 1863.
Jonas W. Lum, 1864.
Lemuel B. Myers, 1865-67.
Matthias S. Wade, 1866-67.
B. L. B. Miller, 1867.
George W. Doty, 1868-69, 1875.
John N. Earl, 1868.
Noah Woodruff, Sr., 1869.
Daniel R. Sayre, 1869.
Sylvester Cahill, Jr., 1869-70.
Stephen T. Baker, 1870-71.
Ezekiel B. Woodruff, 1871, 1876-77.
William J. Willis, 1872.
John J. Headley, 1872.
George Doty, 1873-74.
W. A. C. Earl, 1873-75, 1877-80.
J. Williams Crane, 1874.
Isaac Dunham, 1874-75.
John Crane, 1875.
Isaac M. Dunham, 1876.
John Leonard, 1876-80.
Andrew J. Headley, 1876.
James A. Burnett, 1877-78.
Charles A. Pope, 1878-80.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Samuel R. Winans, 1850, 1858, 1863, 1866, 1878.
Noah Woodruff, 1851, 1861, 1866, 1871, 1876.
David B. Lum, 1855.

Thomas B. Kingland, 1879.
George W. Doty, 1879.
Samuel D. Ball, 1880.
William Day, 1881.

CORONER OF BOROUGH.

William Condell, 1850.

BOROUGH SHERIFFS.

John H. H. Sayre, 1850. | Thomas S. Day, 1847.

Lyons Farms.—This neat and picturesque hamlet, situated about two miles from Newark and three miles from Elizabeth City, on rolling ground surrounded by a fine farming country. It was named by a family of Lyons, who first settled in this part of Union township. In the year 1807 there were living here some fourteen families by name of Lyons, who each owned a number of acres of land with their neat homes. They were the first who desired to have churches, schools, and stores in their midst. In 1821-22, Peter Sparks opened a store next to the farm of Samuel Ross Winans, Esq., and until the year 1830 Mr. Sparks kept it, when Jonathan Harrison purchased it, and for many years carried on the business of general merchandise.

The first postmaster was Jonathan Harrison, who was appointed in 1836, who held the position for a number of years, until his death, when his son, Caleb Harrison, was appointed. The present postmaster is Horace Greeley Looker, who also keeps a grocery, as well as flour and feed store. The Elizabeth line of horse-cars have a track laid and run their cars every half-hour, which makes it convenient and also a desirable location between the two cities of Newark and Elizabeth. In the year 1794 to 1820 a line of stages was run between Pittsburgh, Pa., and New York. The headquarters of this line was in Lyons Farms, at the residence of Squire Winans, who bought the place soon after the line was changed. This road was called the Swiftsure and Speedwell, owned by Ichabod Grummon, and afterwards by his son, Isaac Grummon, who were the drivers; they then carried the mail. This village dates from the time Samuel Lyons first took his allotment of land in 1667.

The first school was taught in a private dwelling by Hannah Grumming for two winters, and afterwards her daughter, Sarah Grumming, taught in 1812-13. A meeting of inhabitants was called in the year 1817 to arrange for building a school-house, when Elihu Bond offered them the land for their building and ten dollars in money, while others gave stones and timber, and it was soon completed. It went by the name of the "Old Red School-House." The following have been the teachers: Mrs. Elizabeth Ogden taught one year, 1818; then Sarah Grummon was appointed, 1819 until 1824; afterwards Rev. Thomas Winter, a Baptist clergyman, taught in 1825, one year. The Rev. Mr. Knapp, a Methodist clergyman, came in 1828, and remained for some time. Mr. Alcock and a Mr. Stone till the year 1835, when Miss Phebe Winans

JOHN S. HEADLEY.

The grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch was Cary Headley, whose birth occurred in Union township in 1756, where he during his lifetime followed farming pursuits, was a man of much enterprise, and highly esteemed by his fellow townsmen.* He was married to Phebe Stiles, to whom were born children,—Mary (Mrs. Ezekiel Ball), Phebe (Mrs. William Gardner), William S., Susan (Mrs. Thomas Baker), Timothy, David C., John S., and Sarah (Mrs. David Townley). The death of Mr. Headley occurred in 1824. His son William S. was born in Union township in 1792, where his life was spent as a successful agriculturist. He married Hannah, daughter of Davis Headley, and had children,—Joanna (Mrs. William S. Burnett, deceased), Phebe (Mrs. Silas C. Burnett), Caroline (Mrs. William Courter), John S., Jane (Mrs. George R. Baker), and Wickliff. The death of William S. Headley took place at his home during the year 1850. His son John S., a brief review of whose life is here given, was born March 11, 1824, in the township of Union, Union Co., N. J., on the family estate, where the years of his boyhood were spent. After acquiring a practical education he repaired to Brooklyn, N. Y., and was apprenticed to Davis M. Afflick, with whom he acquired the craft of a mason. During the year 1846 he embarked in business as a builder, and continued with success until 1856, when being attracted by the varied advantages of the spot upon which his birth occurred, he returned again to Union township, and located upon a portion of the property of his ancestor, Cary Headley. To this he succeeded partly by inheritance and partly by purchase. Since that date the energies of Mr. Headley have been concentrated wholly upon the cultivation and improvement of his farm.

He was, Feb. 13, 1849, married to Miss Sarah, daughter of John E. and Elizabeth Cook Courter, to whom were born children,—William C., whose birth occurred June 25, 1853, and who was admitted as counselor-at-law in 1878; Lizzie H. (Mrs. William S. Wade), residing in Springfield; and Jennie L. Mr. Headley is in his political convictions a Democrat. The excitements attending political life offer no charms to him, and his daily avocations afford but little time for pursuits other than those connected with his routine of duties. Hence he leaves to others both the honors and rewards of official life. Though not a member of any church, Mr. Headley and his family are worshipers at and supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Springfield. He is a man of unassuming manner, but possessing many traits of character which are the exponents of success in life, and which command the respect of the community.

Jonathan Winans Jr.

The grandparents of Mr. Winans were Jonathan and Rachel Thompson Winans, who located on the land now occupied by the subject of this biography as early as the year 1760, and soon after erected the homestead which is the present family residence. Here Mr. Winans died Jan. 16, 1816, and his wife in April, 1808, both at an advanced age.

Nathaniel, their son, was born Jan. 1, 1764, at the ancestral home in Union township, where his life was spent as an agriculturist. He was married Dec. 24, 1804, to Miss Sarah Green, to whom were born two children,—Jonathan, Jr., and Rachel. The death of Mr. Winans occurred June 22, 1826. He was a supporter of the Lyons Farms Baptist Church, a Democrat in his political views, and bore a reputation for integrity and honor questioned by none. The death of Mrs. Winans took place Aug. 22, 1855. Jonathan, Jr., was born April 19, 1808, near the homestead in Union township, where his early life was passed. On the death of his father he succeeded by inheritance to the property which has since been his home. He was married to Miss Eliza, daughter of Joseph Haines, of Elizabeth, whose birth occurred April 14, 1808, who became the parent of five children,—Nathaniel F., born Nov. 29, 1828; Joseph H., whose birth took place Sept. 20, 1830; Jonathan D., born Nov. 12, 1832, and who died Sept. 22, 1837; Phebe E., born Feb. 17, 1839, now Mrs. A. S. Hensley; and Jonathan D., whose birth occurred Oct. 14, 1845.

The political convictions of Mr. Winans lead him to espouse the principles of the Democracy. Though not ambitious for official distinction, he has served as president of the township committee of Union. He has been since 1831 a member of the Lyons Farms Baptist Church, and one of its deacons for more than forty years. He possesses a liberal fund of strong common sense and excellent judgment, qualities which have made his counsel much to be desired in the community.

The Winans homestead, which is intimately associated with Revolutionary fame, was during that period entered by Hessians and a portion of the household furniture destroyed. This dwelling is still occupied by the fifth generation of the family in the person of Walter J., son of Jonathan D. and Mary Etta Winans, and grandson of the subject of this sketch.

had the charge of it a little over a year. After she left George Foot came from Newton, Conn., and remained until Miss Ellen Tichenor was appointed in 1840. A few years ago the old building was removed and a more commodious one erected, now known as the Hill-side Academy. Mr. Tichenor came in 1870, Miss Elizabeth Woodruff, 1872, and the present teacher is Mr. Deboise. The school is in an excellent location, on high ground, and has every convenience desirable to make it a first-class school. The number of scholars is eighty-seven. Girls, forty-four; boys, forty-three.

The hamlet contains about sixty dwellings; many of them still show the age that they were built, with shingled sides, large stone and brick chimneys, small windows, and the halved doors. Benjamin Lyons carried on a large shoe business in 1793. David Lyons was at an early date one of the magistrates, and had the office until 1815. Moses Thompson, in 1780, was the first blacksmith, and afterwards his son, Isaac Thompson, engaged in the business, and Thomas Thompson, one other son, as wheelwright.

The cemetery. The first burial was in the year 1828, but prior to this many of the early settlers were interred at the Connecticut Farms and Elizabethtown churchyards. The Baptist and Presbyterian Churches are just a short distance from this hamlet, in Clinton township, Essex County, and were built at an early date.

There are many fine villas with well laid out grounds, the residents of many doing business in the adjacent cities, having always been noted for being a healthy location, and desirable for those desiring a quiet country neighborhood. There are many small settlements in this township that at an early date took the name of the first settler. It generally comprised a dozen or so of houses, and perhaps a school-house. Leonard Headley had surveyed for him Oct. 14, 1678, "in the right of himself and his wife, 150 acres," and from this branch a large number of the name have sprung, and "Headley-town" is now well known on the road to Springfield.

Magietown was first settled by John Magie (McGie) in 1699-1700. He was a blacksmith, and came over from Scotland during the period of persecution, 1685-87. He purchased land just west of the "town plot" (Elizabeth), which in great part his descendants have occupied until now.

Wade's Farms.—Benjamin Wade was a clothier. He settled in this township in the year 1675, and probably much earlier. He died about 1698. The family is still living in this township, and many of the branches have settled in the West.

Connecticut Farms contains the Presbyterian Church, a neat school-house (academy), two stores, wheelwright- and blacksmith-shops, butcher, post-office, tavern, and some forty or fifty dwellings. The village was settled by many from Connecticut in 1687-

70, and has the appearance of a New England settlement. Many of the dwellings are neat, and with much taste and order the surroundings are laid out. It is a quiet village, about three miles from the depot at Roselle, on the New Jersey Central Railroad.

Roselle is comparatively a new place, having a Methodist Episcopal Church, a fine academy, stores, and is part of Roselle proper, in Linden township, being known as West Roselle. Contains some sixty dwellings, generally occupied by merchants and others doing business in the city daily.

Presbyterian Church.—In a letter from Rev. Robert Street, now pastor of Connecticut Farms Church, we are informed that the early records of the town and church were burnt during the Revolutionary war, June 8, 1780, when the first church and parsonage were destroyed, and the wife and child of Rev. Mr. Caldwell were brutally shot by an English soldier.

For a long time the settlers traveled four or five miles every Sabbath-day and back again to worship with their fathers in the church at Elizabeth Town, where Harriman and Dickinson proclaimed the doctrines of the cross. About the year 1730, possibly a few years earlier, it is thought they organized into a separate religious society. That was a dark day for the little village on which eight or ten dwelling-houses, besides stores, shops, and out-houses, and their frame church was burnt, and their early history and records perished in the disastrous conflagration kindled by the torch of the ruthless invader. Among the dwellings thus destroyed were those east of the church, belonging to Benjamin Thompson, Moses Thompson, John Wade, and Robert Wade, and the house belonging to Caleb Wade at the foot of the hill south of the church. The body of Mrs. Caldwell was conveyed to the house nearly opposite belonging to Capt. Henry Wade.

The circumstances of this painful tragedy are variously related. The following, from Brown's "Life of Finley," is probably very nearly correct:

"When the alarm was given in the morning of the approaching enemy, Rev. Mr. Caldwell valiantly endeavored to induce his wife to seek with him and the children a place of greater security, but she concluded to remain in the parsonage, thinking that she would be safe. The maid who resided with her and had charge of the children, looking out of the window, observed that a redcoat soldier had jumped over the fence and was coming up to the window with a gun. Her youngest son (Elias Boudinot), nearly two years old, called out, 'Let me see! Let me see!' and ran towards the window. Mrs. Caldwell rose from sitting on a bed very near, and at that moment the soldier fired his musket at her through the window. Two balls passed through her body, and she instantly expired.

"The news of this wanton act of cruelty soon spread far and near, and aroused a more determined purpose to rid the country of her merciless enemies."

At the close of the war the second church and parsonage, which is now standing, was commenced, and in a few years both were ready for use. The love of the people for the house of God and the ordinances of religion, and their self-denying efforts for the honor of God and to perpetuate the blessings of the gospel to their posterity, is highly creditable to the fathers of this church, and worthy of the imitation of their descendants. They were poor, some of them without a home. Their little savings had been ravaged by the ruthless invader. Dwellings, barns, fences, lands needed immediate attention. They had contributed liberally, both of men and means, to their country's service. And just as soon as the storm that had desolated their earthly prospects began to abate they were seen busily engaged, the fathers with their sons, in removing the rubbish and charred timbers of the old church and gathering materials for the new. Nor did they rest until they secured a house for their God and a home for their minister. They were reluctant to ask for outside assistance, and it was not until they had exhausted all their resources that they were driven to the necessity of applying to the Presbytery for help to complete their building. At a meeting of the Presbytery in Morristown, May 7, 1783, the following record was made:

"A petition from the congregation of Connecticut Farms for the assistance of Presbytery in building a meeting-house was brought in and read. The Presbytery advise that congregation to send proper persons to their respective congregations under their care to solicit benefactions for the above purpose, and recommend to the ministers and elders of each of the congregations to take such methods as they shall think proper to promote this benevolent design."

Thus was the second church finished, and now occupied for the past one hundred years, as generation after generation with their pastors have passed away, and at the present.

Their first pastor was Rev. Simeon Horton, who was installed in the year 1734, who continued for twelve years. After a vacancy of two years, Rev. James Davenport came in 1748, who remained for a few years, when Rev. Daniel Thane, a native of Scotland, was appointed over this church, and remained until 1757. The fourth pastor was Rev. John Darby, who was a descendant of one of the old settlers at Elizabethtown (1758), who remained for a few years. He died December, 1805, at the advanced age of ninety years. How the pulpit was supplied the next five or six years there is no account given, but in the winter of 1765 the Rev. Benjamin Hait (Hoyt) became their pastor. He was a native of Norwalk, Connecticut, and a graduate of the College of New Jersey. His ministry here from the beginning was in troublesome times, terminated by his death June 27, 1779. The church was without a pastor for eight years. We find after the death, by the ruthless hand of the enemy, of Rev. Mr. Caldwell and his wife, a Mr. Noble Everett supplied for a year the scattered congregation, when the Rev. Peter Fish, of Newtown, L. I., was called, who served for ten years, or until 1799, when Rev. Mr. Samuel Smith was installed. He was a graduate of Columbia College. He died of bilious fever one year and three days after his settlement, Oct. 10, 1801, at the age of thirty-three years. His immediate successor and the eighth pastor of this church was Rev. Stephen Thompson, a native of Mendham, N. J., in 1802. He continued his labors for thirty-three years, and dismissed in 1834, removed to Indiana, and where he remained until his death, May 31, 1856, in his eighty-first year. The present pastor, Rev. Robert Street, was called to this church in May, 1835, and who still preaches to this congregation, although those fathers and brethren who composed the session—Stephen Headley, Samuel Headley, William B. Potter, James W. Wade, and Thomas C. Allen, and to whom in the following September Elias Crane and John C. Lum, Jr., were added—have all passed away, while a large number of the parish whom he had counseled and prayed, and of the ninety-seven members of the church when he commenced his ministry, but ten remain, nearly all of whom are far advanced in life.

It was necessary that the historical part of this church should be remembered, as it was the love and life of the generation now passed away. It is their history. Passing through this beautiful section, dotted here and there with comfortable farm-houses, well-cultivated fields, their fine orchards, long known as raisers of fruits of the choicest, and its being historic ground, makes it with the Westfield frontier, as it were, part and parcel with this wilderness two hundred years ago. Still many of the same names, same homes, and lands in the possession of their descendants.

"Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations." (Deut. xxxvii. 7.)

The succession of pastors in this church has been Rev. Simon Horton, 1735, eleven years; Rev. James Davenport, 1748; Rev. Daniel Thorne, 1750, seven years; Rev. John Darby, 1758; Rev. Benjamin Haight, 1765, fourteen years; Rev. Peter Fish, 1789, ten years; Rev. Samuel Smith, 1800; Rev. Stephen Thompson, 1802, thirty-two years; and followed by the present pastor, Rev. Robert Street, D.D., who was ordained and installed July 21, 1835, and has consequently been pastor for forty-seven consecutive years. The church was organized in 1730, rebuilt of stone in 1783.

The elders at the present time are John Crane, Clark Faitoute, William Earle, G. L. Headley; trustees, John Leonard, E. B. Woodruff, Clark Faitoute, John Crane, I. Courter, I. Burnet, L. H. Williams; deacons, John Crane, Clark Faitoute; superintendent of the Sabbath-school, James M. Burnet; sittings, 450; communicants, 150; Sunday-school scholars, 80.

REV. ROBERT STREET was born at Germantown, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia, June 12, 1806. His father, Robert Street, was of English stock; his mother, Rachel Sims, was a native of New Jersey. They were both members of the Society of Friends. Robert was the eighth of ten children. When sixteen or seventeen years of age he became interested in the subject of personal religion, and soon after made a profession of religion under the ministry of Rev. Dr.

Wm Earl

John Earl, the great-grandfather of William, was of Holland extraction, and born June 3, 1722. His death occurred April 24, 1799. To his wife, Joanna Howard, were born children, among whom was Edward, whose birth occurred June 19, 1760, at Middleville, Essex Co., and who married Miss Phebe Gardner. His death took place Oct. 13, 1817. Their son Robert C. was born Feb. 27, 1791, and died May 15, 1848. He was first married to Miss Margaret Townley, who was the mother of William Earl, the subject of this brief sketch, and later contracted a second marriage with Miss Phebe C. Thompson. His son William was born Nov. 3, 1820, in what was then known as Essex County, but is now Union township, of Union County. He remained at home and assisted his father in the cultivation of his land until 1844, when he removed to Scotch Plains and rented a farm. At the expiration of two years he purchased the property which is his present residence.

Here, in connection with his farming pursuits, he is an extensive manufacturer of cider. This product is handled largely both at wholesale and retail, the principal markets being found in New York, Newark, and Elizabeth.

Mr. Earl was married Nov. 6, 1842, to Miss Phebe, daughter of Jesse C. and Elizabeth Thompson Baker, of Scotch Plains, whose birth occurred March 6, 1822. Their children are Margaret T., wife of W. E. Gardner; Elizabeth T., who is married to Stockton H. Attridge; Mary R., wife of George C. Haines; Phebe, who died in infancy; Ella W. (Mrs. John Turner); and William B. Mr. Earl manifests a reasonable degree of interest in public affairs, and has been for some years inspector of election of his township. He affiliates with the Republican party in politics, and devotes his influence to its success and the furtherance of its principles. He has been since 1837 a member of the Presbyterian Church at Connecticut Farms, in which he has for three years held the position of elder.

John Crane

The great-grandfather of Mr. Crane was John, who was born April 20, 1723, and married to Huldah Grant. His death occurred Sept. 12, 1807. Among his children was John, born June 17, 1755, and whose death took place May 14, 1837. He was married to Phebe Ross, and became the father of Elias Crane, born April 24, 1789, who was united in marriage to Esther Maxwell, Dec. 15, 1812, whose death occurred March 27, 1880, and that of her husband July 19, 1869.

Their son John, whose life is here briefly reviewed, was born Nov. 15, 1815, in Union township, and his boyhood spent at the home of his parents. The public school of the neighborhood offered opportunities for the acquirement of the rudiments of knowledge, and with a considerable stock of sound common sense, and good judgment added to these, Mr. Crane has fought the battle of life thus far successfully.

He was in 1837 married to Miss Sarah Cutter, of Woodbridge, Middlesex Co., to whom seven children were born,—Mary H., Ann Amelia, Sarah C., Esther, John M., Frederick, and David. Mrs. Crane's death took place Sept. 4, 1854. He married a second time, Miss Hannah Cutter, a sister of the first wife, who became the mother of one son,—William.

Mr. Crane is in politics a Democrat, and has, with a single exception, cast his vote each year since he attained his majority. He has, among other positions of trust in the township, held the offices of superintendent of public instruction and commissioner of highways. He is a Presbyterian in his religious views and a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Connecticut Farms, in which he has for years been an esteemed elder. Mr. Crane is a man of excellent judgment, and is esteemed not less for his judicious counsels than for his many virtues.

Janeway, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia.

His attention having been drawn to the ministry as a profession, his preparation for preaching was pursued first at the academy at Williamstown, Mass., then at Williams College, and finally at the theological seminary at Princeton, N. J.

Robert Street

In May, 1835, he received an invitation to preach for the First Presbyterian Church of Connecticut Farms, in the town of Union, Union Co., N. J., and in a few weeks received a unanimous call to the pastorate, and July 21, 1835, was ordained and installed pastor of the church by the Presbytery of Elizabethtown.

Mr. Street has two children, a son and a daughter, having buried four sons, one of whom was by a former marriage.

Mr. Street is still the pastor of the church, to which he was called in 1835, in the enjoyment of the confidence and affection of the people, and of bodily health and mental activity.

Methodist Episcopal Church, West Roselle.—A few families in the year 1871 desired to have services in this township under the care and auspices of the Methodist Church, and arrangements were made that supplies from Cranford and Elizabeth should hold regular meetings in the school-house; and finding that the building was too small, the few members of the church were organized into a society, and Revs. L. R. Dunn, D.D., Ralph Arntt, James Fitzgerald, D.D., James W. Marshall, Jonathan T. Crane, D.D., and others kindly aided them by their ministrations.

A meeting was held for the purpose of arranging the building of a Methodist Episcopal Church, when a board of trustees were elected, consisting of Messrs. A. Warren, J. A. Elwell, Wm. M. Crane, P. H. Buchanan, Alexander Cummings, E. S. Earl, and Charles O. Andrus. Land was donated by Jeremiah Eighmie, consisting of two fine lots, one hundred by two hundred feet, the one hundred feet fronting on Chestnut Street and two hundred feet on Grand Avenue. Plans were adopted, and in 1872 this beautiful chapel was completed, at a cost of four thousand dollars, and large enough to accommodate some two hundred worshippers. The membership is about seventy. The following names are of the pastors who have served the usual time, according to the itinerant plans of the Methodist Church: Rev. G. W. Terbush, E. N. Crusto, Wm. Buckalew, E. C. Dutcher, and Joseph P. Andrews, the present pastor. The Sabbath-school numbers eighteen officers and teachers and ninety-six scholars. The present board of trustees are Messrs. John B. Smith, R. W. Wheeler, E. C. Hamblin, P. H. Buchanan, Alexander Cummings, E. S. Earl, and Charles O. Andrus. They have it in contemplation of building a larger building to accommodate their congregation.

St. Luke's Episcopal Mission.—Services had been held in the new St. Luke's Episcopal Church for some years at East Roselle, but a few families had settled in the upper part of Union township, who desired to have services held in their neighborhood, in what was called the Washington School District, and in the old school building; and finding an interest was being made by a number of families, St. Luke's Church decided to arrange for an Episcopal mission; and as a fine school-house had been built at Connecticut Farms, and also another at West Roselle, the Washington school-house was offered for sale, which, through the liberality of Richard Kiplin, Esq., and others, was purchased and made larger, with stained-glass windows and turret for bell, grounds laid out neatly, and in 1880 Bishop Odenheimer consecrated the chapel for religious services according to the Episcopal form of worship.

This mission, belonging to the St. Luke's parish, Rev. Dr. Scott, rector, has supervision, holding regular services. There are a number of families who esteem it a privilege to give this mission their especial attention; and it is now in a prosperous condition, with Mr. Robert Kiplin, who has charge of the school as superintendent.

Sittings, one hundred and seventy; communicants, thirty; Sabbath-school scholars, forty-five, with a number of efficient teachers.

Necessarily, the Episcopalians are few in this neighborhood, as the population is chiefly composed of Presbyterian families.

Schools.—In the records of the township at a meeting held April 13, 1847, of the Town Committee. "It was resolved, That one hundred and fifty dollars for school tax be raised in the township for the present year."

At the expiration of ten years (April 13, 1857) "the township has increased the school tax to six hundred dollars."

And at a meeting held the 8th day of April, 1867, it was resolved that "also for support of public scholars the sum of two dollars ($2) a head for each child."

"A tax was raised of $3.00 per head for each child April 14th, 1873, between the ages of seven and eighteen years. There are nearly five hundred children enrolled in the township."

The following district reports as corrected:

District No. 23, Unionville.—The number upon roll, 66; the attendance is about 35. Teacher is Miss I. C. Grant. Trustees, W. C. Headley, who is clerk, A. A. Decker, and T. C. Baker.

District No. 25, North Roselle.—This is a beautiful building in the Queen Anne style of architecture, and built on high ground, having a fine view of the surrounding country, and surrounded by some of the best-built houses in Union township. The trustees appear to feel an interest in keeping the building and grounds in excellent order. The report of scholars is about 200, and attendance about 97. The trustees are C. O. Andrus, clerk, T. Kingland, O. S. Bogart. The following are the teachers: R. A. Dunham, Miss A. W. Townley, T. A. Akerly.

The following names of former teachers in this district, which was formerly called the Washington District School-House at an early date: Miss Mary Crane, a Miss Camp, 1847-51; Miss Emiline Miller, George Frost, 1858; Mr. Ames, 1859; Miss Hannah Johnson, 1861-63; and Edward P. Coapling, 1865. The property was sold and altered into the present St. Luke's Episcopal Mission.

District No. 27, Connecticut Farms.—This is one of the oldest schools in the township, being established before the Revolutionary war. Here many have taught and been taught; but little can be learned of those who taught here. There are about 93 scholars in the district. The trustees are G. W. Doty, district clerk, D. Hegel, and N. B. Compton. The present teacher is A. W. Wright. Within a short time the old frame building was removed and the present neat structure erected. Miss Emiline Miller, Mr. Ames, and Miss Camp were teachers.

District No. 28, Lyons Farms.—Number of scholars in district, 87; trustees, J. B. Morrison, clerk, J. S. Dod, and J. H. Doremus; present teacher, C. DuBoise; former teachers, Sarah Grumon, 1818; Thomas Winter, 1825. George Frost, from Newton, Conn., was here for a short time in 1837-38; and Miss Ellen Tichenor took his place in 1839-40; a Mr. Alcock was here in 1826; again in 1840-42. Miss Ellen Tichenor returned after a few months' absence, but remained but a short time. Miss Phebe Winaus took her place. A Rev. Mr. Knapp, a Methodist clergyman, taught in this district, and also a Mr. DuBoise, but the date cannot now be learnt. Again the name of Miss Tichenor is made mention of in 1870-72; and when she left Miss Elizabeth Woodruff took the position for a time. The school was called the "Hillside," and built in 1817, originally a stone building. The late Elihu Bond, father of the Rev. Lewis Bond, of Plainfield, was "much interested in education," and "gave the site," "some stone," and also "ten dollars in money." The present building is a frame, neat in appearance, and built a few years since.

District No. 29, Salem (formerly called Sodom), has about 150 scholars in the district, but the attendance is small, less than 40. The following are the trustees: J. W. Lim, district clerk, O. Woodruff, and W. A. E. Earle. The teachers are Miss M. A. Stiles, principal, and C. J. Wilcox.

We find the schools of this township well appointed for the development and training of the younger part of this township; but it is to be regretted that all do not attend for instruction, as they are so well furnished with the needed appliances as to supply all ample opportunities and facilities for securing a good education to every child in these five school districts, and so convenient for all to attend.

We add the names of the following members of school committee and superintendents of schools:

School committee, James Carpenter, 1845; Albert R. Meeker, 1845; Stephen H. Crane, 1845; William H. Woodruff, 1846; Samuel Doty, 1846; John Crane, 1846.

Superintendents of schools, John Crane, 1847-51; Rev. Robert Street, 1852-62; George W. Cooper, 1863; Edward E. Searing, 1864; Noah Woodruff, 1865-66.

Connecticut Farms Burial-Ground.—This old historic burial-ground of the first settlers of this township is situated on a knoll or rising ground. The Presbyterian Church, one of the oldest in this county, stands surrounded by these graves. But few of the oldest stones can now be deciphered, and there are many which were not marked except in the early records of the church book of burials. But in 1780 the church and parsonage were burnt by the British and the church books were also destroyed. The ground is surrounded by a brick wall, with the exception of part of the southerly slope, which may have been the first that was buried in.

The Evergreen Cemetery.—This association was organized under the general act of the Legislature of New Jersey, March 10, 1853. It is beautifully situated on the road from Elizabeth to Newark, about half-way from each city. For a long time it was found necessary that something should be decided upon, as the places for the interment of the dead were being crowded. The following gentlemen were chosen trustees: Richard T. Haines, president; Francis B. Chetwood, vice-president; Josiah Q. Stearns, treasurer; and William F. Day, secretary; William Brown,

James C. Baker

The parents of Mr. Baker were John and Mary Meeker Baker, the birth of the former having occurred Oct. 28, 1790, and his death Feb. 4, 1834. Mrs. Baker was born Nov. 25, 1793, died Feb. 8, 1830. Their children were James C. and Aaron M., the eldest of whom is the subject of this biographical sketch. He was born Aug. 17, 1817, in Union township, on the land which is his present residence, and to which he succeeded by inheritance as a portion of his father's estate. He also inherited his father's love for country life, and has established a reputation as a successful agriculturist.

Mr. Baker was married on March 31, 1852, to Miss Mary, daughter of Amos and Martha Day, whose birth occurred June 2, 1822. To this marriage were born three children,—Edward Clark, deceased; James Arthur, also deceased; and Aaron Clifford, who resides at home.

Mr. Baker was an early Whig, and became a Republican on the organization of the party. He has since been one of the most staunch and earnest advocates of its platform and measures. Both Mr. and Mrs. Baker are among the most active members of the First Presbyterian Church of Lyons Farms, in which the former is an influential elder.

Ab B Crane

The great-grandfather of Mr. Crane was Andrew, who resided in what is now designated as Union township before the war of the Revolution. Among his children were Andrew, David, and Jacob; the latter of whom was also born in the township, where he married and had children,—Jacob, Matthias, Stephen, and one daughter, Phebe, who became Mrs. Stiles.

Matthias, of this number, was born on the family estate and spent his life in farming pursuits. He was united in marriage to Miss Prudence Lum, and had one child,—a daughter, Prudence. By a second union, with Miss Sarah Lum, he had children,—Matthias B., David L., John, Samuel, William Henry, Jane Elizabeth, and Stephen J. The death of Mr. Crane occurred upon the homestead where his life was spent. His son Matthias B., a brief sketch of whose life is here given, was born Dec. 27, 1808, and spent his early life on the farm. Having determined that New York offered a wider field of usefulness than the limits of his native township, he repaired to that city and learned the trade of a carpenter. Here he passed ten years; after which he returned to Union County, and having purchased the homestead made it his residence. He was married to Miss Margaret, daughter of John Winans, and had children,—Sarah F. (Mrs. M. W. Crane), Marietta A. (Mrs. E. B. Earle), Anna M., and John W. Mrs. Crane died in 1868, and he married a second time, Miss Abbie, daughter of William and Maria Chandler Moore, whose ancestors were of Scotch descent and heroes of the Revolution, as were also those of her husband. Mr. Crane is in politics a Republican, though not ambitious for official distinction, and in early life cast his vote with the Whig party. He is a Presbyterian, and both he and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth, of which he was formerly a deacon.

John D. Norris, Lewis W. Sparks, John H. Rolston, Apollos M. Elmer, Charles A. Higgins, Isaac M. Ward, Josiah Q. Stearns, Frederick Phelps. The surveyor appointed was Ernest L. Meyer, and the superintendent of the grounds James Amm. The grounds are well laid out and ornamented. They have opened, graded, and appropriately and tastefully arranged avenues and paths throughout the whole grounds to the extent of more than six miles, and erected capacious receiving tombs in Egyptian architecture for the use of persons desirous to become proprietors in the cemetery. On the 13th of December, 1853, the grounds were dedicated. The late Rev. David Magie, D.D., of the Second Presbyterian Church, made the dedicatory remarks, and the Rev. Robert Street the prayer.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

EDWIN MAGIE.

The Magies are of Scotch extraction, the ancestor of the family in America having left the land of his birth during the period of persecution in 1685-87, and established himself in his trade as a blacksmith in the land of his adoption. His death occurred in 1736, and but little else is known of him. Among his descendants was Michel, who resided in what is now known as Magietown, in Union township, and had children,—Benjamin, John, Catharine, Hannah, and one whose name is not recalled. By a second marriage his children were David, Joseph, Job, Haines, Ogden, and Mary Jane. John of this number was born Aug. 21, 1785, in the township of Union, where he during his lifetime resided and pursued the avocation of a farmer. He married Dec. 19, 1807, Mary, daughter of Jacob Searing, whose birth occurred Oct. 26, 1785. They had children,—Phebe, Edwin, Joel, Mary Ann, Jane Harriet, John, William Henry, and Catharine, who died in youth. The death of Mr. Magie took place on the 23d of April, 1862, after a long and industrious life, and that of his wife April 5, 1867. Their son Edwin was born Dec. 13, 1810, on the homestead, where he remained until his eighteenth year, after which he removed to Newark and acquired a trade. He returned again to the township, and having purchased the farm he at present occupies, began its cultivation and improvement. He was married Dec. 14, 1842, to Miss Ann Eliza, daughter of Harvey Thompson, of Union. There were born to them children,—John Harvey, Frances Amelia, David T., who is married to J. Etta Ward, Edwin M., and Jessie, of whom David T. and Jessie are the only survivors. Mr. Magie was an early Whig, but became a Republican at the formation of the party, and has since remained in its ranks. He has devoted his life to the superintendence of his business interests, and had little time to devote to affairs of a public character.

Edwin Magie

His religious associations are with the Presbyterian Church, Mrs. Magie and their children, David, his wife, and Jessie, being members of the Second Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth, as was also their daughter Frances.

DAVID S. HIGGINS.

James Higgins was a native of the township of Union, where he was not only a successful farmer but a citizen of much influence. He was born March, 1763, and married March, 1787. He served with credit in the war of the Revolution, and died after an eventful life, Oct. 12, 1826. His son, David S. Higgins, was born July 26, 1804, on the family estate in Union township, and in early life, after acquiring the rudiments of an education, engaged in mercantile pursuits in the city of New York. Here he remained for seven years, at the expiration of which time he removed again to the scenes of his childhood and became a farmer. This labor proving congenial to his tastes was continued during the remainder of his life. He was married on the 24th of February, 1827, to Miss Margaret Searing, daughter of Jacob Searing, of Revolutionary fame, and became the father of the following children: Elizabeth, deceased, who was the wife of R. S. Van Tassel; Hannah, deceased, who married James Clark; Margaret, wife of Rev. H. C. Townley; Rebecca, who was united in marriage to Henry H. Richards; James W., and David S. C.

Mr. Higgins may be described in his political pred-lections as an old-line Whig, and to the principles of his party he adhered during his lifetime. Though interested in all public affairs which redounded to the welfare of the community, he was never an aspirant for office and rarely engaged in the successive yearly contests which were the precursors to official position. He was by religious preference a Baptist, and a consistent member of the First Baptist Church of Elizabeth, N. J., of which he was one of the founders and an officer from its organization.

D. S. Higgins

The death of Mr. Higgins occurred on the 31st of October, 1871. His life was one of integrity and usefulness, and his death universally deplored. Mrs. Higgins still survives him, and daily exemplifies in her life the virtues of a Christian lady. James W., the only surviving son, was born in the township of Union, Feb. 31, 1839, and still resides near the place of his birth, where he is a representative farmer and a man of much influence. His family consists of a wife and two sons, the latter representing the fourth generation in the township.

David S. C. enlisted at the outbreak of the Rebellion at the age of seventeen, and served during a period of three years. He died at home from illness contracted during the campaigns in which he participated.

HON. NOAH WOODRUFF.

Few of the residents of Union township who have passed away have left memories of a life so fraught with beneficent results as did the subject of this biography. Born in the most humble but respectable conditions, and left when but a lad to fight the battle of life unaided, he by his own inherent strength of purpose achieved a position of influence and filled a career of extended usefulness. Noah Woodruff was born April 22, 1804, in Union township, and early acquired a familiarity with farming enterprises. These he conducted successfully during his lifetime. He was on the 7th of January, 1835, united in marriage to Miss Mary Miller, to whom were born nine children,—Abby F., John C., Stephen M. (deceased), Mary J., Noah, Elizabeth S., Abram M., Sella, and Edward E.

Mr. Woodruff became identified with the interests of Union County when it was still a portion of Essex County. His acknowledged executive ability, together with an integrity that offered no ground for question, caused him to be frequently chosen for positions of responsibility and trust. He was at one time borough sheriff of the city of Elizabeth, and for a period of thirty years filled the office of assessor of Union township, being a portion of the time also its collector.

Having received the appointment of master in chancery, he combined also the duties of a justice of the peace, which office was faithfully filled for successive terms.

His constituents having discerned the peculiar abilities which enabled him to grasp subjects of public and general import, chose him for two terms as their representative in the State Legislature while Union County embraced two districts. In this position he proved himself a judicious and able legislator. His latest official service was as a member of the board of chosen freeholders for Union township, having been director of the board during his last term. The death of Mr. Woodruff occurred Jan. 12, 1873, while his mental vigor and usefulness were yet unimpaired. His life was a bright example of industry, wisdom, and probity, and his death an occasion of sorrow to many hearts. His widow, who still survives, is one of the contributors of this testimonial of regard to his memory.

JOHN T. HUTCHINSON.

John Hutchinson was a native of Scotland, and through life followed the business of a florist. He was for years engaged in this pursuit on Staten Island, and in 1866 established the enterprise which is now conducted by his son in Union township and Elizabeth, N. J. His wife, Elizabeth, was of English birth, and became the mother of five children,—John T., William, Jesse E., Annie G., and Frederick L. The death of Mr. Hutchinson occurred March 10, 1870, in his forty-fourth year, and that of his wife Sept. 30, 1879, in her fifty-sixth year. Both were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church, and highly esteemed for their many virtues. Their son, John T., was born Aug. 8, 1854, on Staten Island.

Abraham Woodruff

James Long

Mr. Long may with propriety be mentioned as one of the most conspicuous examples of a self-made man the county of Union affords. He is the son of Patrick and Mary Sullivan Long, and was born in Thurles, County of Tipperary, Ireland, on the 8th of April, 1843. He while a lad attended school for a brief period, and soon after, having concluded that America offered inviting fields of labor to the young emigrant, embarked in 1855 with his sister, Ellen B., for New York. His footsteps were directed towards New Jersey, and having reached Union township he at once sought employment, and for four years received as the price of his labor his board and the privilege of attendance at the public school in winter. He at the expiration of this period was engaged by Aaron Baker, with whom he remained nine years, and during that eventful time was by frugality and economy able to accumulate the sum of two thousand dollars, with which he purchased a farm. He at once stocked his farm and devoted his energies to agricultural pursuits. Upon the land was a dilapidated dwelling which was demolished, and in 1879 the spacious and comfortable residence which is his present home was built upon the site. Mr. Long was on the 9th of March, 1869, married to Mary E., daughter of John and Ann Tunison, of Union township. They have had children,—Lillie M., James A., Jennie W., and Francis B. Mr. Long, while absorbed in the cultivation of his land, having added largely to his original purchase, is not unmindful of the privileges which are accorded to every American citizen, and casts his vote regularly with the Republican party. He is a member of the New Jersey State Agricultural Society, and also of the Union County Farmers' Club. He is also vice-president of the New Jersey Poultry Association, and has usually been in charge of the poultry exhibitions at the State Fair.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Long are members of the Connecticut Farms Presbyterian Church. James Long, the brother of the subject of this sketch, served with credit in the late war as first lieutenant of Company E, Eighth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, was wounded at the battle of Williamsburg, and died at Fortress Monroe.

Aaron M. Baker

where his boyhood until the age of twelve years was spent, after which he removed with his parents to Union township. He became interested in the enterprise in which his father was engaged, and applied himself to the acquirement of a thorough knowledge of its details. This enabled him on the death of his parent to become his successor, and greatly to develop and increase the business. He makes a specialty of cut flowers, which find a ready market in Elizabeth. He has also acquired a reputation for skill in decoration and landscape-gardening which is especially noticeable in the Evergreen Cemetery, where his taste is frequently called into requisition.

John T. Hutchinson

Mr. Hutchinson has an office in Elizabeth, where orders are received, and where his refined taste and skill find appreciative patrons. He was, June 16, 1880, united in marriage to Miss Boyd, of Newark. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the Second Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth.

AARON M. BAKER.

The Baker family are of Holland extraction, though little is known of their representatives prior to the advent of Ezekiel Baker in Union township, where he resided for many years. He formed two matrimonial alliances, the first with Miss Hannah Meeker, to whom was born a son, Ezekiel, and a second with Miss Phæbe Dickinson, whose children were John,

Mary, Rhoda, Phebe, Fanny, Ephraim, and William. Mr. Baker spent his life in farming occupations, and died at his home in Union township. His son John, the father of the subject of this biography, was born on the family estate, and at an early age acquired a knowledge of farming, to which his energies were devoted. He also developed a taste for military tactics, and was prominently identified with the State militia. He was married to Miss Mary Meeker, to whom were born two sons, James C. and Aaron M., the birth of the latter having occurred Aug. 19, 1819, at the homestead. He enjoyed in youth all the advantages of education afforded by the common schools of the day, and entered upon the duties of life soon after as a farmer, which has since been his vocation. He was united in marriage to Miss Mary E., daughter of Edward and Mary Woodruff Earl, of the same township, and granddaughter of David Earl. The birth of Mrs. Baker occurred Nov. 25, 1823.

Mr. Baker is in his political belief a Republican, his first vote having been cast for William Henry Harrison. He is a Presbyterian in his religious belief, and has been for a number of years a deacon of the Second Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth, of which both he and Mrs. Baker are members. He has ever manifested a deep interest in the furtherance of education in the township, and was chiefly instrumental in securing the tower and bell which ornament the imposing school building in his district.

CHAPTER LIII.

SUMMIT TOWNSHIP.

Geographical Situation.—Summit township was formed from Springfield and New Providence by act of the Legislature in the year 1869. It is situated in Union County, and is bounded on the north by Milburn township, Essex County, on the east by Springfield, Fanwood, and New Providence, and on the west by New Providence and Passaic River. The Passaic River is also the dividing line between Union and Morris Counties.

Natural Features.—This township comprises extensive alluvial and diluvial deposits. The former consists of elongated and also rounded crystalline trap, sand gravel, and loam; the latter are a stiff whitish clay, a yellowish-brown clay above this, and in parts the outcropping of a silicious sand. The marine fossil shells found in these clays, belonging to the Hamilton group, and a few impressions of trilobite, orthoceratite, and other extinct species, representing more the remains of the Trenton group, show that these deposits were made at an earlier period than those thrown down by rivers or oceans in modern times. To this system belong also the trap bowl-ers scattered in this township.

The surface is hilly until you reach the summit proper. The road winding along the eastern line of the Second Mountain to the old Springfield road, passing the site of the "Old Red School-house," and leading to the Balty Roll Heights (the scene of the murder of Mr. Roll), in Westfield township, exhibits the surface quite uneven, rising at several points higher than the First Mountain and several hundred feet above tide-water. This chain of hills, being parts of First and Second Mountain ranges, including this township from New Providence, gives it a fine lofty appearance, surrounded by timber in its natural wild state, and the valleys between having fine cultivated farms. These features make the township desirable for health and fine landscape scenery. Just opposite the farms lately occupied by Jacob F. Badgley and Moses Reeves, being the southerly part of this township, we find the head source of Green Brook, fed by many springs. On the westerly line, along the Passaic and Delaware River Railroad, we meet much of the drift rock and pebbles in uneven ledges, and in some places cropping out, until we reach the Passaic River near the New Providence depot, when a stiff clay loam intervenes. Here are to be seen well-cultivated farms, fine orchards, etc. There is still to be seen much fine timber in this section. The soil in the valleys and on the spurs of the Third Mountain produces excellent crops.

As we go to the extreme northeastern part of this township the view is fine, overlooking Springfield, Union, and adjacent townships, reminding us of the appropriateness of the name, Summit township; for we look down the valley miles before us for several hundred feet upon villages and hamlets, farms and wooded glens. The soil of the drift is variable, being in some places light and sandy and in others hard loam or clay. In or near Dean Town, now called East Summit, there are found many flat intervals and marshes, which appear to have been water-beds originally that have been filled in by the encroachments of vegetable growth, and by the soil washed down from the hills. Peat or muck has been observed in some of these beds, and for a fertilizer is invaluable to the agriculturist. Prof. Cook, in his "Geological Report," devotes considerable attention to the glacial drift, and a part has reference to this particular locality.

Census for the Year 1881.—Summit township has a population of 1859:

White males 21 years and over.....	417
" " under 21 years and over 5.....	254
" " 5.....	99
Total white males.....	770
White females 21 years and over.....	571
" " under 21 years and over 5.....	374
" " 5.....	125
Total white females.....	1068
Black females 21 years and over.....	7
" " under 21 years and over 5.....	4
" " 5.....	1
Total black females.....	12
Black males 21 years and over.....	6
" " under 21 years and over 5.....	2
" " 5.....	1
Total black males.....	9
Total population.....	1859

Early Settlement.—We find many of the early homes in this township still standing, and a few of them are occupied by the descendants of the pioneers. Here and there where the early homes have disappeared some memento can yet be traced,—a few fruit-trees yet standing planted by the first settlers. On the Sturges property can yet be seen an old pear-tree, with some fruit still upon it of this year's growing. Many of these trees were raised from seeds brought with the pioneers when they came and settled in these hills. We notice some of the foundation stone of these farm-houses were carefully squared and shaped before being placed, the mortar now being as hard as the stone. The following is an account of some of the first settlers:

Isaac Sayre came from New England and settled between the mountains southwest of Springfield between 1700 and 1720. He married Jane, daughter of Matthias Swaine, and had four children,—first, Elizabeth, who married Enoch Vreeland, son of Brown Vreeland, and lived where Jonathan Gillam now lives; second, Matthias, married 27th of September, 1767, Patience Thompson, daughter of Aaron, of Long Hill; third, Catherine, married Timothy Griffen, of New Providence; fourth, Isaac, Jr., married 22d of February, 1774, Elizabeth Roll, daughter of John Roll, Sr.; she died 26th of September, 1850, in her ninety-second year, after a long time a widow. Isaac Sayre, Jr., had eight children,—(1) John, (2) Mary, (3) Brooks, (4) Jane, (5) Catherine, (6) Betsey, (7) Anthony, and (8) Hannah.

Brooks Sayre (son of Isaac Sayre, Jr.) and Polly Conklin had children,—first, Elizabeth, who married Henry Faitoute, son of Moses, of Union township; second, William; third, Mary, married Joseph Kain, a carpenter of Somerville; fourth, Isaac; fifth, Hannah; sixth, Brooks Sayre, Jr., married, but who has no children, now living on one of his father's homesteads.

We find the former home of Mr. Benjamin Weed, who came and settled upon the westerly side of Second Mountain in the year 1730.

William Robison, the "Father of Methodism," settled on Stony Hill about 1720. The original home is still standing, but had an addition made to it a few years ago. At his house in 1786 was held and organized the first Methodist society of this valley, this being the oldest organization. The church was built in New Providence, 1801. He was appointed class-leader. He married his cousin, Betsey Robison, the 2d December, 1772, and had four children by her,—(1) David, who married 24th December, 1795, Agnes Vance, daughter of Kennedy Vance, of Long Hill; (2) Phebe, married 5th November, 1794, Henry Mooney, and lived in Morris County; (3) John, married Lydia Wilson, of Maryland, who was a Methodist minister of some celebrity; (4) William, married a Miss Nancy Roll, daughter of John Roll, son of Isaac Roll, of Springfield township.

"KENT PLACE."
HOMESTEAD OF W. H. D'FOREST,
SUMMIT, N. J.

Rev. John Robison and Lydia Wilson had children,—(1) William, who married Anne Mariah Lafoucheire, and had children,—1, John; 2, James Edward and Susan; (2) Elizabeth, married Rev. Alexander Gilmore, a Methodist preacher; (3) Catherine, is unmarried; she lived in Springfield.

William Robison, son of William the first and Nancy Roll; they had five children,—(1) John, who went from home and never was heard from; (2) Wesley, who became a celebrated Methodist clergyman,—he married Margaret Worth, of Rahway; (3) Caroline, who married for her first husband Oliver Rowland, and second William Mawby. They had children,—(1) Victoria, (2) William, (3) Frederick Mawby. William Robison had also a son James, who was deranged, and also Isaac, his fifth child, who died at the age of eighteen years. William Robison, Sr., died 6th August, 1815, aged seventy-one years. His wife, Betsey, died 11th October, 1799, aged forty-seven years.

Maj. Jotham Potter, son of John, son of John, son of Joseph Potter. The New Providence family branch is from Samuel Potter. The ancestor of the Potter family in this region of country came from Wales. He settled on a tract of land of four hundred and fourteen and one-half acres at the foot of the Second Mountain, by the side of an old mine, and on the east side of Green River (Green Brook), which was laid out for him Feb. 26, 1793. He was a justice of the peace. Maj. Potter married Rebecca Crane, of Westfield township, and had three children,—(1) Susan, (2) Betsey, (3) Elias, who had four children,—Susan Elizabeth, Emeline, Catherine, and Louisa. Mr. Potter was quite a military leader, and for many years had charge of the militia, and acting as a major. He was prominent in many enterprises, and elder for many years of the Presbyterian Church.

There was also a Maj. Jotham Potter, the second child of Amos Potter, Esq. He was also a major in the militia, and a justice of the peace. He married Phebe Pettit, and had eight children. He had a son, a Presbyterian preacher in Indiana, the Rev. Ludlow Day Potter, who graduated at college, and also a son Amos, who was born in 1820, now elder in the Presbyterian Church in New Providence. The family of Potters are numerous, and scattered from this branch all through the Western States.

Peter Parrot, who married Sally Crane, daughter of Norris Crane, had six children,—Jane, who married William Force, son of Squire Force, Jr., lived in Morristown, N. J.; Hetty, married Sylvester Force, son of Squire Force, Jr.; Mary Phebe, married William High, Jr., son of William High; Hannah, and John. The William Parrot farm of two hundred acres extended from the river to Stony Hill road. He was the ancestor of this family. Peter Parrot was of the fourth generation.

Daniel Seely Clark (son of Samuel Clark), born 12th August, 1773, married 28th February, 1796, Sally Wilcox, daughter of John, and died 22d February, 1843, nearly seventy years of age. Daniel, like his father, was a merchant, and a justice of the peace. He lived on his father's farm, and kept the same store his father did before him. Mr. William Little says when he was a boy he well remembers an old sign before the store-door which read, "Pay to-day and trust to-morrow." Mr. Clark had nine children,—(1) William M., who married, first, Rachel Wood, daughter of Daniel S. Wood, Jr., and for his second wife Sally Wood, sister of his first wife; (2) Levi, who married, first, Eliza Crane, daughter of Joseph Crane, and second, Elizabeth Tucker, daughter of Moses, son of John; (3) Samuel, married 4th December, 1844, Mary Noe, daughter of David, son of John; (4) Daniel Seely, Jr., who went to Louisville, Ky., and married there; (5) Stephen, who also went to Kentucky; (6) Jane, who married Henry Spencer, son of William Spencer, of Chatham; (7) Eliza, married Henry Schureman, son of Thomas Schureman, of Hunterdon County, N. J.; (8) Sarah, married a Mr. Myers, of New York, and went to St. Louis, Mo.; (9) Mary, married Joseph Graham, of New York, and lived there.

Moses Reeves, son of Watts Reeves, of Springfield township, lived in the valley between First and Second Mountains, next to Dayton Badgley's. He married Abigail Badgley, born May, 1811. Moses Reeves was born 1809. They removed to Newark, N. J. They had six children,—(1) James W. Reeves, born November, 1833; (2) Mary Elizabeth Reeves, born April, 1836; (3) Hestem Anne Reeves, born 2d June, 1838; (4) Benjamin Franklin Reeves, born March, 1847; (5) George B. Dallas Reeves, born December, 1844; (6) Sarah Jane Reeves, born March 23, 1850.

Benjamin Sturgis' lands lay just on the southerly part of this township. He was a carpet-weaver as well as farmer. He married Hetty Badgley, daughter of Anthony Badgley. They had no children. They lived to be quite old, and died a few years ago. A family by the name of Reeves occupy the farm.

Samuel Badgley lived between the First and Second Mountains. He married Polly Frazee, and had nine children. His son, Jacob Foster Badgley, born 2d February, 1808, married Anne Brown, born 26th April, 1812, daughter of William Brown, and had eight children,—(1) Moses, born 21st January, 1833; (2) George Brown, born 19th August, 1835; (3) Henry, born 26th November, 1837; (4) John, born 14th June, 1840; (5) Lydia Anne, born 26th October, 1842; (6) Samuel, born 8th March, 1845; (7) Crook Vanderve, born 15th June, 1847; (8) Mary, born 2d June, 1849. He resided on the homestead of his father up to a short time ago, and now resides in Summit village.

Elias Morgan is mentioned as settling in this township, as also the names of Marsh Pierson, Nicholas De Muller, Samuel Potter (who has a son in Cleveland, Ohio, publisher), Isaac F. Pitts, Augustus Theband.

Isaac Bryant was a relative of Capt. William Bryant; they lived for a time in or near Elizabethtown, but Isaac moved to Stony Hill.

Joseph Doty came from the east end of Long Island, and owned part of lot No. 39 of the Elizabethtown lots in Stony Hill Valley, just on the borders of New Providence township. He married Sarah Badgley, sister of John and James Badgley. They had five children,—1, Joseph Doty, Jr., who died young; 2, George, who married Sibbe Howell; 3, John, married first Sarah Potter, and for his second wife Sarah Clark, daughter of Daniel Clark; 4, Anthony, married, had but one child, William Parsons Doty, who married 1st June, 1793, Peggy Badgley, daughter of Moses (son of Joseph Badgley); he was a useful and consistent man to his church and neighbors; 5, Elizabeth, married Jeremy Ludlow, son of Jeremiah Ludlow (or sometimes spelt Ludlum). Old Mr. Doty died 10th September, 1768. George Doty, second child of Joseph Doty, lived on Stony Hill, and owned a mill on the brook running down by Samuel M. Magie's and Israel Doty's. He and Sibbe Howell had children,—1, Joseph third; 2, George, Jr., married Miss Nancy Cook; 3, David, who went and settled in the lake country, as it was called, New York, and married there; 4, Keziah, married Stephanus Clark, son of Daniel Clark; 5, Sarah, married John Clark, Jr., son of Elder John Clark.

Joseph Doty third (first child of George) lived where his grandfather, Joseph Doty (first) did. He and his wife, Patty Allen, had children:

1. Anthony, who married Mary Wilcox, daughter of Levi.
2. Allen, married Nancy Brown, daughter of John.
3. David, married Sibbe Clark, daughter of John, Jr., son of Elder John Clark.
4. Sarah, married Aaron Oakley, son of Thomas.
5. Aaron (who was Capt. Doty of militia), married 15th December, 1811, Betsey Hedges, daughter of Gilbert, and went to Luzerne County, Pa.
6. Sibbe.
7. Mary, married Jesse F. Pitts, son of George Pitts, of Orange County, New York.
8. Martha, married 24th January, 1824, Benjamin Weed from Massachusetts.

John Doty (third son of Joseph Doty the first) married Sarah Potter, lived in Stony Hill Valley, near but west of his father's house, and had children,—1, Chloe, died unmarried; 2, James, born 16th January, 1756, married 29th September, 1788, Nancey Locey, daughter of Daniel Locey, of Mendham. Mr. John Doty's wife died, and for his second wife he married Sarah Clark, daughter of Daniel, and had children,—3, Daniel, born 2d March, 1865, and married first Elizabeth Potter, second Betsey Crane, daughter of Joseph Crane, and removed to Middletown, Ohio; 4, John Doty, Jr., married Phebe Cooper, of Hanover, and went to the western part of New York State, and afterwards to Middletown, Ohio, where his brother Daniel went; 5, Zina, went to Ohio, and the record says with his father and family, and married there; 6, Betsey, married 23d March, 1794, Stephanus Clark, Jr., and went to Ohio; 7, Jane, went with her father to Ohio, and married Samuel Clark there; 8, Chloe (second), died 27th December, 1784; 9, Ketura, who died young.

Just on the line, or near the Summit township, is the old homestead of James Doty (second child of John Doty). His daughter Phebe, his fourth child, is still living in her eighty-fifth year. She married Edward Hedges, son of Gilbert Hedges, Dec. 24, 1815, and had six children. She was born 1798. Edward Hedges was born 1793. Gilbert Hedges died Aug. 5, 1822, aged seventy-eight years. His wife, Margaret Hedges, his widow, died March 18, 1838, aged eighty-four years. Daniel Doty (third son of John, son of Joseph Doty 1st) married first Elizabeth Potter, eldest child of Ames, son of Daniel Potter 1st. He married second Elizabeth Crane, daughter of Joseph Crane. He left home Sept. 10, 1790, on an exploring tour down the Ohio River, and landed at Cincinnati 23d of October following, when there were but two log houses in that city. One of them was occupied by Maj. Benjamin Stites, from the Scotch Plains, Essex Co. (now Union County), N. J.; the other was occupied by Capt. John S. Gano. The record goes on to say, St. Clair's defeat was on the fourth day of November, 1791. The Rev. Daniel Clark, from Pennsylvania, was the first minister of the gospel in that region. Daniel Doty had no children living by his first wife. He was born March 23, 1765, and died May 8, 1848. He returned from Ohio to New Jersey, and married for his second wife Elizabeth Crane, and again returned to Ohio and purchased a large tract of land at and about Middletown, Ohio, and settled upon it. He with his wife, Elizabeth Crane, had twelve children.

The name Doty by part of the family is spelled Doughty. Solomon Doughty, son of Joshua, married Polly Pierson, granddaughter of Col. Cornelius Ludlow, of Revolutionary fame. Solomon was first brigadier- and major-general of militia.

Jesse F. Pitts married Mary Doty (seventh child of Joseph Doty the third). He was a son of George Pitts, of Orange County, N. Y., and had two children, James Clark Pitts and Theodore L. Pitts.

1, Benjamin Spinning Dean, son of Solomon, son of John Dean. Solomon Dean married Feb. 20, 1819, Prudence Spinning. He married Phebe Badgley, daughter of Squire Badgley. 2, John Dean; 3, Sylvester Dean; and 4, Mary Cohoon Dean, who died young. Mr. Benjamin S. Dean has carried on an extensive business of hub-turning and other wood-work, having large buildings for the purpose. His neighborhood has been called by the name and known as Deantown (now East Summit). The name is spelt by branches of the family Deane, as Aaron Dean, 1745; Nicholas Deane, 1778.

Benjamin Spinning was probably one of the first settlers in this township. It is supposed that he was a descendant of Humphrey Spinning, who died about 1700, and a cousin, Daniel Spinning, who departed this life in 1699. They lived in the borough of Elizabethtown. Mr. Humphrey Spinning married Abigail Hubbard, daughter of George Hubbard, of Guilford, Conn., 1657, and came to this State about this time. In the records of the court in old Essex County (Newark) is mentioned a Benjamin Spinning as constable in 1714. He married Charity —, and came up from Elizabethtown, and lived where his son, John Spinning, lived. He had six children. Prudence Spinning married Solomon Dean, Feb. 20, 1819.

John Blackburn is mentioned as also of the first settlers.

John Noe (Nue). This family were Huguenot refugees. The name was originally, it is thought, "Neau." Elias Neau was one of the founders of the French Church in New York, and emigrated as a catechist by the Propagation Society. "That good man," Peter Noe, was admitted an Associate in 1695, with a third lot right. His son John, in 1694, was a subscriber to Rev. Mr. Hariman's support, but resided in Woodbridge, Middlesex. One record makes him the son of Daniel Noe. He married Mary Ayres, of Woodbridge. He died April 26, 1828, aged seventy-one years. His wife, Mary, died Oct. 31, 1823, aged sixty-four years. They had seven children. Ellis, the first son of John Noe, married Esther Osborn, and had nine children. Daniel W. Noe was their sixth child.

Lewis Noe was brother of John the first. He came also up from Woodbridge, Middlesex Co., and bought the farm formerly owned by Thomas Darling, where Smith M. Miller lived. He married Phebe Mundy, daughter of Henry Mundy, of Metuchen, in same county. He died April 5, 1838, aged seventy-three years. She died May 11, 1814, aged fifty-four years. They had six children,—1, Henry; 2, Frazee, who married, Nov. 3, 1810, Dency Hart, daughter of David, and died April 11, 1832; 3, Margaret, married David French, Jr., son of David, lived in Stony Hill Valley; 4, Lewis, married, April 7, 1834, Mariah Meeker, daughter of Isaac Meeker; 5, Huma, married Ellis Coddington, of Woodbridge; 6, Phebe, married, Jan. 21, 1815, Joel Drake, son of Jeremiah Drake.

Frazee Noe, son of Lewis and Dency Hart, had four children,—1, Daniel Hart Noe, who married, Sept. 25, 1839, Mary Osborn, daughter of Stephen B. Osborn; 2, Phebe Mundy Noe, who died July 5, 1832, aged seventeen years; 3, John Noe, married Dec. 3, 1845, Martha Bonnel, daughter of Philemon Bonnel, she died without children; 4, Sarah Emeline Noe, born 1811, married John A. Dean, born 1806, son of William, and had eight children.

Daniel W. Noe, son of Ellis, son of John Noe, married Mary Mulford, daughter of Jonathan, of Pluckemin. He died Feb. 18, 1846, and had two children. The youngest, Daniel, died young.

Jabesh Shipman is first mentioned. He married Agnes Rogers, and owned lands next west where Thomas Squires lived, and Jacob Grisinger and Thomas Conn lived. He had nine children. John Shipman, his fourth child, married, 15th May, 1792, Betsey Stevens, daughter of Jonathan Stevens, Sr., and had three children. David, who married Nancy, the widow of Caleb Putney, and died without children. 2, Abigail, married, 14th June, 1817, Isaac Doty, son of Henry, of Washington Valley; 3, Anne, married Nathan Smalley, son of Isaac Smalley. Aaron Shipman is from this family (owned the place where Sarah Hayes lived).

Benoni Trembly (Tranbles) may have been a descendant of John Trembly, a Huguenot refugee, married Mary Noe, daughter of Peter Noe, about the year 1694. Peter Trembly is mentioned in or about Westfield, perhaps on the First Mountain. "A party of royal horse-thieves, under the command of the celebrated Lewis Robbins, made an incursion into Westfield." There found Peter Trembly, whom they seized and robbed of all his money and papers. "But at the sudden discharge of a gun they paroled their prisoner and fled."

Benoni Trembly lived on lot No. 61 of the Elizabethtown lots, south of Aaron M. Ludlow's house. He was a wagon-maker, was an elder in the New Providence Church (Summit had no church so early), and had four children:

1. Benjamin, baptized 19th June, 1763.
2. Jonathan, baptized 16th December, 1764.
3. Abraham, baptized 15th August, 1766.
4. Becca, baptized 14th October, 1770.

Little says, in his "Genealogy of Passaic Valley," "I have not learned from whence they came, nor who were his family connections."

He died October, 1788. He was an extensive fruit-grower, and Trembly pears are yet known for their fine flavor in this township.

Hyslip (Hislip). Andrew Hyslip came from Scotland and settled on the John Robison place. He was an extensive raiser of fine fruit, and some of the pears and crab-apples are still known as Hislips at the present time. Mr. Hyslip married Ann Matthews, from England, and had three children,—1, John; 2, Robert, killed at twelve years old, falling off a cart; 3, Ann, who married Alexander Keay, a Scotchman. He died Dec. 11, 1878, in his forty-third year. Andrew Hislip, died 24th January, 1869, in the seventy-second year; his wife, Ann, died 13th January, 1867, in her seventieth year.

William Littell, Esq., son of John and Mary Littell, was born 10th October, 1813, and married the 26th October, 1836, Mehetabel Bonnel, daughter of Jonathan C. Bonnel, and by this marriage they have four children,—1, William Henry, born 2d May, 1840; 2, Theodore, born 14th May, 1844; 3, Frederick; 4, Rose, born 12th April, 1847; and 5, Julia Smith, born 3d April, 1851.

The following interesting facts in the history of Mr. Littell's life we here give: In his early days his parents sent him to an academy, Rev. Mr. Van Kleef principal, at Basking Ridge, N. J., where he remained for some time, when he returned home, and for a time was clerk in his father's store, when at an early age, about 1830, he joined the New Providence Presbyterian Church, Rev. Thomas Cochrayon pastor. In the year 1836 he married Mehetabel Bonnel, and moved from New Providence to Summit as the pioneer in that rapidly improving township, and in 1838 he built his house, where he has resided since that time. He had a small frame store until the year 1867, when he built his present commodious brick store. In this location he has been engaged in business for over forty years, and not till within a short time has he relinquished the heavy duties of a store-keeper by taking his two sons in the business. Here by his efforts was the first post-office established, about the year 1869, which they have retained with excepting two years. He has served in many of the town offices. By his influence the beautiful Presbyterian Church was built in 1870, and he was made an elder. The ground was given by his wife and sisters, being parts of the Bonnel estate. In politics Mr. Littell has been prominent as a Republican all his life, using his means and time to advance the party's interests. In the Littell Hall, which is convenient for meetings, its doors have been thrown open for all the gatherings to advance the interests of the township. He laid out a fine avenue, which he has named Maple Avenue, some sixty feet in width, and in time will give a fine shade, as well as beautiful appearance to the town. When the Morris and Essex Railroad was being laid through this township in 1835, Mr. Littell gave them all the encouragement to further its progress. In his store was the first depot established, his men using teams to level and grade the rise below towards Huntly, and he mentions the fact that his man, Lewis Kutchel, in 1837, with two yoke of oxen, helped pull the engine and cars up this steep rise, and they succeeded in what the engine had not the power to do. These facts we have given as Mr. Littell has resided here since 1836, and has seen all these changes and improvements growing on around him until the place has become a considerable town with a number of stores and places of business. When he came here he was the first store-keeper, and for many years supplied the needs and wants of the township.

Mr. William Littell is of fine personal appearance, of a countenance expressive of high intelligence. He is interesting in the facts of the past history, remembering dates and minor details. He is a most agreeable companion for persons of all ages. He is fond of home, fond of retirement, and is greatly beloved by his neighbors, and has done many acts of kindness. He is always cheerful, and has a happy greeting for every one.

Civil Organization.—An act to create a new township in the county of Union, to be called the township of Summit, was passed on the 17th day of March, 1869. And the people of this new township are very greatly indebted to Augustus J. Thebaud for his untiring efforts, which were crowned with success by the passage of the act by an almost unanimous vote.

At a meeting held in Littell's Hall, Summit, April 12, 1879, the board organized by appointing William Littell presiding judge, and David W. Bonnel clerk of the election. The whole number of names on poll-book is one hundred and thirty-five (135). The following were the first officers elected in this new township for the ensuing year: Judge of Election, Jesse F. Pitts; Assessor, Jonathan Bonnel; Collector, Benjamin S. Dean; Town Clerk, Alfred Albertson; Chosen Freeholder, Augustus J. Thebaud; Town Committee, John H. Allen, James C. Pitts, Daniel H. Day; Superintendent of Schools, John W. Kramer; Commissioners of Appeals, James S. Sandford, William C. Hicks, Willoughby Powell; Surveyors of Highways, Albert Pierson, David O. Magie; Overseer of Poor, Edward Topping refused to serve, John Kelly was appointed; Justice of the Peace, Thomas McKirgan; Constable, Edward Topping refused to serve, and John P. Eckel was appointed; Pound-Keepers, Alexander Keay, J. Edgar Sayre, Charles Sherwood, John Kelley; Overseers of Roads, John H. Allen, William H. Briant.

The following officers have served in this township:

JUDGES OF ELECTIONS.

William Littell, 1870-73, 1876-78.	Alexander A. Taylor, 1876-81.
E. W. Day, 1874-75.	James M. Woodruff, 1879-80.
Daniel W. Day, 1873-74.	J. H. Pleasant, 1881.
William H. Briant, 1875.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

Augustus J. Thebaud, 1869-75.	William H. Briant, 1877-79.
Lewis McKirgan, 1876.	William H. Briant, 1880-81.

TOWN CLERKS.

Alfred Albertson, 1869-75.	Alexander A. Taylor, 1876-81.
----------------------------	-------------------------------

JUSTICES OF PEACE.

Thomas McKirgan, 1869-70.	John Dean, 1876.
William H. Briant, 1871.	William G. Marsh, 1877.
David M. Smythe, 1881.	George M. Tingley, 1875.
James S. Sandford, 1873, 1881.	James S. Sandford, 1879.
Archibald Gracie, 1878-80.	D. M. Smith, 1880-81.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

John H. Allen, 1869-70.	Wilmot M. Chapman, 1875-76.
James C. Pitts, 1869-71, 1875, 1877.	J. Daggot Hunt, 1875.
Daniel W. Day, 1869-71, 1876.	Joshua Young, 1876.
James M. Woodruff, 1871.	William M. Chapin, 1877.
Jonathan Edgar, 1873-75, 1878.	A. N. Martin, 1877, 1880.
Willoughby Powell, 1872-74.	George H. Nicholas, 1878, 1880-81.
William Z. Larned, 1872-74, 1877-78.	William H. Dumont, 1878-79.
Eugene Devoe, 1873.	J. E. Sayre, 1878.
Alexander Robertson, 1873.	Lewis McKirgan, 1879.
James S. Sandford, 1874-75.	S. H. Congar, 1879.
George M. Tingley, 1874, 1876.	David M. Smythe, 1879, 1881.
	George Manley, 1880-81.

ASSESSORS.

Jonathan Bonnell, 1869-75.	James M. Woodruff, 1876.
Benjamin S. Dean, 1877.	David M. Smythe, 1878-81.

RESIDENCE OF J. E. DOYNE,
SUMMIT, N. J.

COLLECTORS.

Benjamin S. Dean, 1869-76.
S. H. Coggar, 1877.
Daniel H. Day, 1878.

John B. Walsh, 1879.
Edward B. Kelley, 1880-81.

INSPECTORS OF ELECTIONS.

P. H. Vernoe, 1877.
J. W. Foster, 1877.
W. N. Benjamin, 1878.
David W. Bonnel, 1878.

George Cassidy, 1879-81.
W. G. Marsh, 1879.
Samuel Houston, 1880-81.

COMMISSIONERS OF APPEALS.

James S. Sanford, 1870-73, 1878.
William C. Hicks, 1870-72.
Theodore F. Littell, 1873-76.
William H. Briant, 1873.
George W. Nicholas, 1874-77, 1879.
Jacob F. Badgley, 1874-76.
J. N. Devoe, 1877.
J. M. Woodruff, 1878.

James Good, 1878-79, 1881.
William H. and, 1879-80.
George W. Campbell, Jr., 1880.
John Rooney, 1881.
J. E. Dohman, 1881.
Charles P. Edwards, 1872.
William Delancy, 1872.
Willoughby Powell, 1870.

Villages and Hamlets.—SUMMIT.—The town of Summit includes the whole of the centre and main road called Springfield Avenue, leading from the village of New Providence. The outskirts are surrounded with fine country-seats, the home of retired as well as business men from the adjacent cities of Newark and New York. Here can be seen fine villas, parks well laid out, and grounds with well-built mansions, while many extensive hotels and resorts for boarders are handy for the many trains which go from its depots upon the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad, as well as the Passaic and Delaware Railroad depot at West Summit. It is a flourishing, picturesque town on the top of the Orange range of mountains, being well supplied with churches,—Protestant Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic,—and with well-conducted schools. The Park Hotel, where a large number of guests find a home; the grounds, kept in excellent order, give it with the interior an air of comfort.

WEST SUMMIT is on the extreme border of the township; has many fine residences and well-cultivated farms. The depot of the Passaic and Delaware River Railroad is here convenient for all needed bandy transit. The roads are kept in excellent order. The Baptist Church is here located, stores, etc.

EAST SUMMIT, or Deantown, originally called from settlement of families by name of Dean, is to the extreme eastern border of the township. District school No. 20 is here located; also the hub-factory of Hontem & Bro. This part of the township is growing rapidly, with neat, comfortable homes. Good roads are also found here, as well as nearly in the whole of the township.

HUNTLY is a small hamlet, having a mill, and is included in East Summit boundary.

Business Houses.—Real estate, Archibald Gracie. Printing, Lorenzo H. Abbey (Herald office). Stoves and tinware, T. W. Overpeck. Upholsterer, James H. Green. Plumbing, Thomas Ryan.

Plumbing, J. Munssinger.
Painters, Kelly, Chamberlain & Jones.
Mason and builder, David O'Rourke.
Livery stables, James Henry Martin.
Kindling wood, at Hub and Kindling Wood Co., Houstens Brothers.

Hotel, "Union," kept by James H. Donnelly.
Groceries, Edward B. Kelly.
" Wm. Littell & Sons.
" John Rooney.
" D. R. Valentine.

Feed and grain, A. R. Randolph.
Cabinet-maker, James Long.
Carriage- and wagon-works, H. J. Holmes.
Boots and shoes, M. Murphy.
Ale, Walsh, Union Avenue.
Barber, Fred. Badelt.
Carpenter, C. R. Brown.
Oyster and ale house, P. B. Caviston.
Lumber and coal, E. A. Day and D. W. Day & Son.
Livery, W. H. Delany.
News agent, G. H. Dietrich.
Dry-goods, J. H. Donnelly.
" Dowd & Butler.
Blacksmith, C. Farrell.
Express agent, J. W. Halsey.
Carpenter, Hughes & Pheasant.
Livery, P. Kelley.
Hotel, M. Kinney.
Architects, H. Lamb & Co.
Postmaster, Theodore F. Littell.
Horse-shoeing, etc., M. Martin.
Groceries, M. C. McBurney.
Hotel, D. Morrissey.
Livery, O. Mahoney.
Park House, James Riera.
Boots and shoes, J. H. Smith.
Baker, S. O. Smith.
Blackburn House, Mrs. M. S. Tatem.
Drugs, etc., A. A. Taylor.

Summit Library Association.—Among many enterprises for the benefit of the town of Summit is a fine library, numbering 1038 volumes. This association was organized Jan. 10, 1874, and with the following officers: W. Z. Larned, president; Olive Boughton, vice-president; Archibald Gracie, secretary and treasurer. Jonathan Bonnel, Sarah F. Gracie, Olive Boughton, P. V. R. Van Wyck, W. Z. Larned, Eliza P. Sanford, and Caroline A. Hicks are the directors. They have published in neat pamphlet form some twenty-six articles of by-laws, and the Summit Library is in a prosperous condition, having conveniences for their volumes and reading-room in the new brick academy on Springfield Avenue, convenient to the residents of the Summit. We are told that they are in a prosperous condition, and adding to their library many valuable volumes.

Railroads.—The Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad passes nearly through the centre of the township, having three stations, Summit, New Providence, and Huntly.

Summit Post-Office.—It was through the instrumentality of William Little, Esq., in 1840, who opened a store in the Summit nearly opposite the depot, that a post-office was granted them in that year. He has held the position since that time, excepting of four years, when John and Daniel H. Noe were appointed. His two sons now are engaged with him in business, and Theodore F. Little postmaster, and Mr. William Little is acting as assistant postmaster.

Schools.—This township has (1881) within its bounds two school districts, Nos. 19 and 20, and the following teachers have supplied them since the township was organized in 1869: Emily Weeks, Arthur Bailly, H. M. Bachlier, J. V. D. Green, T. T. Collard, E. H. Schuyler, who is the principal of No. 19. At the present time Miss M. Ella Tappen, Cora B. Smaller, J. W. Fort; and the School District No. 20, Mr. Wheat and Wesley V. Woodruff, who is the present principal.

The amount raised for the year 1880 in support of School District No. 19 was the sum of $5559.40, and for School District No. 20 the sum of $1090.45. This included the State appropriation of $1575.78.

The fine school building, built of brick in the year 1875, has many desirable improvements that are adapted to the large public school buildings in the city. The location is central and on a fine avenue, convenient for all the children of the township. The whole cost was $13,500.

The district school clerk, Mr. Alex. A. Taylor, at Summit, No. 19, reports 297 children, and the district school clerk, J. C. Kellington, No. 20, at East Summit, reports 170 children in the district.

Burial-Ground.—There are no cemeteries in the township; most of the interments are taken to New Providence or Springfield. We find two private plots, one belonging to the descendants of Isaac Sayre, on the Baltus Roll road leading to Westfield, the other on the farm of late Brooks Vreeland, now occupied by Mr. Delaney, at Briant's Mill, now called Huntly, but they are seldom used at the present time. There is said to have been an Indian burial-ground near the Passaic River, but all traces of the locality have long disappeared.

Historic Incidents.—During the memorable battle of Springfield, just below the First Mountain, in 1780, many of the Continental army made their quarters in this valley. Here they could have a good view of the approach of the enemy under the command of Gen. Howe, with his six thousand regulars, and Col. Dayton's detachment lay near Westfield, while scouts or runners, as they were called, lined the summit, bringing messages from Gen. Washington, who was just back a few miles, encamped with the American army near Morristown, some eight miles. Isaac Sayre's home was the resort of many of these weary, footsore scouts; there they found a welcome. His wife, Elizabeth, it is said, could not do too much for them. She died the 26th September, 1850, in her ninety-second year, after being a long time a widow, and to her last day she recounted the fact that she had entertained Gen. George Washington, had fed him and encouraged his men as they came to her mountain home, never turning them empty away. The old homestead is still standing on the road corner, where the Old Red School-house stood going towards Deanstown. Here, it is said, the first tavern was kept by Brooks Sayre, son of Isaac Sayre, and father of the present Brooks Sayre. There was also kept a house for the entertainment of man and beast by one Isaac Potter about the year 1833.

Newspaper.—There is published the Summit Herald by Lorenzo H. Abbey, of Madison, N. J., who is the editor and proprietor. It was started the 22d of July, 1881. The subscription price is one dollar a year. A neat six-column paper and ably handled, and in its growth will be an impetus to the growth of the Summit interests.

Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church.—In the year 1840 a few families of the Protestant Episcopal Church had settled upon the Summit, and desiring to have services regularly upon the Sabbath, as the nearest church for them to attend was at Millburn, or Madison, a distance of some miles, when it was decided to have the rector of St. Stephen's Church to come occasionally to supply, and with others, when a mission was formed with some sixteen communicants, and a small building was erected upon land given by William Littell, Esq., of Summit.

In the year 1843, Dr. R. Riley became their regular pastor, and remained until Rev. Mr. Kramer came, in 1849, and since then Revs. Mr. Reese and Depui supplied this mission until the fall of 1871, when it was decided to build a larger building on lots given by the late Jonathan Edgar, in 1872, on the corner of Kuttuck Place and Springfield Avenue, and in the spring of that year ground was broken to build the New Calvary, forty by seventy feet, of stone, which was completed in the fall, the edifice resembling the old English style of architecture, many beautiful conglomerates and other native stones being selected for its erection. Their former mission church was taken down in the year 1872. This parish was duly organized in the year 1862. The Rev. J. F. Butterworth is the present rector, and came from St. Mark's Church, Jersey City, the 23d of February, 1875, and resides in the rectory belonging to the parish. The number of sittings, 240; number of communicants, 128; Sabbath-school scholars, 70. Superintendent, Rev. J. F. Butterworth.

St. Teresa's Roman Catholic Church.—Upon a hill that commands the view of the beautiful country all around the Summit is erected a neat little church, built of stone in English Gothic style, and dedicated to St. Teresa. The growth of fine shade-trees cover the ground and give it the appearance of PROPERTY OF GEO. W.

SHOWING NEW ENGLAND AVENUE AND BY HIM AND BY PART

ALLEN, SUMMIT, N. J.

PROVEMENTS, WITH HOUSES ERECTED BY PURCHASING LOTS.

a park, containing also a residence for the pastor and a commodious house for the Sisters of Charity teaching by the parochial school.

Previous to the year 1862 the few Catholics of Summit were obliged to go to Springfield or to Madison to attend church, a distance of several miles, but about the year 1862 it was decided to build a church for the Catholic people. This step was taken through the efforts of Mr. Maller, a good and pious man, with his son-in-law, Mr. A. Thebaud, and a few others interested. The pastor of St. Vincent's Church at Madison undertook the task of building the church. The families of Maller, Thebaud, Riera, of Summit, and Coughlan, of Whippany, were the principal benefactors, and memorial windows were placed in the church to commemorate their charity. At this time the Catholics of Summit were less than one hundred. The church was blessed by the Right Rev. Bishop James R. Bailey, and for many years was attended once or twice a month from Madison, principally by the Rev. Fathers Madden, Darcey, Wigger, and Smith. In the year 1874 it was made a parish, and the Rev. W. M. Wigger, D.D., Bishop of Newark, was appointed first pastor by the Right Rev. Bishop Corrigan. During his pastorate a pastoral residence and a school were erected for the year 1876, and the Rev. G. A. Vassallo was placed in charge of the parish. During his pastorate he brought the Sisters of Charity from Madison Convent to take charge of the parochial school, and built a beautiful house on the Queen Anne style for the Sisters' residence and for a select school.

The grounds have been tastefully embellished. Under Rev. Mr. Vassallo's care the congregation is in a progressing condition, though small in number, counting only eighty families. Through the zeal and efforts of the pastor and the good will of the people the parish is growing. The school is attended by over one hundred children, who, under careful training in their duties towards God and society, are striving to become useful citizens.

Presbyterian Church.—This church has but little history, having been organized only since 1870, when a few who were interested met in Littell's Hall, and twenty members were enrolled from the church at New Providence. D. H. Cooley and William Littell were chosen as elders. In 1871 the Rev. J. De Hart Bruen was installed as the first pastor. In the year 1872 the new church building was completed and dedicated. In 1879 the Rev. J. H. McIlvaine was installed as pastor, Mr. Bruen having gone to Clayton, N. J. During the present year a chapel has been erected for the use of the Sunday-school. The parsonage was built in 1876. The church cost about $16,000, the parsonage $6000, the chapel $6500. The whole property with furniture has cost not less than $34,000. The membership has increased to one hundred and seventy-five, and the Sunday-school to about one hundred and twenty-five. During the past ten years the congregation has contributed for all religious purposes over $43,000, and over $5000 has gone directly to the mission board of the Presbyterian Church. Two hundred and sixty members have been received during that time. The church is at present connected with the Presbytery of Elizabeth, and has been from the first. The following is a list of the elders, with the date of their election: Dwight H. Cooley, William Little, 1870; P. H. Vernon, J. E. Sergeant, 1873; H. G. Simmons, Frank H. Dodd, Augustus F. Libby, 1880.

Baptist Church.—A few members of this church feeling a desire that there should be organized in Summit a Baptist society, when, about the year 1876, the Presbyterians decided to vacate a building where they had had occasional services and also a Sabbath-school for a few years, and having built their new Presbyterian Church in the Summit proper, they offered this building, which they were about to vacate, to the few Baptists, which was accepted at a cost of $6000, having seating capacity of 250. This new society was organized March 17, 1876. It is pleasantly situated on the road from New Providence to Summit and in a growing neighborhood, no other religious society being in the immediate or near by. The present membership is 30. The former pastors have been Rev. A. B. Woodworth, William Lawrence, and the present pastor, Rev. Gulien Gardard Noe, who is doing excellent service for this feeble church.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The Summit Methodist Episcopal Church was organized on the 17th of July, 1867. The first board of trustees was composed of the following gentlemen, to wit: Benjamin S. Dean, John Denman, and William B. Coggeshall, of the Springfield charge, Rev. G. H. Winans, pastor, and, being present, presided over the meeting, and Daniel W. Day and James Pitts, of New Providence charge, J. W. Young being pastor. The church is situated on the corner of Morris and Summit Avenues. The ground on which the church and parsonage are erected was donated to the society by Mrs. Mary Sayre. The corner-stone of the church was laid on the 11th of September, 1867, by Rev. James Ayres, presiding elder of the Newark District, and an address was delivered by the Rev. R. L. Dashiell, D.D., then of Orange.

The society was constituted a station by the presiding elder Feb. 23, 1868, and the first Quarterly Conference was held at the house of Daniel W. Day, of Summit, and the following board of stewards were chosen: D. W. Day, William R. Gray, M.D., John Denman, Jr., and Benjamin S. Dean.

From the organization of the society until the Conference of 1869, held in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, Newark, the pulpit was supplied respectively by Henry Graham, a local preacher at Drew Theological Seminary, S. M. Vernon, and Rev. J. O. Winans of the Newark Conference. At this Conference Rev. R. B. Collins was stationed here as the first settled pastor. The following are the subsequent pastors: 1870-71, Rev. W. S. Galloway; 1872, Rev. W. W. Voorhees; 1873-74, Rev. James Boyd Brady; 1875-77, Rev. Charles S. Winans; 1878-79, Rev. Michael E. Ellison; 1880-81, Thomas H. Jacobus, the present pastor.

In 1875 a beautiful parsonage was erected adjoining the church. The present official board is composed of the following persons: Trustees, D. W. Day, Joshua Youngs, John Denman, Stephen Mullen, and George R. Gibson; stewards, viz.: D. W. Day, John Kelley, Charles S. Day, Seamen Wright, Theodore W. Overpeck, John Denman, S. Mullen, Charles F. Wood, and George R. Gibson.

Sittings, 275; communicants, 80; Sabbath-school scholars, 65. The church is located on a fine avenue and is in a prosperous condition.

CHAPTER LIV.

LINDEN TOWNSHIP.

Description.—In February, 1861, that portion of the borough of Elizabethtown that lay beyond a northwest line from the mouth of Morse's Creek to Galloping Hill road (measuring 2853 acres) was set off to form the township of Linden with the following boundaries: "Beginning at a point on the northerly side of Staten Island Sound, at the intersection of the line between the city of Elizabeth and the township of Rahway, running thence northerly in a direct line to a point on the highway leading from the city of Elizabeth to Westfield opposite the Galloping Hill road, thence westerly along said highway leading from the city of Elizabeth to Westfield to its intersection with the Central Railroad of New Jersey, thence still westerly along said railroad to Rahway River, thence southerly along the said Rahway River to the centre of the bridge crossing the same at Vreeland's Mill, thence still southerly in a straight line to the northeasterly corner of the city of Rahway, thence along the easterly line of the city of Rahway to its intersection with the Rahway River, thence easterly along the said river to Staten Island Sound, and thence along said Sound to the point or place of beginning."

Natural Features.—Formerly this township comprised one of the finest farming sections in the county. But within a few years many of these farms have been made smaller, and more attention has been paid to the raising of garden produce, fruits and berries, there being abundant demand and ready market for these in the adjacent cities. The surface of the township is undulating, and lies convenient for the laying out roads. It slopes gently towards the northwest. The soil is a clay loam, with here and there a sandy loam. The salt meadows on the Staten Island Sound (Kill von Kull) lie in the easterly portion of the township. There are no streams of any note, but an abundance of excellent water is obtained from wells. The Central Railroad of New Jersey has a station at Roselle, and the Pennsylvania Railroad at Linden; the station on the Long Branch road at Trembly is in this township. There are many advantages afforded by a country residence in this township to those doing business in New York, the city being within forty minutes' ride. It is fast becoming a desirable locality for families on account of churches, schools, etc. Roselle and Linden are thriving villages rapidly attracting a desirable population.

Early Settlements.—This township was first settled in common with Elizabethtown, of which it originally formed a part. Among the first who came was Stephen Crane, who was from Connecticut, and was probably nearly related to Jasper Crane, who settled in Newark. The family is quite ancient and honorable. Ralph Craue accompanied Sir Francis Drake to America in 1577, and Robert Crane was of the first company that came to Massachusetts Bay in 1630. It is said that Sir Robert Crane was of Essex County, England, in 1630, and Sir Richard in 1643, of Wood Riding, or Rising, in Norfolk, England. Henry and Benjamin Crane were of Wethersfield, Conn., at an early day, and the former removed thence to Guilford. Stephen was born not later than 1640, and married as early as 1663. He owned some one hundred and fifty-six acres of land on the borders of Union and Linden townships, parts being in each; also a house-lot of six acres, bounded southeast by Samuel Trotter, northwest by Crane's Brook, east by the Mill Creek (now Elizabeth River), and west by the highway. He had also sixty acres between two swamps and adjoining William Cramer, also seventy-two acres on Crane's Brook, bounded by the brook, William Cramer, Richard Beach, Nathaniel Tuttle, and William Cardon; also eighteen acres of meadow "towards Rawack Point." The old homestead of the Cranes is still standing, just over the line of this township. The well by the side of the road and a large oak-tree, said to have been one of the original forest-trees, is still standing. "It has long been known as the Oak-Tree Well," and where cattle and horses have been watered on the highway for more than a century. Mr. Crane died in the year 1700.

John Hinds and William Johnson came here at an early date; they owned lands here. It is also recorded that William Meeker (frequently "Meaker") owned land here. "He was appointed Oct. 7, 1667, to be loader to mill for a 12 month, to goe in all seasons except unreasonable weather." He was probably connected with the grist-mill on Mill Creek in 1669. The old homestead of the Meekers is still standing in Cranford township. He was town constable in 1711. Joseph, his son, kept a country store, and Benjamin was a carpenter, while both were "planters." The father died in December, 1690. Part of the family lived near Scotch Plains.

The family of Mosse (Morss, Morse) came at an early date. Robert, with his son Peter, were from Massachusetts. He had a large family, and carried on the trade of "tailor" as well as planter. He owned some four hundred acres in different townships, and perhaps about sixty acres in this township. One of his sons was a surveyor. He gave, Sept. 26, 1681, a tract of land on the Elizabethtown Creek to his son-in-law, William Broadwell. In one account it says "he disposed of it," instead of giving. The homestead was on "Thompson's Creek" (more generally of late called "Morse's Creek"), long the boundary between Rahway and Elizabeth. Peter died in May, 1702.

Nathaniel Norton was from the east end of Long Island, but though admitted one of the eighty Associates was induced after a short sojourn to return to the island. He owned lands here on the border of Elizabeth and this township. He sold his lands to Henry Morris, or Norris, and removed to Brookhaven, where he was living in 1685.

The family of Norris have owned a large number of acres on the borders of this township, but have been more identified with Elizabeth. William Oliver came at an early date and "possessed" the "plantation" by Jeffry Jones, Caleb Carwithy, eighty-four acres of upland, the meadows ("salt mash") now near the town of Linden, parts being in "Rahwack" proper. The families of Trembley and also Osborne had land here at an early date. Humphrey Spinage (also Spinning), Capt. John Baker, Charles Tucker (also Tooker) owned lands at an early day in the northeasterly part of this township (partly in Elizabeth Town and Union township), amounting to some four hundred acres.

Ephraim Terrill also lived in this township. He was one of the borough or deputy mayors in the same year that Stephen Crane was mayor of the borough of Elizabeth, 1774. Thomas Terrill, his grandfather, was a blacksmith, and came here from Southold, L. I., where in 1675 he had a considerable estate. He probably was the son of Roger Terrill (Tyrrel), one of the founders of Milford, Conn., in 1639. He bought of William Cramer, Aug. 19, 1696, a plot of land in this town, to which he then or soon after removed. He died in 1725. The names of John, Josiah, Roger, and Thomas are also mentioned.

William Cramer came in 1665. He is one of those who took an oath of "allegiance and fidelity," 19th of February, 1665. He was a carpenter from Southold, L. I., where he married Elizabeth, the sister of Caleb Carwithy. He was appointed April 27, 1670, an Associate as well as constable of the town in place of William Pilles. He owned a large estate.

Joseph Halsey lived near Wheat-Sheaf tavern, between Rahway and Elizabethtown, this township. He came at an early date from Southampton, L. I. He was a son of Isaac and grandson of Thomas, who was at Lynn, Mass., in 1637, and was the wealthiest founder of Southampton in 1640. Joseph was born about 1668, and bred a weaver. He was here in 1694. He purchased of Derick, the son of Capt. John Baker "all the divisions accruing to a second Lot Right in Elizabeth Town." He was one of the memorialists, and one of the Associates in 1700. He married Elizabeth Haines, sister of Richard Valentine's wife. They had eleven children,—(1) Sarah, (2) Abigail, (3) Rebecca, (4) Joseph, (5) Hannah, (6) Phebe, (7) Daniel, (8) Isaac, (9) Rachel, (10) Deborah, (11) Nancy. The family are quite extensive throughout the township. Joseph Halsey died April, 1725, in his fifty-seventh year, beloved and respected by his neighbors.

William Garthwait owned lands in Union and Cranford, and probably Linden township. He was born 1677, in England, married in 1702 Ann, the daughter of Maximilian Lawlon, of France. He came here as early as 1703. His son Henry was born here. He had a large family. Some of his lands are still in the family. He died Dec. 11, 1738, leaving at least two sons, Henry and James.

The names of Joseph Frazee, Daniel, Edward, Jonas, and Meeker Wood, John Roll (and sometimes Rolph in the records), Wynans (Winans), Peter, Robert, John, Joseph, Anthony Morse (Mosse), John Backer (Baker), John Stiles (Styles), Halsey, and Magie are names among the first settlers in this township.

Joseph Clark, Ferdinand Blancke, Joseph Rocchetti, Benjamin Tucker, S. G. Stinson came at a much later date. The names of Rodgers (Rogers), Price, Riker, Pearson, Ackerley, Adams, Kiplan, Allen, Burnett, Collins, Cook, Ford, Dunham, Davis, Haines, Hand, Suttan, Jones, Swain, Noe, Magie, Smith, Ward, York, Brown, Williams are familiar family names in Linden township.

Civil List.

TOWN CLERKS.

Sebastian Mosqueron, 1861; appointed, new township.	William A. Mulford, Jr., 1869-70.
Edgar P. York, 1861; elected 1862.	John K. Mulford, 1871-72.
Sanford Clark, 1863-64.	William T. Clark, 1873.
Ralph J. Vandervoort, 1865.	John R. Clark, 1874-75.
John K. Roll, 1866-67.	John B. Ross, 1876-78.
Joseph James, 1868.	George W. Baker, 1879-80.
	William D. Frazee, 1881.

COLLECTORS.

Ralph J. Vandervoort, 1861-62.	Alfred Winans, 1867-68.
Joseph R. Goodell, 1863.	Joseph James, 1869-78.
Jeremiah M. Morris, 1864.	Jeremiah Richards, 1879.
William Ross, 1865-66.	William A. Mulford, 1880-81.

ASSESSORS.

John W. Mulford, 1861-63.	John A. Etheridge, 1878-81.
William A. Mulford, 1865-77.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

John W. Mulford, 1861-64.	Edward P. Winans, 1869-72.
William A. Mulford, 1865, 1867, 1872-74, 1879-81.	Anthony Morse, 1871-74.
Edgar P. York, 1862-65.	John C. Rose, 1872-76.
John T. Winans, 1864-67.	H. W. Gesner, 1880-81.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

David Mulford, 1861, 1864-68.
Caleb Roylston, 1861-63.
Anthony Morse, 1862.
Elias W. Vreeland, 1862-63.
Meeker Wood, 1864.

John C. Rose, 1865, 1870-76.
David C. Stiles, 1865.
William Ross, 1867-69.
John K. Roll, 1877-80.
Edward S. E. Newberry, 1881.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

Anthony Morse, 1861, 1866, 1868, 1871-72.
George W. Roll, 1861, 1863-68.
William Ross, 1861, 1870-71, 1874-76, 1878-79.
Thomas Baker, 1861, 1863.
William A. Mulford, 1861-62.
William H. Winsor, 1862.
Jeremiah M. Morris, 1862.
Henry Flasche, 1862-64.
Benjamin W. Tucker, 1862, 1872-73.

John Moody, 1863-64.
William M. Deutsch, 1863.
Alfred Winans, 1864.
David C. Stiles, 1864-70.
Joseph M. Clark, 1865.
Alpheus D. Gibbons, 1865, 1867-68.
Elias W. Vreeland, 1865.
Job Winans, 1866-69.
John Carpenter, 1866.
Alonzo W. Richards, 1866.
Edward P. Winans, 1867, 1869-70.
Meeker Wood, 1867.
Ferdinand Blancke, 1868, 1881.
Benjamin F. Spining, 1869-70.
J. Hampton Eddy, 1869.

Jonas H. Eddy, 1870.
J. H. Eddy, 1871-73, 1876-77.
Frank B. Munsell, 1869-71.
Cornelius C. Banta, 1870-73.
John D. Marshall, 1870.
M. O. Winans, 1871-74.
George W. Maxior, 1871-72.
J. P. Hallett, 1871-72, 1874-77, 1881.
J. H. Mulford, 1872-73.
Reuben Van Pelt, 1873.
John Chilver, 1873.
Abraham Shotwell, 1873-74, 1878-81.

R. Van Pelt, 1874.
David Mulford, 1874-81.
John N. Meeker, 1875-81.
Nathan Morse, 1874-77.
Job M. Winans, 1874-81.
Harry W. Simmons, 1875-76.
John K. Roll, 1875-76.
Robert Hindall, 1877-81.
Charles Gulager, 1877-78.
William H. Hood, 1879-80.
Elisha J. Peck, 1879-80.
Isaac C. Roll, 1879-80.
William L. Roll, 1881.

Schools.—This township contains three school districts. Says Mr. N. W. Pease, county superintendent,—

"While part of the borough of Elizabeth, schools were maintained continually from an early date. The first school-house was built in 1750. It stood in the limits of what is now District No. 1, nearly opposite the Wheat-Sheaf Hotel, on the south side of King George's highway or Rahway Avenue. It was a wooden structure, sixteen by twenty feet, the ceiling being seven feet high. In the old days a box-stove stood in the centre of the room, a hole being cut in the ceiling for the passage of the pipe, which carried off a portion of the smoke. This stove is said to have been a fearful wood-burner, and was a constant terror to the evil-doers in that 'old Academy,' as the favorite punishment for the unruly was to require them to cut the wood; and it is intimated that the hardihood and full muscular development of the descendants of those sires is attributable, in part at least, to that wholesome exercise. The early teachers were Messrs. Cotton, Nisbet, Garrahan, Quinlan, Foote, Dooley, Halsey, Terrill, Blackman, and Pierson. Mrs. Dooley also taught the school for a time, and it is related of her that whenever corporal punishment was administered she was accustomed to put her baby in the desk."

Mr. Cotton, the first teacher, taught there nearly forty years. This school-house was occupied till 1820, when a new building was erected about twenty rods north of the hotel in the present limits of District No. 4. The old school-house being of tough fibre was moved to Roselle, and is now used as a kitchen to the residence of Wedon Williams, Esq. Thus this ancient structure, with the identical cedar weather-boards with which it was originally inclosed, still does excellent service.

In the year 1837 a new school-house was built on the south side of the Shunpike, near the residence of Benjamin Tucker. This was occupied until the year 1871, when the present model school-house was erected at a cost of about $18,000.

The first school known to have been held in District No. 2 was near the residence of S. O. Roll. The building was erected in 1786, and was occupied till 1825. The name of the first teacher was Samuel Vanderhoven. Mr. Russell Sargent, Robert Dennis, and Jesse Clark were subsequently employed. In 1825 a new house was built near the residence of Hampton Eddy. In 1870 this in turn gave place to the present neat and convenient structure, which cost about $2000.

In District No. 4 the school-house standing a few rods north of the Wheat-Sheaf Hotel, built in 1820, was used for school purposes till the year 1871, when the present elegant structure was erected on Chestnut Avenue, South Roselle. Among the teachers employed at the first school was Mr. A. A. Ward.

The statistics of the schools for 1881 are as follows:

District No. 1.—Number enrolled, 188; attendance, 87. Trustees, William H. Hood, A. R. Corbett (district clerk), and A. Cole. Teachers, F. W. Fort, principal; Misses L. J. Conklin, L. Shamp.

District No. 2.—Number enrolled, 45; attendance, 10. Trustees, A. A. Hanland (district clerk), J. C. Roll, W. S. Roll.

District No. 4.—Number enrolled, 200; attendance, 70. Trustees, Rev. J. A. Blauvelt (district clerk), D. W. Berdan, Richard Kipling. Teachers, Miss J. Patten, principal; L. Disbrow, and J. D. Miller.

In District No. 1, Miss Silver taught in 1872-74; Mr. N. W. Pease, 1875-77; Mr. Knoll, 1878, preceding the present principal, Mr. F. W. Fort. The school is a first-class graded school.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—For a number of years the Methodist families residing in this part of the township attended the church at Rahway, but occasionally had the Methodist clergyman at Rahway and Elizabeth visit their neighborhood school-house on a Sabbath afternoon. In the year 1874 application was made to the presiding elder for a supply, when Linden was united to the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Rahway, and Rev. H. D. Opdyke supplied them. The following year, 1875, Rev. Alexander Craig, with the help of some students from the Drew Theological Seminary, held regular services. Arrangements were made to secure a suitable building, when it was found that the school-house could be purchased, which was accordingly done, and neatly repaired, seated, and supplied with pulpit. A Sunday-school was soon organized, and in the year 1878 a church of nine members was formed, to be supplied by the elder of the district, Rev. G. B. Smyth, who became the regular pastor in 1879-81. Value of property, $2600; sittings, 120; membership, 24.

Job Winans

Grace Church of Linden (Protestant Episcopal) was organized in 1875 by a few residents in the immediate neighborhood. They had formerly attended services at Rahway and Roselle. They have built a neat Gothic structure east of the station, and on an eligible lot of ground. They have no regular rector, but are supplied by the neighboring churches. Rev. H. H. Cole and Rev. J. Augustus Dix, of Elizabeth, have given their services. Value, $4500; sittings, 175; families, 16.

Reformed Church.—This edifice was built in the year 1871, on corner of Henry Street and Wood Avenue, one of the finest locations in this part of the township. It was the first church built in this neighborhood, is capable of holding some 400 persons, and cost $18,000. The present pastor, Rev. Oscar Gesner, D.D., has been the pastor, with exception of a few months, since it was organized. He was installed in the spring of 1871. A few months in 1870 they worshipped in the school-house, and soon application was made to the Newark Classis to receive this young charge. Their present membership is 55. They have also a flourishing Sabbath-school.

Elders, Peter H. Brink, Samuel Ainsworth, and William H. Hallack.

Deacons, Philetus Smith, Jr., Joshua Rose, and George W. Baker.

St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church.—Services of the Episcopal Church had occasionally been given at a private residence in Roselle by clergymen from Elizabeth City, but no clergyman had undertaken to form a parish until 1870, when Rev. H. B. S. Martin came to the aid of a few members who had removed from New York, and were desirous to have a church where they could attend without going to a distance. In the summer of that year ground was broken upon Fourth Avenue, which had been but lately opened in this beautiful growing hamlet. The parish was incorporated by the name of the rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Luke's in Roselle.

It stands upon the highest elevation in this township, and is built in the style of the old English architecture at a cost of about seven thousand dollars. The following have been the rectors: Rev. H. B. S. Martin, 1870; Rev. J. A. Denniston, 1872; Rev. De Witt C. Byllesley, 1876; and the present pastor, Rev. Robert Scott, D.D., came Nov. 29, 1879.

Wardens, Richard Kipling, senior warden; John J. Howe, junior, 1881. Vestrymen, H. O. Baldwin, Richard A. Kipling, Richard H. Jackson, A. W. Patterson, J. H. Cocks, M. F. Moore, B. Forgate, Jr., 1881. Sittings, 300; communicants, 70.

Presbyterian Church.—A few Presbyterians residing in this township had held occasional services at the old Wheat-Sheaf school-house for many years prior to the adoption of a plan for the erection of a house of worship in the village in 1867. This building was erected on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Chestnut Streets, at a cost of nine thousand dollars, and was dedicated June 12, 1868. It has a seating capacity of two hundred and eighty. Rev. C. A. Briggs was invited to become pastor June, 1870, remaining until March, 1874, when he resigned and became connected as professor with the Union Theological Seminary, University Place, New York. Rev. J. Alstyne Blauvelt received a call to the church, which he accepted in May, 1874. Present membership, 135.

The official members: Elders, A. D. Hope, T. R. White, G. Beckwith, and E. Quackenbush; Deacons, A. Atkins and C. D. Miller.

Baptist Church, Roselle.—A few members of the Baptist Church having removed to this village felt the necessity of religious services, and at first meetings were held in the school-house as well as in the private houses of the members. They first broke ground for their church in 1871, and the following year erected a neat building on Main Street at a cost of some eight thousand dollars. Largely through the instrumentality of the late R. M. Crane this church was organized. They had a number of supplies up to the fall of 1877, when the Rev. R. F. Michael was settled among them. In 1880, Rev. William Humpstone, his successor, labored for several months among them. The following are deacons: Samuel Carey, Henry L. Dexter, James P. Hallett, Charles Hubbard (1878), James Higgins (1881), Reuben Smith.

The present membership is 32; sittings, 400.

Roselle.—This rapidly-growing village is situated two miles from Elizabeth City, in a southwesterly direction, on the line of the New Jersey Central Railroad; have a turn-table and engine-house. All way trains from New York and Newark centre here, making some sixty connections to the above-named cities daily. It is becoming a place of considerable importance on this account, and many fine residences are being erected on the wide avenues and streets. There are summer boarding-houses, hotel, and private families where a few boarders are taken; also three churches, one large school building, stores, post-office, etc.

Linden.—Situated on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, about two miles from Elizabethtown on the east, and about the same distance from Rahway on the south. It contains a large number of fine dwellings, well laid out grounds, and is a desirable location on high ground. There are three churches, a fine school building, factories, stores, post-office, etc.

The census report of this township, 1881: Males, 1004; females, 905; children between the ages of five and eighteen years, 435.

Trembly's Point.—In the easterly part of this township a family by the name of Trembly settled at an early date. The following record of one "Jean Traubles [John Trembly], of this town, a Huguenot, married Marie [Mary], daughter of Peter Nue [Noc], a French Huguenot refugee," 1689. They resided upon these lands, which run to the Kill von Kull, or Staten Island Sound. There was a point of "meadow" "juttet out," and which was called a "ferry point," from the opposite shore for many years. It was a crossing by a skiff kept by Pater (Peter), his son.

During the Revolutionary war the British soldiers used this point for crossing, and during the night crossed and recrossed, after pillaging the surrounding country. At last the old home of the ferry-master was invaded. The following account is from Rivington's Gazette, No. 570, a newspaper published at that time:

"On the night of the following Thursday" (Dec. 14, 1780) "a party of royal horse-thieves, under the command of the celebrated Lewis Robbins, . . . made an incursion into Rahway. They set out for Westfield to seize Sheriff Marsh, but as the roads were bad, and learning probably that the sheriff was not at home, they turned back, and made their way to old David Miller's, capturing him, some of his sons, and his horses. Having paroled the old man because of his infirmities, they proceeded to Peter Trembly's, whom they seized and robbed of all his money and papers. They took also a Peter Horn." But at the sudden discharge of a gun they paroled their prisoners and fled.

This family in the township have long removed, and still the name of Trembly's Point is well known. Within a few years, in laying the Long Branch Railroad track here, they have named a station "Trembly Depot," situated on the old homestead.

Linden Post-Office.—It is but a few years since a regular postmaster was appointed in this township, and in 1864, after the question had been agitated for months, that their request was granted by the appointment of Mr. John Clay, who held it for one year, when Mr. Gilbert Rindell received the appointment in 1867, and retained it until Mr. Christopher Boyne was appointed. He held the position for about one year, when it was removed to the store at Linden, and Mr. Meeker Wood, in 1868, was the postmaster. He retained it for a short time, when Benjamin Cohen and C. T. Warren were respectively the postmasters. In the year 1873, Mr. William T. Clark held it for two years, and Mr. H. W. Gesner received the appointment Feb. 9, 1875, and retained it until the appointment of Mr. William K. Schenck, April 1, 1879. The present postmaster is H. W. Gesner, who was appointed for the second time Dec. 12, 1881.

Roselle Post-Office.—The first post-office in this town was opened by Andrew Arrison in 1872. The following year James R. Clark was appointed, and retained it until 1881, when the present postmaster, Mr. J. K. Mulford, was appointed.

Inns and Inn-keepers.—The name of Hurd's and Crane's inns are mentioned as being the stopping-places for many of the Revolutionary soldiers during the war. These were two of the earliest stopping-places "provided for man and beast." They were situated near the station of the New Jersey Central Railroad, "Elmora." No trace of them can now be found.

The Old Wheat-Sheaf Inn was a famous one in its day. A gentleman by name of Wilkinson kept it a long period before the "battle of Connecticut Towns," and Ephraim Clark kept it at that time. It is impossible to learn at this time when it was first opened as an "ordinary." Louis Baker owned the land upon which it was built in 1745, and probably it was built not far from this time. John Halsey opened the house after Mr. Clark's death, and in 1815 a grand celebration took place there, commemorative of the proclamation of peace at the close of the war. After the death of Mr. Halsey, in 1837, Mr. John Yates became the landlord; married Widow Halsey, and kept the house until his death in 1843. He was also the first blacksmith at the Wheat-Sheaf. Oliver Halsey, son of the former landlord, opened the house in 1844, and kept it until 1849. Mr. John Truax and his brother William also kept the inn after his death. John B. Day became the proprietor in 1857, and kept this "wayside inn" for over thirty years. The property now belongs to a Mr. Banta, who has put this old historic house in good repair and leased it to Skidmore Wright.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOB WINANS.

The father of Mr. Winans, who is the subject of this sketch, was Job Winans, who married Miss Sarah Winans, and resided during his lifetime in Linden township. They had one son, Job. After the death of her husband Mrs. Winans contracted a second marriage with Capt. Benjamin Winans, to whom was born a daughter Jane, who became Mrs. Vandervoort.

The death of Job Winans occurred Jan. 22, 1808, and that of Mrs. Winans Dec. 15, 1848. Their son Job was born Feb. 6, 1805, in Linden. He spent his early life upon the farm, and enjoyed the advantages of the superior instruction imparted at the Adelphi Academy in Elizabeth. When fourteen years of age the death of his stepfather took place, which entailed much responsibility upon the young man, and necessitated his return home, where he and his mother jointly conducted the farm. He was married Jan. 1, 1833, to Miss Amy C., daughter of Joseph and Polly

E. P. Winans

S. C. Marsh

Morse, of Linden, the former of whom was a miller and owner of a valuable property known as the Morse Mills. Mr. and Mrs. Winans had children,—Nathan M., born Oct. 22, 1833; Susan (Mrs. Meeker Wood), born Dec. 14, 1836; and Job M., whose birth occurred Dec. 29, 1843.

Mr. Winans was in politics a Republican, and though not ambitious for the preferments of office, filled for years a place upon the Township Committee of Linden. He supported the Presbyterian denomination, and worshiped at the Broad Street Presbyterian Church, Elizabeth, of which Mrs. Winans was a member. The death of Mr. Winans occurred Aug. 6, 1872, in his sixty-seventh year, and that of Mrs. Winans April 21, 1880. Their son, Job M., was married Dec. 20, 1865, to Miss Mary H., daughter of Edward P. Winans, of Linden. They have children,—Job Irving, born Jan. 1, 1867, and Mary Louise, born June 29, 1875. Mr. Winans is a Republican in politics, and has been for eight years a member of the Township Committee of Linden.

EDWARD P. WINANS.

The father of Mr. Winans was Aaron Winans, who was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Watkins, of Connecticut Farms, and resided in Linden, where he followed farming employments. Their children were John T., Nathan M., Jacob, Elizabeth, and Edward P. Mr. Winans died at his home, and Mrs. Winans' death occurred while the guest of her granddaughter, Mrs. Bunnell, at Springfield. Their youngest son, Edward P., was born in 1827, on the homestead in Linden, and spent his boyhood under the paternal roof. Educational advantages of a superior character were then offered at Elizabeth, and thither the lad directed his steps. On his return he assisted his father upon the farm, which came to him by inheritance on the death of his parent. He was married to Miss Mary H., daughter of John and Huldah (Crane) Potter, of Connecticut Farms, the latter of whom is still living with her daughter, and enjoys vigorous health in her eighty-seventh year. To this marriage were born children,—Mary H. (Mrs. Job M. Winans), John P., Eliza W. (Mrs. Meline Winans), and Hannah A.

Mr. Winans occupied a position of influence in his township, and manifested much enterprise in public affairs. He was a stanch Republican in his political belief, and actively interested in the furtherance of the principles and platform of the party. He filled various offices of trust, among which were those of township committeeman, justice of the peace, and commissioner of deeds. In religion he was a Presbyterian, and a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Elizabeth, of which he was one of the board of trustees. His death occurred Jan. 2, 1870, in his forty-third year. Mrs. Winans still survives, and resides upon the farm purchased by her husband many years since. This is also the home of her only son, John P. Winans, who is married to Miss Ella M. Povey.

STEWART CRAIG MARSH.

The grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch was Moses Marsh, who early settled in what is now known as Linden township of Union County, N. J., having been one of three branches of the family who chose this location as a future home. He was married to Miss Eunice Alston, and had four children, among whom were Jonathan Alston Marsh and Ann, who became Mrs. Craig. The former married Miss Sarah Craig, to whom were born four children,—Mary, who married William Stone; John Craig Marsh; Jonas Marsh, who married the daughter of Dr. Morse, of Elizabeth, N. J.; and Stewart Craig Marsh. Jonathan Alston Marsh resided on the land which had been the home of his father. This remains sacred as a family inheritance, and the homestead, with its hallowed associations, wherein successive generations have lived, is still in possession of one of the members of the family. Here Stewart Craig Marsh was born July 24, 1792, and in and about the "old home" the early years of his life were spent. He attended school at Morristown, and later entered the office of Dr. Stewart Craig, of Rahway, as a medical student, after which he continued his studies with Dr. Morse, of Elizabeth, N. J. After his graduation he removed to "the Attakapas," in the State of Louisiana, at which place both his brothers, John and Jonas, lived and died at an advanced age.

Stewart Craig Marsh married Miss Mary Baldwin, daughter of Mr. Samuel Baldwin, in 1821, his brother John having married a sister. After a period of two years spent in the practice of his profession at the South he returned to the North and embarked in mercantile pursuits with John Compton. This business was continued for thirty years in Pearl Street, New York City.

His daughter, Sarah Craig Marsh, who married Mr. Hugh Auchincloss, is the present occupant of the old homestead. The Auchincloss family are of Scotch descent, and were first represented in New York by Hugh Auchincloss, who came to America in 1803 and died in 1855. Mr. Hugh Auchincloss is his only surviving son. Mrs. Marsh having died in 1828, Mr. Marsh married for his second wife Miss Amelia Martha Bulkley, daughter of John Bulkley, of Connecticut, to whom were born two sons,—John Alston Marsh and Stewart Craig Marsh, who grew to manhood. Mr. Stewart Craig Marsh was in his political predilections a Henry Clay Whig, and while interested in the furtherance of the principles espoused by his party, rarely participated in the annual contests or shared in the official rewards which follow party service.

He was essentially the perfect type of the old-school gentleman, of commanding presence, with courtesy of manner and a dignified reserve, which while it repelled intrusion was altogether free from arrogance. He was a man of irreproachable character and of fine moral instincts. Mr. Marsh was a supporter of the service of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which he preferred.

His death occurred Nov. 30, 1877, in his eighty-third year, at the homestead, and in the same apartment which was the scene of his birth so many years before.

CHAPTER LV.

TOWNSHIP OF CRANFORD.

THE act creating the township of Cranford, approved March 14, 1871, defines its boundaries as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, that all that portion of the townships of Westfield, Springfield, Union, Linden, and Clark, in the county of Union, lying within the boundaries and descriptions following, to wit: Beginning at a point in the boundary line between Westfield and Springfield townships distant three thousand feet from the confluence of Normahiggin Brook and Rahway River; thence north eighty-six degrees and forty-five minutes east to a point seventeen hundred feet east of the road leading from Cranford to Millstone; thence south three degrees and fifteen minutes east to a point in the road leading from Amos Clark's mill to Roselle, distant about twenty-seven hundred feet from said mill; thence westerly following the middle of said road across the Rahway River to a point seventeen hundred feet northeasterly from Scudder's school-house; thence north forty-eight degrees west to a point distant three thousand feet southerly from and at right angles with the Central Railroad of New Jersey; thence north three degrees and fifteen minutes west to the road leading past the residence of Everett Pierson; thence northwardly in a direct line to the place of beginning, be and the same is hereby set off from the said townships of Westfield, Springfield, Union, Clark, and Linden, and created into a new township to be called and known by the name of the township of Cranford."

Natural Features.—The surface is generally level; soil clay loam, mixed more or less with sand, and generally productive in wheat, oats, rye, and grass. This township is well watered. It is nearly cut in two parts by the Rahway River, which empties into Staten Island Sound. There are six substantial bridges built over this river, and perhaps no other township in the State can count as many. There are large forest-trees lining the banks of the stream, and most of the farms have a large number of acres of heavy timber, and there are also many orchards of choice fruit.

Early Settlements.—The Cranes of this township are descendants of Stephen Crane, one of the first "Elizabethtown Associates." He was born 1673.

John Crane (son of John and Huldah Grant) married Phebe Ross, daughter of David Ross, of Westfield. They had eight children:

1. Rebecca, who married Maj. Jotham Potter (of Revolutionary fame), son of John. Both are dead. They left three children.

2. John Grant Crane, married Sally Pierson, daughter of William, son of William, and had children,—1,

John Davis Crane, who married Catharine Potter, daughter of William B. Potter; 2, William, who married Keziah, daughter of John Miller, of Westfield. They are both dead.

3. Elizabeth, married Thomas Moore, son of Robert, of Woodbridge, and had children,—1, David Moore; 2, Robert Moore; 3, John Moore; 4, Israel Moore; 5, Phebe Moore.

4. Phebe, married Benjamin Potter, brother of Maj. Jotham Potter.

5. Elias, born 24th April, 1789, and married Esther Maxwell, daughter of John, and lived in Union township, and had six children,—1, John, who married Sarah Cutter, daughter of William Cutter, of Woodbridge; 2, Mary Anne, married Nathan Winans, son of Aaron, of Elizabethtown; 3, Phebe, married Silas Miller, son of Abraham, son of Abraham; 4, Susan, married Isaac Williams, of New York, son of Matthias; 5, Elias Maxwell Crane; 6, Amzi Armstrong Crane.

6. Josiah, married Electa Ross, daughter of John, of Union township (now Cranford), and lived where Col. Jacob Crane formerly did, and had children,—1, Mary, married Hampton Cutter, son of William Cutter; 2, John Grant Crane, married Abby Miller (who is now deceased), daughter of John O. Miller, and lived on the old John Crane homestead, near the Rahway River, on the road to Springfield; 3, Anne Elizabeth, married Job Williams, son of Moses Williams, of then Union township; 4, Josiah, married Sarah Jane Miller, daughter of Jacob Miller.

7. Huldah, married John Potter, also a brother of Maj. Jotham Potter, and had a daughter, Mary Hannah Potter.

8. Sarah, who was unmarried.

Mr. Josiah Crane was one of the first who were the means of building the Presbyterian Church in Cranford, and resided on the same farm which he had occupied from the first, living to see a large town and population surrounding him, and in a few years selling his farm, which was needed for lots and building purposes, and purchasing a residence formerly occupied by Mr. Anderson, where he died a few years since. Mrs. Crane died November, 1879.

Benjamin Crane (third son of Benjamin, second son of Benjamin, first son of John, son of Stephen Crane) married Sarah Thompson; lived on the road to Westfield, near Vreeland's mills. They had eleven children, who are of the sixth generation from Stephen Crane,—

1. John, who married Mary Clark, daughter of Robert, of Rahway.

2. Abigail, married David Keyt, son of James.

3. Esther, who died at about eighteen or twenty years, unmarried.

4. Hezekiah Thompson, married first Amanda Osborn.

5. Phebe, married first Francis Randolph, son of Dr. Robert Randolph; for his second wife she mar-

"MARLBOROUGH PLACE."
RESIDENCE OF ALDEN B. BIGELOW,
GRANFORD, N. J.

ried George R. King, of Warren County, and lived there.

6. Charlotte King, married Hedges Baker, son of Daniel Baker.

7. Norris, who went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and married there.

8. Jacob Thompson, went to Cincinnati and died there at thirty-five years, unmarried.

9. Benjamin (4th), married Electa Baker as her second husband, daughter of Daniel.

10. David Johnson, married Anne Eliza Roll, daughter of Isaac, son of John Roll.

11. Moses Thompson, married Anna Eliza Scudder (Mrs. Crane died Dec. 13, 1881). They had two children,—1, Theodore Augustus, and 2, Sarah Anne, who died.

Mr. Moses T. Crane has built himself a fine residence upon Walnut Avenue, the old Westfield road to Elizabethtown.

William Crane (son of John Grant Crane and Sally Pierson, daughter of William Pierson), married Keziah, daughter of John Miller of Westfield. He owned and lived on a farm on the road from Cranford to Branch Mills. He died a few years ago. His son is John Henry Crane, now engaged in the general grocery and merchandise in the village of Cranford.

William Darbie, or Darby, was an early settler; he came in 1688. In that year, April 16th, the widow Agatha White sold all the lands of Richard Beach in Elizabethtown, bought of him in March of the same year, to William Darbie, or Darby, of Elizabethtown. A William Darby was one of the respondents in 1752 to a bill in chancery.¹ Rev. John Darby was the pastor of the Connecticut Farms Presbyterian Church in 1758. He had one son and two daughters by his first wife, and the eldest daughter, Hester, married a British officer named Fox. His second wife was Hester White Hunting, a widow lady from East Hampton, L. I. They had one son, Henry White Derby, M.D., and also two daughters, Helen, the wife of Gen. O'Hara, and Lucinda, the wife of Christian De Wint. Rev. Mr. Darby was probably a son or grandson of William Darby. The family of Darbys are from the same stock who are residents of this township. Mr. Marsh Darby, who died Dec. 27, 1881, was the son of William Darby. He died on the farm in the year 1815. The farm is now occupied by Mr. Benjamin Westervilt.

John O. Miller, son of Abner 1st, who married Betsey Kyte (son of John 3d, son of John Miller, Jr., son of John 1st), and married Sarah Ludlow, daughter of Benjamin and Keziah Ludlow. He lives on the old Miller homestead, about a mile from Cranford depot, on the old road to Elizabethtown (now Elizabeth City). The family are among the earliest settlers in this township. His ancestor came from Long Island about the year 1668, and was one of the first Associates of Elizabethtown. William, his son, was an alderman of the borough of Elizabeth, and his name is in the second list of the Associates of 1699. Andrew, his second son, married Mary Andrus of Newark, N.J. Enoch, who married Hannah Baker, had nine children,—1, Enoch, Jr.; 2, Andrew; 3, Moses; 4, Jacob; 5, Jedediah; 6, Lydia; 7, Elizabeth; 8, Josiah; 9, Hannah. The fourth son of John 1st was John, whose wife's name was Martha. His fifth son, Aaron, who married and had first Aaron, Jr., was a noted clock-maker in Elizabethtown. The following advertisement is from a newspaper called the New York Weekly Post-Boy, Nov. 23, 1747:

"Aaron Miller, Clock Maker, In Elizabethtown, East New Jersey, Makes and sells all sorts of Clocks after the best Manner with Expedition. He likewise makes Compasses and chains for Surveyors; as also Church Bells of any size, he having a Foundry for that Purpose, and has cast several which have been approved to be good, and will supply any Persons on a Timely Notice with any of the above Articles at very reasonable Rates."

We give this quaint old notice, showing the enterprise and business tact of one born in this township. He had a daughter Betsey, who married Isaac Brokaw (a noted maker of these old family clocks which are in so much demand by relic-hunters); resided in Somerville, N. J. He had also two other sons, Cornelius and Robert.

Mr. John Miller also had two daughters,—Hannah, who married first Nathaniel Bonnel 1st, and for her second husband Deacon Whitehead; his other child Susannah, who married first a Mr. Crane, and her second husband John Ross 1st (and was his third wife).

Mr. John O. Miller is still living on the old homestead at an advanced age. His wife, Sarah Ludlow, died a few years since. His children,—1, Abigail, who married John Grant Crane, son of Josiah Crane; 2, Louisa, who married Elias M. Crane, of Elias, of Union; 3, James, married Sarah Jane Marsh, daughter of Eli Marsh, of Westfield; 4, John Alfred Miller; and 5, Benjamin Ludlow Miller, who lives with his father.

James Keyt's family homestead was on the back road leading from where the late Gideon Ross resided to Rahway. His property adjoined that of the late Samuel Headley on the west, and Moses T. Crane on the south. Mr. Keyt had a number of children. David Keyt married Abigail Crane, daughter of Benjamin Crane 3d; they removed to Ohio. Abner Miller married Betsey Keyt, daughter of James Keyt and Betsey Jessup. The family on the male side went to the West, and James Keyt's grandchildren are found in the Coriell family of New Market, N. J., the Searing family in Union township, Ichabod Ross' family in Westfield, and the Miller family in Cranford township, N. J.

The Denman family were early settlers here. John Denman, the first of that name, is mentioned in the early records as one of the Associates, and resided upon his allotment in 1668 in the borough. The family is quite numerous in the township, and they are mentioned as among the first settlers. John Denman lived on his homestead, where he died in 1849 at an advanced age. He was engaged much in the purchase of timber for ship-building. The homestead is situated on the corner of the Westfield road and road leading to the Stephenson homestead, Cranford.

¹ E. J. Records, B, 383-84.

Tooker (sometimes spelled Tucker). This family owned a small place nearly opposite to the Headley farm, where Mr. Tucker died a few years ago.

John Winans (sometimes spelled Wynes, Waynes, Winons, Wynnons, Wynons, Wynens, Wynnings, and Wynants) was doubtless of the company that came from the east end of Long Island. It is quite likely that he was of the same family with Barnabas Wines, their names being frequently spelled alike. He was bred a weaver, a handicraft in great request at that early day. He had a house-lot containing five acres ten chains, bounded north by Jacob Melyen, west by Humphrey Spinage, or Spinning, and south and east by highways. He had also sixteen acres of upland "on the Neck," between Matthias Hatfield and Samuel Marsh, Sr.; also one hundred and twenty acres of upland "on Peach Garden Brook," bounded by Robert Morse, Matthias Hatfield, Robert White, and unsurveyed land; also forty acres of land "on the South branch of Elizabeth Creek or River," bounded by Humphrey Spinage, Matthias Hatfield, and the plain; also four acres of meadow "at Rawack," and six acres on Elizabeth Creek; in all two hundred acres. When his next neighbor, Jacob Melyen, had removed to New York, Winans bought, Feb. 8, 1678, his house-lot, house, barn, orchard, etc. He died at the close of 1694. His estate was valued at £271 15s. 8d.¹ The names of Winans as early settlers are found in the records of this and adjoining townships. In the civil list the name is met with frequently. Jonathan Dayton Winans is owner of lands on the forks of roads leading from Westfield to Rahway and Elizabeth, in this township, and has carried on the wheelwright and blacksmithing business, his stand being well known all over the country. Alfred Winans, living on the farm south on the Rahway road, is the son of "Squire Ross Winans, of Lyons Farms."

William Garthwaite, the father of a numerous family, was born 1677, in England; married, as early as 1702, Ann, the daughter of Maximilian Laulon, of France. He came here as early as 1703, his son Henry having been born in this borough. It is supposed from family tradition that he came at an earlier date, 1695. But his name appears in one of the early documents in 1706. "He or his son located on what has since been known as the Roberts property on the west side of the town."² He died Dec. 11, 1738, leaving at least two sons, Henry and James. The family have been long residents of this township, and still own property by the Rahway River. The family here is now represented by Mr. Edwin B. Garthwaite, who resides upon the old homestead.

The Faitouts were early settlers, and came from France during the prosecutions there. "They were known as the Huguenot refugees." The family has been represented in the East Jersey allotments of lands in first division, 1667. "Aaron Faitout resided in Perth Amboy." He was an owner of a pew in St. Peter's Episcopal Church, No. 16, at a yearly rental of £5 7s. The family have been owners of large tracts of land in this and Union townships. The names of Edward, Aaron, Jonathan, Clark, and Moses Faitout (sometimes spelled Fatout) have been among the early families. Henry B. Faitout married Rebecca Davis, daughter of John Davis, of Westfield, who resided just outside of the boundary line of this township.

Among the early family names was that of Meeker, who have numerous descendants. One of them lived on the old road to Elizabeth Town, just easterly of where Philip Johns now resides. William Meeker was one of the Elizabeth Town Associates. He came from New Haven, Conn., where he took the oath of fidelity July 1, 1644. He was "propounded Oct. 7, 1646, to be loader to Mill for a 12 month, to goe in all seasons except unreasonable weather." Frequently he appears in the records as "Meaker" and "Mecar." He was appointed a constable of the borough on the 13th of October, 1671. He had sons Joseph and Benjamin, also numbered among the eighty Associates. The name of Benjamin Meeker is in the second generation of Associates, admitted in 1699.

In this township we find such names as Acker, Badgley, Baker, Bryant, Brooks, Crane, Clark, Craig, Cory, Connet, Davis, Denman, Dunham, Frazee, Faitout, Frost, Gennings or Jennings, Garthwaite, Hendricks, Hinds, High, Hetfield, Hole, Kyet or Keyt, Lambert, Littell, Ludlum, Meeker, Miller, Mash or Marsh, Pierson, Robinson, Lilley, Robins or Robinson, Morris or Norris, Ross, Sinnago, Scudder, Tooker or Tucker, Terry, Williams, Freeland or Vreeland, Darby, Woodruff, Winaus, Wilcox, and Yeomans, but many of them are only known now in old deeds and records.

Cranesville.—In the year 1849 the residence of Mr. Josiah Crane, Sr., was visited on the 4th of July by some Sabbath-school children from Westfield. They spent a pleasant day rambling along the river-banks, fishing, etc., Mr. Crane, in his hospitable manner, doing all in his power to make it pleasant for them. He owned lands on both sides of the Rahway River, and his homestead was on the main road, now called Union Avenue, near the railroad track. A few trains occasionally stopped on signal, there being no regular station built. Before the children left for their homes some of them marked with chalk on an old building near the tract in large letters the name of "Cranesville," and such it remained for years, until the present commodious depot was built in 1869, and the name was changed to Cranford.

¹ E. T. Journal Record.

² Hatfield's Elizabeth.

Post-Offices.—Until 1867 the residents of this then scattered village, Cranesville, as it was called, depended upon Westfield and Connecticut Farms post-offices for their mail, and the religious weekly papers were taken to church on Sabbath morning by one appointed, who distributed the Christian Advocate and the New York Observer, while letters were brought that during the week had accumulated at the post-office. When Saturday evening came and "chores" for the week were done up, the custom was to go to the store where the office was kept and there meet neighbors; and when returning home bring all the mail for the neighbors at Cranesville. This was the practice up to the time when John Balwin built his store and also took charge of the station at Cranford. For a time he also acted as postmaster. By the explosion of a barrel of kerosine he was burnt to death with the store and contents, hardly anything being saved. It is related that he went in the cellar where the barrel was kept about 9.30 o'clock in the evening to draw some of the oil for a customer. George O. Totten was appointed postmaster in 1870, and continued until he removed from Cranford, when John L. Derby, the present postmaster, was appointed, June 1, 1873.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

George O. Totten, 1871.	Stephen Chandler, 1876.
J. W. B. Hegeman, 1872.	William W. Mendell, 1878.
Alfred L. Rowe, 1874.	Samuel N. Sweet, 1882.

JUDGES OF ELECTIONS.

Frank A. Ellis, 1871.	Robert Rankin, 1877-78.
George O. Totten, 1872-73.	Jacob Ludlow, 1879.
George W. Donaldson, 1874.	George W. Wiley, 1880.
George W. Wiley, 1875.	John T. Bankir, 1881.
David Rankin, Jr., 1877.	Charles Leo Avery, 1882.

POUNDMASTERS.

Stetson B. Mendell, 1871-72.	Terrence Brennen, 1880.
Charlott Mendell, 1873-78.	Daniel Brown, 1881-82.
Henry Van Elieo, 1879.	Barney Doyle, 1882.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

Alden B. Biglow, 1871-75.	Thomas Cloyd, 1874.
Sylvester Cahill, Jr., 1872-73.	John Isenman, 1876-82.

TOWN CLERKS.

Isaac N. Fisher, 1871.	Samuel S. Brower, 1880.
William R. Christmas, 1872-75.	Edward Buophont, Jr., 1881.
Augustus Lawrence, 1876-77.	Walter M. Irving, 1882.
Mannel Munoz, Jr., 1878-79.

ASSESSORS.

Emmor K. Adams, 1871-72.	John W. Close, 1882.
Gideon E. Ludlow, 1873-81.

COLLECTOR.

Moses T. Crane, 1871-82.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

Sylvester Cahill, Sr., 1871.	John Klein, 1872.
Josiah Crane, 1871.	Alexander P. Purvis, 1872-75, 1880.
John M. Atwater, 1871.	Henry Harrisso, 1876.
Charles Leo Avery, 1871, 1877-80.	John W. Close, 1873-75.
Frank A. Ellis, 1872.	Jacob Ludlow, 73-75.
Gideon E. Ludlow, 1872.	James A. Bogart, 1876, 1882.
Emmor K. Adams, 1873-75.	Henry H. Cowen, 1876-77.
Edward S. Crane, 1872-78, 1880-81.	William M. Taylor, 1876.

John E. Close, 1877.
Steven I. Cox, 1877.
James McGowen, 1878.
Harry E. Atwater, 1878, 1881.
John H. Crane, 1878.
William D. Wood, 1879, 1881.
James G. Moore, 1879-80, 1882.

Philip John, 1879.
John T. Cox, 1879-80.
George B. Osborn, 1881.
Jacob Klein, 1881.
James T. Banker, 1882.
Henry Biedenberger, 1882.

Schools.—In the year 1805 the "Old Red School-house" was built. The neighbors drew the stones for the foundation, and the frame was cut from the near timber land. The building had four windows on a side, and was a model school-house for its day. It was sixteen by twenty-four feet in size, and furnished with slab benches. The name of the first teacher was John Flowers. This building was occupied for school purposes until 1866-67, when a small building was provided on the north side of the Central Railroad, near the residence of Mr. Purves. The name of the teacher was Fred. Searing. In 1869 a new and imposing structure was erected and a graded school organized.

There are nearly four hundred children enrolled from the ages of five years to eighteen years, and reported attendance nearly two hundred. The trustees are M. Munoz, as district clerk, J. W. Chase, and John Cromwell.

The principal of the school is Mr. A. F. Campbell; teachers, Misses E. Osborn, Minnie Vreeland, C. D. Osborn.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—A mission Sabbath-school was organized by Mr. William W. Mendell, in the district school-house, in the fall of 1857, and this was the starting-point of the church in Cranford.

In the spring of 1859 two lots were donated on the Westfield road belonging to Peter B. Johnson, Esq., and in a short time a commodious chapel was erected at a cost of about three thousand five hundred dollars, the neighborhood lending their help and giving of their means to further on the cause. In 1864-65 a movement was made to erect a church edifice, and for several months the matter was in contemplation. The trustees, Matthew Falyn, George W. Mendell, Thomas Cloyd, Thomas Falyn, Charles Littell, Moses Mendell, and others, decided to secure lots on Walnut Avenue, remove the chapel from the Westfield road, and build the new church adjoining it, which was carried into effect, and in a few months a fine edifice was completed, thirty-six by seventy feet, with tower, bell, alcoves, etc., at an expense of some sixteen thousand dollars. The Rev. R. B. Collins, Henry M. Simpson, J. W. Marshall, James Harris, E. S. Jameison, W. Christopher, F. S. Cookman, Lawrence Reeves, George Benson, and Rev. Mr. Compton have been the pastors. Membership, 70; sittings, 300; Sabbath-school officers and teachers, 14; scholars, 100.

Presbyterian Church.—In the spring of 1849, Mr. Josiah Crane, Sr., John Miller, and a few others built a Union chapel on the main road, opposite Mr. Crane's residence. Here for a time many of the pastors of the vicinity officiated. As the majority of the church-going population belonged to the old Westfield Church, it was decided in 1851 to organize a Presbyterian Church, when nineteen members from the above church united in this organization. For some time they were supplied with pastors from abroad. In the fall of 1852, Rev. A. H. Lilly received a call, which he accepted, and became the first pastor of the church. He was succeeded by Rev. T. S. Brittan in 1854, who was pastor but a short time, when the church called and settled the Rev. W. R. Dunett, who remained in the pastorate until 1862. In this year the vacancy was filled by the Rev. Hollis Read, a returned missionary. A revival soon followed, and many joined the church. He relinquished his pastorate in 1867, and Rev. S. Murdock came for a short time, and was followed by Rev. A. H. Sloat, who labored here only a short time. The Rev. A. A. McConnell was the next pastor, under whose auspices the present church edifice was erected in 1868. But his health for some months was feeble, and soon after he finished his work here he died, and was buried in the Fairview Cemetery. For a short time the church was without a regular pastor, when a call was extended to Rev. William H. Roberts, which he accepted. He left in 1878. The present pastor is Rev. James F. Riggs. Sittings, 400; communicants, 180.

Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church.—This beautiful church was erected by the faithful labors of a number of residents of this town and clergymen of the neighboring parishes. The organization was formed April 18, 1872, and services were held for some months prior to the building of the church upon North Avenue, easterly from the station, and near the residences of a number of its members. The cost when it was completed, in 1875, amounted to seven thousand dollars, and it is now free from incumbrance. The number of families connected with the parish is thirty-seven. The Rev. E. M. Reilly was the first rector in 1875, and remained for nearly three years. The Rev. J. H. Young was the next, and the present rector is Rev. William C. Roberts. Communicants, thirty-five; sittings, one hundred and fifty.

St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church.—A few Catholic families residing in this township in 1871 had with Westfield occasional mass every two or three Sabbaths. In the year 1874 efforts were put forth for the building of a church which would accommodate all the families within two or three miles around, and material was purchased, but not until the fall of 1875 and the spring of 1876 was much done towards building, but in the summer of the latter year they had completed a neat building at a cost of about two thousand dollars, which will accommodate some two hundred and fifty. The present resident priest is Rev. W. J. Weisman.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CORNELIUS A. LEVERIDGE.

Cornelius A. Leveridge was born in the city of New York, April 30, 1829; son of John Leveridge, counselor-at-law of that city, and descendant of Rev. William Leveridge, the learned and revered Presbyterian clergyman, who was a student at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he graduated, taking his degree of A.B. in 1625, and that of A.M. in 1629. He engaged to become the minister of Dover, N. H., and embarked at London in the ship "James," and after a passage of eight weeks arrived at Salem, Mass., Oct. 10, 1633. He immediately entered upon his work at Dover. Three years later we find him preaching at Sandwich, on Cape Cod, and here he remained for many years engaged in imparting religious truth to the Indians and proving himself a worthy cotemporary of the apostle Eliot. In 1653 he became a purchaser and settler of Oyster Bay, L. I., and at this place, Huntington, and Newtown he spent the rest of his life, preaching not only there, organizing churches, but came occasionally to Elizabeth borough and preached to some of his former parishioners who had settled there, and whose descendants are now occupying the former homes of their ancestors. There is a manuscript commentary on the Scriptures which is preserved as the production of Mr. Leveridge among the town records of Newtown. "It is an old folio volume. The whole consists of one or two observations upon each verse, chapter by chapter, each remark comprehended in four or five words. With some study the whole could easily be made out after the signs and abbreviations were mastered. He was settled as pastor at Newtown in 1662, and after a pastorate of fourteen years died, June 19, 1677, leaving his sons Caleb and Eleazer. The former took out letters of administration on his estate." The following aphorism is from Freeman's "Cape Cod," vol. i. page 219:

"He who does not think of his ancestors will be negligent of his posterity.

[Signed] "REV. WILLIAM LEVERIDGE."

At an early age Cornelius A. Leveridge attended the Union Hall Academy, Jamaica, L. I., connected with the Reformed Dutch Church, Henry Onderdonk, principal, where he remained until 1842, when he entered the grammar school of Columbia College, where he received a classical education. After spending some four years in studies and in the school of chemistry, he removed in 1849 to Westfield, Union Co., N. J., and resided on the farm formerly owned by his uncle, Benjamin Leveridge, M.D., giving his attention to his favorite pursuits of geology, chemistry, and historical research. There he remained until the year 1865, accumulating an extensive and valuable collection of geological, historical, and numismatic matter, which he sold at a large sum to P. T. Barnum, Esq. for his second museum, then being established in the upper part of Broadway,

C. A. Severidge.

New York, his first having been consumed by fire in 1864.

In the year 1869 he removed to Cranford and became interested in the formation of this new township, where he became identified with the growth of that beautiful village in the establishment of its churches and fine school building. He has been engaged in literary pursuits, writing historical and geological articles for the local newspapers, and as correspondent, and at the same time attending seminaries and schools in Newark and other places, giving instruction on scientific subjects, and during this time he has been in correspondence with different historical and scientific societies throughout this country as well as Europe.

His habits of close observation and pedestrian tours have fitted him in an unusual degree for the work of local historian in this State, and he has collected a large amount of information of the early settlers. He is receiving letters from all parts of the Union relating to family history.

Since the centennial year of 1876, on his return from Philadelphia, Pa., he has resided in Dunellen, N. J.¹ He was married at Quebec, Canada, on Sept. 24, 1849, to Eleanor J. Mills, daughter of James Mills, a leading journalist of Exeter, England.

His interest in political affairs dates back to his early manhood, and he has always been an upholder of Jeffersonian principles. In 1865 he was elected as justice of peace, receiving nearly the whole vote of the township. He has also held many official relations in the county. His cheerfulness and sociability make many friends, and few men enjoy the society of their friends more than he.

JOHN DENMAN.

The homestead of the Denmans, which is still in the family and name, is situated in the town of Cranford, formerly a part of Westfield, and about five miles from Elizabeth. It was purchased in 1723 by John Denman, Jr., who was a descendant of the John Denman who in 1635 lived in Dorchester, Mass. He is mentioned in Town Book B of the Elizabeth records as one of the memorialists of Nov. 18, 1729. He had much influence among his townsmen on account of his education and wealth, and possessed the luxuries of those days, as his "books" and "riding chair" are mentioned in the inventory of his effects. He was an Episcopalian, and attended St. John's Church, Elizabeth, where his children and grandchildren were baptized. His first wife, Mary, daughter of Joseph Williams, and the mother of his children, died March 27, 1762, in the sixty-second year of her age. He was married to his second wife, Elizabeth Lolloo, Sept. 18, 1763. He died March 15, 1775, in the seventy fifth year of his age, and was interred beside his first wife in the old cemetery at Westfield. He left four sons, John, Joseph, Daniel, and Christopher, and two daughters, Mary, who married Samuel Yeomans, and Jenny, who was twice married, her second husband being Aaron Faitoute. The farm was left equally to the sons, but Christopher purchasing the rights of the others became the sole owner. He was born March 5, 1741, and married Abigail Hendricks, who was born Feb. 17, 1746. She was the daughter of Isaac Hendricks and his wife, Lydia Craig. They were members of St. John's Church, Elizabeth, until the Revolutionary war, when the church was closed, and they then went to the Presbyterian Church at Westfield. In 1803, Christopher Denman assisted in erecting their third edifice. The district school long known as the Red School-house through his influence was established near his home, and for years the teachers were accustomed to live with him. He commanded the respect of all who knew him, was energetic and prudent, and by his perseverance accumulated a large amount of real estate, besides personal property, such as notes and bonds. His death took place Oct. 21, 1808, and that of his wife five years previous, in 1803. They had five daughters and one son,—Susan, born Nov. 22, 1773, died Oct. 15, 1854, married to Benjamin Cory, Jr.; Anna, born Oct. 24, 1776, died May 14, 1832, married to John Mills; Abigail, born May 3, 1779, died May 10, 1841, married to John Denman to transport cannon and powder to our Northern frontier.

¹ Since the above was written he has returned to the homestead at Cranford, which is now his family residence.

He was a true American, in action as well as at heart, and considered it the duty of every man to be present at the polls. He was a Democrat of the Jeffersonian school, and interested himself in everything relating to his country, his neighborhood, and friends, always responding to calls of sickness and want. The following anecdote will illustrate a generous and kind-hearted disposition. He had frequently missed corn from his crib, and determined to watch for the trespasser. One night he saw a man filling a bag at the crib. After he had filled it, and was engaged in filling another, he felt a tap on his shoulder, with a demand for an explanation. He answered he was needy, and thought the owner would not miss it from his plenty. He was taken into the house, made to draw cider in the cellar, bring a mince-pie from the pantry, and then told to eat and drink until satisfied. When he was through they went to the crib. He was made to empty one bag, to put the other on his shoulder, and go home, with the advice that if he ever was in need to come and ask, but never to steal.

He always kept a pew for the use of his family in the Presbyterian Church, and entertained all ministers who came to preach in the Old Red School-house, one of whom, a Methodist, came monthly for fifteen years. He took a great deal of pride in keeping up the old homestead, and bequeathed it as he had received it from his ancestors, and it still stands to-day as one of the few places having a clear title, a mortgage never having been placed upon it. He died Sept. 25, 1849, leaving four sons and one daughter. John Christopher Denman, born Nov. 17, 1815, married Eliza Hendricks, 1844, and died Feb. 4, 1864. A sketch of his life will be found in another part of this volume. Isaac Marsh Denman, born March 7, 1821, married Mary Cross, 1848, and died Nov. 25, 1866. He went to New Orleans in the employ of his uncles, Ralph Marsh, John D. Marsh, and James B. Laing, in the carriage business. He was soon made a partner, and afterwards purchasing the interests of his associates continued the business, and took in his youngest brother, Rolph Marsh Denman, who was born Feb. 23, 1833, and died unmarried. The partnership formed what was known as the Southern house. They both possessed remarkable business qualifications, were high-spirited, and very similar in talents, disposition, and ambition. They were interested in several moneyed institutions of the city. Isaac M. Denman died in New Orleans in the forty-fifth year of his age. His brother Rolph became the sole survivor of the Southern house, which terminated four years afterwards with his death, which occurred in New Orleans, Dec. 13, 1870. Alvan Fox Denman, born June 3, 1831, married Mary Bartoche, 1855, and died Oct. 20, 1865. He was a farmer, and lived at the homestead, where since his death his family has resided.

John Denman

Marsh; Hulda, born Oct. 1, 1784, died Aug. 7, 1830, married to Jonathan Miller; Mary, born Sept. 1, 1787, died July 24, 1831, married to Benjamin Woodruff; John, the only son, born Feb. 28, 1782, was married to Rebekah, daughter of John High, who died Jan. 4, 1812, leaving no issue. On Feb. 15, 1815, he married his second wife, Lockey Marsh, eldest daughter of Capt. Isaac Marsh and his wife, Catharine Terrell, of Rahway. Capt. Marsh from boyhood passed his life on the sea. On Feb. 14, 1788, he sailed as first mate on the bark "Jenny" for China, and on his return built and became captain of his own vessel. During the war of 1812 he was captured on the high seas and imprisoned in England until peace was declared, when he returned home, and died Jan. —, 1821.

John Denman was a man of indomitable energy and will. He was about six feet in height, of fine personal appearance, and noted for his horsemanship, in which he had few equals. For years he was engaged in getting out ship-timber, and often employed by the government to select it for the navy-yard. During the war of 1812 he was employed by the gov-

Mary Rebekah Denman, the only daughter, born Jan. 7, 1824, married April 5, 1848, to John Evans Matthews, who was born March 8, 1815. Mr. Matthews was the son of James and grandson of Thomas Matthews, of Raglan, England. At the age of twenty years he came to this country, and in 1837 went into business for himself in New Orleans, making and repairing carriages. In December, 1839, John C. Denman was taken into partnership under the firm-name of Matthews & Denman. They were very successful in their business, and executed large government orders during the Mexican war. In 1850, John C. Denman returned to the North to reside, Mr. Matthews continuing the business and adding to it a large stock of carriage trimmings and supplies. The following year he took in Isaac M. Denman as his partner under the name of J. E. Matthews & Co. The firm continued until the death of Mr. Matthews in 1859.

Mrs. Lockey Marsh Denman, the wife of John Denman, and the mother of the Denman sons, was born Sept. 28, 1792. She was a woman of superior manners, possessing fine conversational powers, as well as executive ability, which was inherited by her sons. Her Christian spirit and resignation was sorely tried when called to part with all her sons during a period of less than seven years. Her death took place July 30, 1875, and her remains are interred beside those of her husband in Fairview Cemetery, Westfield.

CHAPTER LVI.

CLARK TOWNSHIP.

Natural Features.—This township was erected from the Fifth Ward of the city of Rahway in 1864. The surface is generally a level, having a gentle descent until it reaches the line of the city of Rahway. It is well timbered, and has a few of the original trees, which have grown to a large size. The soil is generally a clay loam, with here and there a sandy knoll or slight ridge. It is traversed by a copious stream, the Rahway River, affording plenty of water for "milling purposes," and running in a zigzag course through the easterly part of the township. On the westerly sides are tributaries or branches, the chief of which is known as Robinson Branch. This township, adjoining the city of Rahway, of which it was formerly a part, is well located as to its advantages of travel and transportation, and there are many fine farms which have been brought to a high state of cultivation. A few market-gardens are also successfully cultivated in the township, producing good returns also of fruits and berries.

The population of the township is 352,—males, 187; females, 165; children between the ages of five and eighteen, 70.

Early Settlement.—This township was settled as part of the ancient borough of Elizabeth. In the early part of the history of that borough will be found the names of the early settlers in this section, as well as in the other parts of the old borough and township. All that is necessary here is simply to give a list of the names of the early settlers within the limits of the present township of Clark.

The following are among those who took allotments of land in this part of Elizabethtown prior to 1709: Radley (Radcliff), Enders, Bullman, Scudder, Ricketts, Wynants (now Wynans), Robertson, Halliday, Ross, Russell, Ryno, Powell, Darbie (Darby and Derby), Hendrick, Micheau, Clark, Miller, Pack, Lemington, Lilly, Mondy (Mundy), Woodruff, Sutton, Brant, Bowne (Boune), Thompson. There may have been a few others who settled within the bounds of this township, but no account of them can now be found. Many went in 1720 and settled in that part of the borough which afterwards was called Westfield township.

The Rev. Thomas Halliday, Episcopal missionary, whose ancestors settled in this township, had charge of the missions in Elizabeth Town, Rahway, Woodbridge, and Amboy. He says under date of Nov. 8, 1716, "In this part of East Jersey there are three townships,—Newark, Elizabethtown, and Woodbridge,—which consist of upwards of a thousand families, the chief settlers of which were New England Independents (Presbyterians or Congregationalists), who are now old and confirmed in their erroneous way. In each of those towns there is a large Independent Church, who support their preachers with the allowance of £80 per annum, besides house, glebe, and perquisites of marriages."

Civil List.—Since the organization of the township the following have served as town clerks:

William J. Thompson, 1864-66, 1869-70.	Charles A. Gundacker, 1871-72. Benjamin F. Osborn, 1873. William Bloodgood, 1874.
Adam Brown, 1867.	Franklin P. Bullman, 1878-82.
George W. Bullman, 1868, 1875-76.

ASSESSORS.

Robert I. Turney, 1864.	William I. Thompson, 1873-76.
Gurshon M. Dunn, 1865-67, 1871-72.	George W. Bullman, 1877.
Jacob Ludlow, 1865-69.	William Clark, 1878-79.
James B. Westervelt, 1870.	Willitt H. C. Coles, 1880.
	L. M. Scudder, 1881.

COLLECTORS.

William H. Enders, 1864, 1871-73, 1876-77.	William Bloodgood, 1874-75.
John M. Park, 1865.	Matthias F. Garthwait, 1876.
William I. Thompson, 1866-70.	Marx Riefe, 1878-81.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

Robert A. Russell, 1864, 1867.	Clark Stevens, 1869.
John F. Whitney, 1864.	Augustus Ritter, 1870.
William E. Bloodgood, 1864-70, 1873-78.	John H. Athridge, 1871-72.
Leonard Dunn, 1864-67, 1870-72.	Adam Brown, 1871-72.
John Weimar, 1864-68, 1871-72.	Hugh H. Bowne, 1873-75, 1877-81.
William N. Dougherty, 1865-66.	Lewis Smith, 1873.
Robert A. Russell, 1865-72.	Andrew Trehune, 1873.
William J. Thompson, 1867-68, 1874-76, 1879.	William H. Enders, 1873-75, 1877.
James B. Westervelt, 1868-69.	M. F. Garthwait, 1874-76.
John A. Halliday, 1868, 1870, 1876.	William Clark, 1876-77.
Marx Riefe, 1869.	Frederick Schonmaker, 1877.
Israel Vail, 1869, 1878-79.	William Bloodgood, Jr., 1880-81.
	L. M. Scudder, 1880-81.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

John F. Whitney, 1864.
 William N. Douchety, 1864.
 Robert A. Russel, 1865-69, 1875-76.

John A. Halliday, 1865-67, 1870-72.
 Eden Vail, 1873-74.
 William J. Thompson, 1877-81.

JUSTICES OF PEACE.

Robert I. Farney, 1864.
 Adam Brown, 1865-70.
 Hugh H. Bowne, 1868.
 William J. Thompson, 1869, 1877.
 Charles A. Gundaker, 1872.
 William E. Bloodgood, 1873, 1878.
 William Brown, 1875.

Charles M. Hawkins, 1878.
 William Clark, 1879.
 Adam Brown, 1879.
 Lewis Smith, 1880.
 Hugh H. Bowne, 1881.
 Robert A. Russel, 1881.

Schools.—There is but one district in this township, called the "Seudder School District," named from a family living in the neighborhood. This school was established at an early date, the house having been built in 1818. For many years school was taught only for one "quarter" during winter. The following is the report for 1881: District No. 6, children about 70; attendance, 24; trustees, C. A. Gundakers (district clerk), L. M. Scudder, and W. B. Mundy; teacher, Miss M. T. Reed.

Among the early teachers in this district was Mr. Jotham Williams, 1825-26; Isaac H. Pierson; Mr. Nelson (two terms), 1841-42; Horace Roberts; Abner Coriell; Mr. Wilcox; Eugene Snyder, 1849.

The present school-house stands on the forks of the old road from Westfield to Rahway, and there being no church in this township it is used for religious meetings and Sabbath-schools. Tradition says that there was a school-house near this locality before the Revolutionary war, and that it was used by the Continental soldiers as a barracks; and it is said that before the close of the war in 1780 the building was burned by the Hessians while they were on their way to Westfield. The present building is the fourth that has been built for school purposes in the district.

Manufacturing Interests.—ESSEX FELTING MILLS.—In Clark township, which is sufficiently near Rahway to regard it as local territory, is a manufacturing establishment—the only one of its kind in New Jersey, though there are several in New York City and one or more in Brooklyn, N. Y., and one in Bradford, Pa.—engaged in the production of felt goods and employing a force of two hundred workmen. It is situated on the banks of the Rahway River, only about a mile above the city water-works. The building is on the site of an old mill built a century ago, "where grain was ground, supplying the neighborhood also with woolen yarn." Part of this mill was then used as a woolen-mill.

Philip Trussler for several years had a bleaching and calico print-works, but in 1845 part of the building was destroyed by fire. In 1847, after the property had become nearly worthless, William Bloodgood, Esq., of New York, purchased it, and at a large outlay of money the building (what was left of it) was repaired, and other larger buildings were added for the manufacture of felt goods, started by William E.

Bloodgood, at first on a small scale, at a time the business was comparatively new in this country. The business rapidly increased. On July 4, 1869, the main building of the factory was entirely destroyed by fire, but immediately rebuilt.

The firm at present conducting the business has been organized about six years, and is composed of Mr. W. S. Taylor and William Bloodgood, Jr. A mill has stood on the site of the present works, however, for more than one hundred years. The various mills, with the residences of the two proprietors and the tenements occupied by the workmen and their families, cover an area of several acres of ground. The mills are located on low land quite near the banks of the river, while the dwellings and a village store owned by the firm are situated on the higher ground that rises pleasantly above the banks of the stream. Felt goods of all descriptions are produced here, and the annual production of the mills is at least two million square yards of feltings per year, and the firm pays out at least seventy-five thousand dollars per year in wages to the operatives.

Besides these mills the firm has a factory at the corner of West Broadway and Franklin Street, in New York City, where about one hundred girls are employed. The warehouse and principal office of the firm is at No. 8 Thomas Street, New York.

A visitor to the mills who has no previous knowledge of or acquaintance with the business carried on will be surprised when he is shown samples of the very numerous kinds of goods turned out. The output of the establishment includes feltings of the loosest and most fleecy texture, intended for the linings of gloves and other articles; those quite thin, but possessing great durability, intended for table- or piano-covers, of the most beautiful shades of colors; goods of dark navy-blue shade or the numerous tints of brown, intended for ladies' underskirts or petticoats, some of these articles being flounced and most elaborately embroidered with silk thread, or ornamented with printed designs of various patterns; the thicker grades of goods, white and colored, used for the manufacture of chest-protectors, up to the heaviest, which are used for polishing purposes on brass or marble. Felting is also used largely for upholstery purposes, and the visitor is shown elegant shades of brown designed for the manufacture of lambrequins, etc. Felting, too, is largely employed by piano-makers for covering the hammers that strike upon the metal wires stretched in the iron frame within the case or body of the instrument, and which produces the tones, and also for covering the under side of the keys in the manual or key-board of the instrument.

The establishment also turns out some goods for the manufacture of gentlemen's caps, but not at present for hats.

This firm manufactures all the saddle-cloths of the Spencer patent that are used by the government, paying a royalty for the right to manufacture. In these

ESSEX FELTINE MILLS.
W. S. TAYLOR & W. BLOODGOOD, JR.,
NEAR FAIRWAY, N. J.

Office, No. 8 Thomas Street, New York.

cloths the thickness of the fabric is graduated according to the particular part of the saddle that is most worn.

On the river a short distance below these mills, near the ice-houses, is another dam of stone and a fine water-privilege. We are informed that the proprietors of a manufacturing establishment now located in Vermont have lately been examining the same, with a view of buying it; but we cannot say certainly that the parties can be induced to settle here, though we sincerely wish they could be. The cost of help, we are informed, is about the same in Vermont as here, but the cost of transporting manufactured goods to the New York market from Rahway is very much less than it is from the Green Mountain State.

HECLA POWDER-MILLS.—Near Bloodgood's factory are located the mills of the Hecla Powder Company, whose principal office is at No. 57 Broadway, New York. This company is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and has a paid-up capital of one hundred thousand dollars. The works, located near Rahway, have a capacity equal to any in the country. Hecla powder is a dynamite for blasting purposes, composed of nitro-glycerine so "solidified" by a chemical process as to render it perfectly safe in handling and transportation. It is, chemically, entirely different from all other explosive compounds. It is from three to five times as strong as ordinary blasting powder, and the most economical explosive in use for sandstone and limestone quarries, all medium hard rock, coal-mines, bank blasting, tunneling, shaft-work, railroad contracts, etc. Charles A. Morse, superintendent.

CHAPTER LVII.

FANWOOD TOWNSHIP.

Boundaries, etc.—This township was set off from Westfield in 1877. The first election took place in the spring of 1878. It is bounded as follows: On the west by Somerset County, and northwest by Green Brook, being the line from New Providence township, on the northeasterly course passing through the late Wesley Roll property to Willow Grove on a straight line, and southerly by Clark and Raritan townships, Robinson's Creek being part of the boundary line until the Terrill road is reached, which is the line dividing Plainfield city limits, thence on a straight line to Green Brook, the place of beginning.

Natural Features.—The surface of this township is generally level, except on the west and northwest, which comprises what is known as the First Mountain. The soil a clay loam, well cultivated and productive. Within two miles of the plains a bed of carbonate of lime was discovered in which are metallic appearances, supposed to be gold and silver, but which, having been tested, shows only the deceptive pyrites.

On the west and the northwest of this township is Green Brook, being the boundary line from New Providence township. Its head is in Felt Lake, where it is fed by living springs. On the extreme southerly part of Fanwood is Robinson's Brook, a living stream, running through to Raritan township, feeding the farms with water, and making it very desirable for dairies, cattle, etc.

Early Settlers.—The name of Scotch Plains is derived from the nationality of its original settlers. In the year 1684 a number of Scotch emigrants, chiefly persons of education and distinction at home, landed at Anuboy, and started back into the woods to select a suitable location for a new settlement. Arriving at the foot of the First Mountain, they proceeded to take possession of the tract of land including the whole of what is now occupied by Scotch Plains and Plainfield. Some of these pioneers, among whom we find the names of Barclay, Gordon, Forbes, and Fullerton, were interested as proprietors of the province, and became afterwards well known as officers connected with the government. Attracted by the inviting character, both of soil and climate, the Associates of Elizabethtown on the east and the residents of Piscataway on the south began before many years to push out their settlements in this direction. In or about the year 1689 the families of William Darby, Recompense Stanbery, John Lambert, John Dennis, John Stanbery, Henry Crosby, Michael Parse or Pierce, John Sutton, Jr., Isaac Manning, Mary Bodwell, Sarah De Camp, Samuel Doty or Doughty, Joseph Drake, James Miller, Abraham Hampton, John Blackford, Joseph Randolph, William Cole, Peter Willcoxie or Willcox, and a few others who came afterwards, whose names are now known in this township at the present time: Mash or Marsh, Dolbear, Terry, Terrill, Squires, Hunter, Miller, Pearson, Roll, Frazer or Frazee, and Maxwells.

We infer that in religious sentiment the first inhabitants of this town were mainly Baptist, as they attended this church, which was situated at Piscataway town, some nine miles from this village, and until 1742, when their church was organized.

Civil Officers.

TOWN CLERKS.

Thomas J. Nicholl, 1878-79. | J. A. Baker, 1880-82.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

C. W. L. Martine, 1878, 1880-82. | Srites M. Parse, 1879.

ASSESSORS.

John L. Darby, 1878, 1881. | Tapjan Townsend, appointed in
Samuel M. Ball, 1877. | 1879 in Ball's place.
John Robison, 1880, 1882.

COLLECTORS.

George Squier, 1878-79. | William Hetfield, 1880-82.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Joseph Clark, 1878. | George R. Nicholl, 1880.
C. A. Smith, 1872.

INSPECTORS OF ELECTION.

Benjamin Connett, 1878-80.
William Thorn, 1878.
Daniel H. Terry, 1879-81.

Charles H. French, 1881-82.
Edward Miller, 1882.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

Levi Darby, 1878.
Jacob D. French, 1878.
Joseph A. Patterson, 1878, 1882.
Isaac Lambert, 1878.
Sileas M. Parse, 1878.
Lewis W. Miller, 1879-81.

Henry C. Randolph, 1879-80.
John J. Marsh, 1879-81.
Daniel S. Scudder, 1882.
William C. Stanbery.
John L. Darby, 1880.

JUDGES OF ELECTION.

Richard H. Nodyne, 1878.
W. D. Johnston, 1879-80.

George R. Nicholls, 1881-82.

Census Report.—Number of inhabitants in township: Males, 262; females, 256; total, 518; and about 325 in the village of Scotch Plains.

Schools.—From the early settlement of this part of Westfield (now Fanwood) township the general sentiment of the inhabitants has been decidedly in favor of education, and has been active in operating free schools throughout the township. The earliest record of teachers is as follows:

"William Cole (son of William Cole) was a surveyor and schoolmaster, and was known as 'Master Cole.' He and his wife, Elizabeth Williamson, lived where his father did, and had 'eight children.'" Mr. Coles was one of the first masters, and organized a general school in Scotch Plains, where he taught for a number of years.¹

"The Jackson school-house, situated on the Terral road, was until a few years regularly opened as a district school, and some of the best teachers that could be found were employed. Cooper, Parse, Foster, Stites, W. H. Cleaver, and James D. Cleaver taught there as well as in the academy in the village. There had also been established in 1814 a school district in the neighborhood of Lambert's Mills, and designated the Willow Grove School-house. Andrew H. Clark, Cutter Dolbear, Isaac H. Pierson, Jotham Williams, Mr. — Coles, Andrew Rogers, Christopher Denman, 1825; Frazee Coles, Benjamin Little, 1833; Isaac Coriell, 1842, were teachers. Since then there has been built a neat frame building, and the district is now known as District No. 11, with sixty scholars on the roll. The old academy at Scotch Plains has given place to a neat frame building costing seven thousand dollars on the principal street. This district (No. 14) has about two hundred and sixty boys and girls enrolled. The teachers have been Chauncey Ripley, S. A. Day, Mr. Seamon, O. M. Putnam, and G. P. Towne, the present principal.

"The trustees with their accustomed zeal and liberality are doing much to enhance the efficiency of their schools, and it is pleasing to note that much has been done in the line of repairing outbuildings, beautifying the grounds, etc. The schools are taking a high stand in the country as to grade and proficiency."

¹ Little's Passaic Valley, p. 80.

Churches.—This township has three church organizations, Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, and Protestant Episcopal Churches, of which the Baptist is the oldest, having been organized in 1742. From this church was the First Baptist Church in New York organized, many of its members having removed from Scotch Plains, taking their certificates from this old historic church, to that city.

BAPTIST CHURCH.—The first movement on record for the dissemination of Baptist views was made in 1742. A subscription paper for the building of a "First-Day Baptist Meeting-House" on the east side of Green River, bearing date the 4th day of August in that year, is still in possession of the church. This movement originated with members of the church living at Scotch Plains, and the next year the first church was erected. The first members appear to have been John Dennis, William Darby, John Lambert, Recompence Stanbery, John Stanbery, John Sutton, Jr., Henry Crosby, Isaac Manning, Mary Brodwell, Mary Dennis, Tibiah Sutton, Mary Green, Catherine Manning, Sarah DeCamp, and Sarah Perce or Pierce.

Soon after the organization of this church Benjamin Miller, a licentiate, was called to the pastorate, and ordained Feb. 13, 1748. Mr. Miller was born in the neighborhood of Piscataway, about the year 1715, and during his connection with this church, of over thirty-four years (which ended only with his life), nearly three hundred members were added. He died Nov. 14, 1781, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. A plain brownstone tablet a few feet north of where the old church stood covers his remains:

"In Memory

of

REV. BENJAMIN MILLER,
Died Nov. 14, 1781,

After a pastorate of thirty-four years of this church.

"If grace and worth and usefulness
Could mortals screen from death's arrest,
Miller had never lain in dust,
Though characters inferior must."

The next pastor, Rev. William Van Horne, came Nov. 7, 1784, but it was not until Dec. 15, 1785, that he entered fully upon his labors, his salary being fixed at $250, with the use of parsonage and lot of fifteen acres and firewood. He remained until September, 1807, nearly twenty-two years, resigning on account of failing health.

July 1, 1808, Rev. Thomas Brown took charge of the church. Here he remained for more than twenty years of constant service, which bore their testimony to his faithfulness, nearly two hundred being added to this church.

The Rev. John Rogers succeeded to the vacant charge about the middle of August, 1829. He was a native of Ireland, where he was born in 1783. He remained until June, 1841, when he resigned to take charge of the feeble church at Perth Amboy. The SEELEY'S PAPER-MILLS.

The extensive paper-mills now known as "The Seeley Mills" are situated about two miles from Fanwood Station, upon the New Jersey Central Railroad, and on the lines of two counties, Somerset and Union. About the year 1763 a grist-mill was here established, and for many years was known as the Fall Mill, in the notch above Scotch Plains. A large business was done for the neighboring farmers. A Mr. Wilcox owned the mill and did the work until Charles Edwards and John Clark, under the firm-name of Edwards & Clark, became the owners in 1851; but in 1853 the present proprietor, Mr. Edmond A. Seeley, moved from Troy, N. Y., and has since carried on an extensive business. The main building is 42 by 42 feet, while the other two buildings are 40 by 60 feet and 30 by 40 feet. The Green Brook, fed by springs passing through the gorge of the mountain, together with steam-power, gives them abundant facilities for turning out over seven hundred tons of pasteboards per annum. Mr. Seeley employs between twenty-five and thirty men, as well as a number of teams.

The homestead now occupied by Mr. Seeley was erected by him in 1876, and is on the right, above the mill property. The grounds are beautifully laid out, and with the running streamlets from the rocky sides of the hills down into a lake of water covered with water lilies, the natural growth of timber, the well-kept grounds, and neatness of the mill property, make it a place enchanting to those desiring mountain scenery. This property is valued at over one hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Edmond A. Seeley was born at Stockport, Columbia Co., N. Y., and from his early childhood has been connected with the paper business. He is well known in the locality in which he resides as a philanthropist, and stands high in the community as one who may ever be found at the head of all enterprises which pertain to the public good in general.

RESIDENCE OF E. A. SEELEY,
SCOTCH PLAINS, N. J.

E. A. SEELEY'S PAPER MANUFACTORY,
SCOTCH PLAINS, N. J.

church regretted his removal, he having been an excellent pastor, nearly two hundred having been baptized into the fellowship of this church during his ministry. He died at Paterson, N. J., Aug. 30, 1849. The fifth who was called to the pastorate of this church, the Rev. John Wivell, was born in England, and came to New York in 1840. His great preaching talents and energy attracted large numbers to this church, and the membership during his pastorate rose to two hundred, the highest point it has ever attained. May 2, 1844, Rev. William E. Locke became the pastor, and remained at Scotch Plains until Sept. 1, 1849, when he withdrew from this denomination and joined the Presbyterian Church.

In 1844 this church withdrew from the New York Association (whither it had gone from the Philadelphia Association in 1792), and united with the East New Jersey Association, where it has since remained.

The next pastor, Rev. Joshua E. Rue, was born at Hightstown, N. J., Oct. 5, 1817. After a settlement of nearly three years at Sandy Ridge he removed to Scotch Plains, at the beginning of the year 1850. Like all his predecessors, he soon had the joy of welcoming new-born souls into the kingdom. A pleasant condition of spiritual awakening succeeded, and twenty-seven in all followed the Lord in his ordinances. But sorrow follows close upon the track of joy. In the midst of his work he was smitten by disease, and for many weeks life was despaired of. He was partially restored, however, just in time to follow the remains of his universally beloved companion to the grave. Thus deeply stricken and with health ruined for life he resigned his charge, after a service of just four years. Since that time he has held agencies for the Home Missions and other societies, and is now a cotton-planter in North Carolina. During his pastorate repairs were made upon the church property. The number of members in 1854 was one hundred and forty-six.

Rev. James F. Brown, D.D., son of Thomas Brown, the third pastor of this church, was born at Scotch Plains July 4, 1819. For many years he had resided at Gainesville, Ala., but leaving the South had become successor of his father in the pastoral office at Great Valley, Pa., in 1846, and in 1854 he became pastor of this church. He was pastor here for six years; during that time continuous revivals, many were added by baptism to the church, and at this time many of those are strong pillars of the church.

Rev. William Luke was the next called to the pastorate of this church. He was born in the town of Esopus, N. Y., Nov. 27, 1827; baptized at Poughkeepsie March 3, 1843, and licensed by the First Baptist Church of that city. He entered Madison University in 1848, and from there to Rochester, where he graduated in 1854. He accepted at once a call from St. John, N. B., but in December, 1860, he came to this place. During his pastorate here the Westfield Baptist Church was organized and a number were dismissed to that infant church. Mr. Luke was popular among the people, and when he retired from this church in 1867 it was lamented by his congregation. He died at Wappinger's Falls, N. Y., May 16, 1869; his last words were, "The victory is mine." The next pastor, Rev. Joseph C. Buchanan, entered on his work at Scotch Plains July 1, 1867, and was ordained to the gospel ministry October 1st of that year. A pleasant state of religious feeling met the new pastor at the outset, and soon the church entered into extra services and nearly fifty were baptized. During his pastorate the new church was erected. Mr. Buchanan left in the fall of 1878, and Rev. Uriah B. Guiscard, who came from Brewster's, New York State, accepted the invitation of this church to become their pastor and removed here, and is now preaching to good congregations. The membership is one hundred and forty-three. The following are the official officers: William Archibald, David Hand, Jonathan A. Coles, Thomas Mead, Thomas Cleaver, church clerks; O. M. Putnam, clerk of trustees.

The first house of worship (already alluded to) was erected in 1743 on the site of the second one. Its size and construction are not known. The congregation having increased rapidly under Mr. Miller's preaching, it was soon found necessary to secure more ample accommodations. Accordingly in the early part of 1759 the church was much enlarged and the roof and sides covered with cedar shingles and other improvements made. The seats were sold to pay the costs of these repairs. This house stood without further important alterations until the winter of 1816-17, when it was totally destroyed. Subscription papers were at once circulated, most of the necessary funds were easily secured, and a contract signed for the building of a new house, to be finished by December 1st of that year. This house was built in the best manner, thirty-nine feet by forty-eight feet in size, with galleries on three sides, roof and sides, like the former building, covered with cedar shingles, and cost two thousand four hundred and ninety-two dollars. Some twenty years ago the large windows on either side of the pulpit were closed up and a vestibule cut off from the main roof in front. In 1866 a belfry and bell were added.

The growing wants of the congregation called for the building of a new edifice, and in 1870 the ground was broken, and in 1871, just one year, this beautiful Gothic church was completed. It stands on a fine corner near the old one, and a new avenue passing on the side and the parsonage on the opposite, making this one of the finest church properties in the county. The material is pressed brick with Ohio stone and white brick trimmings, clerestory, and transept corner tower, and spire one hundred and twenty feet in height. The size of main part is fifty feet by one hundred and ten feet, which includes the lecture-room in the rear, leaving the main audience-room fifty feet by seventy feet, with recess pulpit. The cost, including furniture and organ, exclusive of ground, thirty-five thousand dollars. Surrounding this historic church is the burial-ground, where are laid to rest the former members of this church.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—For a number of years the few families of Methodists were accustomed to worship at the surrounding towns, Plainfield and Westfield, with occasional supplies from those churches preaching at the Jackson school-house and private dwellings. It was not until the fall of 1867 that the Rev. William Day, of Plainfield, gave them regular services, organizing some sixteen members into a class. Immediately efforts were made to have regular services the following year, when a supply was sent from Drew Seminary, at Madison, N. J. Lots were secured on the Springfield road, now called Mountain Avenue; Rev. J. A. Kingsbury took charge of the society, and in 1871-72 the building was completed at a cost of about six thousand dollars. Sittings, three hundred and fifty. The following pastors have been sent by the Conference: Rev. J. A. Kingsbury, Rev. C. E. Treat, Rev. Mr. Cherrington, Rev. John Davis, Rev. Mr. Coles, Rev. Mr. Owens, Rev. P. P. Harrower, and Rev. Mr. Warner. The present membership is forty-five.

ALL SAINTS' PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—An effort has been made for some years to build a church; occasional services have been held in the Town Hall, and at the present time arrangements are being made for a new church, to be known as All Saints' Protestant Episcopal Church at Scotch Plains, Rev. Charles Sykes, rector; the new edifice, Gothic in style, to cost about five thousand five hundred dollars, with three hundred sittings. Fine lots on Park Avenue have been secured. There are about thirty-five communicants. The trustees are Charles Kyte, chairman; R. B. Duckinch, George E. More, John T. Patinon; George Kyte, clerk and treasurer.

Burial-Ground.—There are a few private plots, but have for a number of years been closed up, no more being buried in them. The public burying-ground surrounding the Baptist Church dates at an early day. Here rest generation after generation. Here lie the dust of those pioneers who cut the timber and cleared the land in this beautiful valley. The ground comprises some three acres. Many of the graves are without headstones, and they may be those of the first laid away. A few of the stones are broken, and the earliest ones cannot be now copied. Among the earliest records is of one of the first settlers:

"Here lye ye body of Joseph Lambert, who died Nove'm the 8th, 1756, in the 26th year of his age."

"Here lies Entr'd ye Body of RECOMPENCE STANBERRY, ESQ., who died May the 20th, A. D., 1777, in the 67th year of his age."

"Here lies our friend in mould'ring dust,
When Christ will raise to life we trust;
But Mourning say his loss how great
To Family, to church, and state."

"This stone is erected to the memory of MARGERET, formerly the Wife of RECOMPENCE STANBERRY, ESQ., Late Wife of Capt. John DARBY, who died JANU'Y 15th, 1812, in the 83 year of her age."

"Here lies ye BODY of DEAC'N WILLIAM DARBY, deceased Feb'r'y ye 26, 1775, in ye 83 year of his age."

"Here lies ye Body of Mary, wife of Deac'o William Darby, deceased April ye 13th, A. D. 1761, in ye 62 year of HER AGE."

"IN MEMORY of JOSEPH SEARING, who departed this life June the 7th, 1790, in the 77th year of his age."

Here on earth I have sojourned
This 3 score year and 10, and 7 years I have drank the cup of sorrow, grief, and pain.

But oh the joy that may appear,
The messenger draws nigh, cries friend I'll aid you too of Blest eternity."

"In memory of Aona, Wife of Joseph Searing, who died June ye 30th, 1761, in ye 47th year of her AGE."

"Here rest the remains of CÆSAR, an AFRICAN, who died Feb'r'y 7th, 1806. Aged 104 years. He was for more than half a century a worthy member of the church in this Place, and closed his life in the confidence of a Christian. His numerous friends have erected this stone as a tribute of respect to his numerous virtue and piety."

"When the last trump shall bid the dead arise,
When flames shall roll away the earth and skies,
While atheists, kings, and Infidels turn pale,
And every hope but Christ mankind shall fail,
CÆSAR will soar from nature's funeral pile
To bask forever in his Saviour's smile."

"Here lies ye Body of Peter Willcoucks, Jan'r, who departed this life Feb'r'y ye 27, Anno Domini, 1764, In ye 46th year of his age. E. P."

"Here lye ye Body of ABIGAIL, Wife of JOSEPH HALSEY, Junr, who died March ye 16th, 1777, Aged 21 year, 1 mon's, And 4 days."

"A tablet erected to the memory of Emily, wife of Rev. I. E. Rue, Pastor. She died Nov. 8, 1853. Age 30 years, 8 mo., 23 d'ys."

"To one of the first Physicians and official Member of the Baptist Church, Dr. Corra Osborn, Born May 12, 1796. Died June 7, 1868. For nearly 50 yrs a member and Deacon of Scotch Plains Baptist Church."

Inns and Inn-keepers.—The two public-houses were early called stage-houses, and one of them afterwards was called Sutton's Hotel, which was one of the popular resorts one hundred years ago. John Sutton was one of the early settlers on the Plains, as it was called, and opened this house of entertainment for man and beast. After his death Samuel Rope, in 1814, kept it as a stage-house, and it was known as the Swiftsure Stage-house about 1825. James Fazer opened the house for a short time in 1826. After he left, others took charge of it.

The old tavern stand on the forks of the road bears date over one hundred years ago. Some of the first who settled in this village had charge of this public-house, which was one of the popular inns and well known throughout the country. It was a popular resort in the summer for many desiring to live for a few weeks in the country, and eventually took the name of a summer boarding-house and inn. The following is a correct list of former keepers: J. Stanbery, 1799; J. Miller, 1818; Sanford Hicks, 1819; Thomas Burlochs, 1820; — Cran, 1824; Jonathan Hetfield, 1827; P. B. Davis, 1829; W. H. Cleaver, 1830; Thomas T. Barr, 1841; Abraham Nelson, 1844; Antone De Bou, 1853; Thomas Paff, 1879.

Post-Office.—The first post-office was granted in 1835 to James Frazer, and in 1847 V. S. Frazer was appointed. Osborn and Wilson held the position until the present postmaster, Norman Dunn, was appointed in 1871. For many years prior to 1835 the mail and newspapers were brought by the stages which passed two or three times a week through the village.

Leir Darby
" "

THOMAS LEE.

Physicians.—For many years the village was supplied by Dr. John Craig, of Plainfield, and Dr. Corra Osborn, of Westfield. A few of the medical profession have resided here. Dr. Bergan came in 1872; Dr. H. C. Fithian, 1879 (he stayed but a short time); Dr. G. H. Chuont in 1880; Dr. Abraham Coles, J. A. Coles, and Dr. F. W. Westcote.

Villages and Hamlets.—SCOTCH PLAINS.—This village contains three churches, school-house, two taverns, three groceries and dry-goods stores, two blacksmith- and wheelwright-shops, fur-factory, paper-factory, drugs and medicines, one shoemaker, two butchers. It is pleasantly situated on the Springfield, Rahway, Westfield and Plainfield roads, and has on the northwest the range of Blue Hills, which gives to this valley a picturesque appearance. There are about three hundred and twenty-five in population; a number of fine residences line the fine avenues, occupied generally by business men from the city of New York. Many of the residences are being improved and giving way to neat homes for new-comers to this beautiful village.

FANWOOD is the name given by the then president, John Taylor Johnson, in 1867, to the new depot on the line of the Central Railroad. Here are located the lumber and coal yards, doing considerable business throughout the county. There are about three hundred and fifty acres belonging to the Central Land Improvement Company, called "Fanwood Park," with serpentine roads well kept in order, offering great inducements to those in search of a desirable location.

ALTON, a small hamlet in the southerly portion of this township, has a school-house, store, blacksmith-shop and tavern. It is about two and a half miles from the city of Plainfield, and contains about twenty houses. The residents of the neighborhood are mostly occupied in raising produce and early vegetables for the neighboring towns. The early settlers were Terrys, Connets, Pain, Potter, Lambert, Little, Hetfield, and Randolphs. The soil is very productive, and the farms are kept in good order and make a fine appearance.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

THOMAS LEE.

The Lee family were of Scotch origin. Thomas Lee, grandfather of our subject, was born April 15, 1755, in the vicinity of Rahway, N. J. His first wife, Miss Littell, bore him one child, whose name was Gershom Lee, and died a few months afterwards. Mr. Lee, being but a young man at this time, formed the acquaintance of one Miss Susan Tucker, whom he married, and by this union the following children were born, viz.: Elizabeth, Sallie, Moses, Lydia, Samuel, the father of our subject, Frazee, Esther, and Phebe. Thomas, the son of Samuel Lee and Susan W. Frazee, was born Nov. 12, 1831, and is the youngest in a family of three, having one brother, Frazee, and one sister, Ann. Mr. Lee is living on the old homestead farm where he was born. His father died Dec. 23, 1857, when Thomas took charge of the farm, which was divided among the three children. Here he still lives to enjoy the comforts of life. Mr. Lee was married to Susan F. Melick, daughter of Isaac Melick, Feb. 13, 1861. To them have been born the following children, viz.: Emma F., Carrie R., Samuel F., and Georgetta, all of whom are living at home. Mr. Lee is a Democrat in politics, but has never taken any active part therein. He is one of the substantial farmers of his township, having a beautiful farm about two miles south of Fanwood station, containing between two and three hundred acres of land, which is in a high state of cultivation.

LEVI DARBY.

His great-grandfather, John Darby, was one of the early settlers of old Westfield township, whose descendants have been residents of the same township and vicinity since. His grandfather, John Darby, resided at Scotch Plains, where he owned several hundred acres of land, now in part occupied by the village and by the Central Railroad of New Jersey. He was captain of a company, and served in Col. Recompece Stansbury's regiment during the Revolutionary war, and died in 1823, at about the age of seventy years. His wife, a sister of Col. Stansbury, survived him several years, and bore him the following children: Recompece, died at Tuckertown, in South Jersey; John, resided at Scotch Plains, where he died; Levi, also died at the same place; Catherine, unmarried; Margaret, became the wife of William H. Cleaver, of Newark, and is the mother of ex-Judge Cleaver, receiver of the city of Newark; Aaron, father of our subject; William, died in Jerseyville, Ill.; Joseph, was a merchant at Scotch Plains, where he died.

Aaron Darby was born at Scotch Plains, June 1, 1797; married, June 4, 1821, Elizabeth, daughter of Deacon Zopher Hetfield, of the same place, who died Jan. 15, 1842, aged forty-six years. After his marriage Aaron Darby resided for a time at Scotch Plains, but in 1829 purchased some seventy acres of land where the subject of this sketch, Levi, his only son, now resides, now in the township of Fanwood. Here he spent the remainder of his active business life, a farmer, and in a quiet, unostentatious way followed agricultural pursuits. He died on his farm, March 15, 1862.

Levi Darby was born Dec. 7, 1822, and after reaching the age of eighteen years took charge of his father's farm. He married, Feb. 12, 1843, Frances M., daughter of Job and Rachel De Camp, of Rahway, who was born Sept. 26, 1825. Their children are Aaron; John L.; Loretta, deceased, was the wife of Peter Quackenbush, of Paterson, N. J.; Smith B., deceased; James B., deceased; Levi Douglass; Frank and Fannie (twins), the former deceased.

In 1859, Mr. Darby erected a substantial brick residence on the homestead which he inherited from his father, and has added also by purchase seventy-five acres of adjoining land, formerly belonging to Levi and John Frazee.

In addition to the cultivation of his farm, he has since 1853 manufactured on his premises cider brandy and apple whisky in considerable quantities.

The Darbys were formerly members of the old Whig party, and Mr. Darby is now a Republican. He was one of the Township Committee for several years, and officiated in that capacity at the time of the erection of Fanwood from parts of Westfield and Plainfield townships.

Although Mr. Darby had limited educational opportunities in boyhood, he gained practical ideas of business, and is one of the representative and substantial business men of his township.

JOHN LAMBERT.

The Lamberts are among the pioneer families of Union County, and of English origin, our subject representing the sixth generation in this country. Robert Lambert emigrated from England some time prior to the year 1673. John Lambert, his son, settled at Willow Grove, Westfield township, and his son, James Lambert, was the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, was taken prisoner, and died in the city of New York. His wife was Elizabeth Aiken. His son, James Lambert, born in 1755, married Hannah Littell in the year 1774. Their son, Simeon Lambert, married Frelove Littell, who was born in 1804. John Lambert, son of Simeon, born in 1824, was brought up on the farm of his father at Willow Grove, whose united occupation was that of farming, milling, and fruit distilling, mills for which purpose were erected about the year 1803 or 1804, a business which John Lambert now successfully conducts. John Lambert was united in marriage in 1854 to Susan Ann, daughter of Isaac, and granddaughter of Zopher Hetfield. To them have been born ten children,—viz.: Ira C., born 1855; James B., born 1857; Simeon W., born 1860; Laura, born 1862; Julia J., born 1864; Isaac H., born 1866; Pheba H., born 1868; Ada, born 1870; Anna, born 1872; and Clarence, born 1874.

In politics Mr. Lambert is a Democrat, though he takes no active part.

His early education was limited to four winter terms, but notwithstanding this he has become a thoroughly successful business man, and is surrounded with home comforts.

John Lambert

MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

CHAPTER LVIII.

ORGANIZATION OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

THE first steps towards civil organization in East Jersey were taken by the Dutch of New Netherlands. In 1661 they established the jurisdiction of the incorporated town of Bergen over all the outlying and contiguous plantations on the west side of Hudson River. These were embraced between the Hudson and the Hackensack, and constituted all the settlements in East Jersey under the Dutch rule. The courts at Bergen, under the supreme authority of the director-general and Council at Manhattan, were sufficient to meet all the requirements of local administration over so limited a district of country, and were continued without change or addition for more than a decade after the English had come into possession of the country.

In the mean time a sufficient population had settled about Newark Bay, along the Passaic, the Raritan, and southward of the latter to the Highlands of Navesink to foreshadow, in outline at least, the necessity for erecting the four original counties of East Jersey. As yet the province of New Jersey had not been divided, but the Legislature in session for the whole colony in 1675 enacted that "Bergen and the adjacent Plantations about them be a County," that "Elizabethtown and Newark make a County," that "Woodbridge and Piscataqua be a County," and that the "two towns of Nevysink make a County."¹ The "two towns" referred to were Middletown and Shrewsbury; they are often alluded to in old acts and records as "the two Navesink towns." By this act the incipient counties were neither named nor their limits defined. A more definite division was made seven years later, when (the province having been divided into East and West Jersey) the proprietors of the eastern division established a government over their portion of the territory under Governor Barclay, Thomas Rudyard being deputy. Having exclusive jurisdiction over their territory, the Eastern proprietors now divided it into counties as they saw fit. The West Jersey proprietors had previously adopted a very different mode of division, having passed an act by the "General Free² Assembly" in 1681 dividing the province into "Tenths." "This was in accordance with a plan prescribed in the 'Concessions and Agreements' of the proprietors, set forth in 1676, which provided that West Jersey should be divided into 'One Hundred Parts,' which were again to be divided into 'ten equal parts or shares called Tenths';"³ and in 1683 a portion of these Tenths was represented in the General Assembly, held that year at Burlington, the members being designated as from the 'first Tenth,' (being the town of Burlington), the 'second Tenth,' and 'Salem Tenth' (being the town of Salem). At this session commissioners were appointed for the dividing and regulating of lands, and another Tenth was represented on this commission under the diffusive title of 'The other Tenth.' In a session of the Assembly held in September, 1685, another Tenth was represented, entitled the 'Fourth Tenth.' At some time between 1685 and 1692, Burlington, Salem, and Gloucester were erected into Counties, and in the latter year Cape May was added to the number."

The General Assembly of East Jersey, convened at Elizabethtown in 1682, passed an act erecting the four counties of Bergen, Essex, Middlesex, and Monmouth. The reason for the erection of these counties is given in the preamble, which says, "Having taken into consideration the necessity of dividing the province into respective counties for the better governing and settling Courts in the same, be it enacted by this General Assembly, and the Authority thereof, that this Province be divided into four Counties, as follows:

"Bergen County to contain all the settlements between Hudson's River and Hackensack River, beginning at Constable's Hook, and so to extend to the uppermost bounds of the Province Northward between said Rivers.

"Essex, and the County thereof, to contain all the settlements between the West side of Hackensack River and the parting line between Woodbridge and Elizabeth-Towne, and so to extend Westward and Northward to the utmost bounds of the Province.

"Middlesex County to begin from the parting line between Essex County and Woodbridge line, concil, and Burgesses of the General Assembly of the Province of New Caesarea or New Jersey." After 1682 the title was simply "The General Assembly." In West Jersey it was styled "The General Free Assembly" from 1681 till 1685, after which it was entitled "The Governor, Council, and Representatives of the Province of West Jersey."—Leaming and Spicer.

² Leaming and Spicer, p. 383.

¹ Leaming and Spicer, p. 96.

² In East Jersey from 1664 till 1682 the title of the legislative body was "The General Assembly," the full title being "The Governor, Coun-taining Woodbridge and Piscataway, and all the plantations on both sides of the Raritan River as far as Chesquake Harbour Eastward, extending South West to the Division Line of the Province, and North West to the utmost bounds of the Province.

"Monmouth County to begin at the Westward bounds of Middlesex County, containing Middle-town and Shrewsbury, and to extend Westward, Southward, and Northward to the extreme Bounds of the Province."¹

In March, 1688, an act of Assembly was passed setting off Somerset from Middlesex, for the reasons, as given in the preamble, that "the uppermost part of Raritan River is settled by persons whom in their husbandry and manuring of their land are forced upon quite different ways and methods from the other farmers and inhabitants of the County of Middlesex, because of the frequent floods that carry away their fences on their meadows, the only arable lands they have, and so by consequence their interest is divided from the other inhabitants of the said County."² For many years, however, this division was nominal only; and in 1709-10, by an act of the Assembly,³ Somerset was continued "subjected to the jurisdiction of the courts and officers of Middlesex for the want of a competent number of inhabitants to hold courts and for juries." The same act also provided that "juries might be taken promiscuously from both or either of said counties." Courts continued to be held in Middlesex for the two counties as late as 1720, at which the surveyors of highways and constables for Somerset were appointed.⁴

Acts relating to the Boundaries of Middlesex.—On the 31st of January, 1709-10, an act was passed for determining the boundaries of the several counties. This act defines the boundaries of Middlesex as follows:

"The County of Middlesex begins at the mouth of the creek⁵ that parts the land of George Willocks and the land that was formerly Captain Andrew Bowne's, deceased; thence along the said Captain Andrew's line to the rear of the said land; thence upon a direct course to Warr's bridge on the brook where Thomas Smith did formerly live; thence upon a direct course to the southeast corner of Barclay's tract of land that lies near Matchiponix; thence to the most southernmost part of the said tract of land, including the whole tract of land in Middlesex County; thence upon the direct line to Sanpincek Bridge on the high road, including William Jones, William Story, Thomas Richman, and John Gnyberson, in Monmouth County; thence westerly along the said Aaron Robin's line and James Lawrence's line to the line of the eastern and western division aforesaid, including the said Robins and Lawrence in Monmouth County; thence northerly along the said line to Sanpincek Brook, being part of the bounds of the said Somerset County; thence following the line of Somerset and Essex Counties, and so to the Sound; and thence down the Sound to Amboy Point; and from thence to the creek where it first began."

March 15, 1713, in an "Act for settling the Bounds between Somerset, Middlesex, and Monmouth Counties," it is enacted

"That the boundary line between Somerset and Middlesex Counties shall be and begin where the road crosseth the Raritan at Inians ferry, and to run from thence along the said old road by Jedediah Higgins' house, leading towards the falls of the Delaware, so far as the eastern division of the province extends."

According to this act Somerset County extended down to what is now Abany Street, in the city of New Brunswick. "Inians ferry" was at the foot of this street, and "the old road by Jedediah Higgins' house, leading towards the falls of the Delaware," was the road through New Brunswick to Trenton and so on to Philadelphia. This road was then the boundary line between Somerset and Middlesex Counties as far west as the partition line between East and West Jersey.

Nov. 24, 1790, "An Act for altering and resettling part of the boundary line between the counties of Somerset and Middlesex" was passed, which enacted as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the middle of the main six rod road, as established by law, from the ferry to the city of New Brunswick, formerly called Inian's ferry, to the boundary line of the county of Hunterdon, on the road to Trenton, shall be the boundary line of those parts of the counties of Middlesex and Somerset which are on the south side of the river Raritan.

"SECTION 2. That the lands and tenements lying to the northward of the line hereinbefore established, and heretofore belonging to the county of Middlesex, shall be and are hereby annexed to the county of Somerset; and all the lands and tenements on the southward of said line, heretofore belonging to the County of Somerset, shall be and are hereby annexed to the County of Middlesex."

This act made the "middle" of the main six-rod road from New Brunswick to Trenton the boundary line between Middlesex and Somerset.

Nov. 28, 1822, a supplementary act was passed. In this

"the easterly bounds of the county of Middlesex are declared to be the middle or midway of the waters of the Sound, adjoining the same, to the middle of the channel, at the junction of the waters of the Sound with the waters of the Raritan River, to the eastward of the flat or shoal which extends from Amboy or Cole's Point, and thence to the mouth of Whale Creek, the beginning of the bounds of the counties of Middlesex and Monmouth."

March 29, 1855, "An Act to define that part of the division line between the counties of Middlesex and Somerset, lying between Kingston Bridge and Little Rocky Hill." This enacts that "A line commencing at a point in the centre of the Kingston bridge where the same crosses the Millstone river, and running easterly along the Princeton and Kingston branch turnpike to the forks of the old road leading to New Brunswick and said turnpike; thence along the centre of the old road leading to New Brunswick, the several courses thereof as the road now runs, until it strikes the present division at the top of Little Rocky Hill, be and is hereby constituted the division line between the said counties."

Feb. 6, 1858, the boundaries were again changed by an act of the Legislature, which says,—

"SECTION 1. From and after the passage of this act the boundary line between the counties of Somerset and Middlesex shall commence in the centre of the Franklin and Georgetown turnpike road, at the point where the said road intersects and forms the boundary line of the city of New

¹ Leaming and Spicer, p. 229.

² Ibid., p. 305.

³ Allison's Laws, p. 13.

⁴ Minutes County Court.

⁵ Whale Creek, called Chingarat Creek on the commissioners' map, 1769.

⁶ This was the Keith line, run in 1687; the Lawrence line was not run till 1743.

Brunswick, and runs thence along the centre of said turnpike road to William E. Barker's Ten Mile Run.

"SECTION 2. The inhabitants of North Brunswick and South Brunswick townships that may be set over to the township of Franklin, in Somerset County, by the passage of this act shall be liable to all laws and entitled to all benefits that the inhabitants of the aforesaid township of Franklin are subject or entitled to, and that the inhabitants of Franklin that may be set over to the townships of North and South Brunswick shall be liable to all the laws and entitled to all the benefits that the inhabitants of the aforesaid townships of North and South Brunswick, in the aforesaid county of Middlesex, are or may be entitled to."

By act of Feb. 22, 1838, part of Middlesex was set off, with a portion of the counties of Hunterdon and Burlington, to form the county of Mercer.

By act of March 8, 1851, the county of Middlesex was declared to extend over and include all the waters of the Sound between Staten Island and New Jersey lying south of Woodbridge Creek, and the waters of Raritan Bay lying westward of a line drawn from the light-house at Prince's Bay to the mouth of the Raritan, so far as the exclusive jurisdiction thereof is conceded to the State of New Jersey by virtue of the agreement set forth in the act entitled "An Act to Ratify and Confirm an Agreement made between the Commissioners appointed by the Governors of the respective States of New Jersey and New York."

By act of Feb. 16, 1860, a part of the county of Middlesex, in the township of Woodbridge, included within the limits of the city of Rahway, was annexed to Union County.

April 5, 1871, an act was passed annexing a portion of Plainfield to Piscataway, in Middlesex County.

Townships.—The first act dividing the counties into townships was passed in 1693. By this act Middlesex was divided into the "Corporation Town of Woodbridge," the "Township of Perth Amboy," and the "Township of Piscataway." It is our purpose to give in this place only a brief summary or outline of the early or initial facts respecting these townships, and the points at which settlements were first made within their limits. This is all that will be necessary here, as each township has its separate and exhaustive history in another part of this work.

The town of Woodbridge was originally a tract six miles square. The township of Perth Amboy included, besides its present bounds, all the territory now comprised in the township of South Amboy. The limits of the township of Piscataway were much greater than either of the others, and far transcended their present bounds. It took in all the land from Woodbridge to the partition line between East and West Jersey, including the now existing towns of New Brunswick, Princeton, Cranbury, Spotswood, etc. It also embraced lands on the Millstone, at Rocky Hill, and Royse's patent, about what is now Roysefield.¹ The language of the act relative to the bounds of the townships originally constituting Middlesex County is as follows:

"In the county of Middlesex, the corporation town of Woodbridge, being bounded according to their charter, reserving what is therein reserved for Amboy Point. The township of Perth Amboy, including also all the land upon Chesqueak's Creek to the bounds of Monmouth County, and along the said bounds to the west branch of South River, and down the South River to Raritan, and down the Raritan River to Chesqueak's Creek. The township of Piscataway includes all the land from the corporation town bounds of Woodbridge, on Raritan River, thence north to Woodbridge stake, thence west to Cedar Brook, thence down the said brook to Bound Brook, thence down the Bound Brook to Raritan River, thence down the river to Woodbridge bounds, therein including also all the land from the mouth of the South River to the bounds of Somerset County, on Raritan River, and from thence to the partition line of the province; and along the partition line to Monmouth County, and thence along the line of Monmouth County to the west branch of South River, and down the said river to the mouth thereof."²

"As early as 1664 there were a few settlers at Woodbridge and Piscataway. Among the earliest of these were Benjamin Dunham and his wife, Elizabeth, who came from England in 1650, landing at the site of Perth Amboy and settling in Piscataway, where their son Edmond, afterwards the Rev. Edmond Dunham, was born in 1661, being, it is believed, the first child born of white parents in Piscataway. He was an influential Baptist clergyman, and preached in his native township from 1705 till 1734, when he was succeeded by his son, also a clergyman, Rev. Jonathan Dunham, who officiated from 1745 till 1777. 'In 1666, on the 21st of May, Governor Carteret agreed for the settling of two townships, called Woodbridge and Piscataway (upon a portion of the tract negotiated from Governor Nicolls in 1664 by Daniel Denton and his associates), with John Pike, Daniel Pierce, and Abraham Topping, who had been induced by agents of Carteret to come from New England; and a deed was executed by him to them, Dec. 11, 1666, conveying "one moiety of the land from Raritan River to Rahway River, as far as the tide flows. . . ." Among these settlers from New England were the following, all of whom appear in the list of those to whom patents for land at Woodbridge were entered between 1669 and 1701, namely: Capt. John Pike (ancestor of Gen. Zebulon Montgomery Pike, killed at the battle of Queenstown in 1812), Thomas Bloomfield (one of whose descendants, Joseph Bloomfield, was afterwards Governor of New Jersey), Capt. John Bishop and John Bishop, Jr., Jonathan Haynes, Henry Jacques, Stephen Kent, George March, Abraham Tapping (Tappan), Elisha Isley, Hugh March, John Bloomfield, Samuel Moore, Nathaniel Webster, and John Isley."³

"By an indorsement on the deed by Carteret to Pike and his associates, made Dec. 3, 1667, Governor Carteret acknowledged the following persons as equal associates with him in the purchase, and it is said to be 'for the accommodating of the town called Woodbridge,' namely, Joshua Pierce, John Pike, John Bishop, Henry Jacques, Hugh Marsh, Stephen Kent,

² Leaming and Spicer, pp. 329, 330. Historical Paper by Charles D. Deshler.

³ Schedule vii, Eliz. Bill in Chancery. Coffin's Hist. of Newbury, p. 70. Deshler's Historical Paper. Dolly's Woodbridge.

¹ Elizabeth Bill in Chancery, p. 53. Whitehead's East Jersey, p. 122.

Robert Dennis, and John Smith (from which last Smith's Creek, in Woodbridge, is named).¹ And on the 18th of December, 1666, Daniel Pierce conveyed one-third part of his purchase of Dec. 11, 1666, to John Martin, Charles Gilman, Hugh Dunn, and Hopewell Hull, the same being expressed as 'being for the inhabitants of Piscataway.' Three years after Governor Carteret's agreement with Daniel Pierce and his associates for the settling of Woodbridge and Piscataway, on the 1st of June, 1669, a charter was obtained for Woodbridge under the seal of New Jersey, by which 'the tract of land therein described, and said to contain six miles square, is erected into a Township and Corporation.' This charter prescribes that 'the said Corporation or Township, called by the name of Woodbridge, shall consist of at least sixty families, and as many more as they shall see fit.'"² Under their charter the people of Woodbridge organized a municipal government in 1683, possibly at an earlier date.

"When Piscataway was first erected into a separate municipality I have not," says Mr. Deshler, "been able to discover. It could not have been as early as 1668, for in that year an act of Assembly, which recites the names of the six towns in the province ordered to be taxed for the defraying of public charges, does not mention Piscataway³ as one of them. The Rev. Mr. Corwin, in his admirable 'Historical Discourse,' says, 'Piscataway received a charter in 1666.' If by this he means that a municipal charter was granted at this date he is in error, that being the date of the grant merely under which it was settled. In 1675, Piscataqua, under the name of 'New Piscataqua,' sent two deputies to the General Assembly, and is classed among the towns of the province, and on the 29th of May, 1679, it had become a place of sufficient importance for the General Assembly to meet there. Its first selectmen were appointed in 1693."

CHAPTER LIX.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF EAST JERSEY.

JUST previous to the Scotch emigration, in 1683, a little work was published in Edinburgh by the Scotch proprietors, entitled "A Brief Account of East New Jersey in America."⁴ This work was designed to induce emigration from Scotland to the lands of the proprietors in East New Jersey, and therefore a considerable part of it is taken up with an argument bearing upon that point. The writer expresses the opinion that if the Scots are disposed to emigrate there might be a plantation abroad as large and plentiful as Scotland itself, not inferior in numbers and far exceeding it in riches and all other conveniences.

"To make this more manifestly appear," contiones the writer, "let it be considered what number of People have gone out of Scotland since the year 1618. That the Wars began in Germany, since in the Swedish Armie at one time there was said to 27 Scots Colloelle: And into France to Douglas Regiment, from time to time. We believe it will be granted but a modest calculation to affirm there hath been many thousands, and yet of that Vast Number few have ever returned, or had succession; scarce any Family hath remained abroad in any Comfortable settlement. And to be sure not the 10th part hath ever returned that their Equipping them abroad cost; they all either dyed or been killed there, without any benefit to our country but an empty Fame; Which is now in those parts little or nothing considered.

"Yes, it may be well affirmed that the charge of James, Marquess of Hamilton, his Expedition in the year 1631, cost four times more than ever all our Soldiers of Fortune brought home to Scotland. Now, if these People had gone over to some Foreign Plantation, and had but a Proportionable number of Women with them, which this Country could easily have spared, what a brave and large Colonie would there have been by this time, and very advantageous to Scotland, as shall after be made to appear." . . .

"And the Voyage to a Plantation here proposed is become so easie and the Interconurse so frequent, that a Correspondence would be as ordinar as is betwixt the South and North parts of this Nation: Yes, a great deal more than is usual betwixt the West and Northern Islands and the other more frequented parts of the country.

"It is also generally known how hardly the Husbandman here do live, and with how much Toil and Difficulty they are able to pay their Rents and have any comfortable Livelihood. The Reason whereof is, That especially near the Seaside and most inhabited places, they are be far overthrong, and one might Maigneur what two or three have: For they seeking to have so much Corn-Land, they eat out the substance of it, wearie themselves, and wrong their Landlords: So that, if there were fewer of them, and each of them had more Land and less in Corn, and more upon Grass for Bestial, they would have a greater ease, and then Masters would be better paid; But they not knowing how to dispose of themselves otherwise, makes them thus throng one upon another, and render one another miserable.

"Now therea would be a notable Remedy for this in a Foreign Plantation; for a Husbandman that hath two or three thousand Merks in stock (as most of them have) might transport himself, his Wife and his Family, and get a little Plantation at so easie terms, in a short time so stocked that he might live more Comfortably, plentifully, and at lesse Labour than many of the Masters do here.

"It is also known that ordinary servants here, after they have served six or seven years in the prime of the youth, can hardly, the most thrifty of them (over what serves them in Cloaths) gather so much together as when they Marry and come to have children, will be the beginning of any Comfortable Livelihood: But there after four years they may be in a better condition. . . .

"There needs no other nor more evident proof of this than the example of most of these, who being taken at the fights of Dunbar and Worcester in the years 1650 and 51, being sent over as servants to Barbadoes and other places, after they served out their time have most of them purchased notable Plantations for themselves, both in Barbadoes and Maryland and elsewhere, and live very plentifully, accounting themselves happy in that providence that brought them there, and extremely regretting the Condition of many of their friends at home, and wishing them sharers of their propertie. . . .

"It is time now to show how some of our Country-men, in order to so advantageous a Project, have already purchased an considerable Interest in a Plantation, which is justly esteemed not Inferiour, if not beyond any place, upon the whole continent of North America, belonging to the English Dominions, called East New Jersey. . . .

"The Scots Proprietors are James, Earl of Perth, John Drummond of Lundy, Lord Treasurer Depute, Sir George Mackenzie, Lord Register, Robert Gordon of Cluny, Arent Sommers (a Dutch-man, but interested with the Scots Proprietors) Robert Barkley of Yrie, Robert Burnet of Lethenty, Gorine Lawrie; Seven parts of the 24 belongs to these Persons, which, by the most modest Calculation, is thought, will be near Five hundred thousand Acres.

"The Situation of this Country is just, as it were, in the Center of

¹ Elizabeth Bill, p. 30.

² Ibid., p. 31. Deshler's Historical Paper.

³ Leaming and Spicer, p. 90.

⁴ This work is one of the rarest books relating to the English colonies now extant. It is a quarto of fifteen pages, and the original, in the possession of Samuel L. M. Barlow, Esq., of New York, was copied into the Historical Magazine for February, 1867.

the English Plantations in America, betwixt the South parts of Carolina, which is over-hot; and the North parts of Pemquid, next New Scotland, which are coldest; so that its Convenience for Situation, temperature and the Aire, and fertility of oyl is such that there is no less than seven towns considerable already (viz.) Shrentsbury, Middletown, Berghen, New-work, Elizabeth-town, Woodbridge, and Piscataway, which are well inhabited by a sober and industrious People, who have necessary Provisions for themselves and families, and for the comfortable entertainment of Travellers and Strangers.

"And the Quintrents or Fews (as they are here called) of these Towns and other Plantations already in the Country, yields to the 24 Proprietors above 500 lib. sterling, yearly Revenue, and the Aire of this Colony is experimentally found generally to agree well with English Constitutions and Consequently with ours.

"For Navigation it hath these advantages, not only to be scituatd along the navigable parts of Hudson's River, but lies also fifty miles along the Main Sea, and near the Midst of this Province is that noted Bay for Ships within Sandy-Hook, very well known not to be inferior to any Harbour in America, where ships not only harbour in greatest storms, but there Ryde safe, with all Wides and Sail in and out thence as well in Winter as Summer. For Fisheries the sea-banks are very well stored with variety of Fishes, not only such as are profitable for exportation, but such as are fit for Food there: There are Whales, Cod-fish, Col and Hake-fish, and Large Mack-ril, and also many other sorts of Small and Flate-fish; The Bay, also, and Hudson's River are plentifully stored with sturgeons, and other scale-fish, Eills, and shell-fish, as Oysters, in abundance.

"This Country is also plentifully supplied with Lively springs, Rivolets, Inland Rivers, and Creeks, which fall into the sea and Hudson's River, to which there is also variety of Fresh-fish, and water Fowl.

"There are little hills from Raritan River, which is about the middle of this Province, that go to the verie North-West bounds of it, in which an abundance of good Mill-stones to be had, and there is many, both Corne and saw-millnes set, and setting up already, also on the other side of these mountains there is brave fresh Rivolets, fit for setting In-Land Towns, and a great deal of Meadow-ground upon the banks thereof, so that there is abundance of Hay to be had for Foddering of Catts in the Winter time, and these Meadows shows the Country is not altogether covered with timber. . . .

"To show how Fruit-Trees do advance in that Country, it is credibly reported that about Burlington, in West Jersey, which is more Northerly than the greatest part of this Province, from an Apple-tree-seed in four years (without grafting) there sprang a tree that in the fourth year bore such a quantite of Apples as yielded a barrel of Syder.

"There is there also great store of Horses, Cowes, Hoges, and some Sheep, which may be bought at reasonable pryces with English mooney, or English commodities, or man's labour, where goods and money are wanting.

"For Minerals, It is thought there are not wanting of several sorts, For there is an Iron work already set up, where there is good Iron made: And also there is discovered already abundance of Black-Lead."

What the author of this account says of the Indians seems to have been borrowed from, or at least suggested by, Denton's work:

"The Indian Nations in this Countrey are but few, Comparative to the Neighbouring Colony. And those that are there are so far from being formidable or injurious to the Planters, and Inhabitants, that they are really serviceable and advantageous to them, not only in hunting and taking the Deer, and all other wild Creatures, and catching of Fish and Fowl fit for food in their seasons, but in the killing and destroying of Bears, Wolves, Foxes, and other Vermin, whose skins and furs they bring to the English and sell at less price than the value of time that people must spend to take them. Like as that this Colony may be founded in Justice, and without anything of Oppression, as all that is already Planted is truly purchased from the Indians, so there is a great deal more of the Province cleared by their consent, and all is intended by faction with them to be obtained, so that whenever Purchase or Plant under the Proprietors shall be freed of that incumbrance; and if there were any hazard from the Indians, as really there is none, yet this Province could hardly be in any danger. In respect that to the North, upon the Main Land, from whence the hazard, if any, must come, the Province of New York comes betwixt it and them, and 20 miles and more above, upon Hudson's River, there is a Fort call'd New Albany.

"There is order given that in the several most convenient Places, Ten thousand Acres be set out to each of the 24 Proprietors to them to sell, set out, or dispose of as they please; and when that shall be anyways Peopled or brought in, then the Proprietors will either jointly sell out the rest or make a new Divident, as they find most convenient; for it is probably believed, according to the most equal Conjecture, that every 24 part will contain 80,000 Acres.

"The Proprietors have fram'd a new Schem of Government, which is not yet a fully concluded one, but is intended to be rather an enlarging than an abbreviating of the former, and making it more easie and advantageous for the Inhabitants. The chief parts of it are:

"That the 24 Proprietors shall Chuse a Governour, 16 of them have a Conclusive Vote in it, after the death of him now Chosen, he shall continue but for 3 years, and be liable to the Censure of the Proprietors and great Censell and punishable if he transgress. There is a great Censell to meet once a year (and set, if they see meet, for 3 months) consisting of the 24 Proprietors and 48 chosen by the Planters and Inhabitants; two-thirds Conclude, one-half of the Proprietors assenting; and no money can be raised, or Law made to touch any man's Libertie or Property but by this Censell. There is a Common Censell to sit constantly, Consisting of the 24 Proprietors, or their Proxies, and nine chosen out of the Representatives of the Planters, in all 33, to be divided into three Committees, 11 to each, one for the Public Police, One for the Treasure and Trade, and one for Plantations.

"To avoid Lordling over one another, No Man Can purchase above the 24th part of the Countrey; And on the other hand, least they should squander away their Interest, and yet retain the character of the Government, that belongs to property and thence be capable to betray it, as not being bound by Interest, there must be a suitable quantity retained, otherwise the Title in the Government extinguishes in him and passes to another, to be Elected by the Proprietors, that Dominion may follow Property, and the inconvenience of a beggarly Nobility and Gentry may be avoided.

"No man can be judged in any cause, either Civil or Criminal, but by a Jury of his Peers, and to avoid it that all Caballins, the names of all the County or Neighbour-hood, capable to be chosen, are to be wrote in little pieces of Parchment, and the number of the Jury taken out by a Child under 10 years of age. And the Proprietors, as well as others, are to be Lyable to the like tryall, and not under any Exception.

"Libertie, in matters of Religion is established in the fullest manner. To be a Planter or Inhabitant nothing more is required but the acknowledging one Almighty God, and to have a share in the Government, a simple profession of faith of Jesus, without descending into any other of the differences among Christians, only that Religion may not be a cloak for disturbance, whoever comes into the Magistrature must declare they hold not themselves in Conscience obliged, for Religion's sake, to make an alteration or to endeavour to turn out their partners in the Government, Because they differ in opinion from them, and this is no more than to follow that great Rule, To do as they would be done by.

"These are the fundamentals, which are not alterable by any act of the great Council, as other things, by the voices of 2-thirds, but only by an universal agreement. So it is hoped that this hint will satisfy all sober and understanding people what Encouragement such a Government may give."

This unique government was never fully perfected or carried into execution. It was based upon the principle that dominion should follow property, and therefore if a proprietor lost his property he lost his voice in the government. The method of securing a trial by an impartial jury for the poor as well as for the rich was to elect jurymen by ballot, the number being drawn by a child under ten years of age. This, while beautiful in an ideal sense, was yet without any practical value as to the attainment of the end sought. Any number of these men eligible to act as jurymen might have been prejudiced in particular cases, and yet have been the very ones drawn by the child to try those cases. The mere drawing of the ballots by an innocent party was no guarantee whatever that the names drawn stood for the qualities of good and suitable jurors to try the particular cases to come before them. On the contrary, the most unsuitable persons would be quite as likely to be chosen as the most suitable.

The scheme was quite tolerant for that age. None were excluded from being planters or inhabitants of the colony but Atheists and Polytheists. Deists, Theists, and all believers in "One Almighty God" could be admitted to citizenship, but when it came to taking part in the government none but Christians were eligible, that is, they must "profess" some form of "faith in Jesus Christ." This might be putting "God in the Constitution" and honoring Christ by raising a political flag in his name, but the profession at the same time might be the merest pretense and mockery for the sake of office and place.

This work contains the following passage respecting Perth Amboy, not then built, but the prospective capital of the colony:

"The Proprietors have also Ordered to be set out upon a place called Ambo point (which has a good and Convenient Harbour, and a pleasant and wholesome place) 1500 Acres for to build a Town. This is to be divided into 150 Lots, and every Lot is to consist of ten Acres, and is to be sold at 20 lib. Sterling, provided it be done before the first of July next, before the ship go from SCOTLAND. For after that time we cannot promise to accommodate any, least all be taken up, for many are offering upon the place, and the Proprietors intend to have each a house built there upon their own Account this Summer. Now this will be found a very good Bargain, considering there is 300 of the 1500 Meadow ground, so that each lot is like to have 2 Acres of Meadow ground belonging to it, which is of great value."

"For Husbandmen that has a Stock, able to transport themselves and Families, with a few Servants, and to have but a 1000 pound Scots, or a 1000 Merks more to carry over in Commodities, they shall have upon their arrival 100 Acres of good ground measured out to them, or above not exceeding 500 Acres, and for their encouragement shall for the first 7 years pay nothing, and then have what they please, not under 100 nor exceeding 500 Acres, confirmed to them and their heirs forever, paying half a Crown an Acre, never to be raised upon them; And for the Charge of the first year they may easily calculate it by carrying over as much Oat-meal as will serve them Bread, and the freight will be inconsiderable, and they will get flesh enough in the Country for killing without charge, and will be able to clear more ground the first winter than will double serve their Families after the first harvest, so that they will only have to buy with the Commodities they carry over with them Seed and Beasts.

"The Charge for transportation is for every Man and woman 5 lib sterling, passage and entertainment, for Children over 10 years of age 50 shillings, and sucking Children nothing, 40 shillings for the tune of goods, and often under.

"The Voyage is Judged less Sea hazard than either to Holland or London, and if there be any tolerable winds it is easily made in 6 weeks. There went a ship last harvest to West Jersey from the Road to Aberdeen, and they came to Delaware River-mouth in 8 weeks, though they had great Calms, and of betwixt 30 and 40 passengers that out of Aberdeen several women and Children, not above 4 of them had been at Sea before, not one dyed, nor was sick by the way. . . .

"All sorts of Tradesmen may make a brave Livelyhood there, such as Carpenters, Shipwrights, Rope-makers, Smiths, Brick-makers, Taylors, Tanners, Coupers, Mill-wrights, Joiners, Shoemakers, etc., and any such like who are willing to go to serve the four years, not having to transport themselves, shall, in Consideration of their Trade, have (after the expiring of their Service) 30 Acres at 2 pence the Acre, as much Corn as will sow 2 Acres, a Cow, and a Sow; And for the encouragement of any such Tradesmen who are willing to go over and transport themselves, they shall have the like quantitie of Land at the same rent, and the Proprietors will oblige themselves to find them work for a year after their arrival at as good Rates as they can have here until they furnish themselves with some Stock to make better advantage upon the place.

"We will not encourage any to go there in expectation of Gold and Silver Mines; yea tho there were such in the Country. We should not be curious nor industrious to seek them out; being besides the Toyl and labour, but occasions of Envy and Emulations. Nor yet is there Suggar or Indigo there, or Cotton, nor any store of Tobacco, tho it grows there very well. But we consider it not our interest to employ much ground on it. The Riches of this Country consists in that which is most Substantial and necessary for the use of man, to wit, plenty of Corn and Cattle (and they have besides Vines and Fruits in abundances, as before has been said) so that who dwell here need not be obliged to any other Plantations or be beholden to them for necessities, without which their Curiosities would little avail them. This, with the Province of New-York being the Granary or Store-house of the West Indies, without which Barbadoes and the Lee-wards Islands could not subsist: Yea, New England is forced to Come here every year for Corn, this with the advantage of Fishery being considered, will easily induce sober and industrious People to prefer a Plantation here to most other places.

"There will a Ship go from Leith about Mid-Summer next, which will also call at Aberdeen. Such as desire to be more fully informed or to treat with any of the Proprietors, may address themselves to Andrew Hamilton, at the sign of the Ship over against the Court of Guard in Edinburgh; or at David Falkoner's, Merchant there, who will either give them satisfaction or find them occasion to treat with some of the Proprietors. Also at Aberdeen information may be had from George Pyper and Thomas Mercer, who will be heard of at Robert Gerards or John Leitch, their shops in the Broad-Gate."

CHAPTER LX.

THE CLAY DISTRICT OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY.¹

Topography.—The clay district, which is the chief subject of this report, includes the portion of Middlesex County which lies along the Raritan and South Rivers and the Woodbridge and Chesquake Creeks, and extends from Woodbridge on the north to the Monmouth County line on the south, and from Staten Island Sound and Raritan Bay on the east to Martin's Dock and the mouth of Lawrence Brook on the west. Its boundaries are as follows: Beginning at the northeast on Staten Island Sound near the mouth of Woodbridge Creek, the line runs west-southwest up that creek till opposite Edgar Station, on the Woodbridge and Perth Amboy Railroad, which is three-quarters of a mile north of Woodbridge; thence from the creek running west and southwest near the old Woodbridge and Metuchen road, and intersecting the Metuchen and Bonhamtown road a half-mile north of the latter village; thence southwest through Piscataway to Martin's Dock on the Raritan River; south of the Raritan River its western limit may be said to be defined by Lawrence Brook and the Old Bridge and New Brunswick turnpike; the southern boundary is not plainly marked, but it may be approximately described as running from Old Bridge to Jacksonville, and thence to the Monmouth County line near Raritan Bay shore; and the waters of Raritan Bay and Staten Island Sound, being the State line,² limit it on the east.

On the northwest the clay district joins that of the red shale and sandstone, and the frequent outcrops of the latter make the location of the northern boundary of the clay easy and accurate. Towards the west the boundary is entirely arbitrary, the later geological deposits, over which the Old Bridge and New Brunswick turnpike runs, being without any breaks, and effectually concealing the underlying formations. Indeed, it is probable that the equivalent of the clay is not limited by the boundary above given, but that, like all the other deposits of the cretaceous formation, it extends entirely across the State in a southwesterly direction to the Delaware River and beyond. In the flat and sandy country south of the South River, and stretching east as far as Jacksonville, yellow sand and gravel drift reach down to tide-level, and so effectually discourage explorations for clay that this boundary must be considered the limit of the district in which clay can be profitably dug, rather than the end of the beds of clay. From Jacksonville to the bay shore the outcropping clay-marl accurately defines the southeastern margin of the clay district. The map accompanying this report shows the whole of this district which produces clay, including all the pits of the county and of the adjoining parts of Staten Island in which fire-clay or stoneware clay is dug; but it does not exhibit the whole area of the county in which clay may possibly yet be found. The belt of country underlain by the plastic clays extends entirely across the State, and includes an area of three hundred and twenty square miles. In this area it is possible much valuable clay land may yet be found which can be worked to profit. The area of the clay district of Middlesex County, within which is included all the clay pits at present worked, is only sixty-eight square miles.

¹ From "Report on the Clay Deposits of Woodbridge, South Amboy, and other places in New Jersey," etc., by George H. Cook, State geologist, and John C. Smock, assistant geologist.

² Geologically, this clay district extends over a part of the south end of Staten Island, and probably to Long Island also.

The map of the clay district which accompanies this report exhibits the above-described boundaries and areas on a scale of three inches to a mile. It will be further described in its relations to topography and structural geology.

Although this district borders the tide-waters of Staten Island Sound and Raritan Bay, and is intersected by the tide-waters of the Raritan and South Rivers, and belongs in the general Atlantic slope of the country, it has not the flat surface or general long seaward slope which are such marked features of most of the land along our coast. On the contrary, the surface is uneven, and its average elevation is quite as great as that of the red sandstone country on its northwest border, or the marl region on its southeast. North of the Raritan River nearly all the upland has an elevation exceeding thirty feet, and fully one-third of it is over one hundred feet above tide-water level. This area is subdivided by a series of hills or flattened ridges, which extend southeast from the Short Hills near Metuchen to Perth Amboy. The Perth Amboy and Metuchen road runs almost level high up on the side of this elevated ridge. From this elevated ground as the water-shed the drainage is northeast and east into Woodbridge Creek and Staten Island Sound, and southward into the Raritan River.

Poplar Hill is the highest point in this ridge or chain of hills, and the highest in the district, being two hundred and forty feet above tide-level. From Ford's Corners westward to Bonhamtown, and thence southwest to Piscataway, the old road runs on high ground, most of the way about one hundred feet above tide. Bordering the Sound and along Woodbridge Creek there is a narrow fringe of tide marsh. The largest body of tidal meadow, however, is along the Raritan River. That on its north side extends the whole distance from Martin's Dock to the Crossman Clay Company's works, and is from a half-mile to a mile wide, and nearly five miles long. On the south of this stream there is but little tide marsh on the shore of the bay; Chesquake Creek is widely bordered by tide marsh from its mouth to its head; there is a fringe of marsh along the south shore of the Raritan, between South Amboy and Kearney's dock, and smaller patches from there up to Sayreville, and a much larger tract above Sayreville about the mouth of South River, and stretching up that stream nearly four miles. The area of the district which is tide marsh is as follows, in acres:

Townships.	Acres.
Perth Amboy.....	403
Woodbridge.....	690
Raritan.....	2967
East Brunswick.....	678
Sayreville.....	1797
South Amboy.....	40
Madison.....	1568
Total.....	7238

The surface of the quadrilateral area bounded by these streams and Raritan Bay is nearly all forty feet and upwards above tide-level, and a large part of it is about one hundred feet high, while a number of hilltops are from one hundred and forty to one hundred and eighty feet in height. These hills are irregularly grouped. One ridge of one hundred to one hundred and eighty feet high can be traced from Sayreville southeast, east, and again southeast nearly to Chesquake Creek. The Burt's Creek and Jacksonville road runs a little east and northeast of the crest line of this ridge. West, southwest, and south from South Amboy most of the surface is between one hundred and one hundred and forty feet high. The Camden and Amboy Railroad cuts through this high ground near the Sayreville road, ascending from the depot at South Amboy to an elevation of one hundred feet near this road, and descending a little near the clay pits of W. C. Perrine and E. R. Rose, and again running up to one hundred feet across the ridge near the Burt's Creek and Jacksonville road. It runs for over three miles on the water-shed between the streams flowing north and west into the Raritan and South Rivers, and those flowing east and south into the bay and Chesquake Creek. The slopes of the upland towards the Raritan and South Rivers are comparatively gentle, and terminate, except in a few cases, in tide marshes. South of South Amboy, along Raritan Bay and up Chesquake Creek, the upland is high quite to the water or marsh, and forms bluffs that mark clearly the upland from the marsh. The New York and Long Branch Railroad runs at the base of these bluffs from South Amboy to the Chesquake Creek at Morgan Station.

Table of Elevations in the Clay District of Middlesex County, taken with an Engineer's Level.—The following table of elevations, ascertained by leveling, gives the heights at many easily identified points. The figures give the elevation in feet above mean high-water level:

VICINITY OF WOODBRIDGE.
David Flood's clay bank, floor of platform scales.....	75.0
David Ayres' clay bank, floor of office.....	88.0
Floor of bridge, near D. Shotwell's house, old Woodbridge and Metuchen road.....	90.7
Surface of water in brook under the bridge.....	85.0
Floor of bridge, above-mentioned road, and one mile northeast of above bridge.....	73.0
Summit of hill, New Brunswick and Woodbridge road, near E. Stackpole's house.....	165.0
Same road, near L. Lakin's house.....	162.0
Same road, bridge over brook from Mutton Hollow, top of stage abutment, northwest corner.....	55.0
Surface of road, David Flood's tanat-house, north of Mutton Hollow.....	103.0
H. Cutter's platform scales, on road to his pits.....	57.0
Woodbridge and Perth Amboy road, Spa Spring Brook bridge, top of northwest parapet.....	8.4
Perth Amboy road, corner of road to Cutter's Dock, surface.....	20.0
PERTH AMBOY AND WESTWARD, NORTH OF THE BARITAN RIVER.
Track, E. and A. R. R. and N. Y. & L. B. R. crossing.....	50.0
Summit on E. & A. R. R., near Ford's Corners.....	94.0
E. & A. R. R. track, crossing New Brunswick and Woodbridge straight road.....	89.0
Metuchen and Perth Amboy and New Brunswick and Woodbridge roads' intersection, surface.....	105.0
Bridge floor on Florida Grove road over the E. & A. R. R.....	104.0
Surface at Benjamin Valentine's gate, near Florida Grove.....	67.0
Summit, New Brunswick and Perth Amboy road near the Eagleswood road.....	104.0
Surface, corner of road north-northwest of Manning House (hospital).....	122.0
Surface, at Manning clay shaft.....	103.0
Centre of New Brunswick road, opposite entrance to Eagleswood.....	98.8
Flooring of culvert, New Brunswick road at corner of road on the west line of Perth Amboy.....	108.7
Railroad track over small culvert at entrance to Phillip Neukimmet's clay bank.....	38.4
Rail at end of track, E. F. Robert's pits.....	84.4
Surface, west end of grading pit-house at old brick-yard, Raritan Clay Company.....	40.6
Frog of switch at junction of railroads from pits of Charles A. Campbell & Co.....	14.5
Surface, New Brunswick and Perth Amboy road, at "Half-way House".....	86.0
Surface, New Brunswick and Perth Amboy road, at west end of pits of Samuel Dally.....	77.4
Surface, pits of Samuel Dally, near red house at pits of N. J. Clay and Brick Company.....	73.0
Top of post near corner of road leading to pits of R. N. & H. Valentine.....	108.2
Top of platform of David Flood, side of N. J. Clay and Brick Co.'s railroad.....	45.4
Platform of scales near office of R. N. & H. Valentine.....	78.5
Railroad track, at the scales of N. J. Clay and Brick Co.....	41.0
New Brunswick road, surface in front of David Mundy's house, east of Bonhantown.....	112.0
New Brunswick road, surface in front of Martin Schofield's house, half-mile east of Bonhantown.....	103.0
Railroad track, entrance to gravel-pit of P. B. R. Co., north of Bonhantown.....	67.0

WASHINGTON TO SOUTH AMBOY.

Brick pavement (west end) in front of Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington.....	67.5
Lower rail on curve of track entering Willett & Yates' brick-yard, Washington.....	15.6
Sayreville, surface in centre of road to front of Methodist Episcopal Church.....	41.4
Sayreville, surface at frame barn of Sayre & Fisher, near the fire-brick works.....	20.0
Surface, Washington and South Amboy road, corner of road to Whitehead's dock.....	45.0
Surface, Washington and South Amboy road, Such's railroad crossing.....	11.5
Summit, Washington and South Amboy road, between Such's gate and Roberts' west pits.....	44.4
Summit, on road from Roberts' pits to Kearney's Dock.....	61.3
Such's railroad track, at clay-works.....	13.8

Street in front of R. C. Church, South Amboy.....	Foot. 47.0
Surface, southeast corner of R. C. cemetery, Main Street, South Amboy.....	122.6
Sommit of hill south of the village.....	144.0
Floor of bridge over C. and A. R. R., Washington road.....	115.0

MADISON TOWNSHIP.

Surface, South Amboy and Jacksonville road, at corner of road to Theodore Smith's clay pits.....	80.0
Surface in front of E. Disbrow's house, on road to Theo. Smith's clay pits.....	45.0
Surface, north corner of — Fitznack's house, at Theo. Smith's clay pits.....	38.4
Otto Ernst's clay-mine, floor at top of shaft of 1868.....	31.3
Otto Ernst's clay-mine, floor at top of shaft of 1874.....	27.6

Elevations of Each of the Clay-Beds at Various Points in the District.

RARITAN CLAY-BED.

Geo. W. Ruddy's pits, south end, surface of clay.....	35
Geo. W. Ruddy's pits, near house, surface of clay.....	36
Wm. B. Dixon's clay, top.....	31
New Jersey Clay and Brick Company's pits, top of clay.....	44
David Flood's fire-clay, southeast of Bonhantown, top of clay.....	47
David Flood's southwest pits, top of clay.....	43
Geo. Phoenix's clay pits, north of Bonhantown, top of clay.....	76
W. C. & E. Mundy's pits, north of Bonhantown, top of clay.....	77
Charles M. Dally's bank, north of Bonhantown, top of clay.....	78
Charles M. Dally's pits, south of Bonhantown and north of the Raritan River, top of clay (below tide).....	—11

WOODBIDGE FIRE-CLAY BED.

WOODBIDGE AND VICINITY.

Wm. P. Edgar's bank, top of clay.....	83
Wm. P. Edgar's bank, 120 feet east of above (top).....	89
Wm. H. Berry's pits (east), top of clay.....	73
Wm. H. Berry's pits, northwest of farm-house, top of clay.....	81
David Flood's bank, near his residence, top of blue clay, at north-east end of the bank.....	76
David Flood's bank, top of sandy clay, 100 yards northwest of above.....	89
J. H. Campbell's estate, top of best clay.....	78
David Ayers' bank, top of clay.....	80
Charles M. Dally's bank, top of fire-clay.....	65-77
Salamander Works' bank, top of white clay.....	79
Longbridge & Powers' pits, top of white clay.....	73
Longbridge & Powers' pits, bottom of fire-clay (deepest).....	48
Mellick Brothers' pits, top of fire-clay.....	59
B. Kreisel's pits, top of sandy (stone-ware) clay.....	57
B. Kreisel's pits, top of fire-clay.....	53
William H. Berry's bank, adjoining New Brunswick road, on the south, top of black-clay.....	88
S. A. Meeker & Son's pits, "Mutton Hollow," top of fire-clay.....	56
J. R. Watson & Son's bank, top of (stone-ware) clay.....	41
J. R. Watson & Son's bank, bottom of fire-clay.....	41
A. Hall & Son's bank, top of fire-clay.....	67
A. Hall & Son's bank, southwest end of bank, top of fire-clay.....	74

BANKS SOUTHWEST AND SOUTH OF WOODBRIDGE.

Isaac Inslee's pits, top of clay.....	52
Isaac Inslee's pits, bottom of fire-clay.....	38
James Valentine's pits, top of clay.....	48
James Valentine's pits, bottom of fire-clay.....	36
Hampton Cutter & Sons, northeast pits, top of white fire-clay.....	32
Hampton Cutter & Sons, south pits, top of clay.....	34
Hampton Cutter & Sons, south pits, bottom of fire-clay.....	20
Hampton Cutter & Sons, west pits, top of black clay.....	53
Hampton Cutter & Sons, west bank, bottom of blue clay.....	41
Hampton Cutter & Sons, west bank, bottom of blue clay.....	20
Isaac Flood, clay pits, top of (stone-ware) clay.....	38
E. Cutter's estate, old pipe-clay bank, top of clay.....	25
W. H. P. Benton's pits, top of clay (below tide).....	—5
Charles Anson & Son's pits, top of clay (below tide).....	—5-10

CLAY ALONG THE NORTH SHORE OF THE BARITAN RIVER.

Woodbridge Clay Company's pits, east of Crows' Mill Creek, top of the fire-clay (below tide).....	—18
Woodbridge Clay Company's pits, near Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company's works, top of fire-clay (below tide).....	—3.5
Woodbridge Clay Company's pits, bottom of fire-clay (below tide).....	—11.5
Augustine Campbell's pits, near Crows' Mill Creek, bottom of fire-clay (average).....	—20
A. Weber's bank, top of fire-clay.....	20.5
A. Weber's bank, bottom of fire-clay.....	11
Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company's east bank, top of fire-clay.....	21.5
Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company's east bank, bottom of fire-clay.....	10.5
Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company's middle bank, top of fire-clay.....	26
Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company's middle bank, bottom of fire-clay.....	17
Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company's west bank, top of fire-clay.....	37
Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company's west bank, bottom of fire-clay.....	26
Ph. Neukimmet's bank, top of fire-clay.....	38

	Feet.
Ph. Neukumer's bank, bottom of fire-clay.....	29-32
Chas. A. Campbell & Co.'s north or blue clay bank, top of fire-clay.....	40
Chas. A. Campbell & Co.'s south or white clay bank, top of fire-clay.....	38
Isaac Flood & Son's bank, east end, top of fire-clay.....	56
Isaac Flood & Son's bank, west end, top of fire-clay.....	61
R. N. & H. Valentine's bank, top of fire-clay.....	51-54
R. N. & H. Valentine's southwest pit, top of fire-clay.....	50
Samuel Dally's pit, north of New Brunswick road, top of clay.....	74
Samuel Dally's pit, south of New Brunswick road, top of clay.....	66
New Jersey Clay and Brick Company, northeast pit, bottom of fire-clay.....	64

KAOLIN AND FELDSPAR BED.

Forbes' farm, feldspar bank, top of sandy clay.....	104
Forbes' farm, top of feldspar.....	96
Forbes' farm, bottom of feldspar.....	90
Charles Anness & Sons' feldspar bank, top of feldspar.....	91
Charles Anness & Sons' feldspar bank, east end of the bank, top of feldspar.....	99
Charles Anness & Sons' feldspar bank, top of sandy red clay.....	104
Edgar Bros' feldspar bank, top of feldspar.....	83
Kuickerbocker Life Insurance Company's farm, fire-sand bank, top of black clay.....	50
Kuickerbocker Life Insurance Company's farm, fire-sand bank, top of fire-sand.....	71
Kuickerbocker Life Insurance Company's farm, fire-sand bank, top of fire-sand.....	71
Kuickerbocker Life Insurance Company's farm, fire-sand bank, top of fire-sand.....	65
James Valentine's kaolin, N. Y. & L. R. R. cut, bottom of kaolin.....	38
Mrs. Merritt's kaolin pits, top of kaolin.....	53
Whitehead Bros' bank, Sayreville, top of kaolin.....	50
J. K. Brick estate, Burt's Creek, top of kaolin.....	30
Whitehead estate, back, Washington, top of kaolin.....	82

SOUTH AMBOY FIRE-CLAY BED.

NORTH OF THE RARITAN RIVER.

Maonig shaft, top of the clay.....	100
E. F. Roberts' pits, Manning farm, top of fire-clay.....	80
E. F. Roberts' pits, Manning farm, bottom of fire-clay.....	69
E. F. Roberts' pits, Manning farm, east end, bottom of fire-clay.....	60
John De Bow's pits, top of red clay.....	80-83

SOUTH OF THE RARITAN RIVER.

Kearney tract, E. F. & J. M. Roberts, north of Washington road, top of fire-clay.....	32-36
Kearney tract, E. F. & J. M. Roberts, north of Washington road, bottom of fire-clay.....	26
Kearney tract, E. F. & J. M. Roberts, south of Washington road, top of fire-clay.....	29-35
Kearney tract, E. F. & J. M. Roberts, south of Washington road, bottom of fire-clay (deepest).....	15
George Such's pits, southern end, top of fire-clay.....	25
George Such's pits, southern end, bottom of fire-clay.....	13
J. K. Brick estate, bank, top of fire-clay.....	28-36
Whitehead Bros' pits (old southeastern), top of fire-clay.....	54
Whitehead Bros' old Bolton pit, top of clay.....	70-72
Whitehead Bros' bank, near Sayreville, top of clay.....	70-76
Whitehead Bros' bank, near Sayreville (south end), top of clay.....	59-62
Whitehead Bros' bank, near Sayreville (south end), bottom of fire-clay.....	51-54
Sayre & Fisher's bank, top of fire-clay.....	65

STONEWARE CLAY BEDS.

E. R. Roe & Son's pits, near Camden and Atlantic Railroad, top of clay.....	70
Theo. Smith's pits, top of clay.....	40
Theo. Smith's pits, bottom of clay.....	32
N. Furman's clay-mine, Chesapeake Creek, top of stoneware clay.....	20
N. Furman's clay-mine, bottom of stoneware clay.....	13
N. Furman's clay-mine western shaft, top of stoneware clay.....	19
N. Furman's clay-mine, western shaft, top of stoneware clay.....	13
Otto Ernst's clay-mine, 1868 shaft, top of good clay.....	12
Otto Ernst's clay-mine, shaft of 1876, top of good clay.....	4
Morgan estate, Raritan Bay, top of stoneware clay.....	25
Morgan estate, Raritan Bay, bottom of stoneware clay.....	—

MISCELLANEOUS.

Salamander Works' fire-sand pits, northwest of Woodbridge, top of sand.....	72
R. N. & H. Valentine's fire-sand pit, to Raritan Valley, top of sand.....	49
David Flood's kaolin pits, southeast of Bonhamtown, top (so called) kaolin.....	49
Wm. H. Berry's bank, Woodbridge and New Brunswick road, top of the black clay.....	88
Clay pit, across road from residence of Charles Anness, top of black clay.....	22
W. S. Pettit's brick-clay bank, Washington, South River, bottom of working face of bank.....	18
Willett & Yates' brick-clay bank, Washington, S. R., top of bank.....	41
Everett & Fish, potters, clay bank, South Amboy, top of clay.....	82-88

The drainage of this clay district has been already described in connection with its surface elevation. It is so limited in extent that there are no large streams wholly within its bounds, and yet it is remarkably intersected by tide-water and navigable channels. Thus in this area of about sixty-eight square miles there are about thirty miles of shore fronting on navigable water; or, counting both sides of the Raritan as high up as Sayreville, and excluding the more tortuous bends of the Raritan and South Rivers and Chesapeake Creek, there are twenty-five miles of water-front. So that there is not a point in the district three miles from navigable water, and of the one hundred clay, kaolin, and sand pits none is more than two and a half miles away from such water-front. The advantages of this remarkable location for development of such a country are plainly shown by the rapid growth of its industries.

The tributaries of these rivers and creeks are small and unimportant, although most of them for short distances are small tide-water inlets, bordered in some cases by tide meadows, and some of them are capable of being improved as canals or basins.

The character of the surface and soil throughout this clay district is so varied that detailed description would fail to convey a distinct idea of its manifold phases. And yet nearly if not quite all the upland area can be described in two clearly characterized groups. These two groups of soils and superficial deposits mark two kinds of and two periods of the drift. These are (1) the northern or glacial drift, which is composed of fragments of the red shale and other northern rocks spread unevenly over the surface; (2) the older (southern?) yellow sand and gravel drift, derived apparently from some more southern source, and containing no red shale drift whatever. The former is the more recent of the two, and is found resting at many points upon the latter, and both unconformably upon the beds of clay, etc. The district north of the Raritan is mostly covered by the former, and that south of the Raritan has only the latter kind. The yellow and gravel drift is found to some extent north of the Raritan.

1. GLACIAL DRIFT.—No attempt has been made to trace out all the sinuosities of the limits of this surface formation. The general outlines are as follows: Staten Island Sound on the east, Raritan River on the south, and on the west a line drawn from the works of the Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company north-northwest to the Sand Hills, and thence west near Bonhamtown to the limits of the map. Northward this connects with the Short Hills and the red shale country. It will be thus seen that this drift covers or occupies the tongue of land running southeast from the Short Hills to a point between the Sound and the Raritan River, forming Poplar Hill and the high ground thence to Perth Amboy. It must here be stated that the Sound is not its eastern limits, as the same drift covers nearly the whole of Staten Island, and there is no difference in the materials as seen at Perth Amboy or Tottenville on the opposite shore. No shale or sandstone is to be found south of the Raritan River and east of the South River, and the former at Amboy sharply divides the two surface formations. This drift is cut on the line of the Easton and Amboy Railroad at Ford's Corner, and at several points between that place and Perth Amboy. It is best exposed, in its relations to the yellow sand and gravel, in the feldspar banks of Charles Anness & Son, and in the Woodbridge and New Brunswick road, near William H. Berry's bank. It can also be seen in the cut on the Easton and Amboy Railroad, half a mile south of Ford's Corner.

This red shale drift belongs to the true northern drift of the glacial epoch, which is seen covering nearly all of our more northern territory. This portion, thus locally described, must be considered as part of the southern end of the great sheet covering the continent, and the city of Perth Amboy stands on the southernmost point of this particular drift bank. The red shale material, the predominating and characteristic constituent in this mass of drift, gives character to the surface of the country, which resembles somewhat the country to the north and west, where the red shale crops out in place. The soil has that peculiar purplish-red color, and is in marked contrast with the sandy surface towards the west and south. The forest on this drift area is also quite different from that growing on the sandy and gravelly loam surfaces. There is less chestnut and no pine, both of which trees are common and make up most of the wood found growing south of the Raritan River. From these statements it is evident that the boundary of this drift is easily and accurately traced.

The matrix of this drift consists of red shale in the form of small fragments and as fine red earth. In this the pebbles, cobble-stones, boulders, and other rock masses are inclosed, without order and in all possible combinations. Boulders and pebbles and fragments of red and bluish (indurated) sandstone and of trap rocks are very abundant. Gneiss, granite, and syenite are less abundant; the conglomerates and slaty grits of the Greenpond Mountain (Potsdam) series and the magnesian and Trenton limestones are of much rarer occurrence. Large boulders are quite common, so much so that their removal in clearing new ground for tillage is laborious and quite costly. Many of them are large enough for quarrying into building stones. One on Miss Gale's land, three-fourths of a mile west of Woodbridge, and a short distance south of New Brunswick turnpike, was twenty-five to thirty feet in diameter, and was used for bridge abutments on the Easton and Amboy Railroad. In Melick Bros' clay bank, near Woodbridge, a granite block ten feet in diameter was found, lying with its polished and striated side down and imbedded three feet in the fire-clay bed. Near Patrick Miles' house, west of Woodbridge, there is a trap rock boulder whose dimensions out of ground are fifteen by ten by five feet. Others nearly as large might be cited, but they are not uncommon, although growing scarce as the country is more cleared up and farmed or worked for its clays. Boulders from one to three feet in diameter are abundant, both in the drift-bed and on the surface. Occasionally thin and irregular layers of white, sandy clay and clayey-like pebbles occur in this drift. These are, however, of very limited extent and not common.

The surface of much of the area occupied by this drift is remarkably uneven. The hills are irregular in outline and of uneven slopes, and sink-holes and small ponds are numerous. These irregularities of the surface are striking features in the higher grounds west and southwest of Woodbridge, in what may be termed a continuation of the Short Hills.

The thickness of the red shale drift as cut in many places does not exceed twenty feet, but in Poplar Hill there must be a much greater thickness, possibly more than a hundred feet. The average or mean thickness may be put at twenty feet. An examination of the table of elevations of the clays, kaolins, feldspars, and fire-sands, and a comparison of these heights and the heights of the surface at these places, shows that there is not anywhere more than forty feet of drift, excepting in Poplar Hill. So far as excavations indicate it is frequently quite thin, sometimes amounting to little more than a soil and subsoil. This is more particularly the case towards the southeast and near its boundary lines, or where the sheet thins out and disappears.

That this drift is a part of the great northern drift and of the glacial epoch is evident from the nature of the materials. The large and numerous boulders in it belong to rocks whose outcrop is to the north, and these occur in numbers proportional to the nearness of such rock formations. Thus the trap rocks and sandstones are in excess over the gneiss and conglomerates. Then the great mass of shaly material has certainly not traveled far, as much of this is in the form of fragments, which are incapable of long transportation without being reduced to earth. This character of constituent materials and entire absence of all sorting or stratification corresponds with what is observed in the great northern drift elsewhere. No organic remains have been discovered in it, although it has been so largely excavated and at so many points.

2. YELLOW SAND AND GRAVEL.—This so-called sand and gravel drift includes all the more or less sandy and gravelly layers which form the surface materials or superficial covering of this clay district outside of the lines above given as the boundaries of the more recent red shale or northern drift. As has already been stated, it underlies much of the latter, and extends north and northwest beyond the limits of this district. In all directions it goes beyond the comparatively small area represented by the map. The almost endless gradations of sand, sandy loams, gravel, gravelly loams, etc., generally of a yellowish color, but with many other shades accidental to the surface, are embraced in this formation. It is not only thus marked by the general character of its material components, but more definitely by the sorted or stratified arrangement of these materials, a characteristic which everywhere distinguishes it from the unsorted red shale drift. And it might very appropriately be termed the stratified drift. Towards the northwest, between Bonhamtown and Martin's Dock, some red shale earth and fragments and bowlders appear in it, as if there had been a mingling of materials by alternate currents carrying shale and sand and gravel. Excepting on the northwest border of this district, there is a remarkable absence of shale in this formation. And this is another of its distinguishing features.

This sand and gravel or stratified drift is found as a surface covering, unconformably resting upon all the clay and other beds of the plastic clay series, excepting in the area of the red shale drift, where it is overlaid by the latter.

The thickness of this surface formation varies exceedingly from point to point, even within the limits of a single clay bank. In those about Woodbridge and north of the Raritan River it ranges from one to thirty feet, or possibly in rare instances even more widely. In William P. Edgar's clay bank it is thirty feet thick, and the red shale drift is wanting, this forming the surface. In the bank of William H. Berry, a few rods southwest of Edgar's, it is cut twenty to twenty-five feet thick under six feet of red shale drift. A few rods west of this and on the same property the latter rests immediately upon the top black clays. The same irregularities and breaks appear in it in the Mutton Hollow clay banks, west of Woodbridge, and in those of the Salamander Works and others, north of the New Brunswick road. And the two in their relation to each other and in their varying thickness are beautifully exposed in Anness' feldspar bank, in E. F. Roberts' bank, near Eagleswood, in the cuts of the Easton and Amboy Railroad, in the east bank of the Crossman Clay and Manufacturing Company, and at many other points which might be mentioned, since most of the digging for clay about Woodbridge has to penetrate both of these drift formations. The average thickness may be put at ten feet. In the clay banks at the Sand Hills and along the north shore of the Raritan River the thickness is from four to twenty-five feet. Here it forms the surface material. South of the Raritan it appears to be thicker, ranging from fifteen to forty feet in the several clay banks from Sayreville to South Amboy. At the sand bank of Maxfield & Parisen, in South Amboy, it is at least thirty feet; at Otto Ernst's clay-mines, near Chesquake Creek, it is about forty feet thick. From the elevation of some of the hills and ridges in the district southwest of South Amboy (one hundred and forty to one hundred and eighty feet), the maximum thickness of this sand and gravel is thought to be not less than one hundred feet.

The materials of this formation, whether sand, gravel, or less rounded rock fragments, are always stratified. The lines of stratification or layers are sometimes horizontal, but frequently they are seen to be wavy or gently undulating. The dip or inclination of these laminae or layers is not uniform in direction. A prevailing dip towards the northwest, as might be expected, is not shown by the observations. This sorted arrangement appears in the layers of sands, gravels, etc., although these layers are not, generally, persistent to any great distance, but taper out and are then replaced by others. In the examination of the surface of the country a marked feature is nearly everywhere observed in the gravelly hills and crests of ridges and more sandy valleys and depressions. This may be owing to some systematic arrangement of the gravels and sands, but more likely the result of surface drainage, which, operating through ages, has carried down the more easily transported sands and left these gravelly accumulations in the shape of hills and ridges such as we now see. The sand and gravel generally alternate, but irregularly, and in some places there are thick beds of sand without any lines of gravel, as, for example, at the clay banks of Sayre & Fisber, George Such, Messrs. Roberts, and the sand bank at South Amboy. Very frequently a thin gravel stratum, a few inches thick, is seen lying immediately upon the clay. The sand-beds generally exhibit a double system of lines or oblique lamination, known as cross stratification. This can be seen at nearly all of the clay banks on the south shore of the Raritan, from Sayreville to South Amboy. The sand is mostly a fine white to a yellowish-white granular quartz mass, which is in some layers mixed with earthy matter. On the north side of the Raritan there is less sand and a larger proportion of earth and gravel. Quartz constitutes nearly the whole of the yellow sands, and most of this is in the form of grains and pebbles of white to yellowish, transparent, translucent, chalcedonic varieties. Some black grains of hornblende and very small, angular grains of magnetite occur with the quartz. In some places these grains are cemented together by oxide of iron, making a friable, stony mass. Fragments of feldspar are rare; and most strange is the general absence of mica from these yellow sands and gravels. It does occur in places, as in Whitehead's moulding-sand, east of Sayreville, and in the South Amboy pits. This absence of so common a mineral and rock constituent may, perhaps, be suggestive of the source of the materials found in this drift. In the vicinity of Piscataway, and at Weidner's cut near Martin's Dock, both round and angular fragments of red shale are quite abundant in this formation. This exceptional occurrence of the shale is also seen farther southwest, beyond the limits of this map, and always near the southeast border of the shale outcrop. But here the deposition was in water, and a mixture of materials was such as would be expected. Farther east the glacial action carried the red shale farther south and covered the stratified drift, and in that manner made a marked line between the two surface formations.

Wherever the white sands of this formation constitute the surface the soil is light and poor, and the timber is mainly yellow pine, chestnut, and scrubby oak. The gravel has more earth in it, and makes a tighter and better soil. But as a whole the area occupied by this sand and gravel formation is quite inferior as a soil to the red shale drift north of the Raritan River. As these formations make the soil, their occurrence explains the differences so marked in this district, not only in the natural soil itself but in its forest covering. And much of the general development of the agricultural wealth of this part of the State is also due to this occurrence of the northern drift. The mouth of the Raritan River also owes its place to the glacier whose foot terminated at Perth Amboy. So that the glacier of the past geological age has left an impress upon this country which all subsequent tillage and improvement has not effaced.

This formation has been described as drift. It must not be confounded with glacial drift, as its origin was due to water. Its stratification, its lines and layers, indicate that flowing water and not ice was the moving power. And these alternations of pebbles and sand show that there were great changes in the force of the currents that carried them. The dip of these layers is not at all uniform, although several to the northwest have been observed. These may point to a northward movement of these currents. The general absence of red shale also points to a southern origin. Again the prevalence of pebbles of mottled white and chalcidonic quartz, and of a reddish variegated quartz, unlike any known rocks to the north or northwest, and the existence of rolled fossils, more abundant than in the more northern gravels and true boulder drift, all point to a southeastern origin,—a wash or drift from lands now under the waves of the Atlantic. Possibly the same continent furnished the materials for the older beds below, the clays, kaolins, and fire-sands, and this in part gravelly formation may have been the last of the successive floods that came from that direction. If so there must have been a long interval between the deposition of these clays and this drift, since these, as well as the more recent green-sand marl-beds of the cretaceous and tertiary ages, are all alike covered unconformably by it. The glacial drift came later and partly covered this, but as to the length of time between the two formations we have no data for knowing. As no fossils have been found in the older sand and gravel drift, excepting the rolled pebbles and fragments, it is impossible to determine its age. It may belong to the later tertiary and have preceded the glacial age. It is hoped that future explorations in many localities may result in the discovery of some remains which will enable us to determine its place in the geological series, and also point more conclusively to the source of its materials.

In this notice of the surface these two drift formations have been described as constituting the whole of the area of this clay district. They do not, however, form the whole surface, since there are here and there small, isolated outcrops of the several clays, kaolins, feldspars, and fire-sands. These are, as it were, little islands in the great sea of drift. But these outcrops are of so limited extent, and they have been so nearly all dug out for their materials, that they are altogether insignificant so far as surface features are concerned.

There is one other outcrop deserving attention, not so much from its size as its geological importance, this is the red shade hill in Perth Amboy township, one and a half miles northwest of Perth Amboy, and about a third of a mile east of the Woodbridge and Perth Amboy road. This outcrop of shale is not more than an eighth of a mile in diameter, and is surrounded on all sides by drift. The shale has a northwestern dip and appears to be fast rock. It is probably an elevated point in the floor, on which the clays and drift have been successively deposited. And it was probably never covered by them, or at least not by the clay and feldspar bed. The drift may have been removed by subsequent denudation. This hill or outcrop of shale in situ is at least two miles from any other, or from the southeast border of the shale formation, and appears to be an outlier from the main body.

The tidal meadows have already been referred to in the above general description of the surface of this clay district. They constitute the more recent alluvial formation. The boundary lines of such meadows are easily traced, and are represented on the map. This alluvium rests unconformably upon the older formations. Very generally there is either red shale drift, or the sand and gravel under the meadow mud. At a few points valuable clays have been found a few feet beneath the surface of the tide meadows. The depth of the workable deposits below tide-water level and the expenses of raising both water and clay from such pits have retarded the examination of such ground for clay, and consequently only a few pits have been dug in the meadows, and these are near the upland border. The depths below mean tide-level at which clays have in several places been discovered show that the beds are continuous underneath the meadows and the Raritan River. It is only the difficulty and expense of contending against water that hinders the opening of clay pits at any proper place in these meadows. The beds of clay were deposited before the Raritan had cut its present channel to the sea.

Geology.—The geology of the clay district will be best understood by a general review of the geology of the State in which it occurs, and of the geological formations which are associated with it. For this reason we here present a condensed statement of the geology of New Jersey.

Nearly all the great geological classes of rocks and earths are represented in this State. Its oldest rocks make up the mountain range which crosses the northern part of the State from northeast to southwest in parts of Sussex, Passaic and Bergen, Warren and Morris, Hunterdon and Somerset, and which is known in New York as the Highlands, in Pennsylvania as South Mountain, and is here without any general name, but its individual ridges are known as Ramapo Mountain, Hamburg Mountain, Schooley's Mountain, Trowbridge Mountain, Watnong Mountain, Musconetcong Mountain, Scott's Mountain, Marble Mountain, and others. The newer geological formations lie upon each side of this central ridge and run parallel with it, the Silurian and Devonian limestones and other formations being mostly in a broad belt upon its northwest side, and a little in its valleys; the Triassic red sandstone adjoins it in a broad belt on its southeast side; the Cretaceous clays and marls stretch across the State in a belt just southeast of the red sandstones; and the Tertiary and the Recent formations lie southeast of the marls. The Azoic, Cretaceous, Tertiary, and most of the Recent have a prevailing dip towards the southeast, while the Silurian, Devonian, and Triassic mostly dip towards the northwest.

The boundaries of the Middlesex clay district are as follows: The northwestern boundary, beginning at Woodbridge Neck, on the shore of Staten Island Sound, passes just north of the villages of Woodbridge and Bonhamtown to the Raritan River, a few rods below the mouth of Mill Brook. Then crossing the Raritan it is easily traced along the south side of Lawrence Brook, and at distances varying from a few rods to a quarter of a mile from the stream to the bend of the brook a mile west of Dean's Pond. From there it can be traced in almost a straight line to the Delaware and Raritan Canal, half-way between Clarksville and Baker's Basin, and then near the line of the canal to Trenton and the Delaware River. From Trenton to Salem the Delaware marks the northwestern and western boundary, with the exception of some limited patches of marsh and alluvium along the river. Its southeast border can be traced from the shore of Raritan Bay, a little south of Chesquake Creek, in a southwesterly direction in a line passing north of the village of Morristown, and on just south of Jacksonville; then across the country by the house of the late Parker Brown to the little village called Texas, on the Matchaponix Creek; and from thence directly on, passing about a mile south of Jamesburg Station, and crossing the Camden and Amboy Railroad near Cranbury Station, it passes about a half-mile north of Hightstown, and thence in a line a half-mile north of the railroad to the mouth of Crosswick's Creek on the Delaware at Bordertown. It follows the bank of the river to Kinkora, from which place it is extremely difficult to trace it with accuracy, the characteristic clays being entirely hidden by superficial deposits and soil, except in the banks of the streams. Guided by these marks the line has been drawn. It follows near the line of the railroad east of Florence; a half-mile east of Burlington crosses the Rancocas a mile above Bridgeboro', and the Pensauken some distance above Cinnaminson bridge; it comes to the bank of the Delaware again at Gloucester City; it passes back of Red Bank, crosses Woodbury Creek a mile above its mouth, Mantua Creek near Paulsboro', and Raccoon Creek a mile above Bridgeport; thence it continues in the same direction to the Delaware near Pennsgrove.

The area comprehended within this formation is three hundred and twenty square miles.

The materials of the clay formation are earthy, and no rocky or stony layers or beds are to be found in it. There are some small places in which the sand and gravel have been cemented with oxide of iron sufficiently to form a rough building stone, and concretions of clay and oxide of iron of a stony hardness are found in some of the clay beds, but the layers of sand and clay of which the formation is made up are all earthy, and so soft that they can be dug with a spade.

The whole formation is composed of a series of strata of fire-clay, potters' clay, brick-clay, sand, and lignite. The details of these, with their order, thickness, and qualities, will be given farther on in this report. The thickness of the series of strata is nearly three hundred and fifty feet. The strata are generally parallel to each other, and are all inclined downwards towards the southeast with an average dip of about forty-five feet per mile. The direction or strike of the outcropping edges of the strata is south 46° west true bearing.

The geological age of this formation is determined entirely from its fossils, the series of earlier formations between this and the Azoic period being wanting here, and this lying directly upon the crystalline gneissic rocks. Fossil wood is abundant in many places, and the roots, leaves, and fruit of plants are sometimes found. Shells and remains of animals are rare.

Fossil leaves from the clay banks at Washington and Sayreville, from the clay pits at Burt's Creek, from Mrs. Allen's pit at South Amboy, and from the clay in the bluff bank of the Delaware two miles below Trenton were collected. These were submitted to the examination of Prof. Leo Lesquereux, of Columbus, Ohio, who makes a special study of vegetable paleontology, and is one of the most eminent authorities upon the subject. He reports as follows: "The specimens, very numerous, badly preserved, from Sayreville and other localities in the leaf-bed overlying the Woodbridge fire-clay bed, have, so far as they are determinable, the characters of the flora of the Dakota group, or of the lower Cretaceous of Nebraska and Kansas. This is lower Cretaceous for this country equivalent to a lower member of the upper Cretaceous of Europe. The species identical to both formations in New Jersey and Kansas are Magnolia Capellini, Heer; M. alternans, Heer; Persea Necrasensis, Lesqr.; Salix prototolia, Lesqr.; two species of Proteoides; Glyptostrobus gracillimus, Lesqr.; Sequoia condita, Lesqr. I noted some other species as new, but they are not named or described; indeed, from the bad state of preservation of the leaves, it would not be possible to make a diagnosis without a comparative study of specimens with those I have on hand. Among others there are fragments of an Araliopsis, the basilar part of a leaf only, and we have from the Cretaceous of Kansas and now also from that of Colorado numerous species of the same genus.

"The flora of South Amboy, as collected from Mrs. Allen's clay pit, totally differs in its character, as far represented by the few species known as yet, from that at Sayreville.¹ It has one, a single species, a Sterculia (new species), in common, and it is the only one. Most of the leaves of the lower Cretaceous stage have entire borders; on the contrary, those of this upper stage are serrate or denticulate on the borders. As said above, these upper Cretaceous leaves represent mostly new species referable to the genera Salix, Proteoides, Andromeda, Myrica, and perhaps a Prunus. There are many specimens of small cuneate flabellate leaflets, referable to a new genus of ferns; also leaves of Quercus, of the section Dryophyllum, and another narrow denticulate, apparently a Lomatia or a Myrica. The leaves of Salix are like those of S. prototolia of the lower stage, but are covered with a coating of carbonaceous matter which renders their nervation obsolete. One of the leaves is referable to Andromeda, like A. parlatori, Heer.; another to Cinnamomum Heerii, and two species of conifers, Sequoia rigida, Heer., and S. Reichenbachii, Heer., the leaves being shorter and narrower.

"Resuming:

1. Pettit's clay bank near Washington, S. R.
Sterculia, undetermined species.
 Rootlets of equisetum.
Andromeda.
Proteoides Daphnogenoides.
Platanus Heerii, Lesqr.
2. Sayre & Fisher's clay bank, at Sayreville.
Glyptostrobus gracillimus, Lesqr.
Sequoia condita, Lesqr.
S. Smithsonia, Heer.
S. subulata, Heer.
Araliopsis, undeterminable.
Magnolia alternans, Heer.
M. Capellini, Heer.
Cinnamomum Heerii, Lesqr.
Laurus,—species.
Persea Nebraskaensis, Lesqr.
Daphnophyllum?
Salix prototolia, Lesqr.

Proteoides Daphnogenoides, Heer.

P., undeterminable.

Sterculia, species.

3. J. K. Brick's clay bank, Burt's Creek.

Sassafras (Araliopsis).

Seed of Conifer.

Rootlets.

A Sequoia with thick leaves.

Sequoia Reichenbachii.

4. Mrs. Allan's clay pit, South Amboy.

Quercus, dentate leaves.

(Dryophyllum).

Sterculia, same as above.

Myrica or Lomatia.

Salix prototolia.

Andromeda.

Cinnamomum Heerii, Lesqr.

Sequoia rigida, Heer.

S. Reichenbachii, Heer.

Leaves of a peculiar new kind of fern.

"These specimens are few and poor, and therefore the determinations are not positively ascertained."

Two specimens only of shells have been collected from the clays during the surveys. These are not very well preserved, but they have been examined by Prof. W. M. Gabb, of Philadelphia, and by him determined to be the Cucullea antorsa, a species common in the green sand-marl bed. It is undoubtedly of the Cretaceous age.

Pebbles containing fossils are not uncommon in the gravel found in all parts of the clay district. Several small lots submitted to Prof. R. P. Whitfield, of the American Museum of Natural History, Central Park, New York, were reported on as follows: "The fossils in the various lots are nearly all from the Upper Helderberg limestone group. Those from Martin's Dock contain three species of Favosites, several fragments of cyathophylloid corals, a Michelina, also allied to Favosites, Atrypa reticularis, Strophodonta parva, and some other shells, fragmentary, also several specimens of an undescribed Stromatopora (spongoid).

"Those from Everett and Fish's clay banks are mostly cherts and jaspers, and many, likely, from the Coniferous.

"The pebble with fish tooth is most likely Upper Helderberg. One other lot contained a curious pebble of sandstone, composed of a white matrix and rounded quartz, and on being broken open revealed a large fragment of Orthis hipparyonx, Vanuxem.

"Another lot reveals Atrypa reticularis, Spirifer (species?), and several fragments of Devonian brachiopods and corals, and an impression of the dorsal side of a Gyroceras, or Cyrtoceras, very like C. —, Hall, from the Schoharie grit.

"There is no evidence of anything in the lot of more recent age than the Hamilton, and that only on two fragments, the others being Upper Helderberg, Oriskany, and perhaps some of the Favosites, Lower Helderberg, possibly though not probably."

The source from whence the materials for this formation originated must be looked for to the south-east of the present strata. Though bordering upon and overlying the red shale and sandstone which lies to the northwest of it, there is not a fragment of these rocks to be found in any of these beds, nor any of their striking and characteristic red color to be perceived in them. On the contrary, the materials of these beds are white, gray, or blackish, and if at all tinged with the reddish color of oxide of iron, it is a yellowish red, and not a purplish red, like the red shale and red sandstone. The appearances all indicate that they have originated from the materials of disintegrated and partially decomposed feldspathic granite or gneiss. In some places these products of disintegration have been sorted by water, the fine particles of clay deposited by themselves to make the present clay-beds, in others the quartz has been deposited as sand in beds by itself, and in still other places the finest of the sands, with a little mica almost in powder, has been deposited to make the so-called kaolin beds. In other beds the materials are deposited in their original mixed condition, clay and quartz together constituting the so-called feldspar beds of this district.

² It is comparable to an upper Cretaceous bed of Southwest Colorado. See Ann. Rep. of Dr. F. V. Hayden, 1874, p. 360.

There does not appear to have been any violent or irregular movements since the deposit of the clay-beds which has disturbed or distorted them. But there must have been high ground to the southeast and outside the present line of sea-coast, from which the materials for the clay and sand could have been washed and deposited on the lower ground, upon which they still lie. And this high ground, besides what wore away to make these beds, must have gradually settled down till it was hidden beneath the ocean, and the beds of the clay formation have risen along their northwestern border till they were above the sea-level, and till the beds had so altered their inclination as to slope down towards the southeast instead of towards the northwest, as they did when first deposited.

THICKNESS OF THE FORMATION.—The plastic clay formation here described consists of the following members, or sub-divisions, beginning at the top, viz.:

	Feet.
Dark colored clay (with beds and laminae of lignite).....	50
Sandy clay, with sand in alternate layers.....	40
Stoneware clay-bed.....	30
Sand and sandy clay (with lignite near the bottom).....	50
South Amboy fire-clay bed.....	20
Sandy clay (generally red or yellow).....	3
Sand and kaolin.....	10
Feldspar bed.....	5
Micaceous sand-bed.....	20
Laminated clay and sand.....	30
Pipes-clay (top white).....	10
Sandy clay (including leaf-bed).....	5
Woodbridge fire-clay bed.....	20
Fire-sand bed.....	15
Raritan clay-beds: Fire-clay.....	15
Sandy clay.....	4
Potters' clay.....	20
	347

The columnar section here given shows the position and relative thickness of the several members of the clay formation. These several members of the plastic clay formation are not equally well defined and clearly marked by characteristic features, neither do they always appear of uniform thickness, corresponding to the figures as stated in the above general section and order of superposition. The series here given represents the succession of the several subdivisions or beds, and their average thickness, as observed in localities where they appear fully developed, and have not been subsequently eroded or otherwise diminished in thickness through the action of outside agencies. The order of succession or superposition is made up from a survey of the whole.

CHAPTER LXI.

EARLY ROADS.¹

THE first highways in New Jersey of which there are any records or traditions were Indian paths. These are often referred to in early deeds and in the old records of commissioners for laying out roads. In a very old map which accompanies the edition of the Elizabethtown Bill in Chancery, published by James Parker in New York in 1747 (which map is reproduced from a still more ancient one, called "Popple's Large Map of the English Colonies in America"), there is a tracing of one of the most notable of these Indian paths, known as the "Minisink Path," and which extended from the Navesink Highlands on the ocean to Minisink Island in the Delaware, a distance of about seventy-five miles. This path started from Navesink, near the mouth of Shrewsbury River or Inlet, in Monmouth County, and ran northwesterly through Middletown to the Raritan River, in Middlesex County, crossing the river at Kent's Neck, near Crab Island, between Amboy and the mouth of South River. After crossing the Raritan the path ran north-northwest in its course, crossing the head of Rahway River, till it reached a point about six miles west of Elizabethtown Point, when it ran a short distance due north, and the remainder of its route north-northwest, passing over the mountains to the west of Springfield and Newark, and traversing the whole of Morris and Essex Counties in a north-northwest course to Minisink Island in the Delaware, below Port Jervis, and near the point of intersection of Sussex County in New Jersey with Orange County in New York. This northerly limit of the Minisink path was a part of the favorite hunting-ground of the Minisink Indians, which extended throughout the entire valley lying north of the Blue Mountains in Pennsylvania, stretching from the Wind Gap in that State into New York near the Hudson. We may indulge the fancy that this path was devised to enable the "upper ten" among the aborigines to enjoy the "season" at Long Branch, and to lay up stores of shells and fish. At Amboy, and at intervals along the sea-coast from Shrewsbury to Barnegat, there still remain relics of these periodical visits of the Indians, consisting of various-sized mounds of opened oyster-shells, many of which are from six to twenty feet in height, having a corresponding base, and built in a conical form. Some of these are now covered with alluvial, which has been in course of deposit upon them for centuries. There are also remains of shell-banks, made up of other than oyster-shells, being of the shells of clams and periwinkles, out of the former of which the Indians made their black (and most valuable) wampum. It is believed that the shell-banks or mounds of this kind are the refuse of Indian wampum manufactories.¹

¹ By Charles D. Deshler.

"Besides this extensive path there were many others. One of these ran from Perth Amboy to New Brunswick, where it crossed the Raritan, and from thence ran to Six-Mile Run, and through the State westward. The present road through Six-Mile Run, Kingston, and Princeton was laid out upon this path. Another of these paths ran from Shrewsbury through Monmouth County southerly, and was afterwards known as the 'Old Burlington Path.' Upon a part of this the road called the 'Lower Road' was laid out.

"As in these cases so in many others, the Indian paths determined the location and course of the roads that were afterwards established by the early colonists; and it is worthy of notice that while many of the roads laid out by our ancestors were afterwards voided, by reason of the unfavorable character of the ground and other natural disadvantages, not a single instance is presented of a road or part of a road constructed upon the site of an Indian path having been abandoned for any such cause. The American Indian was a natural engineer, and the paths which he made were at once direct and skillfully selected for their combination of all the natural advantages that were required. If the Indian paths crossed a stream it was either at the easiest and safest fording-place or above or below the point which was most liable to interruption from freshets; if they traversed a swamp it was at the precise spot where permanent or solid ground was to be found; if they crossed a range of hills it was by an easy grade and where the height and breadth were least formidable. In whatever direction they tended the ground combined every essential which the highest civilization has since ascertained to be desirable in a road, whether directness, economy of labor, or permanence be considered.

"The first roads traversing New Jersey that were made by European settlers were laid by the Dutch, with the purpose of connecting their settlements on the Noordt River (the Hudson), and especially at Nieuw Amsterdam (New York), with those of the Zuydt River (the Delaware) at Fort Casimir (New Castle, Del.). These must have been constructed in the period embraced between A.D. 1620 and 1660, certainly after 1623, when Fort Nassau was built by Cornelius Jacobse Mey, the Dutch Governor under the West India Company, and most probably after 1651, when Fort Casimir was built also by the Dutch. The intercourse between the settlements on the Hudson and those on the Delaware was so infrequent, however, that the only mode of communication at this time was by letters, which were dispatched across the bay to Elizabethtown, and from thence were carried forward from tribe to tribe by runners, who were sometimes whites, but more commonly friendly Indians. Much light is thrown on the early history of these roads by the Elizabethtown Bill in Chancery, which supplies two maps defining the exact routes of these early Dutch roads with great particularity. Their course cannot be better illustrated than by referring to these maps, and by quoting from this old document as follows:

"The Town then (that is, in the 'Dutch Time,' A.D. 1620 to 1660) called New Amsterdam and Manados, which is now (1745) the City of New York, was the first settlement and the chief Town of the Dutch upon Hudson's River, and the place of Residence of the Director-General of New Netherland; and Fort Casimir, now called New Castle, on the West side of Delaware River, was their chief Town upon Delaware River; and the roads from the one to the other of the said Towns past through the Lands in Question by this Bill, as is represented in the Map No. 1 annexed; and more distinctly by the Map No. 2 annexed.

"And your Orators to shew your Excellency, That the Tide flows up Raritan River to New Brunswick; represented on the Map No. 2, where, in the Dutch time, and yet, the Road to Delaware River from New Amsterdam did cross; and at New Brunswick the said Raritan River, about Low-water then was and as yet is fordable and usually crossed on Horseback; and that the Tide of Delaware River runs up to or near Delaware Falls; and at Low-water and when there are no Land-Floods, is fordable at said Falls, and was and is usually crossed a Horseback; and at no place below New Brunswick and Delaware Falls are or ever were the said Rivers Raritan and Delaware fordable."²

"The same old document states that in the years 1668 and 1670 'one Peter Jegow had License for and kept an House of Entertainment, for Accommodation of Passengers, Travellers and Strangers over against Mattinicunk Island,' at Lazy Point, 'which Island is said to be eight or nine miles below Delaware Falls,' and 'is between Burlington and Bristol,' . . . 'by which Point the Lower Road from New Amsterdam to Delaware or the Zuydt River, in the Dutch Time, and as yet doth cross by a Ferry there; which two Roads are represented on the Map No. 2 annexed.' 'And,' it goes on to say, 'your Orators Charge there were no settlements in the Dutch Time (1620 to 1664) nor long after at Perth Amboy, nor near to it on Staten Island over against it; nor on the South Side of Raritan over against it, nor no Ferry then kept there; nor was there any Road in the Dutch Time that Way used, nor at any place lower down the Raritan River than where New Brunswick now stands, which was formerly called Inian's Ferry; and which road still continues the principal and most frequented Road, notwithstanding many Endeavors to make it pass through Perth Amboy.'³

¹ Brodhead.

² Elizabeth Bill in Chancery, p. 4.

³ Ibid., pp. 4, 5.

"There can be no doubt that the first road which traversed New Jersey passed from New York (then New Amsterdam) through the bay and the kills by means of a ferry to the point afterwards Elizabethtown, and from thence through the towns afterwards known as Woodbridge and Piscataway to Inian's Ferry. At or very near this latter point two roads were formed. One of these, originally called the 'Upper Road,' afterwards known as the 'King's Highway,' passed on through the present sites of Kingston and Princeton to Trenton (or Delaware Falls, as it was then called), where it crossed the Delaware into Pennsylvania, continuing to Bristol, and from thence to Fort Casimir, or New Castle, and subsequently to Philadelphia. . . . A detailed outline of that portion of this road lying between New Brunswick and the province line as it existed in 1765 has been preserved in a field-book of Col. Azariah Dunham, who was appointed to run the line between Middlesex and Somerset in that year by the justices and freeholders of the county. This map has peculiar interest for the reason that it supplies the names and residences of those who lived along the road in 1765.

"The other road, known in the early times as the 'Lower Road,' diverged from the 'Upper Road' near Inian's Ferry, at George's road. Originally the point of divergence was several miles west of New Brunswick, but in after-times it was shifted within the present limits of the corporation. Leaving the 'Upper Road,' the 'Lower Road' trended southerly and westerly through Cranbury to Burlington, where it crossed the Delaware and rejoined the 'Upper Road' at Bristol. The 'Lower Road' was far less ancient than the 'Upper,' as appears from an act passed in 1695, entitled 'An act for repairing the new road from Mr. John Inian's to Burlington,' the preamble of which is as follows: 'Whereas the new road from Mr. John Inians, his house upon Raritan River, to the limits of this province towards Burlington is a part of the great thoroughfare of this province from New England, New York, etc., to the westward, which yet being unsettled may fall to decay to the great inconveniency of travellers, who may pass and repass that way, unless care be taken to maintain the same until such time as it may be maintained by those who may hereafter inhabit it, etc.' The act then goes on to provide that the road shall be kept up by the innholders of the towns of Piscataway, Woodbridge, and Elizabethtown, who were respectively assessed three pounds fifty shillings and four pounds ten shillings annually for five years for that purpose. The duty of the oversight and repairs of the road was intrusted to George Drake, an innkeeper of Piscataway, who was empowered to receive the above tax and to employ laborers."¹

"Periodically for many years, beginning as early as 1683-85 and continuing till 1740, efforts had been made to divert travel from the established old road through Inian's Ferry to Perth Amboy, and by a ferry across the Raritan at Radford's, now South Amboy, to extend another road through Spotswood to Burlington. The first intimation of a purpose of this kind is found in the 'Instructions' of the proprietors to Governor Gaven Lawrie on the 20th of July, 1683, in which they say, 'We could wish it might be discovered whether there may not a convenient road be found betwixt Perth Town and Burlington, for the entertaining a land commerce that way.'² And in obedience to these instructions Governor Lawrie laid out a road and established a ferry, with a boat to run between Amboy and New York, to 'entertain travellers' during his term of office, which closed in 1686.³ But the effort to divert the travel from the old road proved ineffectual, for on the 14th of April, 1698, the proprietors in their instructions to Governor Basse again press the matter, urging him to 'lay before the Assembly the great advantage that will redound to the Trade of the Province in General to cause the publick road to pass through the Post Town of Perth Amboy from New York, &c., to West Jersey and Pennsylvania, to which good end' Governor Basse was further instructed to 'endeavor to get an Act passed to lay a Tax on the County to bear the charge of a Work tending so much to the Publick Benefit of the Province.'⁴

"In connection with these efforts for the diversion of the public travel and traffic to Perth Amboy, it should be borne in mind that it was a place of 'great expectations.' It was a seaport, and was to be the London of the Western Hemisphere. It was the place where the reflected light of royalty shone in the persons of the proprietors and their representatives. It was the home of the Colonial Governors, and they held their mimic court there. It was the appointed place for the meeting of the General Assembly, and for the sessions of the courts. It was perceived that it was destined to become the great maritime centre of America, and perhaps of the world, a fantasy which has never been eradicated, and is soberly entertained by some of their descendants in that sprightly city even to this day. Their pride, their interest, and doubtless to a great extent their convictions led the proprietors and those who held under them to concentrate upon the infant metropolis every influence that could contribute to its welfare.

"The earliest public record I have been able to discover of the positive existence of a ferry at Perth

² Ibid., p. 173.

³ This road appears on a map in Whitehead's "East Jersey" as "Lawrie's Road." It is located south of the "Lower Road," and runs from South Amboy through Spotswood, possibly intersecting the "Lower Road" before reaching Burlington, but of that the map gives no evidence, being too small to show the road the whole distance.

⁴ Leaming and Spicer, p. 221.

¹ Leaming and Spicer, pp. 359, 361.

Amboy in connection with a road leading from thence to intersect the 'Lower Road' to Burlington is contained in an entry in the venerable manuscript volume of 'Minutes of the Middlesex County Courts,' comprising the period between 1683 and 1720, which is preserved in the clerk's office of the county of Middlesex. The last eleven leaves of this ancient muniment are devoted to a record of the acts of the commissioners of roads for Middlesex County, and under date of June 14, 1705, it is therein stated that the commissioners—John Bishop, George Drake, and John Matthews—laid out 'our common Road of six Rod wide, Beginning at the County line between Elizabethtown and Woodbridge, near Robison's Branch, thence extending along through Woodbridge to Perth Amboy, the same that was laid out in the last Governor Lowry's time, and from Amboy ferry leading to Burlington, as it now lies, by South River Bridge to Cranbury brook, and so forward.' So that in obedience to the instructions of the proprietors above recited in 1683 to Governor Lawrie, and repeated in 1698 to Governor Basse, a ferry had been established at Perth Amboy, and a road had been laid out from thence connecting with the 'Lower Road' by way of South River Bridge and Cranbury, certainly at some time after 1698, and prior to 1705. The ferry at Perth Amboy is also spoken of in an act of the General Assembly passed Jan. 26, 1716-17, and the rates charged for ferriage are given. By this act, however, it appears that the business of the ferry at that date was chiefly between Perth Amboy and New York, Perth Amboy and Staten Island, and Perth Amboy and Wehauk, though mention is made of a ferry from Amboy to Radford's, the latter being on the south side of the Raritan, at the present site of South Amboy. It seems that at this time the ferry from Amboy to Radford's was used rather for the private convenience of the owners of plantations there than for any public purposes.

"I have not been able to discover any public act of the Assembly or other body establishing or confirming the main highway traversing the State and crossing the Raritan at Inian's Ferry. It is doubtful if there ever were such an enactment. . . . The earliest enactment relative to any road which I have been able to discover under the English rule is an act of the Assembly passed April 6, 1676, as follows: 'Be it enacted by this Assembly that for the more safe and orderly Passage of the aforesaid Deputies (of Middletown and Shrewsbury to the meetings of the General Assembly) for the future that care be taken by the Inhabitants of the town of Middletown to make choice of two or more Men out of the said Town, them to join with two or more also chosen out of Piscataqua, to make out the nearest and most convenient Way that may be found between the said Towns upon the Country charge; and this to be done between this and the tenth of May next, upon the penalty of what Damages may ensue for the want thereof.'¹ This was followed six years later by an Act of Assembly passed March 1, 1682,² which is the first one of a general character of which any record is preserved, and is entitled 'An Act for making and settling Highways, Passages, Landings, Bridges, and Ferries within this Province.' This act assigned the work prescribed to commissioners in each county, of whom the following were appointed 'for the County of Middlesex and parts adjacent, The Governor, or Deputy Governor for the time being, the surveyor-general, Capt. John Palmer, Thomas Worne, Stephen Worne, Samuel Dennis, Samuel Moore, Edward Slater, John Gilman, Hopewell Hull. . . .'

"Before the passage of this act the roads in New Jersey, with the exception of the great highways already described, were mere Indian tracks, cartways, bridle- and foot-paths, and it was under the authority of this law in East Jersey that the various roads penetrating the province were laid out. . . . In Governor Lawrie's time, from 1684 to 1686, numerous roads were opened, several of them of considerable importance, and which remain in use until this day. . . . During the period from 1705 to 1713 no less than thirty-five different roads were viewed, opened, and established within the limits of Middlesex County.

"Prior to the passage of the general law, . . . and as late as 1686, the roads which have been above described were the only ones stretching over any considerable portion of the State, or linking together its scattered plantations, settlements, and embryo towns. The next road of public and general importance was the one familiarly spoken of as 'the Road up Raritan.' This branched from the main highway that ran across the State, starting out from it at Piscataway, and running to Bound Brook, and so through Somerset County to the North and South Branches. There is no official record in existence, so far as I have been able to discover, of the first opening of this road, and its exact date is difficult to arrive at. In the course of my investigation, however, some facts have come to light which enable me to fix the date with tolerable precision. And as this road was an important one to our own county, at the same time that it was one of the earliest results of the pioneer plantations along the Raritan in Somerset County, and as it afterwards became a leading contributor to its settlement and development, it has a strong claim upon our interest.

"Among the other roads laid out in 1705 by John Bishop, George Drake, and John Matthews, commissioners of roads for the county of Middlesex, the record of which throws light upon still earlier roads, is one which is described as follows: 'And also for one other public, common, and General Highway, to extend from Woodbridge to Piscataway, and also from Amboy to Piscataway, and from thence along the Road to and through Somerset County to the North Branch, as it was formerly laid out in the late Governor Lowery's time.' So that, if this record be accurate, this road was first laid out during the administration of Governor Lawrie, which extended from 1684 to 1686. That it must have been laid out in 1686 appears from the following affidavits, which were made in 1720, when some difficulties had arisen about the true course of the 'road up Raritan,' and which are preserved in the old book of records of Middlesex County:¹

¹ Leaning and Spicer, p. 118.

² Ibid., pp. 256-58.

"1st. 'William Sharp, of Woodbridge in the County of Middlesex in the Province of New Jersey, Yeoman, Aged About fifty-seven years, maketh Oath on y^e holy Evangelists of Almighty God that he this Deponent from the year one thousand six hundred and eighty-six that he settled upon the North side of y^e Raritan River near the meeting of the North and South Branches he used y^e Road which was commonly called and esteemed y^e Highway said to be layed out by the authority of y^e Government of the Province of New Jersey. During the nine years that he lived there the Highway led from Bound Brook near to Mr. Giles' House through the land late in the tenor of John Rudyard and so behind the improved land of Capt. Codrington, Mr. White's, and y^e other y^e Inhabitants unto y^e North Branch of y^e said River, near to the upper end of a plantation y^e west side thereof. William Sharpe, April 29, 1720.'

"2d. 'John Campbell, of Piscataua in the County of Middlesex in Province of New Jersey, Yeoman, aged about 58 years, Maketh Oath on the Holy Evangelists of Allmighty God, That in the year of our Lord 1686, this Deponent was Coming down Raritan River with severall of the Servants belonging to Lord Neil Campbell going to Woodbridge meeting, there being no way this Deponent knew but through the Inclosures of Mr. John White, Deceased, they were stopt by Mr. John White at his gate for some little time, but then not before this Dep^t and other Servants returned, y^e said John White went to Amboy to Governor Lorry, and complained against them, who were called before the said Governor Lorry, and answered they knew no other way. The Governor said there should be a way appointed forthwith to go up the Country clear of Mr. White, and the other Inhabitants' Improvements. Accordingly before this Depa^{nt}, with others aforesaid went up, the Way was marked out Leeding from Bound Brook, near Mr. Giles's House, through the Land late in the tenner of Mr. John Rudyards, through Mr. Codrington's Land behind his fields, and so behind the Rear of all the Improved Lands belonging to the Severall Inhabitants on the said Raritan River to the North Branch thereof, at or near the upper part of a Plantation on the West Side of the said Branch belonging to Peter Van Voste, and that during the space of nine years that this Deponent lived up the Raritan, and South Branch thereof, he always understood that to be y^e

Highway layed out by y^e authority of y^e Government of East Jersey. John Campbell, April 29, 1720.'

"In connection with the affidavit of this man, who was a servant of Lord Neil Campbell, and in 1686 was on his way from the North Branch to attend church at Woodbridge, it may be mentioned that in 1685, Lord Neil Campbell became the owner of one-fourth of a twenty-fourth part of East Jersey. In January, 1685, he had located 1650 acres on the Raritan and North Branch, and it was from this 'Plantation,' without doubt, that his clansman was proceeding to Woodbridge when arrested by Mr. John White. . . .

"The course of the 'Road up Raritan' from Piscataway to Bound Brook is not clear. Certainly it did not come from Piscataway to Inian's Ferry, and run from thence along the river to Bound Brook, as the road now lies, that road being of much later origin. After combining all the information I have been able to gather, I am persuaded that the road left Piscataway (a six-rod road),² passed from thence in, a north-westerly direction west of Metuchen, through Quibletown and New Market to Bound Brook. Considerable portions of this road remain six rods wide to this day, although much of the original road has been obliterated by the plow, and parts of the existing road are made up of newer and much narrower ones. After reaching Bound Brook the road extended to Somerville, running, as we have seen by the above affidavits, in the rear of improved lands and farm-houses on the banks of the Raritan, a little to the south of the present turnpike, following the north side of the Raritan to the junction of the two branches, and from thence going west to Lambertville, at that time called Howell's Ferry.

"The road from Monmouth County, provided for by act of 1676, already referred to, 'was mainly constructed upon the old Minisink Indian path, beginning at Shrewsbury, passing through Middletown and Mount Pleasant, and continuing on or near the old Indian path through Monmouth County and a part of Middlesex to the point where it diverged to Kent's Neck in order to cross the Raritan. At this point the road continued west of and along the Raritan to the vicinity of Washington, or Old Bridge, most probably to a ford anciently known as Abraham's Ford, and from thence still along the Raritan, past Weston's Mills, to New Brunswick, or, as it was then called, 'Inian's.' In the old records of roads I find two extremely interesting minutes throwing light on that portion of this old road which was at or near New Brunswick. The first of these occurs under date of April 12, 1716, and describes a 'highway' as having been laid out by the commissiouers, beginning 'About a mile and a half from Inyon's Ferry, along the post-road that goes to Cranberry Brook' (this was the Lower, subsequently George's road), 'and from thence southeast throw Capt. Longfield's Land, and then throw Leander Smock's Land, and then throw Capt. Longfield's till it comes to y^e road that goes to his Mill.' This road must have been a cross-road from George's road to the Navesink road, on or near which last was Longfield's mill. The site of the mill may have been at or near the present Weston's mill, or it may have been farther up Lawrence's Brook, nearer to Millstone, or it may have been farther east, near the mouth of the brook, as there are old mill-sites at all these points.

¹ Pages 80, 81, and 91.

² Record of Roads (Deshler's copy), p. 81.

"The other minute of commissioners bearing upon this old Navesink road is one voiding the Mill road just noticed; and it is so replete with interest I quote it in full, interjecting occasional explanations, as follows:

"COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX, JANUARY y^e 11th, 1716. Whereas, Sometime In April or May Last past As may by y^e Records more Certainly Appear, Mr. John Mathew, Mr. Isaac Smallie, and Mr. George Rescarrick, Commissioners for y^e County of Middx., did Lay out A Road to Mr. Cornelius Longfields Mill, and it is found by y^e Neighbourhood to be a Very bad Road to y^e s^d Mill. And Also at y^e Request of Above fifty of y^e Neighbors that have occasion of s^d Mills, who, by their Petition and their Names Affixed to the same desired that y^e Road to y^e s^d Mills might run conformable to or near thereabouts where y^e Ancient Way was used for y^e Navesink People for above forty years.' [It was in 1676, just forty years before this date, when this 'Ancient Way' was ordered by the General Assembly] 'to pass to y^e Place now known by y^e Name of Onyons Ferry. These are therefore to signify to All Persons concerned, that we y^e Commissioners hereunder Named at y^e Earnest Request of y^e above s^d Neighbourhood have Laid out A Road of two Rods wide, beginning Right Over Against y^e House, Commonly known by y^e House of Mr. Tolons House, and so running Southerly over y^e brook [probably Lyell's Brook] where Navesink Road formerly did run along by Benjamin Pridmore, thence by Landare Smocks, within two or three Rods of his House, as y^e old Road went; thence directly through Mr. Longfield's owne Lands to his Mills.' Longfield's Mills must have been at the site of Weston's Mills below New Brunswick. By Reid's Map it is shown that Cornelius Longfield owned a tract of 500 acres at that point. During the Revolutionary war a farm designated 'Longfield's Farm' was owned by Richard Gibb, and the houses upon it were destroyed by the British. In his inventory of the depredations committed by the British it is described as being '3/4 of a mile from town.'

"At the same time the commissioners laid out a cross-road connecting the Navesink road with the Upper road at Six-Mile Run, which they described as 'An other Road of two Rods wide for y^e benefit of y^e Five Mile Brook Men or any other People y^e have occasion of s^d Mills, to extend from y^e said Leonard Smocks to y^e Road y^e leads to Six Mile Run.' The commissioners were George Rescarrick, John Bishop, and John Martin. There was another very early road traversing Monmouth County, to which I merely refer, which passed through Shrewsbury and Middletown in the direction of Freehold, Monmouth Co., over Cream Ridge, in the vicinity of Allentown, Crosswicks, and Bordentown, to Burlington. This also for the most part was originally an old Indian path, afterwards known as the 'Old Burlington Path,' and was undoubtedly used by the aborigines on the Delaware in their periodical visits to the ocean at Navesink, whither they went to gather clams, oysters, shell for wampum, and to lay in stores of fish.

"The Middlebush Road.—One other road having something more than a local importance remains to be noticed. This is the old Middlebush road. A considerable part of this road had been established by custom and use probably as early as 1690; but, so far as I have been able to discover, it was first laid out by authority in 1712, at which time it was also greatly extended. The record describing this road is as follows:

"Pursuant to an Act of Assembly Intituled An Act for regulating y^e Highway & for Appointing and Confirming of Commissioners for every County to regulate and lay out y^e same, Accordingly y^e Commissioners for y^e County of Somerset set having layed out and ordered y^e Road from Raritan River toward Delaware Falls to run as followeth y^e is to say—Beginning at Inian's Ferry thence running y^e nearest course to a brook known by y^e name of Salt Pond Brook,¹ thence Along or as near y^e Path as it now goeth until it comes to Derrick Joneses House, thence upon A straight course to John Wilsons shop,² (another record says that John Wilson lived 'upon Rocky Hill'), thence directly y^e most convenient as can be had to Capt. Harrisons Mill,' (this mill was on Millstone River, at the point near where it crosses the Upper road, near Kingston), thence along y^e oew cart way to Justice Leonards, thence along y^e old Road [the Upper road] till it comes near Stony Brook, so crossing y^e said brook about three or four chains below y^e Old Road, so turning up to y^e Old Road again and so to y^e Province Line. The said Country Road is to be four Rods in breadth. Witness our hand this 6th day of June, 1712. Andrew Bird, Michael Van Veghtie, John Harrison, Thomas Yeats.'

"This road, then, ran from Inian's Ferry westerly to Middlebush, and probably to Millstone, from whence it ran southwesterly to Rocky Hill, and from there to Harrison's Mills, on the Great road near Kingston, from thence it ran alongside the Great or Upper road—now approaching to, now receding from, and sometimes intersecting it—to Stony Brook and the province line.²

"The remaining roads that were laid out in Middlesex County in the early days, and for many years afterwards, were almost entirely local in their character, and were intended either to enable people who had clustered together in neighborhoods in the interior to get to mill or to market, or to tap the great main roads that traversed the province, or to reach the important towns of Woodbridge, Piscataway, and Perth Amboy. Nearly all of these roads are made to intersect the main roads or country roads branching off from them, and they all converge more or less directly upon the towns above named, at which the fairs, markets, and courts were held, and in one of which (Perth Amboy) the General Assembly continued to be convened. Of course there were also numerous smaller roads leading to and from landings and ferries at various points on the Raritan River, down which there was constant travel, and on which the people from the interior of Somerset and the intervening points on the river transported their produce in canoes and on rafts and flat-boats far more easily and expeditiously than they were able to do over the new, imperfectly constructed, and scarcely worked country roads."

¹ Salt ponds orlicks were numerous in the vicinity in the "olden time," when, as Denton relates, the "Country" was "stored with wilde Beasts, as Deer and Elke"; and in an old Indian deed preserved in the Book of Early Records, p. 234, a "great and little salt Pond" are spoken of, and described as being on "Topp of the first mountaie" of the "Blew Hills, next to Woodbridge."

² See old British map, also Col. Dunham's map.

CHAPTER LXII.

THE PARTITION LINE BETWEEN EAST AND WEST JERSEY.

By an indenture quintipartite, made on the first day of July, 1676, and in the twenty-eighth year of the reign of Charles II., between Sir George Carteret, William Penn, Nicholas Lucas, Gawen Lawrie, and Edward Byllinge, the province of New Jersey was divided into East and West Jersey. The line of partition was to be a straight line drawn from the east side of Little Egg Harbor, which was agreed in the indenture to be called the South Station Point, to the northernmost boundary of the province on the River Delaware. No reference is made in this deed to latitude $41^{\circ} 40'$, but it is implied by a reference made to the boundaries of the original grant by the Duke of York to Berkeley and Carteret.

It is well to bear in mind that the partition line, according to this agreement, was to run to the north partition point, inasmuch as the Keith line, subsequently run as far as the south branch of the Raritan, paid no regard to this condition, but was run in a direction entirely independent of it, and if projected to the Delaware River would have intersected that stream a short distance above the Water Gap.

The commissioners appointed by both divisions of the province to determine the direction of the proposed line were William Emly and John Reid, the former a surveyor in Amwell, West Jersey, and the latter the deputy surveyor-general of the eastern portion of the province. They were appointed in 1686, ten years after the deed of partition was drawn up. If they could not agree between themselves they were authorized to choose a third person to act as umpire. They seem not to have been governed at all by the deed of partition, but to have determined the course of the line from the South Station Point according to their own arbitrary pleasure. Yet the Deputy Governor and several of the proprietors of West Jersey not only acquiesced in their award, but, on the 8th of January, 1686-87, put themselves under bonds in the sum of five thousand pounds lawful money of the province to abide by it as a final decision. This bond was signed by John Skein, Deputy Governor of West Jersey, Samuel Jennings, Thomas Olive, George Hutchison, Mahlon Stacy, Thomas Lambert, and Joseph Pope. The award also subsequently received the sanction and approval of William Penn. The bond was signed, sealed, and delivered on the 8th of January, 1686-87, in the presence of Henry Greenland and William Mount.¹

On the same day in which this bond was signed, the commissioners, Emly and Reid, made their award, declaring that the partition line between East and West Jersey should "run from y^e north side of y^e mouth or Inlet of y^e beach of Little Egg Harbor on a straight line to Delaware River north-northwest, and fifty minutes more westerly, according to natural position, and not according to y^e magnet, whose variation is nine degrees westward."

The next thing in order was the actual running out of the line according to the direction here decreed. It appears that the East Jersey proprietors and officials were somewhat anxious about it, and so appointed Samuel Winder, John Campbell, and Miles Foster commissioners to wait upon the authorities of West Jersey, remind them of their contract, and hurry their tardy steps to have the line run as speedily as possible. Their commission is signed by Thomas Gordon, John Barclay, Robert Fullerton, Thomas Warne, Andrew Hamilton, Gawen Lawrie. They were instructed "to require Governor Skein and the rest who signed the bond to give orders that the line should be run according to the last award."

The East Jersey authorities furnished the surveyor, George Keith. The line was run in 1687 as far as John Dobie's house, on the south branch of the Raritan, and is the straight line now seen upon the maps, pointing towards the Delaware River at a point quite too low down to meet the conditions of the original agreement, but stopping short of its destination. It extends only so far as to form the boundary line between Somerset and Hunterdon Counties, which is, however, enough distinction conferred upon it, considering its origin. It could with safety have been blotted from the map of the State.

Some of the most influential of the West Jersey proprietors never approved of this attempt to fix the partition line between them and their eastern neighbors. It soon became apparent, if it did not so appear at first, that the latter were getting "the lion's share." Daniel Coxe, Governor of West Jersey, was one of them, and the leading actor in resisting the proposed settlement on the basis of the Emly and Reid award. He was a man of unblemished character, wise and sagacious in council, a just and public-spirited man, above the imputation of mere self-interest in the part he took in the partition question, although one of the largest proprietors of West Jersey. He stood second only to William Penn, with whose opinions and actions he felt himself obliged to differ as to the rights of the people of West Jersey; but he differed in the magnanimous spirit of a true Friend.

In a letter addressed to the Council of Proprietors of West Jersey, under date of the 5th of September, 1687, accompanying his "Narrative Relating to the Division Line," he says,—

"After Mr. Byllings' decease, his heirs were greatly ignorant of his concerns relating unto West Jersey, and therefore resolved to sell his interest both in government and property. I and another of the chief proprietors, having together a very great share of the country, applied ourselves for advice unto the lawyers, being assured by the most eminent that however Byllinge's concessions might in conscience bind him during his life, they were not always obligatory to a purchaser or successor, because said concessions were made before his right of government was granted; we therefore consulted with several proprietors and others, well-wishers to your colony, amongst whom it was agreed and resolved to be for the good of your country and our own security that one amongst us should purchase from the heirs of Mr. Byllings all his and their interest in property and government; and because my proportion of land was greater, or that they apprehended me capable of serving them, or to have more money at command, or because they had ever perceived me to be zealous and active to promote the good of the province, I was earnestly pressed and requested to make a purchase of the government and the property annexed thereto, wherewith having complied, that I might demonstrate the disinterestedness of my undertaking, and that I did primarily propose the welfare and benefit of the people, and prefer it to my private advantage, I did many times proffer Mr. Penn and Mr. Ford and others who pretended to understand most of your minds, what was for your good, and to be, as it were, kind of trustee for you, that if they would contrive any method whereby the government might be legally and severally vested in the proprietors or people without a governor, or if they would find any person more fit to discharge the office of government, or who might prove more acceptable to the people than myself, I was willing to consign or reconvey all my estate, power, authority as I had received it and upon the same condition, not desiring the least advance beyond what they all know I had disbursed; but not finding any proposal to meet with any other return than an invitation to proceed, and good wishes that I might therein prove successful, and finding that all the proprietors in or near London whom I could converse were greatly satisfied with my conduct, encouraging me to expect they would meet with like acceptance from the proprietors and inhabitants of West Jersey, I therefore thought fit to recommunicate unto you the whole transaction of this affair, as likewise what I expect from you, the proprietors and inhabitants of West Jersey, and what you may reciprocally challenge from me. I do therefore hereby give you understand that whereas all the gentlemen of the law who have been hitherto consulted do unanimously agree that the government of the province of West Jersey is legally in me as full as Pennsylvania in Mr. Penn, or East Jersey in the proprietors there, I thereupon assumed the title of governor, and lay claim to the powers and authority thereto annexed; and I am resolved by the assistance of Almighty God to exercise the jurisdiction by his royal highness, his last deed or grant unto me conveyed, with all integrity, and faithfulness, and diligence, for the benefit and welfare of those over whom divine providence hath constituted me (under our sovereign) superintendent or overseer, always preferring public emolument before my own private advantage."

¹ New Jersey Archives, Series I, vol. I, pp. 522-23.

During the first year of Governor Coxe's administration the contest concerning the partition line caused much excitement. Governor Coxe having openly repudiated the Emly and Reid award as an unjust and unequal division, and without binding force with the successor of Byllinge, soon brought all the West Jersey proprietors to his views except William Penn. Governor Coxe in his letter explains the action of Penn as follows:

"I perceive that which most influenced him is a persuasion that the division ought to be equal in quantity, and is confirmed therein by a passage in Mr. Byllinge's commission for settling the bounds, wherein he uses the word equal, and is persuaded (being herein influenced by Mr. Keith's false map, of which I have sent you a copy) that Mr. Reid's proposal is very fair, and an exact equal division of the country. I do not herein charge Mr. Penn with any fault, who I believe acts according to his convictions, but I only acquaint you herewith that you may understand your own misfortunes, for had not Mr. Penn embraced our interest we should probably have made a more speedy and advantageous agreement."¹ Concerning what he calls "Mr. Keith's false map" he says further on, "The draughts they produce for division are not in the least according to truth, nor according to those they sent their proprietors, whereof I, having been two years of East Jersey, have most certain knowledge and exact copies of their own draughts to compare them." . . . The Governor, it appears, had obtained these copies, and was on his guard as to any deception that might be attempted by means of false maps. By this means he thinks William Penn was deceived and led to approve the award of Emley and Reid and the Keith line.

He gives this advice to the West Jersey proprietors:

"I entreat and require that you treat not with them (the East Jersey proprietors) any further about any accommodation, nor own that pretended to be already made, in stand by the letter of the agreement between Sir George Carteret and Mr. Byllinge, viz.: That the line be run directly from the east side of Little Egg Harbor unto the most northerly branch of Delaware River, in forty-one degrees and forty minutes. And I question not but we shall bring them to more reasonable terms than any they have hitherto proposed; at least no pains nor cost shall be wanting on my part, and I have the concurrence of all our proprietors, Mr. Penn excepted, whom I could any ways meet with or consult."

At this time the East Jersey proprietors had ordered lands to be taken up at various places near the new pretended line of partition, and Governor Coxe ordered a protest to be entered against this, and ordered the surveyor of West Jersey or his deputy to immediately take up in his name "all that land which is westerly of the Millstone and Raritan Rivers," adding, "and we favor them very much by going no farther (for according to strictness our line runs within three miles of Perth City), and by allowing them that great tract of most excellent land from thence to the meeting of the Millstone and Raritan Rivers."

Thus it appears that in 1687-88 lands were being rapidly taken up, and the West Jersey proprietors were pushing their claims eastward to within three miles of the mouth of the Raritan. Piscataway and Inian's Ferry were held to be within the bounds of West Jersey. In a letter written to the East Jersey proprietors in England about this time we are informed that Thomas Budd had made a large purchase of land of the Indians in what properly belonged to East Jersey, and that on his way from New York with the goods he had purchased to pay off the Indians he was arrested by the authority of the Governor and Council of East Jersey at Inian's Ferry. The account says,—

"By a warrant directed to the Sheriff he was taken at John Inian's and locked himself up two or three days, and would not surrender, pretending that he was in his own province, and some other West Jersey men came, under pretence to visit him, but, as seemed, to rescue him, which obliged the deputy Governor to order to the Sheriff a stronger guard. . . . After five days' attendance he was brought before the deputy Governor, who told him he was informed against as a person who, contrary to laws and without our authority, had taken upon him to convene our Indians and purchase land within our province. . . . He was held by recognizance in the sum of a thousand pounds for his appearance at the next Court of Common Right, to be held in October. Budd claimed to be acting under authority of an act of the Assembly of West Jersey, but he appeared not to be able to produce a copy of it, nor to give any satisfactory evidence of the existence of such a law.

"Also," says the same letter, "some of West Jersey have forbid the people of Piscataway to pay quit-rents, upon pretense that Piscataway is within their Province, which doth oblige our Governor and Council to issue out warrants of distress to make them pay them."

¹ Letter from Daniel Cope to the Council of Proprietors of West Jersey.

This controversy between the proprietors of the respective provinces of East and West Jersey continued only until Sept. 5, 1688, when Governors Coxé and Barclay agreed upon a compromise line at a meeting in London. This agreement is stated to be "For the final determination of all differences concerning the deed of Partition and all other disputes and controversies about dividing the lands and settling the Bounds between East and West Jersey," and gives the line as follows:

"First, the line of Partition run straight from Little Egg Harbour to the most westerly corner of John Dobie's Plantation, as it stands on the South Branch of Raritan River, shall be the Bounds so far between East and West Jersey, and shall not be altered, but remain as it stands in a printed draught of the Proprietors' lands surveyed in East Jersey, and drawn by John Reil, and since printed here.

"Secondly, from thence to run along the back of the adjoining Plantations until it come to James Dundasse his plantation, and from thence as the most Northwesterly part thereof a line to lye even with the line on the back of these Plantations, and so to run Northeastward till it touch the North Branch of Raritan River, as it is struck upon the map already, but saving the Plantations already laid out to be within the line if they happen to stand a little more westerly than that line is marked.

"Thirdly, from the North end of the line where it touches Raritan North Branch, thence forward the largest stream or current of water belonging to the said North Branch shall be the Bound or Partition, and so continuing along the same unto the North end thereof for the bounds aso far.

"Fourthly, from the said North end of the Branch a Short Straight line to run to touch the Nearest part of Piscick River, and so following the course of that river, continuing unto Pequannick River so long as it runs Northerly or Northwesterly, those rivers still to be the Bounds between both Provinces, and if Pequannick River doe not run far enough to the latitude of 41 degrees then from the said river, a straight line to be run Northward to the latitude, and that to be the utmost North Partition Point, and from the said Point in a straight line due East to the Partition Point on Hudson's River between East Jersey and New York. Provided always that all Plantations and tracts of land in East Jersey shall remain to the Parties Concerned, and the Partition shall so run as to include them in the East Jersey Bounds.

"Lastly, Dr. Coxé doth Covenant and promise to make good the agreements above written, and Warrant the Title and quiet Possessions of all the lands so to be appropriated to the Proprietors of East Jersey according to the Limits and Bounds above mentioned against all persons that shall or may pretend or claim any interest to any of the said lands as West Jersey Proprietors."

Robert Barclay made the same stipulation on his part, and each bound himself in the sum of £5000 well and truly to fulfill the covenant. The document was sealed and delivered in the presence of David Howling and Stephen Lucock, in London, the 5th of September, 1688.

This compromise partition line is a very plainly-traced dotted line on Faden's map of 1777, republished as the centennial map of New Jersey. It extends from the northwestern terminus of the Keith line to the North Branch of the Raritan (called Pepack Branch), a distance of about sixty miles; thence up the North Branch to near its head, following what is now the line between Somerset and Morris Counties, and coinciding with that line at the point where it strikes the Passaic River; thence it follows the Passaic, first southward and then northward, to the mouth of the Pequannock, and after ascending that stream to latitude of forty-one degrees, makes a turn directly east along that parallel to the Hudson River.

It should be remembered that at this time there was no fixed boundary between New York and New Jersey, nor was the line finally determined for more than three-quarters of a century afterwards. Wherever the partition line between East and West Jersey is referred to in any boundary between September, 1688, and September, 1743, it is this compromise line of Governors Coxé and Barclay.

The compromise line above described continued to be the accepted partition line between the provinces of East and West Jersey until the Lawrence line was run in 1743. As a preliminary step towards this, no less than as a necessary prerequisite to the establishment of the boundary line between New Jersey and New York, an act was passed by the Legislature on March 27, 1719, under which commissioners were appointed by royal patent to ascertain and determine the northern station-point, described in the grant of the Duke of York and the several conveyances under it, at which, according to the quintipartite agreement, the divisional line from the east side of Little Egg Harbor was to terminate on the Delaware in latitude forty-one degrees and forty minutes. The manner in which this duty was performed is shown by the following document, called "THE TRIPARTITE DEED.

"THIS INDENTURE Tripartite, made the twenty-fifth day of July, in the fifth year of the reign of George, over Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, etc., Anno Dom. 1719, between Robert Walter, of the City and province of New York: Isaac Hicks, of Queen's County, in the said province, Esq.; Allain Jarret, of the City and province aforesaid, Esq., surveyor for, and in behalf of, the said province of New York, of the first part; John Johnson, and George Willocks, of the Eastern division of the province of New Jersey, Esq., and James Alexander, surveyor-general of the said Eastern division, of the second part; and Joseph Kirkbride and John Reading, of the Western division of the said province, and James Alexander, surveyor-general of the said Western division, of the third part: Whereas his said Majesty, the King, by Letters Patent under the great seal of the Province of New York, did Commissionate, authorize and appoint the said Robert Walter and Isaac Hicks Commissioners, and Allain Jarret surveyor of the province of New York; that the said Commissioners and surveyor, or surveyors, appointed, or to be appointed, upon the part or behalf of the province of New Jersey, carefully and diligently inspect and survey all such of the streams of waters that form the river Delaware; which they, the said commissioners, or the surveyor, or surveyors, may esteem necessary to be inspected or surveyed; in order to find out and determine which of the streams is the Northernmost branch of Delaware river, and that then, when such branch is so discovered, the surveyor, or surveyors, according to the best of their knowledge and understanding, discover and find out that place of the said Northernmost branch of Delaware River that lies in the latitude of 41 degrees and 40 minutes, which is the North partition point of New York and New Jersey; and for the better preserving and perpetuating the knowledge of the said partition point, the said Commissioners and surveyors, by the said Letters Patent are required to take notice of the most remarkable and conspicuous places near to the said North partition point, whether they be rocks, hills, gullies, ponds, runs, or streams of water; and observe upon what course and distance such remarkable places bear from the said North partition point; all which the said commissioners are required by the said Letters Patent distinctly to certify under their hands and seals, unto the governor, or commander in chief of the province of New York, to be filed and recorded in the secretary's office of the said province of New York: All which by the Letters Patent, bearing date the first day of May, in the fifth year of his said Majesty's reign, and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and nineteen, and remaining upon the records of the said province of New York, may more fully and at large appear: And whereas his said Majesty by other Letters Patent under the great seal of the province of New Jersey, did commissionate and appoint the said John Johnson and George Willocks Commissioners for the Eastern division of the said province of New Jersey; Joseph Kirkbride and John Reading commissioners for the Western division of New Jersey, and James Alexander, surveyor-general of both divisions of the province of New Jersey aforesaid; in conjunction with the Commissioners and surveyor or surveyors appointed, or to be appointed, upon the part and behalf of the said province of New York; that they the said commissioners and surveyors carefully and diligently inspect and survey all or such of the streams of water that form the said river Delaware, which they the said Commissioners, or surveyor, or surveyors, may esteem necessary to be inspected or surveyed, in order to find out and determine which of the streams of water is the Northernmost branch of the said river, and that then when such branch is so discovered, the said surveyor or surveyors carefully, according to their best knowledge and understanding, discover and find out that place of the said Northernmost branch of Delaware river that lies in the latitude of 41 degrees and 40 minutes; which is the North partition of New Jersey aforesaid, and the point, as well, of the line of partition or division between the Eastern and Western division, as that place where the line of partition or division between New York and New Jersey terminates; and for the better perpetuating and preserving the knowledge of the said North partition point, the said Commissioners and surveyors for the province of New Jersey are required by the said Letters Patent to take notice of the most remarkable and conspicuous places near to the said North partition point, whether they be rocks, hills, gullies, ponds, runs, or streams of water; and observe on what course and distances such remarkable places bear from the North partition point; all which the said Commissioners and surveyors are further required as aforesaid, distinctly to certify under their hands and seals unto the governor or Commander in Chief of the province of New Jersey aforesaid, to be filed and recorded in the secretary's office thereof; all which by the said last recited Letters Patent, bearing date the last day of March, in the fifth year of his Majesty's reign, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and nineteen, and remaining upon the public records of the said province of New Jersey, may fully and at large appear.

"Now this Indenture witnesseth, that the said Commissioners and surveyors, as well upon the part and behalf of the province of New York as upon the part and behalf of the province of New Jersey, in pursuance of the trust reposed in them by the several and above recited Letters Patent, under the great seals of the respective provinces of New York and New Jersey: having carefully and diligently inspected and informed themselves which of the several and respective branches of the said river of Delaware is the Northernmost branch thereof, do find, and therefore by these presents do certify, and declare, that that stream or river which is commonly called or known by the name of the Fishkill is the Northernmost branch of the said river Delaware: And further, that they the said Commissioners and Surveyors, according to the best of their knowledge and information, do esteem and believe the said Fishkill to be the biggest and deepest stream that forms the said river Delaware: And whereas the said Althin Jarret and James Alexander, having taken repeated observations, as well high adjoining to the said Fishkill, or the Northernmost branch of the Delaware River, as in sundry other places, in order to discover that place in said Northernmost branch that lies in the latitude of 41 degrees and forty minutes; and that they the said surveyors, according to the best of their skill and understanding, having discovered the same to be upon that place of the said Fishkill, or Northernmost branch of the Delaware aforesaid; therefore they the said commissioners and surveyors do certify by these presents, to all whom it may concern, that the said North partition, or division point, upon the Northernmost branch of the river Delaware, between the provinces of New York and New Jersey (which likewise is the North partition point between the Eastern and Western divisions of New Jersey) the latitude of 41 degrees and 40 minutes, upon the East side of the said Fishkill branch, is upon the low land in the Indian town called Cashightouch; which Indian town is distant from Thomas Swartwout's house, at a place known by the name of Pinpreck, near to Mahackamack River; 23 miles and a quarter, upon a straight course, North 44 degrees 20 minutes West, by the magnetical position; or a course North 52 degrees 20 minutes West, by the true position, from John Dicker's house,¹ at the place called Tetendal, by said

Mahackamack River, about 29 miles and three-quarters, upon a course North 35 degrees West, by the magnetical position; or upon a course North 43 degrees West, by the true position, and upon the several courses by the Indian paths, from said Dicker's about 35 miles and a half; which point of intersection of the latitude of 41 degrees and 40 minutes upon the said Fishkill, or Northernmost branch of the river Delaware, is distant 38 chains (reckoning four perches to a chain) from the mouth of a brook known by the Indian name of Lamackamuck, and at all times coming to be called or known by the name of Station Brook; which falls from the hills at the entering in of the Indian path to the said town, Cashietouch, upon a course nearly North 5 degrees 45 minutes West, by the magnetical position; and upon a course North 13 degrees 45 minutes West, by the true position; which point of intersection is 99 chains and a half, reckoning four perches to a chain, from a large stone or rock, the greatest length of its superficies being about eleven feet and three inches, and its broadest part about seven feet three inches; lying partly in and partly out of the water upon the bank of the said branch called Fishkill; upon a course South 10 degrees 45 minutes East, by the true position; which stone is marked with the letter M, and is 137 chains distant from the mouth of the said brook, upon a course North 78 degrees 40 minutes East, by the true position; at which stone or rock the lowland ends, and the hills come close to the said branch or river Fishkill; the course and situation of the said brook, and of the said river and hill, from the said brook to the stone aforesaid, will better appear by the draught to these presents annexed: In testimony whereof the said parties to these indentures have put their hands and seals, the day and year first above mentioned

"R. WALTER [L.S.].

"ISAAC HICKS [L.S.].

"JOHN JOHNSON [L.S.].

"GEO. WILLOCKS [L.S.].

"JNO. READING [L.S.].

"ALLAIN JARRET [L.S.].

"JAS. ALEXANDER [L.S.].

"Sealed and delivered in the presence of James Steel, John Harrison.

"I certify the foregoing to be a true copy taken from Lib. D 2 of deeds, page 276, in the secretary's office at Burlington.

"HERBERT M'ELROY for BOWES REED, Sec."

The year following the establishment of the north station-point by the commissioners and surveyors,—viz., April 9, 1720,—their action was fully concurred in and ratified by the proprietors of West Jersey, as the following extract from the minutes of their proceedings of that date will attest:

"The managers appointed by law for the running and ascertaining the division-line between the Eastern and Western division of this province—viz., Isaac Sharp, James Logan, Thomas Lambert, and John Reading—met this day with the Council, and agreed with them that the whole sum of five hundred pounds (mentioned in a former minute, made the sixth of May last) be forthwith raised, in order for the prosecuting of the said affair according as the law directs, with all expedition, for which an advertisement is prepared, signed by the said managers or Commissioners, and James Logan is desired to procure the same to be printed and published without delay. And whereas the Northern or Station-point upon Delaware was last year fixed by the Surveyor-General, Joseph Kirkbride, and John Reading, appointed Commissioners by the Governor under the great seal, which said point being fixed, there remains now on the part of this division only to run the partition line between the Eastern and Western divisions of this province: In order thereto, it is agreed by the Commissioners that notice be given to the managers or Commissioners of the Eastern division of the resolutions of the managers of this division; and that they may be desired to agree on a certain day to meet the Western managers at Nathan Allen's, or Rescarick's, to concert measures for the running of the said line, according to the tenor of the act; accordingly a letter is wrote, subscribed by the managers, directed to the managers of the Eastern division, desiring them, with the surveyor-general, to meet them at Nathan Allen's on the 28th instant, which letter is delivered to David Lyle, one of the said Eastern managers, who happened to be here present; and all the managers and receivers are desired to use their utmost diligence in receiving or collecting all the moneys they can, according to the tenor of the said advertisement, and that each produce their accounts against the next meeting, in order to have a general account framed for the last year according to the direction of the said act."

¹ Probably John Decker, as the Deckers were among the first settlers in that neighborhood, and the name of John Decker appears in the Dutch Church records as a deacon of Machhackemack Church in 1741.

Although the West Jersey proprietors were anxious at this time to participate in running the partition line, it appears that they were not able to raise the necessary funds, and so let the matter drop, paying only their proportion of the expense of establishing the north station-point. After many years of delay the East Jersey proprietors assumed the responsibility, and in 1743, through their commissioners, Andrew Johnson and John Hamilton, employed John Lawrence to run the division line. The following is a copy of Mr. Lawrence's commission:

"WHEREAS by an act of the General Assembly of the province of New York, passed in the fifth year of the reign of King George the First, John Hamilton and David Lyal, George Willocks and John Harrison, and the survivor of them, were appointed Commissioners or managers for the Eastern division of New Jersey, with power to appoint the surveyor-general, and such other surveyors and fit able persons as should be judged necessary for running the partition-line between the Eastern and Western divisions of New Jersey: And whereas the said John Hamilton is the only surviving Commissioner appointed by the said act; and whereas the said act gives power to the Governor for the time being to appoint other persons in the place of such of the Commissioners aforesaid as should refuse to serve or should die; and by virtue of that power Andrew Johnson, Esq., has been appointed a Commissioner; we therefore the said John Hamilton and Andrew Johnson (by virtue of the power vested in us) as aforesaid, and by and with the advice of the council of proprietors of the Eastern division, have appointed John Lawrence, deputy-surveyor, upon oath, to run, mark, fix and ascertain the said partition-line, pursuant to the said act of Assembly, and to make return thereof to us with all convenient expedition; with power to him to employ and chase fit and able persons, upon oath, to assist him in running the said partition-line, and marking and raising monuments on the same; and in performing the said work he is to observe the instructions herewith delivered to him.

"Given under our hands and seals at Perth Amboy, the 26th of August, 1743.

"ANDREW JOHNSON [L.S.].

"JOHN HAMILTON [L.S.]."

The following is a copy of the oath taken by Mr. Lawrence before a magistrate:

"I will well and truly execute the within Commission to the best of my skill, judgment, and knowledge.

"So help me God.

"JOHN LAWRENCE."

From the instructions accompanying the commission we make the following extracts, certified as a correct copy:

"1st. With this you will receive a Commission to you for running the partition line between East and West Jersey, to the execution of which you will be sworn, as in the draft of the oath on the back thereof.

"2d. You are to employ Martin Ryerson, or Gershom Mott, or some other, as an assistant surveyor, if you think proper; and also proper chain-bearers and markers; all which are to be sworn, or affirmed, truly to perform the office you employ them in, and to have a certificate of those oaths or affirmations indorsed on the back of your signed by the magistrate who administers the oath or affirmation to them, before you proceed to the work. Only in case when you are on the work, by reason of sickness or otherwise you find occasion to employ more or other persons than at first you intended, you may proceed with them till you come near the habitation of a magistrate, and then cause them to be sworn or affirmed before him, that they have hitherto well and truly executed, and that they will well and truly execute, the office you have employed them in to the best of their knowledge: And you are to direct the chain-bearers in chaining to hold the stake they are next to put in the ground in the same hand with the chain, and within three or four inches of the end that they are to push in the ground, and stretch the chain at setting it in the ground, and to direct the marker to mark the tree, as shall hereafter be mentioned.

"The foregoing are true copies and extracts:

"JAMES PARKEE."

In running the partition line, Mr. Lawrence started at the designated point on the east side of Little Egg Harbor, and ran a random line to the north station-point, at Cochecon. He then found the station-point established and marked by the commissioners in 1719, and, taking his bearing, returned, making his corrections and marking the true line southward to the place of beginning. We take a few extracts from his field-book while running the line through Sussex County.

["Extracts from the original field-book of John Lawrence taken 22d August, 1841, during the progress of a trial between Ira Fuller and Jonathan Oliver. The extracts commence near the Musconetcong, on the random line, and continue to the Delaware. Also the return line from the Delaware River to the Musconetcong."—By Mr. D. Ryerson.]

OCTOBER THE 9TH, 1743.

FIELD BOOK

RANDOM LINE. }

- 94 M¹—A Red Oak about 2 feet diameter on the N. side of the mountain near the foot, on the S. side of Musconetcong river, at 59 ch. The river about 75 L. wide, bears abt. N. 50 E. At 70 the top of a high hill.
- 95 A White Oak abt 9 Inches diameter; the ground descends Westward; at 48 ch. a small brook, running Eastward; at 52 an Indian Wigwam 1 ch. East.
- 96 A Red Oak abt 18 inches Diameter, 14 L. Westward on a hill; the ground descends N. ward.
- 97 A Red Oak abt 1½ foot diameter. The ground descends part Northerly and part N. Easterly. At 37 a Grassy Pond 6 ch. wide and abt 40 long; bears abt N. E.; an old beaver dam abt 10 ch. below; S. W. a branch of Pequest called Alamanche.
- 98 A Red Oak in a small plain abt 16 Inches diameter, 60 L. East of the line. At 67 a branch of Pequest, runs abt W. and abt 30 L. wide.
- 99 A White Oak stake in a plain on the N. side of a large Branch of Pequest. At 16 ch. the N. edge of a plain, the Mountain begins.
- 100 An Ash Saplin abt 4 In. diameter, on the N. side of some low swampy ground. Left off and went to a house belonging to Richd Green.

OCT. 10th, 1743.

- At 60 ch. a bog meadow abt 10 ch. wide and 80 ch. long; bore about W. A neck of head about 10 ch. wide; the point seemed to be about 10 ch. West.
- 101 A Maple standing in a large swamp on the South side about 10 Inches diameter. At 10 a brook about 25 L. wide; at 23, the N. sid of the meadow, a White Oak under the edge of the hill.
- 102 A White Oak abt 12 Inches diameter. The ground descends N. Easterly.
- 103 A Black Oak abt 14 inches diameter, and 20 ch. S. Easterly on the edge of a hill, on the N. side of a swamp. At 68 ch. a round about 5 ch. East. At 74 ch. a notch in the mountain. Bore N. 88 W. the last half mile. Good Land.
- 104 A Spanish Oak abt 18 inches diameter near the foot of a very steep hill; the ground descends Northerly. At 58 ch. a branch of Tockhocknetconck (Paulinskill) about 6 foot wide; bears abt West; crossed it about ½ ch. E. of a large spruce pine. At 67 Tockhocknetconck about 70 L. wide. Bore S. W.
- 105 A White Oak abt 1½ foot diameter. The ground descends Easterly—steep.
- 106 A White Oak Saplin about 5 In. diameter, 4 ch. S. of a large pond of water, by estimation 100 Acres.

¹ The numbers in the margin represent miles from the southern point at Little Egg Harbor. The chains mentioned in the lines are so many chains, or eightieth parts of a mile, over the last mile figure represented in the margin, or so many chains of the next mile run.

² Swartwood Pond.

Traverse Course Round the Pond.

- 1 N. 69 E. 33.
- 2 N. 5, 45 E. 14.
- 3 N. 55, E. 18.
- 4 N. 24 E. 8, 25.
- 5 N. 6½ E. 9.
- 6 N. 16, W. 22.
- 7 S. 78 W. 4.
- 8 N. 66 W. 36.
- 9 S. 86, W. 53 to the line

continued. At 38½ a small brook.

- 107 In the aforesaid Pond.
- 108 A Black Oak abt 1½ foot diameter, 1 ch. S., the ground southerly; at 45 a Red Oak sapling marked E. & W. with a blaze and 3 notches, due this summer. At 61 a small brook, runs S. Easterly. Pretty good swamp.
- 109 A White Oak abt 10 Inches diameter; the ground descends S. Easterly. At 15 a brook about 6 feet wide. Bore about S. S. E.
- 110 A Red Oak abt 2 feet diameter. At 41 a small bog on the N. side 9 ch. wide. Now we begin to ascend the Pahaqualin Mountain; it bore S. 28 W. At 70 a very steep ascent—a mere body of rocks.
- 111 A crooked Spanish Oak among the steep rocks the southerly side of the mountain
- 112 A Spanish Oak on the Northerly side of the mountain, about 3 inches diameter, 18 foot westward of the mile end.
- 113 A pine tree 1 foot diameter 1½ ch. southward. At 20 links Eastward the ground descends N. Easterly. At 12¾ a brook 40 links wide, abt S. 80 W. Good low Lands, 10 or 12 ch. wide on the N. side of brook
- 114 An A-b abt 6 In. diameter standing in a small gully. At 58 ch. Delaware River. Bore abt S. 85 W., 5 ch. wide. At the bank on Delaware a Black Oak abt 13 Inches diameter, leaning over the river, marked 114 and 58 ch.; stands 10 L. W. of the river. In Pa Hendrick Van Gorder's house about ¼ of a mile, and Abrahm Varaman's above the place where the line comes to the river on the south side; at 114, 75 ch. Bower Decker's house. Bore E. 50 L. Continued 150½ miles to Station Point, near Cochection on Delaware."

FRIDAY, Oct. 21st, 1743.

FIELD BOOK }
TRUE LINE }

Began where the random line crossed Delaware River at the end of 114 m. 58 ch., thence run a perpendicular N. 80¼ E. 69, 10 L. to the true line. Course N. 9 19 W. 22 ch. The 115th mile an Elm about 1 foot diameter in a small bushy gully. Running S. 9, 19 E. 66 ch. from the 115th mile. Flatbrook about 50 Ls. wide, a pleasant stream; course S. 9, 19 E.

- 114 A forked White Oak about 3 feet diameter, 14 ch. southerly of Flatbrook in the low lands on the Northerly side of the Pahaqualin Mountain.
- 113 A pine abt 1 foot diameter, 45 Ls. west of the line on Northerly side of the mountain.
- 112 A Spanish Oak abt 1 foot diameter, on the Northerly side of the mountain.
- 111 In the edge of a pond on the S. side of the mountain.
- 110 A hickory about 9 10, diameter, 20 Ls. W. of the line. At 67 a large Spanish Oak marked with a blaze and 3 notches; supposed to be a corner tree of a survey made abt 12 years ago—abt 3 feet diameter.
- 109 A hickory about 9 inches diameter; about 15 Ls. West a heap of stones at the mile end. At 74½ two Beach trees marked in line, the E. side of a run of water.
- 108 A White Oak abt 1 foot diameter. Ground descends N. W.
- 107 In a large Pond. (Saturday laid by—very rainy, some snow.)

OCTOBER 23d, 1743.

- 106 Offset from White Oak sapling in the random line aforesaid 63.34 to a Black Oak abt 1½ foot diameter, 25 lin. Southwardly of the end, with a stone at the foot of it. At 63 good land about 8 chs. wide upon Tockhuckanetconk (Pantuskil). At 65½ the brook—two dogwoods 5 in. diameter, growing from one root marked for side lines; on the N. nine brook crooks.
- 105 A White Oak about 2 feet diameter, on the hill on S. side of Tockhuckanetconk abt 14 ch. Valley about 4 chains wide. Good land on a branch. At 40 another valley—tolerable good land Eastward of the line.

- 104 A Spanish Oak abt 1½ feet diameter. Ground descends steep Northerly 75 Ls. S. S. E. of Mile end. At 14 ch. a small run of water; at 50 a red oak marked, on top of the hill in this line. Last half mile good land.
- 103 A hickory about 8 In. diameter. Ground descends Southerly.
- 102 A heap of stones on a cluster of rocks on the Westerly side of a hill. A White Oak abt 8 In. diameter about 18 Ls. Westerly of the stones. At 50 a brook about ½ ch. wide issuing from Pequest spring through the meadow—said spring about 20 ch. W. and said brook about 6 ch. above the meeting of another brook near as big—very difficult to get over.
- 101 A White Oak abt 12 In. diameter on the edge of a hill of limestone.
- 100 A White Oak abt 1 foot diameter, 6 feet S. W. of a heap of stones at the mile end. At 58 Pequest, 50 Ls. wide. N. B.—the last half run through Robert Chapman's land.
- 99 A hickory abt 16 Ls. diameter on the S. by E. side of a large rock 2 ch. Westward of the mile end.
- 98 A hickory abt 16 In. diameter, 2 ch. Northerly of a heap of stones. At 20 ch the brook Alanuchee.

It will not be necessary to follow these field-notes further, as nothing of greater interest than the mile-marks occur in the remaining few miles of the line through Sussex County. The surveyor records the fact that "every mile the true line inclines towards the random line 60²³/₁₀₀ links." The line-trees in the random line were marked with three notches on two sides. The side trees were marked with one blaze looking towards the lines. The mile-trees were marked respectively with the number of each mile and with three notches on four sides. The course of the line is 9° 45' west, according to the magnetic position.

Transfer of Estates from East to West Jersey.

—The effect of the establishment of the partition line between the eastern and western divisions of New Jersey was to unsettle many titles to lands which had previously been given by the respective proprietors. Many grants made by the West Jersey proprietors were found to be in East Jersey, and vice versa. It was, however, mutually agreed that in such instances equivalents should be given to the owners out of any of the unsurveyed lands on the other side of the partition line, and this began to be carried into effect soon after the Lawrence line was surveyed. The minutes of the proceedings of the proprietors abound with instances of such transfers, a few examples of which we give from the West Jersey records, relating chiefly to Sussex County:

"FEBRUARY 17, 1745.

"Whereas, information was given to this board by John Reading, deputy surveyor, that two surveys formerly made by him, the one for Samuel Nevill, of 1700 acres; the other for Joseph Sacket, of 500 acres, happen to fall on the East side of the line run by John Lawrence for the division-line of this province; therefore craves leave to relocate the like quantity of land in some other place of the said Western division.

"Granted accordingly."

"AUGUST 3, 1749.

"Information being given to this board by John Reading, Esq., that the line run by John Lawrence cuts of a tract of land formerly surveyed to Thomas Lambert, deceased, from the Western division; for which reason the devise craves leave to relocate in some other part of the said division the quantity of — acres in lieu thereof.

"Leave granted accordingly."

¹ This refers to the distance from Little Egg Harbor. Hence Cochection, or the north station point, is 36 miles above where the Lawrence line strikes the Delaware River.

"AUGUST 7, 1752.

"Thomas Wetherill applied to this board for a warrant to take up 25 acres of land, in lieu of 25 acres, being the one-fourth of 100 acres surveyed to Thomas Wetherill, Isaac De Cow, John Lyon, and Gershom Mott, which by the running of the line between East and West Jersey by John Lawrence, lies on the East side. John Reading, Esq., assured this board that the above 25 acres did fall to the East side of said line; therefore a warrant was ordered, which was granted accordingly."

"FEBRUARY 1, 1757.

"Joshua Opike laid before this board one survey of 140 acres, made by Sannel Green for said Joshua Opike, situate in the county of Sussex, and is recorded in B. B. 212, 213, which appears on the East side of the true Quintipartite line run by John Lawrence; 73 acres of which he has since purchased an East Jersey proprietary right [to] and laid; therefore craves a warrant to locate the same 140 acres elsewhere; and a warrant was granted accordingly."

"FEBRUARY 4, 1762.

"The agent of the London Company, by John Bennet, applied to this board for a warrant to relocate the quantity of 159 acres, in part of 168 acres that were formerly surveyed to the said Company in the Counties of Sussex and Morris; which said land was laid out to said Company some time in the year one thousand seven hundred and forty, and recorded in the Surveyor-general's office, in Lib. Ma. fol. 284, and upon the report of John Rockhill, deputy-surveyor, it appears that 159 acres, part thereof lieth to the Eastward of the Quintipartite line; therefore it is ordered that a warrant issue from this board to the said Company by the directions of their agents, for to relocate the said quantity of 159 acres. A warrant was ordered, which was granted accordingly."

We also take the following extracts from the warrants and surveys of the West Jersey proprietors:

"Extract from 158 acres surveyed for John Hackett, the return whereof is dated 16th of March, 1759, beginning at a stone corner, it being the South East Corner of a tract of land containing 400 acres, and is surveyed for the said John Hackett and stands near or in the division-line late run by John Lawrence from thence, etc. Witness my hand the 12th day of September, 1799.

"DANIEL SMITH, JUN., Surveyor-General.

"May the 9th, 1760, inspected and approved by the Council, etc.

"JOSEPH HOLLINGSHEAD, Clerk."

"Extract from Joshua Opydke's 53 acres and one-tenth, being at a heap of stones in the division-line between East and West Jersey; being a corner of land formerly surveyed to Richard Green, and runs, &c., to a heap of stones in the said division-line, thence along the same South 10 degrees East 12 ch. Witness my hand the 7th day of November, 1759.

"DANIEL SMITH, JUN., Surveyor-General.

"Feb. 7th, 1760. Inspected and approved by the Council.

"WILLIAM HEWLING, Clerk.

"Extract from 167 acres and sixty-two-hundredths, surveyed for John Spratt, lying upon the East side of Delaware river, beginning where a tract of low land ends upon the river, and where the upland comes to the river; being about 285 chains on a straight line from the North partition of New Jersey, and from thence, &c. Witness my hand the 31st day of August, 1747.

"JAMES ALEXANDER, Surveyor-General.

"February the 5th, 1747. Inspected and approved of, and ordered to be recorded.

"JOSEPH DE COW, Clerk.

"West Jersey, ss.

"(Seal.) To the surveyor-general of lands for the divisions aforesaid, or his lawful deputy, greeting: You, or either of you, are required to survey to and for John Jobs the quantity of 313 acres of land, anywhere in the Western division of New Jersey, being lawfully purchased of the Indians, and not before lawfully surveyed; which is in lieu of a former survey made and recorded, and now appears to be in the Eastern division. Dated the 5th of February, 1747.

"Surveyed to John Spratt 259 acres and twenty-hundredths, beginning at the upper end of a piece of low land upon the river Delaware where a high hill comes to the river, at about 440 chains distance on a straight line from the North partition point of New Jersey, and from which beginning the river bears upwards upon a North course for 30 chains, with high cliffs on the West side of the river, and from the said place of beginning running &c.; the corners of this tract are those which the Magnetical Compass pointed in the year 1719, the variation being then observed at the North partition point to be eight degrees Westerly. Witness my hand the 3d day of August, 1747.

"JAMES ALEXANDER, Surveyor-General.

"Inspected and approved of, and ordered to be recorded.

"JOSEPH DE COW, Clerk.

"West Jersey, ss.

"(Seal.) To the surveyor-general of lands for the proprietors of the division aforesaid, or his lawful deputy, greeting: You, or either of you, are hereby required to survey for William Cox 1100 acres of land in any part of the Western division of New Jersey, where lawfully purchased of the Indians and not before legally surveyed, it being in lieu and instead of 1100 acres of land which he claims in virtue of the will of his father, Col. Daniel Cox, and his brother John Cox; the said 1100 acres being part of 1600 acres formerly surveyed to the said Col. Daniel Cox, and which is found to be in east Jersey, within a former survey called the Pepuck patent. Dated the 17th August, 1754.

"A warrant to John Scott, and his wife Sarah (who was legatee of John Budd) the quantity of 860 acres, in lieu of the like quantity laid out for John Simpkins in five surveys to the Eastward of the division line. Dated the 5th day of August, 1756.

"A warrant to John Opydke, the quantity of 140 acres of land, anywhere in West Jersey, in lieu of the like quantity surveyed in East Jersey. Dated the 3d day of February, 1757."

"West Jersey, ss.

"(Seal.) To the surveyor-general of lands for the division aforesaid, or his lawful deputy, greeting: You, or either of you, are hereby required to lay forth and survey to and for William Cox, Daniel Cox, Rebecca Cox, and Grace Cox the quantity of 670 acres of land, anywhere in the Western division aforesaid, in lieu of so much cut off by the East and West Jersey line, on a tract formerly surveyed to Col. Cox for 1000 acres on the Pauline Kill, in Sussex County. Dated the 5th of November, 1762.

"Extract from 254 acres surveyed for John Emsie, beginning at a black oak standing by Delaware river; being a corner of a tract of land formerly surveyed to Joseph Kirkbride, thence down the said river, &c. Witness my hand this 26th day of April, 1731.

"JAMES ALEXANDER, Surveyor-General.

"Burlington May 5th, 1731. Inspected and approved the above survey by the Council of proprietors, and ordered to be entered on record.

"Testis JOHN BEAR, Clerk.

"Extracted from the record in Lib. M. folio 107.

"West Jersey, ss.

"(Seal.) To the Surveyor-general of lands for the division aforesaid, or his lawful deputy, greeting: You, or either of you, are hereby required to lay forth and survey for John Emsie 254 acres anywhere unappropriated in said province, in lieu of the like quantity surveyed to the said Emsie, and recorded in Lib. M. folio 107, and is in East Jersey; wherein you are to observe the rules and orders prescribed by the Council of proprietors for the surveying of lands, and make return for such parts thereof, that shall be surveyed to the next Council after the survey of the same; and for you, or either of you, so doing, this shall be your sufficient warrant. In testimony whereof we have caused the seal of the Council of proprietors to be hereto affixed. Witness John Ludl, Esq., president of the Council, this 3d day of November, Anno Dom. 1763. By order of the Council.

"WILLIAM HEWLING, Clerk.

"A warrant to Grace Cox, devisee of Col. Cox, the quantity of 360 acres, anywhere in the Western division of the province aforesaid, in lieu of the like quantity that has been located in East Jersey. Dated the 25th of October, 1765.

"The foregoing are true copies and extracts from the warrants and books lodge at Burlington, in the surveyor-general's office for West Jersey.

"ROBERT SMITH, Surveyor-General for West Jersey."

Movement for a New Partition Line.—Up to the time of the settlement of the boundary line between New Jersey and New York, in 1772, the quintipartite division of New Jersey was accepted and acquiesced in by the proprietors of both the eastern and the western sections. In a petition presented to Governor Burnet, in August, 1725, the proprietors of West Jersey say, "That it is only by force of this agreement and partition, executed as aforesaid, that the proprietors of the Western division are limited to the Western part of the said province, on the side of the Delaware; and that the proprietors of the Eastern division are limited to the eastern part of the said province towards Hudson's River and the sea; for had no such division been agreed on, as is recited in all the respective deeds of conveyance to the proprietors, those of the Western division might with an equal right have claimed the lands towards Amboy, etc., and those of the Eastern might have claimed the lands towards Burlington. But the said Quintipartite indenture being executed as aforesaid, before the sales to the proprietors were made and recited in all the deeds of conveyance, became an absolute limitation, so that neither on the one part nor the other any purchaser could claim otherwise than according to that limitation, by which their lands were actually conveyed.

"That notwithstanding this legal, clear, and absolute partition, which is binding on every proprietor of the Eastern division, and at least on all the nineteen parts of the Western division, sold by Edward Byllynge, or his trustees, and from which those who are skilled in law well know it is impossible legally to recede without the joint concurrence of every individual interested in the purchases made under Edward Byllynge and trustees, and under Sir George Carteret; for it is well known that no majority without the whole will in those cases determine the point; yet there have been some persons found from time to time who, on partial views to themselves, have labored to introduce some other sort of division, and considerable numbers have been so far unhappily imposed upon as to imagine a change thereof might be practicable; from which unfortunate deception attempts have been made to alter it, and some lines for that purpose have been run and settlements thereupon made without due regard to the bounds of the respective divisions, which introduced such confusion that the value of lands near the boundaries have been much lessened and the people discouraged from making improvements, where the right to the soil itself was liable to be questioned as not lying within the division under which it was purchased."

The petition from which the above extracts are taken is signed by "John Ladd, for himself and Col. John Allford; John Budd, for himself and Boulton; John Kay, William Cooper, Francis Rawle, Jr., Charles Brogden, Samuel Lippincott, John Snowden, Jr., Isaac De Cow, for himself and Samuel Barker; Matthew Gardiner, Isaac Pearson, William Pancoast, William Biles, Isaac Watson, William Rawle, Thomas Sharp, for himself and John Dennis; John Estaugh, for the London Company; John and William Dimsdale, Peter Rich, Benjamin Hopkins and self; William Biddle, Hugh Sharp, Henry Hodge, Robert Rawle, George Budd; James Logan, for proprietors, —William Penn's family, 12; John Bellers, 1; Amos Stuttle, 1; myself, one-third; Richard, for Nath. Stanbury; Mary Willson."

No formidable effort was made to change the Lawrence line for fifty years, or until after the boundary line between New Jersey and New York had been settled. This line, as will appear in another chapter, was established, not at the north station-point, as ascertained and defined in the tripartite indenture agreed upon by the commissioners both of New York and New Jersey, and in accordance with the express stipulation of the original grant of the Duke of York, but was brought down to the present termination of the State line on the Delaware at Carpenter's Point, taking off from New Jersey over two hundred thousand acres of land. When this line became fixed, the proprietors of the western division of New Jersey began to agitate the question of changing the quintipartite or partition line to correspond therewith, alleging that, at whatever point the boundary line terminated on the Delaware, the partition line should terminate there also. Hence originated the proposed line of 1775. In January of that year the proprietors of West Jersey presented a petition to His Excellency Governor Franklin and to the Council and Assembly of New Jersey, praying that the partition line so long established between the respective sections of the province might be changed. The petition set forth,—

"That in and by a certain deed of indenture Quintipartite, made the first day of July Anno Dom. 1676, between Sir George Carteret, of the first part; William Penn, Esq., of the second part; Gawen Lawrie, of the third part; Nicholas Lucas, of the fourth part; and Edward Byllynge of the fifth part, then sole owners and proprietors of the whole province of New Jersey; they the said George Carteret, William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, Nicholas Lucas, and Edward Byllynge did agree to make a partition between them of the said province.

"That in pursuance of the said agreement, an actual partition of the said Province was made between the said proprietors, and mutually released to each other, viz.: One share or portion thereof to Sir George Carteret, called East New Jersey; and the other part thereof to the said William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, Nicholas Lucas, and Edward Byllynge, called West New Jersey; the line of which said partition was by the said proprietors, parties to the said indenture Quintipartite, mutually understood, intended, agreed upon and fixed, to be a straight line, to run from the most Northerly point or boundary of the province of New Jersey, on the Northernmost branch of the river Delaware, unto the most Southerly point of the East side of a certain inlet, harbor, or bay, on the sea coast of the province of New Jersey, commonly called and known by the name of Little Egg Harbour."

After reciting briefly the history we have gone over in a former part of this chapter, the petitioners say,—

"That your petitioners being the present owners and proprietors of the said Western division of New Jersey, under the aforesaid Byllynge and trustees; having long anxiously waited for an event whereby the true point of partition between the said divisions might be permanently fixed and determined, and which by the said last mentioned act, confirmed by his Majesty and Council, is now happily established, have frequently and pressingly made overtures and proposals to the proprietors of the Eastern division to have the said Quintipartite Line exactly and truly run. . . . Your petitioners therefore, . . . do earnestly entreat the kind interposition of the legislature of this province, and submit to their wisdom to frame and pass such a law for the final settlement of the said line. . . ."

This, on account of the Revolutionary war, was laid over, and was never acted upon by the Legislature. A petition of similar import and intent was presented to the Legislature in October, 1782, signed by Joseph Reed, for the West Jersey Society and himself; Jonathan D. Sergeant, Clement Biddle, Daniel Ellis, and Ebenezer Cowell, "a committee specially appointed to this service by the Western proprietors." The proprietors of East Jersey sent in a counter-memorial in June, 1783, setting forth the history of the quintipartite agreement and defending it as a final settlement of the partition line in the words following:

"That Charles the Second, as King of England, was entitled to the continent of North America, from the north latitude of twenty-five degrees to sixty-seven and a half degrees, by virtue of the first discovery and subsequent possession thereof by subjects of the Crown of England, properly authorized; which right then was and always since has been universally acknowledged, and is the foundation of every title to land within this State.

"That Charles the Second, being so entitled, granted to his brother James, Duke of York, all that tract of country which now comprehends the States of New York and New Jersey.

"That the Duke of York, being so seized, did on the 24th of June, 1664, by proper deeds and assurances in law, grant and convey to John Lord Berkley and Sir George Carteret, their heirs and assigns forever, part of the said tract, lying and being to the Westward of New York island, and bounded on the East by the main sea and Hudson's River, on the South by the ocean, on the West by Delaware Bay and River, and extending Northward as far as the Northernmost branch of the said bay or river of Delaware, which is in 41 degrees and 40 minutes of latitude; and from thence in a straight line to Hudson's River, in 41 degrees of latitude," which said tract was afterwards known by the name of Nova Cesarea, or New Jersey.

"That Lord Berkley being so seized of an undivided moiety, or half part of New Jersey, did on the 18th of March, 1673, convey the same to John Fenwick in fee, in trust for Edward Byllinge; and that the said John Fenwick, on the 10th of March, 1674, did by the consent and direction of and in conjunction with the said Edward Byllinge, convey the said undivided moiety, or half part of New Jersey, unto William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, and Nicholas Lucas in trust for the said Edward Byllinge, excepting and reserving a tenth part of the said undivided moiety to the said John Fenwick, his heirs and assigns, and that the said John Fenwick did convey the aforesaid tenth part of said undivided moiety unto John Eldridge and Edmund Warner, who afterwards conveyed the same unto the said William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, and Nicholas Lucas, the better to enable them, in conjunction with said Edward Byllinge, to make partition of the entire Province of New Jersey with Sir George Carteret.

"That William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, Nicholas Lucas, and Edward Byllinge, being thus seized of Lord Berkley's undivided moiety, or half part entered into an agreement with Sir George Carteret for the partition of the whole tract, and accordingly a division was made and a line of partition settled by an indenture Quintipartite, dated the 1st of July, 1676, by which deed the parties thereto after expressly declaring that the said tract granted as aforesaid by the Duke of York, extends to the Northward as far as the Northernmost branch of the bay or river Delaware, which is in 41 degrees and 40 minutes of latitude, do determine that the line of partition shall be a straight line down from the most Northernly point, or boundary, on Delaware, of the said tract granted as aforesaid, to the most Southwardly point of the East side of Little Egg Harbor, and all the parts, shares, or portions of the said tract to the Eastward of the said line of partition, are by the said deed released, confirmed and conveyed unto the said Sir George Carteret; and in the same manner all the parts of the said tract to the Westward of the said line are released and confirmed unto the said William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, Nicholas Lucas, and Edward Byllinge.

"That the Quintipartite deed having fully established the division of the province, both Sir George Carteret and the Western proprietors contented themselves with knowing the position of the extreme points without removing the intermediate line, as there was little necessity for it at that time; few, if any, of the settlements or surveys extending so far back in the country as to render the exact track of the line necessary to be known.

"That on the 6th of August, 1680, the Duke of York did by grant confirm the province of West Jersey unto the said Edward Byllinge, William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, Nicholas Lucas, John Eldridge, and Edmund Warner, according to their several parts or portions, and by the said grant fixes the North bounds on the Northernmost branch of Delaware in the latitude of 41 degrees and 40 minutes, and reciting and referring to the Quintipartite deed gives the limits accordingly.

"That Sir George Carteret by his last will and testament divided his estate in New Jersey to certain trustees therein named, with directions to sell the same; that accordingly it was sold by them on the 2d of February, 1682, to William Penn and eleven others, each of whom shortly after sold a moiety of the same unto Robert Barclay and eleven others; which twenty-four persons constituted the general proprietors of East Jersey, and under whom by mesne conveyances your memorialists and others the proprietors of East Jersey now hold.

"That on the 14th of March in the same year, 1682, the Duke of York, by grant, did also confirm the right of the said twenty-four persons, proprietors to East New Jersey, and in the same manner reciting the North bounds, fixes them as before on the Northernmost branch of Delaware, in latitude 41 degrees and 40 minutes, and referring to the Quintipartite deed, gives the same limits and bounds as are therein mentioned.

"That in process of time, the country being more populous and the settlements more numerous, much uneasiness was occasioned by reason of sundry vague and fruitless attempts for dividing the provinces of East and West Jersey, and running the line of partition; and also by reason of the precise spot not being ascertained where the North Station point in the latitude of 41 degrees and 40 minutes would; that to remedy these evils the legislature on the 27th of March, 1719, passed a law for the running and ascertaining of the said line, and for the preventing of any further disputes concerning the same; whereby after reciting and confirming the Quintipartite deed, commissioners or managers were appointed both from the Eastern and Western divisions for raising and collecting from the different proprietors, according to their shares of the property, such sums of money as should be deemed necessary for defraying the expenses of finding the North station point upon Delaware and of running the necessary lines of partition."

The memorial then goes on to recite in brief the history which we have already given relating to the finding, marking, establishing, and recording the north station-point, the running of the Lawrence line therefrom to the designated point at Little Egg Harbor, in September and October, 1743, and its acceptance as an absolute settlement by the proprietors both of East and West Jersey. The memorialists then give the following interesting bit of history respecting the settlement of the boundary line with New York:

"That the division-line between the provinces of New York and New Jersey remained a long time unsettled, by reason of the latitude of 41 degrees on Hudson's River not being properly ascertained; and also by reason of the zealous and violent pretensions of each party to the property and possessions of the other, whereby such disturbances arose and disorders were committed on the borders of both provinces as to demand the interposition of their respective legislatures: whereupon in the year 1764 acts were passed in both provinces for submitting the property of lands affected by the partition line to such a mode of decision as his Britannic Majesty should think proper.

"That in consequence of the said acts, his Britannic Majesty thought proper to appoint seven Commissioners for the determining of the said matters in dispute; who meeting at New York on the 18th of July, 1769, did determine that the boundary-line between the two provinces should be a straight and direct line from the mouth of Mahackamack, on its junction with the Fishkill, or Delaware, to the latitude of 41 degrees on Hudson's river.

"That the said controversy with New York then was deemed, as it always before had been since the year 1719, only to affect the property of the proprietors of East Jersey and those holding under them: inso much that the then legislature, upon application made by the Eastern proprietors, refused to defray from the public treasury any part or portion of the expense of settling the said boundary-line; and the West Jersey proprietors thought themselves so little interested in the settling thereof that they even refused to join in the said application to the legislature, declaring that their stations were already fixed and that so they must remain; by which means the proprietors of East Jersey were solely burthened with the great charge and expense of settling the said boundary, and which amounted to more than the sum of six thousand pounds, although the expenses of their opponents in the province of New York were defrayed by the public at large.

"That by the said determination and decree of the Commissioners at New York, the said boundary-line terminated on Delaware at a different place from the station agreed on in 1719, to the surprise and astonishment of many; though others endeavored to account for it by the Commissioners all being crown officers and some of them notoriously under its influence, and that this new station gave large tracts of land to the government of New York, to grant as it thought proper, and which it has since done.

"That the proprietors of East Jersey very much disapproved of the said alteration on Delaware River, but as they imagined as they still do and always shall, that it only affected them with respect to the boundary with New York, they, after much dispute thereon, did on certain conditions acquiesce, knowing the little probability of better success in a future contest between private individuals on the one part and a royal government on the other.

"That the said alteration of the boundary on Delaware cut off from East Jersey near two hundred thousand acres of land, which had always been esteemed part of New Jersey, in every transaction respecting the same, from the first grant thereof by the Duke of York to the late determination and decree; and that the East Jersey proprietors submitted to these losses and hardships, although very grievous and vexatious; hoping that thereby there would be a termination of a tedious, disagreeable, and expensive dispute, and that from thence forward they would enjoy peace and tranquillity."

With regard to the new line of partition proposed by the western proprietors, the memorialists say,—

"That supposing the quantity of lands surveyed by the Western proprietors to the Eastward of the Quintipartite line, run by Lawrence, to be equal to the quantity surveyed by the Eastern proprietors to the Westward thereof, then, if a settlement was to take place in which the pretended line was to be deemed the true one, the Eastern proprietors would have to render an equivalent for all lands surveyed in the said angle before the year 1719, which lands so surveyed would amount to many thousand acres, and which quantity as an equivalent by the said act might be located by the Western proprietors on any lands whatsoever survey, & since the year 1719, and also on many tracts surveyed before that time, and sold as aforesaid, many years ago to bona fide purchasers.

"Your memorialists therefore first beg leave to observe that, as the assigns of Sir George Carteret and Lord Berkeley were each entitled to moities, or equal half parts of New Jersey, so it was therefore intended that the line of partition should make the two divisions equal; and this was the idea and intention of the contracting parties to the Quintipartite deed; but from the ignorance and infant knowledge of those times with respect to the geography of this country, they imagined that the division in the said deed made, from the North station point, in the latitude of 41 degrees and 40 minutes, to Little Egg Harbour, would nearly effect that object, as in those days every one expected that the same North point would bound the claims of New York; that this idea and opinion that the divisions were end ought to be equal to each other was maintained and preserved for many years after the execution of the Quintipartite deed, and was never once doubted or opposed until Mr. Coxe, who had purchased some shares of West Jersey property, about the year 1687, maintained to the contrary."

The memorialists conclude their petition by hoping "that it will be evident to all that there cannot be any just ground or pretense for the late claim of the West Jersey proprietors, and that it would be much more consonant to reason and equity if, since the late determination and decree at New York, the proprietors of East Jersey were to demand a part of what has hitherto been deemed West Jersey. . . . For since two hundred thousand acres of land, which by the said division were intended to be part of East Jersey, have been taken from the same, whereby the equality of the two divisions has been destroyed, . . . your memorialists, the proprietors of East Jersey, are advised that they have a just and equitable claim to demand and receive from the West Jersey proprietors the quantity of one hundred thousand acres, being the one-half of the said quantity cut off as aforesaid by the New York boundary line."

A few Attested Facts and Figures.—We append herewith a statement of the quantity of land in the respective divisions of New Jersey, and the difference in each according to the different lines of partition, fixed and proposed, made from actual survey and attested upon oath:

"The angle or gore of land which East lost in the controversy with New York amounts to about.....	210,000 acres.
"The remaining quantity of land in New Jersey, being the whole amount of the State, is about.....	4,375,970 acres.
"Therefore, supposing a line was drawn dividing the State into two equal half parts, and which would be the line of partition between East and West Jersey, each division would then contain about.....	2,187,985 acres.
"Supposing Keith's line, extended to the Delaware River, to be the line of partition between East and West Jersey. The quantity of land in East Jersey would then be about.....	2,214,930 acres.
"The quantity in West Jersey.....	2,161,040 acres.
"And East Jersey would then contain 53,890 acres more than West Jersey.
"Supposing the Lawrence line to be the line of partition. The quantity of land in West Jersey would then be about.....	2,689,680 acres.
"The quantity in East Jersey.....	1,686,290 acres.
"And West Jersey would then contain 1,003,390 acres more than East Jersey.
"Supposing a line to be drawn from the Mahackamack (proposed line of 1775) to be the line of partition. The quantity of land in West Jersey would then be about.....	3,119,260 acres.
"The quantity in East Jersey.....	1,256,710 acres.
"And West Jersey would then contain 1,862,550 acres more than East Jersey.
"The angle or gore of land between Keith's and Lawrence's line contains about.....	528,640 acres.
"The angle or gore between Lawrence's line and a line to be drawn from the Mahackamack would contain about.....	429,580 acres.
"Personally appeared before me James Duane, Esq., Mayor of the City of New York, Evert Bancker, Jr., one of the surveyors of this city, appointed by authority, who being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, depose and saith, that he, this deponent, has with great care and attention made the calculations and comparisons hereto annexed, respecting the quantity of land contained in New Jersey, and in the angles or gores made by the different lines in the said computation mentioned; that the above computation was made from Mr. Ratzers general map, compiled the most part from actual survey; and that he doth verily believe the number of acres above specified to be as true and just as computations made from Maps of that scale will admit; and that he has not knowingly added to or diminished from any of the above numbers.

"Sworn this 28th day of July, 1784.

"EVERT BANCER, JUN.

"JAMES DUANE, Mayor."

CHAPTER LXIII.

COURTS OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

PREFIXED to a valuable collection of notes and memoranda pertaining to the Middlesex County Court, made by Mr. Charles D. Deshler in 1870, is the following account of the discovery of an old book of records, from which the most important information in this chapter has been derived:

¹ Two hundred and ten thousand acres, sworn to by Edward Bancker, Jr., before James Duane, Esq., mayor of New York, July 28, 1784.

"In the year 1852, by the courtesy of the venerable Nicholas Booraen, at that time County Clerk, I was allowed liberty to examine the older documents and manuscript books in the Clerk's Office; and in the course of my examination I came upon a most interesting volume containing an interrupted series of the Minutes of the Middlesex County Court, from 1683 to 1720.

"The volume is bound in parchment, and is in the handwriting of the Clerks of the Courts, John Pike, Edward Slater, and others, and the first entry is June 19th, 1683, the last being February 22, 1720.

"Beside containing the minutes of the Court, this volume also is occupied, in its last eleven leaves, with a record of the acts of the Road Commissioners, appointed in 1704 by an act of the General Assembly."

Of this old volume we have made free use in compiling the present chapter. The matter taken from it, as well as that derived from later similar records of the Middlesex County Court, are credited to "Minutes of County Court."

The First County Court.—The first County Court of Middlesex was held at Piscataway, June 19, 1683, and is shown by the following extract from "Minutes of County Court." In transcribing this extract the arrangement of the paragraphs and spelling of the old minutes are adhered to. The extract is intended to be literal, viz.:

"The First County Court held at Piscataway June 19th, 1683. . . by act of the Generall Assembly and by virtue of a Comition then published under the seal of the province and signed by Order of Councill of Thos. Rudyard bearing date y^e 28th of March, 1683.

"The members of the s^d Court were as followeth:

Mr. Saml Dennis—President or Judge.

Mr. Edward Slater	} Assistants
Mr. James Giles
Capt ^s John Bishop
Mr. Sam ^l Hall
Mr. Benjamin Hall

"John Pike Jun^r of Woodbridge Clerk of the County Court allowed by virtue of a Comition from the Hon^{or} Governor & Councill bearing date the 28th day of March Anno Dom. 1683, & allowed by the said Court.

"Jefory Maning made choyce of and appointed to be Marshall or Cryer of the s^d Court.

June the 19th 1683. Rules or Order for the County Court of Midlx.

"1ly That the Declaration shall be entered at the taking out of the writt; or at least the Declaration to be entered in the Clerks office five days exclusive before the Court.

"2ly That the Pleas of the defend^t be entered two days before the Court: it not the Plain^t not to be deprived of his trial before that Court;

"3ly If the Declaration be not entered five days before the Court, then the de-fen^t desiring it shall have a non suite;

"4ly That to the County Court there shall not be allowed more than one Essoine.

"5ly That in causes wherein the defea^t is arrested in account of Debt, Detinue trespass for goods actions upon the case Except Slander: If the Debt or damage amount to five pounds Speciall Baile to be given except it be against an heir, executor or administrator;

"6ly That in battery, conspiracy false imprisonment noe Spetiall baile of course without spetiall order of the Court;

"7ly Spetiall baile in all cases of causes above mentioned shall be understood double the debts or damages demanded laide or recovered: Common baile tenn pound.

"8ly That the principle rendering himself at any time after baile put in, and before or on the day of appearance of Scierificias returned in bill or in case there be any action of debt brought upon the bond or recognizance against the baile then if the principle shall render himself upon or before process returned served no further proceedings to be against the baile.

"9ly In case the plan of after Ishue joyned shall refuse to goe to trial the next Court after the Ishue joyned nor shall discontinue his action on record the defend^t moving the Court to proceed my bring on the case by proviose, and if the plain^t be nonsuited at trial or discontinue his action the defend^t shall be allowed reasonable costs by y^e Court."

The above is a literal copy from the old "Minutes." The rest of the minutes of this session is a record of the single case tried at that term of the court, in which, by the way, Edward Slater, one of the assistant judges, acted as bail for the defendant. The minutes also contain a list of the "Rules and fees of the County Court of Middlesex," as allowed by the court, and also a list of rules applying to "evidences attending."

The second County Court was held at Woodbridge, Sept. 18, 1683, and thereafter, as appears from the minutes, the courts continued to be held alternately at Piscataway and Woodbridge until June 28, 1688, when a session was held for the first time at Amboy. From this time until 1699 the courts were held alternately at Woodbridge, Piscataway, and Amboy.

There is a break in the minutes from 1699 till 1708, when "a Court of Sessions for the counties of Somerset and Middlesex was held at Perth Amboy." For a long time after 1708 courts were held at Amboy only.

Tax for Prison and Pounds.—The justices of the county of Middlesex, at their session held at Woodbridge, March 17, 1683, did tax the said county in the sum of forty-five pounds in current pay of this country for and towards the building of a county prison, and for the erecting in each town within the said county a pound; that is to say, for the pound in Woodbridge fifty shillings, and the like for Piscataway, to be paid out of the aforesaid rate. Dated at Woodbridge, March 19, 1683-84. Samuel Dennis, Edward Salter, John Bishop, justices.

The following were the first grand jurors, drawn Sept. 16, 1684, court held at Woodbridge:

Ephemis Andros.	Rehoboth Gannet.
Israell Thomill.	Nicholas Munday.
Isacke Tappin.	John Langstaffe.
Obediah Harris.	Andrew Woden.
Nathaniell Bloomfield.	John Drake.
John Jones.	Richard Smith, Jr.
Hugh Dunn.	Joseph Fitz Randolph.
Thomas Higgins.

The old minutes show that in 1694 Capt. John Bishop and Samuel Dennis were "presented" by the grand jury for fighting a duel. "The Court ordered y^e Clark issue out his Warrants for y^e apprehending y^e Persons presented by y^e Grand Inquest, so y^e they may be brought to Trial before y^e next Court."

During the troubles incident to the close of the proprietary government the courts appear not to have been regularly held. The last County Court convened at Perth Amboy on the third Tuesday of September, 1699. Samuel Dennis was judge, and Capt. John Bishop, John Royse, and Samuel Hale, assistants.

The record opens in 1703 with a commission from Lord Cornbury to a new set of judges and justices under the crown. We give a portion of this commission, as follows :

"Edward Viscount Cornbury, Capt.-General and Governor-in-Chief of y^e Province of New York, New Jersey and of all the Territories and Tracts of land Depending thereon in America, and Vice Adm^l of y^e same, her Majesties Lieut and Commander-in-Chief of y^e Militia in the Colony of Connecticut and of all the Posts and Places of strength within y^e same, &c. To Lewis Morris, Andrew Boon, Samuel Jennings, Theo: Revell, Francis Devenport, William Pinhorne, George Deacon, Daniell Leeds, William Sandford, Robert Quarry, Alexander Griffith, Samuel Waker, Miles Forster, John Bishop, John Harrison, Samuel Hale, Benjamin Griffen, Samuel Dennis, and Michael Van Veghte—Greeting: Know y^e that the said Lord Cornbury have assigned you and every of you jointly and severally her Majesty Queen Anne's Justices to keep y^e Peace in y^e County of Middlesex, in her said Majesty's Province of New Jersey, and to keep or cause to be kept all Laws and Ordinances made for y^e good of y^e Peace and for y^e conservation of y^e Law, and for y^e Quiet Rule and Government of y^e People in all and every the articles in y^e said County according to y^e form, force and effect of y^e same, to Chastise and Punish all persons offending against the forme of these Laws and Ordinances of any of them in the County aforesaid, as according to these laws and Ordinances shall be fitt to be done, and cause to come before you or any of you all those Persons who shall Threaten any People in their persons or in burning their houses, and to oblige them to find sufficient security for y^e peace or y^e good behaviour towards her said Majesty and her heirs. And if they shall Refuse to find such Security, then to cause them to be kept safe in Prison till they find such security. 1, the said Lord Cornbury, have appointed you or any three or more of you whereof you the said Miles Forster, Jno. Bishop, John Harrison and Samuel Hale are to be one of y^e Justices to Enquire by y^e oaths of Good and Lawful men of y^e County aforesaid by whom the truth may be better known of all and all manner of Petty Larcenies, Theft, Trespass, Forestalling, Regulating and Extortions whatsoever, and all and singular other misdeeds and offences of which Justices of the Peace may or ought Lawfully to Enquire, by whosoever and howsoever done and Perpetrated or which shall happen hereafter howsoever to be done or attempted in the County aforesaid, and of all those who in the County aforesaid have either gone or ridden or that hereafter shall presume to go or ride in Company with armed force against y^e peace and to y^e disturbance of y^e People, and also of all those who in like manner have lain in wait or hereafter shall presume to lye in wait to maim or kill the People, and also of all Inholders and of all and singular other Persons who have offended or attempted or who shall hereafter presume to offend or attempt in the abuse of Weights and Measures or in the sale of Valuables against y^e forme of y^e Laws and Ordinances or any of them in that behalf made for the common Good of this Province and the People thereof in the county aforesaid ; and also all Sheriffs and Bailiffs, Constables, Jaylors and other officers whatsoever in y^e execution of their offices about the Premises of any of those who have unlawfully demeaned themselves or have been or hereafter shall be lawless or negligent in the execution of their offices in y^e County aforesaid, and of all and singular articles and circumstances whatsoever, by whosoever or howsoever done or perpetrated in the said County, or which shall hereafter happen howsoever to be done or attempted in anywise move and concerning the truth of y^e premises or any of them and Inquest Judicial whatsoever before you or any of you taken or to be taken or made or taken before others late Justices of y^e Peace in y^e County aforesaid and not as yet Determined, and to have process thereupon against all and singular Persons so Judicated or which hereafter shall happen to be Judicated before you until they be Apprehended or render themselves or suffer themselves to be out Lawed, and to hear and Determine all and singular the Petty Larcenies, Thefts, Trespass, Forestallings, Regretings, Ingrossings, Extortions, and unlawful Assemblies and Judic^{es} aforesaid and all and singular y^e promises according to Law. And therefore you and every of you are hereby required that you Diligently Intend and keep the Peace, Laws and Ordinances and all and singular other y^e promises and at certain Days and Places which you or any such three or more of you as is aforesaid shall in that behalf appoint or by Law shall be appointed you make Enquiry upon y^e promises and here and Determine all and singular the Premises and fulfill the same in forme aforesaid, doing therein that which to Justice appertains according to y^e Laws, statutes and Ordinances aforesaid, saving unto her said Majesty, her heirs and successors all American^l and other things to her and them thereof belonging. And by virtue of these presents the Sheriff of the County aforesaid is hereby required that at certain Days and Places which you or any such three or more of you as aforesaid shall make known unto him or shall or shall be by Law appointed as aforesaid due cause to come before you or such three or more of you as is aforesaid, such and so many Good and Lawful men of his Baley which by whom the truth of the Promises may be the better known and Enquired off: Given under my hand and Seal at Perth Amboy in the Province of New Jersey this Six and Twentieth Day of August Anno Domi 1703 and in the Second of the reign of our Sovereign Lady Anne by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c."

By another commission from Lord Cornbury of the same date, John White is appointed "to be Clerk of y^e Peace and Clerk of y^e Court of Common Please to be holden in y^e County of Middlesex, within her Majesty's Province of New Jersey, in America, with authority to do, perform, use, exercise, and enjoy y^e said office of Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, with all the Fees, Salaries, Profits, Benefits, Advantages, and appertences to y^e said office, belonging, or in any ways appertaining, to have and to hold the said office of Clerk of the Peace¹ and Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas within the said County, to him, the said John White, for and during such time as to me, the said Lord Cornbury, shall seem meet."

The first Court of Sessions for the county of Middlesex under Queen Anne (or the provincial government) of which any record has been preserved was held at Perth Amboy on the second Tuesday in September, A.D. 1708. Peter Sonmans, Esq., was judge; Cornelius Longfeld, John Tuneson, and John Drake, justices. John Bishop's royal commission as clerk was read, and the following named persons sworn as grand jurors: Jonathan Bishop, foreman; Cornelius Tuneson, Noah Bishop, William Post, Derik Madeak, Richard Smith, John Watman, Hopewell Hull, David Williamson, Herrick Rounsoner, Crose Foam, or Vroom (?), David Blackford, Thomas Sutton, Cornelius Tice, Jacob Probasco, John Wanmeter, William Sparpe.

Laughing in the Face of the Court.—At the term of the Court of Sessions for May, 1710, the following was ordered:

"That John Brown, for his Contempt in Laughing in the face of and at the Court, be fined four Dollars,² and to Continue in Custody till he hath paid his fine."

Tavern Rates in 1717.—The court met according to adjournment, and settled y^e prices of Liquors and other provisions for Men and Horses after y^e following manner (viz.): At y^e Rate or Equivalent to current monie at 8 s^l, y^e ounce to be taken for wine 13^d. pr: pynt; for strong beer and syder, 4d. $\frac{1}{2}$ pr: quart; for Rum, 4d. pr: Gill; for victuals, as has been usually taken formerly; for Lodging, 3d. a night; for Hay to Horse, as has been formerly taken; and for oats, 3d.; for two quarts and so in proportion for a larger quantity, to be taken by those who live at Cranberry Brook, Milstone River, South River bridge, and other Remote Places from water transportation, such prices for what Liquors they Retaille as they have formerly taken."

¹ "Clerk of the Peace" is an abbreviation for clerk of the "Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace," which usually convened at the same time and place as the Court of Common Pleas. One person held, etc.

² This was not Federal currency, but Spanish milled dollars, which were then in circulation.

Court-House and Jail.—The first court-house and jail in Middlesex County was built at Perth Amboy, as is proven by the following entries in the old minutes of the court:

"May 25, 1714.—Whereas the severall Township of the County of Middlesex have neglected to chuse Freeholders to Assist y^e Justices in raising of money for building a Court-House and Goale in this County, by vertue of an Act of Assembly Entitled An Act for building and repairing of Goale and Court-Houses in Each County of this Province, by which Act the General Quarter Sessions of y^e Peace have power to Nominate the said Freeholders, and the Court have accordingly Nominated for Perth Amboy, Capt. Samuel Leonard, and David Herriott for Woodbridges. Mr. John Kinsey and Capt. John Moore for Piscataway. Mr. Robert Hudson and James Mauner.

"May 21, 1717.—At a Court of Quarter Sessions of y^e Peace held at Perth Amboy for y^e Counties of Middlesex and Somerset. Ordered that public notice be set up on y^e most public places in y^e severall townships of this County of Middlesex for all y^e Justices of y^e Peace of said county, and y^e Freeholders of each Respective Township in this County to meet together at y^e Court-House in Perth Amboy, on Saturday, y^e first day of June next, in order to raise money for finishing y^e said Court-House and Goale, etc. At which meeting y^e managers and collector are required to attend to render An Account of their proceedings to y^e Justices and Freeholders according to y^e Law in that case made and provided."

Offenses.—Indictments, Verdicts, Sentences, Coroners' Inquests, Punishments, etc.—These are very curious, and to some degree throw light upon the morals, manners, and customs of society generally in the country at that early period in its history. It would seem as if especially those parts of the counties of Somerset and Middlesex "lying in the vicinity of Perth Amboy, Woodbridge, and Piscataway" were inhabited by a quarrelsome and litigious people, and that the grossest immorality was prevalent. Scarcely a session of the court was held but that numberless petty and vexatious, oftentimes malignant, suits were brought by neighbors against each other; while fornication, adultery, rape, and other crimes of a grosser and more vilely unmentionable character were passed upon. We have not quoted these last for obvious reasons. The instances quoted do not comprise all that are contained in the old minutes, but are merely a selection.

A Coroner's Inquest in 1685.—"John English, late servant of Hopewell Hull, of Piscataway, was drowned in Raritan River, May 24, 1685. Mr. Samuel Hull, of Woodbridge, Coroner.

"The names of y^e Jurors empanelled upon y^e Coroner's Inquest about the death of the said John English, May 25, 1685: John Gilman, Elias Higgins, John Martin, Junior, Joseph Martin, John Smalley, Junior, Isaac Smalley, Thomas Fitzrandolph, Samuel Hull, Benjamin Fitzrandolph, Benjamin Hull, Otto Laurance, Charles Gilman, Thomas Alger.

"The Jurors, after strict search and enquiry, find y^e Water y^e only cause of his death.

"John Gilman, foreman, for and in y^e name of himself and y^e rest."¹ Punishment for Felony in 1684.—"September 16, 1684. At y^e said Court, Philip Gunter, indicted and found Guilty of Feloniously taking of a Zith Smash with Nibs, heeling, and wedges to the value of four shillings.

"The Jury.—John Dennis, Haliack Codriack, William Bingle, John Warlock, John Conger, Thomas Alger, Isaac Smalley, Thomas Fitzrandolph, Charles Gilman, Eliakim Higgins, Joseph Martin, Samuel Doty.

"The Judgement of the Court: That Philip Gunter shall pay double y^e Value of the goods stolen, which is eight shillings, unto Mr. Samuel Walker or his agent, Jeffery Manning, and also pay y^e fees and charges of Court.²

"Paying double the value of the goods stolen" seems to have been a very customary sentence in those times, occasioned, doubtless, by the fact that the county had no jail, except in imagination. Moreover, there can be no doubt that many of the charges of theft were malicious, growing out of neighborhood quarrels and the feuds arising from them. The following are additional examples of this method of dispensing justice, and are also quoted because the John Pike who figures in them was an ancestor of Gen. Zebulon Montgomery Pike, the first American explorer of the Missouri River, and the brave soldier who fell at Lundy's Lane:

"At the same Court (Sept. 16, 1684) Capt. John Pike, of the Towne of Woodbridge, was indicted and found Guilty of feloniously taking and carrying away of one Lanthorne of Tin and horne, value three shillings, of the goods and Chattels of Abraham Tappin.

"The Jury: Moses Collier, Haliack Codriack, William Bingle, John Warlock, John Conger, Thomas Alger, Jacob Smalley, Thomas Fitzrandolph, Charles Gilman, Eliakim Higgins, Joseph Martin, Samuel Doty.

"The Judgement of y^e Court: That the said John Pike shall pay double the value of the Goods stolen, which is Six Shillings, unto Abraham Tappin or his order, and y^e goods be restored againe; also to pay fees and Court charges. And to remain in y^e Sheriff's custodie till satisfaction be made.

"At y^e same Court, John Pike, Junior, of the said Towne of Woodbridge, was indicted and found Guilty of feloniously takinge and carrying away of one Hollaud Sheet, value of twelve shillings, and top of a Cushion, of value one shilling, and one remnant of homespun (commonly called Linsey Wolsey), of value of four shillings sixpence, of y^e goods and chattels of Abraham Tappin.

"Jury: Moses Collier, Haliack Codriack, William Bingle, John Warlocke, John Conger, Thomas Alger, Jacob Smalley, Thomas Fitzrandolph, Charles Gilman, Eliakim Higgins, Joseph Martin, Samuel Doty.

"The Judgement of y^e Court: That y^e said John Pike, Junior, shall pay double y^e value of y^e goods stolen, which is thirty-five shillings, unto Abraham

¹ Old minute of court.

² Ibid.

Tappin or his order, and said goods to be returned againe, and also to pay fees and Court charges, and to remain in the Sheriff's custodie till satisfaction be made."

Sentenced to be burnt Alive.—A.D. 1729, "At a special Court (By virtue of an Act of y^e Generall Assembly of New Jersey, intituled an Act for Regulating of Slaves), held at Perth Amboy y^e tenth day of Januari, In y^e third year of his Majestie's Reign, Anno Dom. 1729, before three of His Majestie's Justices of y^e Peace for y^e County of Middlesex. In conjunction with five principall Freeholders of y^e said County: In order to try An Negro Man named Prince for murdering of one William Cook, A White man. Present

"The Indictment Against the said Negroman being Read to him, he pleaded not guilty of y^e Murder he was charged with; but It Appearing to y^e Court by sundry Evidences and other substantial proofs that he was guilty of y^e said Murder, The Court found him Guilty thereof, And pronounced sentence Against him, which was that he shoulde be burnt Alive, on y^e twelfth of this Instant, which sentence was accordingly then put in Execution."¹

PILLORY AND STOCKS.

Punishment of the Stocks, 1684.—"At the same Court (held at Woodbridge, Sept. 16, 1684) complaint being made by John Pike, Jr., against William Ingle for breach of his Majesty's Peace. The complaint being Juely proved, the Court ordered that the said William Ingle shall forthwith be set in the Stocks by y^e Constable of y^e Towne of Woodbridge, and there to remain for the space of two hours without relief."²

The Whipping-Post, 1683.—March 18, 1683, "William Toms, of Woodbridge, Taylor, was Indicted for assaulting the body of Rebecca Bishop.

"The said Toms put himself upon the country and is found guilty.

"The Court sentenced the said toms to be whipped thirty and nine lashes."

Ranging the Woods.—This seems to have been a prevalent offense in the early years of the country. It is often chronicled in the old minutes of the court. Thus in the record of the proceedings of a "Court held at Piscataway, y^e 18th of June, Ano domni 1684," there is the following entry:

"At the Court aforesaid Samuel Dotto complained against Otto Lowery for ranging the woods and marking a hors contrary to the law of the province.

"Ordered by the Court that the said Lowery shall pay the charge of prosecution."

Precisely similar records are made concerning John Fougha, of Burlington, William Johnson, of Elizabethtown, and John Crammer, of Elizabethtown. And at the conclusion of the entries there is this further note: "Allowed by the Court twelve shillings for each of the three persons to pay in money unto the Court, and they paying the same are clear of any further prosecution in that behalf."

Speaking against the Authority.—"At y^e same Court (Sept. 16, 1684) Mathew Moore indicted and found guilty of speaking reproachful words against the authority.

"The jury: John Dennis, Haliack Codriack, William Bingle, John Warlock, John Conger, Thomas Alger, Isaac Smalley, Thomas Fitzrandolph, Charles Gilman, Eliakim Higgin, Joseph Martin, Samuel Doty."

The judgment of court: "That Mathew Moore shall pay by way of finde the sum of three pounds Current money of this Province, to be taken by distress if payment be denied, the said money to be disposed of to pay y^e Court charges, and y^e overplus to be disposed of as y^e Law directs. And the high sheriff is hereby ordered forthwith to levie the same fine, and to dispose of it as aforesaid."³

Glimpses of the Indians.—"At the said Court (Sept. 16, 1684) John Thompson, Negro Servant of Mr. Daniel Hooper, living upon Raritan River, in Middlesex County, was indicted by y^e Grand Inquest for selling, giving, or other ways disposing of, so much rum to certain Indians as to make them drunke, and for beateing, woundinge, and willy entreatinge the said Indians. Pleaded not guilty.

"The jury: John Dennis, Haliack Codriack, William Bingle, John Warlock, John Conger, Thomas Alger, Isaac Smalley, Thomas Fitzrandolph, Charles Gilman, Eliakim Higgins, Joseph Martin, Samuel Doty.

"The Jury finds not Guilty.

"The Court ordereth y^t Daniel Hooper, or his agent, for or in behalfe of y^e said John Thompson, his Negro Servant shall pay y^e Jury and y^e costs of said Court."

The Indians still lingered in parts of Middlesex County in 1686. In the minutes of the court for that year there is the following entry, having allusion to them:

"Hugh Staniland, of Nottingham, West Jersey, having formerly accused Dr. Henry Greenland for buying and receiving stolen hogs and marked hogs from the Indians, came in Court, and into open Court acknowledged that he, the said Hugh Staniland, had falsely and maliciously slandered him, y^e said Henry Greenlend, and desired God and the Court to forgive him."

¹ Old minutes of court.

² Ibid.

³ Ibid.

An Indian Girl held in Slavery.—"March, 1692, Mr. Thomas Gordon appeared and delivered up his baile bonde for y^e appearance at this Court of an Indian girl called Maria, formerly belonging to Capt. John Palmer, and by him sold to Col. Andrew Hamilton, and let an apprentice to Robert Vauquellan alias Leprairie for y^e space of ten years from July, 1680, and y^e said Robert Vauquellan not appearing to make appear his claim why y^e said Indian girl should not be delivered up to y^e said Coll. Andrew Hamilton, conformable to his bill of sale and y^e order of Capt. Palmer to Robert Vauquellan, both in Court produced. The Court, after three times calling the said Robert Vauquellan, and he not appearing, Do order to discharge the said Thomas Gordon of his baile bonde aforesaid, and adjudge y^e said Indian girl to be Coll. Hamilton's servant according to the said bill of sale."¹

Alarm at Indian Inroads.—There are no entries in the old minutes of the court alluding to attacks by the Indians within the province of New Jersey, but there are a number of entries referring to their inroads within the province of New York, and to the assistance that was furnished by Jersey men in repelling them. In a statement of the debts of Middlesex County, made to the court in the term held at Piscataway Dec. 20, 1693, there are the following items:

	£	s.	d.
To Jonathan Bishop, going to the Indians w ^{ch} report was the strange Indians was coming downe upon us, 4 days....	1	00	00
John Blomfield, ditto.....	1	00	00
Capt. George Drake, ditto.....	1	00	00
William Clauston, ditto.....	1	00	00

And at a court held at Perth Amboy on the third Tuesday in September, 1693, being the term previous to the one last referred to, there is the following entry of a presentment by the grand jury:

"The Grand Jury presents Thomas Moore, Thomas Collier, and Mathew Moore for breach of the Sabbath by preswing mee on the Sabbath Day to go to Albany.

"BENJAMIN CLARKE, foreman."

The Indians from Canada had just previous to this made a descent upon Schenectady and destroyed that place.

Numerous instances of indictment and punishment for breach of the Sabbath and drunkenness are found in the old minutes, of which the following are examples:

Third Tuesday of December, 1692.—"The Grand Jury presents John Taylor, of Woodbridge, for being Drunk.

"The Grand Jury presents Francis Walton for being Drunk.

"The Grand Jury presents Daniel Robins for breach of Sabbath."

Third Tuesday in September, 1693.—Court held at Perth Amboy. "Daniel Robins, Jr., and Nathaniel Robins were presented by y^e Grand Jury for Carting Wood on the Lord's Day or Sabbath Day.

"BENJAMIN HULL, foreman."

"Ordered by y^e Court y^e one or more of the neighboring Justices be acquainted with the said presentment of Daniel Robins, Jr., and Nathaniel Robins, for carting wood on y^e Lord's Day or Sabbath Day, y^t he or they may issue out his or their Warrants for their fines, or for want thereof to be further proceeded with as the Law directs."

Third Tuesday of June, 1694.—At this term, which was held at Perth Amboy, Benjamin Hull, who was foreman of the Grand Jury on the case last cited, was himself indicted, as appears from the following entry:

"Benjamin Hull, of Piscataway, presented by y^e Grand Jury for keeping and allowing gaming at Cards and Bowle and Pins at his house."

Two others—Richard Powell, of Woodbridge, and William Leveridge, of Perth Amboy—were presented for the same offenses by the Grand Jury. In the December term of this same year they were brought before the court, by whom they were "reproved and dismissed."

Third Tuesday of September, 1695.—"The Grand Jury presented John Langstaff, of Piscataway, in this County of Middlesex, for being at several works upon the Lord's Day.

"Also we do present John Camington, of Amboy, for cursing twice.

"Also we do present Thomas Carhart, of Woodbridge, for profane cursing and swearing."

The following is entered in the minutes under date of Jan. 19, 1747:

"NOTE.—The Court of Pleas Dropt through the Absence and Sickness of the Judges, but by a petition from the Justices and Grand Jury extending the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, presented to the Council and Assembly then Sitting at Burlington, They passed an Act to which his Excellency, Jonathan Belcher, Esq., then Governor, gave his Assent to Revive said Court of Pleas, which Act was published at Burlington aforesaid, the ——— day of ———, 1747; And Enacted that all Processes and Proceedings whatsoever depending in the said Court on the third Tuesday of January shall be and hereby are Revived and continued as fully and effectually as if the said Court had met and continued the said Processes and Proceedings by adjournment to the third Tuesday of April next to Come; and all Processes to be Issued for the next said Court shall and may be issued on the said third Tuesday of January; and all such Processes shall be as effectual as if the said Court had met and Adjourned on the said Day. Any matter or thing to the Contrary hereof in any wise notwithstanding."

Tavern Rates in 1748.—"Prices of Liquors and Entertainment for Man and Provision for Horses, as settled by the Justices of the Peace for the County of Middlesex in their General Quarter Sessions, Assembled in October, 1748—money at eight Shillings per Onnce:

"Prices of Liquors and Entertainments for Man, etc.:

	£	s.	d.
Hot Meal of Meat, etc.....	0	0	10
Cold Meal Do.....	0	0	7
Lodging pr Night.....	0	0	4
Rum by the Quarter.....	0	0	4
Brandy Do.....	0	0	6
Wine by the Quart.....	0	2	8
Strong Beer Do.....	0	0	5
Cyder Do.....	0	0	4
Metheglin Do.....	0	1	6
Lunch Do.....	0	1	2
And so in proportion for a larger or smaller Quantity.

"Provision for Horses:

	£	s.	d.
Oats by the Quart.....	0	0	11½
English Hay pr Night.....	0	1	0
Do for 24 Hours.....	0	1	6
Salt or fresh hay pr Night.....	0	0	8
Do for 24 Hours.....	0	1	0
And so in proportion for a Longer or Shorter time.

"JOHN SMYTH, Clk."

This John Smyth was clerk of the courts for many years, from 1741, and perhaps earlier, to 1755, and his records show a clear and legible hand, as well as a neat and orderly arrangement. One entire book of minutes covering the period referred to is the work of his hand.

¹ Old Minutes of the Court.

First Courts Held at New Brunswick.—The Courts of Common Pleas for the county of Middlesex were first held in New Brunswick in January, 1778, and a court-house at New Brunswick is first mentioned in the minutes of the court July 21, 1778.

By reference to the minutes of the Council of the State some further intelligence on this point may be gathered. On Wednesday, June 18, 1783, at the afternoon session of the Council, "The bill intitled 'An act to authorize the Justices and Freeholders of the County of Middlesex to repair the Barracks at New Brunswick, to be made use of as a Court-House and Gaol for said County,' was read a third time. On the question, 'Whether the said bill pass?' it passed in the Affirmative. Nem. Con."

These "Barracks" were built by the British during the Revolutionary war, and fronted on King (now George) Street, occupying the lots from Paterson to Bayard Streets, inclusive. The barrack buildings were subsequently built of stone, and were one hundred feet front by sixty in depth. In 1795-96 they were burnt down by accident, after having been used for the court-house and jail of the county for the period between 1783-84 to that date. John Adams in his diary of Aug. 27, 1774, describes the barracks as they were at that date, proving that they were built before the commencement of the Revolution. He says, "There is a stone building for barracks, which is tolerably handsome; it is about the size of Boston jail."¹ It is probable that this building, or a portion of it, was used for a jail in 1776, as we find the following in the journal of Provincial Congress under date of Feb. 5, 1776:

"Ordered, That William Steele, confined in the gaol of New Brunswick, be brought before this Congress and now heard. Whereupon he was brought accordingly.

"The offence of which he was accused being read to said Steele he acknowledged the same, which being duly considered,

"Resolved, unanimously, That said Steele be discharged from his present confinement, upon his paying the cost of the present prosecution, as the same shall be taxed by the committee of the South Ward of New Brunswick, and give his obligation to the said committee in the sum of fifty pounds for his future peaceable and good behaviour, and yield up to the Chairman of said committee, all his arms of defence to remain in custody of said committee until they shall deem it proper to redeliver them."

After the "Barracks" was destroyed by fire the stones were immediately used in the construction of the old jail, which stood where the public school building now stands on Paterson Street. The jail was built in 1797, as appears from an inscription upon the old lintel-stone, which was copied by Mr. Desher at the time of its demolition, as follows:

John Plom,	} Man'gers.
E Phillips,
A Schuyler,
	1797.
C. Howell,	} Masons.
J. Chapin,
C. Van Deventer,

¹ Adams' Works, vol. ii. p. 355.

CHAPTER LXIV.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY IN THE REVOLUTION.

The Provincial Congress of New Jersey.—An important part of the history of this county in the Revolution is contained in the proceedings of the Provincial Congress of New Jersey for the years 1775 and 1776. The agitations and measures of 1774 had prepared the way for a more responsible body than had yet assembled in the colony, and the Provincial Congress was a legitimate outgrowth of the representative convention which met at New Brunswick on the 21st of July, 1774, and continued in session three successive days.

After the dissolution of this first provisional representative body of the patriotic people of New Jersey, in pursuance of a recommendation of the Continental Congress for a direct and more general appeal to the whole people, the inhabitants of the several towns, townships, and counties met in public meetings in their several localities during the fall and winter of 1774-75 and the spring of 1775, and chose delegates to represent them in another provincial convention.

The course pursued in Middlesex may be taken as a type of what was done in the other counties. In that county meetings were held in all the townships, at which delegates were elected to a County Convention that was held in New Brunswick Jan. 14, 1775, of whose proceedings its clerk has left us the following record:

"According to a notice of the 20th December, 1774, sundry of the Freeholders of Middlesex County assembled at the Court-House in New Brunswick on the 3d day of January, 1775, but finding their number insufficient to pursue the business recommended by the Continental Congress,

"It was agreed that every city, township, and district should have a meeting by themselves, and choose Committees of Observation and Inspection, and, when chosen, meet at New Brunswick the 16th day of this instant, and by a majority of votes choose a Committee of Correspondence for the county, to have existence for a limited time.

"Accordingly, the several districts in the county have had meetings, and have chosen Committees of Observation as follows, to wit:

"For Woodbridge—Ebenzer Foster, Henry Freeman (1), Nathaniel Heard (2), Reuben Potter, William Smith, Jeremiah Manning (3), Matthias Baker (4), Charles Jackson (5), Samuel Force (6), John Pain (7), James Manning (8), John Heard, Daniel Moores (9), John Ross (10), Ellis Barron, William Cotter (11), Reuben Evans, James Randolph, Timothy Bloomfield (12), John Noe (13), and John Conway (14).

"For Piscataway—John Gilman (15), Henry Sutton (16), John Langstaff (17), William Manning (18), Benjamin Maoning (19), Jacob Martin (20), Charles Saydam (21), Jeremiah Field (22), Daniel Ray (23), Jacob Titeworth, Micajah Dunn (24), Melancthon Freeman (25), and John Dunn (26).

"For South Amboy—Stephen Pangburn, John Layd, Luke Scheuck, Matthew Rue, William Vance, and Joseph Potter.

"For New Brunswick—Azariah Dunham (27), J. Schureman (28), John Dennis (29), John Lyle, Jr. (30), Abraham Schuyler (31), George Hance (32), Jacobus Van Huys (33), John Slight, John Voorhees (34), Bareot Stryker (35), William Williamson (36), Peter Farmer, Ferdinand Schuremann (37), Abraham Buckelew (38), and Jonathan Roeff.

"For South Brunswick—David Williamson, William Scudder (39), Isaac Van Dyck (40), John Werthell, Jr. (41), Abraham Terhune, Jacob Van Dyck (42), and Charles Barclay.

"For Windsor—James Hebron, Samuel Minor, Jonathan Combs, Andrew Davidson, Isaac Rogers, Ezekiel Smith, and Jonathan Baldwin (43)."¹

By a meeting of the General Committee of Observation and Inspection for the county of Middlesex, in the province of New Jersey, chosen in pursuance of the eleventh article of the Association of the late Continental Congress,² and assembled at New Brunswick, in the said county, on Monday, the 16th day of ¹ Forty-three of the sixty-nine delegates had their houses plundered or burned by the British in 1776 and 1777. The figures refer to memorandum of damages done to their owners by the British when they occupied New Brunswick and vicinity in 1776 and 1777, viz.:

	£	s.	d.
1. Cattle and horses stolen and houses plundered.....	148	10	6
2. Two dwelling-houses, bolting-house, hat-maker's shop, weaver's shop, wagon-house, chair-house, two barns and one stable burned, and cattle, horses, and crops carried off.....	2189	17	6
3. Store-house chair-house, stable, and barn burned, orchard and woods cut down, cattle, store goods, and crops carried off and house plundered.....	636	9	0
4. Large stores of brandy, rum, spirits, and merchandise, also cattle and horses carried off.....	478	9	10
5. Cattle, horses, and household goods carried off.....	59	15	9
6. House plundered, farm devastated, horses carried off.....	98	17	11
7. Horses, sheep, and household goods carried away.....	57	5	0
8. Cattle and crops carried off and farm plundered.....	63	16	6
9. Farm devastated, cattle and horses stolen, house plundered.....	465	16	7
10. House plundered and cattle stolen.....	39	13	3
11. Cattle stolen and house and farm plundered.....	183	16	0
12. House burned, cattle and horses stolen, house and farm plundered.....	323	17	9
13. House and farm plundered, cattle, horses, and negroes stolen.....	406	6	3
14. House burned, do, farm and stable, house and farm plundered.....	186	1	3
15. Farm and house plundered.....	129	5	9
16. Barn burned, house sacked and plundered, farm devastated.....	223	16	3
17. House plundered and trees destroyed.....	19	15	0
18. House and farm plundered.....	116	4	3
19. " " ".....	38	13	0
20. " " ".....	147	15	6
21. Money and valuables stolen, house and farm plundered, houses damaged, barn, etc., burned, farm devastated.....	2083	8	5
22. Cattle stolen, fence devastated, etc.....	132	16	0
23. Horse stolen and house plundered.....	240	12	6
24. Horses, etc.....	31	8	0
25. House plundered.....	38	1	0
26. House and farm plundered.....	313	5	5
27. House plundered and occupied.....	218	11	8
28. Store-houses burned, negro and horses stolen, and merchandise carried off.....	378	0	5
29. Valuable merchandise, wines, etc., carried off, house sacked and plundered, shops carried off.....	1597	15	9
30. Negro stolen and house plundered.....	181	13	0
31. House plundered.....	34	18	6
32. House damaged and goods plundered.....	151	19	4
33. House damaged and plundered, farm devastated, negro stolen.....	500	9	0
34. Shoe-shop plundered, other store goods robbed, house plundered.....	183	16	0
35. House plundered.....	33	2	0
36. Negroes and horses stolen and farm devastated.....	825	7	3
37. Sundries plundered.....	23	5	0
38. " " ".....	39	10	6
39. Grist and fulling-mills burned and sundries plundered.....	1188	6	0
40. Sundries plundered.....	9	10	0
41. " " ".....	11	8	9
42. Horse and cattle stolen and house plundered.....	131	12	0
43. House plundered and merchandise do.....	630	15	0
Total ravage by British of these patriots, as far as I have ascertained.....	£15,230

² The following is the article: "That a committee be chosen in every county, city, and town by those who are qualified to vote for representatives in the Legislature, whose business it shall be attentively to observe the conduct of all persons touching this Association; and when it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of a majority of any such committee that any person within the limits of their appointment has violated this Association, that such majority do forthwith cause the truth of the case to be published in the Gazette, to the end that all such foes to the rights of British America may be publicly known, and universally contemned as the enemies of American Liberty, and thenceforth we respectively will break off all dealings with him or her."—Adopted by the Continental Congress, Oct. 20, 1774.

January, 1775, Azariah Dunham, Esquire, in the chair.

"1. Resolved, That this committee have been duly empowered and authorized by the freeholders and freemen of the county of Middlesex to meet this day at New Brunswick, and in their names to transact all such public business as the committee, or a majority of them, think of importance to the general interest of the county.

"2. Resolved, That we heartily and entirely approve of the proceedings of the late Continental Congress, as published in their journal, entitled 'Journal of the Proceedings of the Congress held at Philadelphia, September fifth, 1774,' and that we esteem ourselves bound by the ties of virtue, honor, and the love of our country to contribute all in our power towards carrying into practice the measures which they have recommended.

"3. Resolved, That we look upon ourselves as under particular obligations of gratitude to the worthy and public-spirited gentlemen who composed the late Congress for the knowledge with which they have pointed out and defined our rights, the firmness with which they have asserted them, and the wisdom with which they have devised the most likely and peaceable means of recovering, establishing, and perpetuating them.

"4. Resolved, That James Neilson, William Oake, Azariah Dunham, John Wetherill, Jonathan Canlis, Stephen Panglorn, and Ebenezer Foster, Esquires, Messrs. William Smith, Matthias Baker, Jacob Titeworth, John Dunn, David Williamson, Jonathan Baldwin, and Jacob Schenck be and they are by this committee appointed a Committee of Correspondence for the county of Middlesex, and that they do, as soon as possible, by their humble petition, address the General Assembly, now sitting at Perth Amboy, to nominate deputies from this Province³ to the General Congress to be held at Philadelphia in May next; and provided the Assembly do not undertake such nomination, that they then meet and join with the other Committees of Correspondence appointed by the several counties in the Province, at a proper time and place, and elect deputies for the service aforesaid; and that this committee be and continue the Committee of Correspondence for the county of Middlesex till the rising of the next General Congress, and no longer.

"5. Resolved, That we think it our duty publicly to declare our contempt and detestation of those insidious scoundrels who, with the vilest views, enlist themselves in the cause of the Ministry, and by the vilest means endeavor to effect a division among the good people of the colonies, that they may become a prey to the oppression against which they are so laudably and unanimously struggling; who skulk behind prostituted printing-presses, and with the assistance of the prostituted conductors of them, labor to circulate their pestilent compositions through the land, under the show of friendship and a regard to the public good; who with the most unexampled effrontery against the sense of every man of the least information and impartiality, will persist in retailing the rotten, exploded, and ten thousand times confuted doctrines of a passive acquiescence in the measures of government, however distempered and tyrannical.

"6. Resolved, That we will preserve on this trying occasion a resolute spirit, directed by loyalty to our King, prudence, temper, and dispassion, testifying that as our cause is clearly just, we mean to support it by just exertions, and not by misrule and outrage.

"Signed by order and on behalf of the meeting by

"JOHN DENNIS, Clerk."⁴

One of the acts of the Provincial Convention formed of the county committees, which as we have seen met at New Brunswick on the 21st, 22d, and 23d of July, 1774, was the appointment of a "General Committee of Correspondence" for the whole colony, with authority to call a Provincial Congress when, in its judgment, it should become necessary. A meeting of this General Committee was held at New Brunswick on Tuesday, May 2, 1775, summoned, as its proceedings show, on the receipt of the news of the ³ This was done, and on the 24th of January, 1775, the Assembly reappointed James Kinsey, Stephen Crane, William Livingston, John De Hart, and Richard Smith delegates to the Continental Congress.

⁴ Am. Arch., i. 1083, 1084, and 1085.

battle of Lexington, which occurred April 19, 1775, and tidings of which were received at New Brunswick by the Middlesex Committee of Correspondence on the 24th of April.¹

"The following is the minute of the proceedings and determinations of the General Committee :

"At a meeting of the New Jersey Provincial Committee of Correspondence (appointed by the Provincial Congress) at the City of New Brunswick on Tuesday, the second day of May, Anno Domini 1775, agreeable to summons of Hendrick Fisher, Esq., Chairman.

"Present, Hendrick Fisher, Samuel Tucker, Joseph Borden, Joseph Riggs, Isaac Pearson, John Chetwood, Lewis Ogden, Isaac Ogden, Abraham Hunt, and Elias Boudinot, Esquires.

"The committee having seriously taken into consideration as well the present alarming and very extraordinary conduct of the British Ministry for carrying into execution sundry Acts of Parliament for the express purpose of raising a revenue in America, and other unconstitutional measures therein mentioned; as also the several acts of hostility that have been actually commenced for this purpose by the regular forces under Gen. Gage against our brethren of the colony of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, and not knowing how soon this Province may be in a state of confusion and disorder if there are not some effectual measures speedily taken to prevent the same. This committee are unanimously of opinion, and do hereby advise and direct that the chairman do immediately call a Provincial Congress to meet at Trenton on Tuesday, the twenty-third of this instant. In order to consider of and determine such matters as may then and there come before them; and the several counties are hereby desired to nominate and appoint their respective deputies for the same, as speedily as may be, with full and ample powers for such purposes as may be thought necessary for the peculiar exigencies of this Province.

"The committee do also direct their Chairman to forward true copies of the above minute to the several County Committees of this Province without delay.

"HENDRICK FISHER, Chairman."

In response to this call the second convention of the province, under the title of "The Provincial Congress of New Jersey," met at Trenton at the time appointed, May 23d, and continued in session until the afternoon of June 3d, 1775, with eighty-seven delegates in attendance, who, as we learn from a message which they sent to the Continental Congress on Thursday, May 25th, by William P. Smith and Elias Boudinot, were "appointed by the several counties of this province as their deputies to meet in Provincial Congress."

¹ The original dispatch giving the news of the battle of Lexington was forwarded by the committee of Watertown, Mass., at ten o'clock a. m. of Wednesday, April 19th, and was carried by express-riders to the committees at Worcester, Brookline, Norwich, New London, Lynn, Saybrook, Killingsworth, East Guilford, Guilford, Branford, New Haven, and Fairfield, and reached the chamber of the New York committee at four o'clock on Sunday afternoon, on the 23d of April. The dispatch was then forwarded with the following indorsement by the New York committee: "Rec'd the within Account by express and forwarded by express to New Brunswick with Directions to stop at Elizabeth Town and acquaint the committee there with the following Particulars. By order of the committee, Isaac Low, Chairman. The committee at N. Brunswick are requested to forward this to Phila." The other endorsements made upon the despatch during its progress through New Jersey were as follows: "New Brunswick, Ap. 24, 1775, 2 o'clock in the morning rec'd the above express and forwarded to Princeton. Wm. Oake, Jas. Nelson, Az. Dunham, Com'e." . . . "Princeton, Monday, Apl. 24, 8 o'clock, and forw'd to Trenton. Tho. Wiggins, Jon. Baldwin, Com. Members." . . . "Trenton, Monday, Apl. 24, 9 o'clock in the morning rec'd the above per express and forwarded the same to the Committee of Philadelphia. Sam. Tucker, Isaac Smith, Com'e."

² Am. Archives, li. 467-68.

The Congress occupied the first day of its session in examining and comparing the certificates of election of the members present, and on the following day, May 24th, organized by electing Hendrick Fisher, of Somerset, president; Jonathan D. Sergeant, of Somerset, secretary; and William Paterson and Frederick Frelinghuysen, of Somerset, assistant secretaries. On the 25th, Samuel Tucker, of Hunterdon, was elected vice-president. The delegates in attendance from the thirteen counties composing the province (the number of counties, it will be observed, was the same as that of the "old thirteen" States) were as follows:³

Bergen: John Fell, John Demarest,*^b Hendrick Kuyper, Abraham Van Boskirk, Edo Merselius,—8.

Essex: Henry Garritse,* Michael Vreeland, Robert Drummond, John Berry, William P. Smith, John Stites, John Chetwood, Abraham Clark,*|| Elias Boudinot, Isaac Ogden, Philip Van Cortlandt, Bethuel Pierson, Caleb Camp,—13.

Middlesex: Nathaniel Heard,^a William Smith, John Dunn,^c John Lloyd, Azariah Dunham,^d John Schureman, John Wetherill,^d David Williamson, Jonathan Sergeant, Jonathan Baldwin, Jonathan Deare,^c—11.

Morris: William Winds,*^d William DeHart, Jonathan Stiles, Peter Dickerson, Jacob Drake, Ellis Cook, Silas Condit,—7.

Somerset: Hendrick Fisher,* John Roy,* Peter Schenck, Abraham Van Neste, Jonathan D. Sergeant, Frederick Frelinghuysen,^d William Paterson,—8.

Sussex: Archibald Stewart, Edward Dumont, William Maxwell,^f Ephraim Martin,—4.

Monmouth: Edward Taylor,^g Joseph Saltar,^g Robert Montgomery, John Holmes, John Covenhoven, Daniel Hendrickson,*^g Nicholas Van Brunt,—7.

Hunterdon: Samuel Tucker,^g John Mehelm, John Hart,* John Stout, Jasper Smith, Thomas Lowry, Charles Stewart, Daniel Hunt, Ralph Hart, Jacob Jennings, Richard Stevens, John Stevens, Jr., Thomas Stout, Thomas Jones, John Basset,—15.

Burlington: Joseph Borden, Isaac Pearson, Colin Campbell,*^g Joseph Reed, John Pope,—5.

Gloucester: John Cooper, Elijah Clark, John Sparks,—3.

Cumberland: Samuel Fithiau, Jonathan Elmer, Thomas Ewing,—3.

Salem: Andrew Sinnickson, Robert Johnson, Samuel Dick, Jacob Scoggin, James James,—5.

Cape May: Jesse Hand,—1.

One of the first acts of this body, which exhibits

³ (a) Afterward General; (b) Captain; (c) Major; (d) Colonel; (e) Lieutenant-Colonel; (f) afterwards General.

The deputies marked (*) were also members of the Colonial House of Assembly for 1775.

The deputies marked (||) were afterwards signers of the declaration of independence.

^g Afterwards adhered to the British, or became disaffected. See Journal of Council of Safety, pp. 16, 20, 29, 37.

the grave deliberation and dignified sobriety with which our ancestors entered upon their perilous but patriotic course, and which also illustrates the active religious principle that was conjoined with their devotion to liberty, was the adoption of a minute reciting that as the business which would engage their deliberations was of the highest moment, and "may, in the event, affect the lives and properties, the religion and liberties of their constituents, and their remotest posterity, therefore it unquestionably becomes the representative body of a Christian community to look up to that All-powerful Being by whose providence all human events are guided, humbly imploring His divine favor, in presiding over and directing their present councils towards the re-establishment of order and harmony between Great Britain and her distressed colonies; and that He would be graciously pleased to succeed the measures that may be devised as most conducive to these desirable ends."

In accordance with this minute, it was ordered that the president wait upon the ministers of the gospel in Trenton, and in behalf of the Congress request their "alternate attendance and service every morning at eight o'clock during the session, in order that the business of the day may be opened with prayer for the above purposes."

The Congress then took into consideration the conflict which they foresaw to be impending between Great Britain and "these colonies," and decided that the crisis was of such a character as to make its assembling absolutely necessary for the security of the province, at the same time declaring its allegiance to the "rightful authority and government of His Sacred Majesty George the Third." But notwithstanding the seeming loyalty of this declaration, the Congress promptly assumed and unhesitatingly exercised the functions of an independent and supreme governing and legislative body regardless of the authority of the royal Governor, William Franklin, and unrestrained by the check of any other power than the will of the people. The following outline of the business transacted by the Congress will show the scope of the powers which it assumed and exercised with a firm hand.

The action of the General Assembly which met at Perth Amboy the previous January in electing five deputies to represent the province in the Continental Congress was approved.

It was ordered that each county should have one vote.

A message was dispatched to the Continental Congress, in session at Philadelphia, expressing a disposition most heartily to concur, to the utmost of their abilities, in the common cause of America, in conformity with some general plan to be recommended by the Continental Congress; also desiring to be promptly advised of what the Continental Congress may think desirable to be done, so that measures consistent therewith may be adopted, and that none should be determined upon that would mar or obstruct the general views of the Continental Congress.

Having given this prompt and assuring evidence of their voluntary subordination to the General Congress, and of their disposition to co-operate with it in securing the general welfare, the Provincial Congress of New Jersey unanimously adopted a resolution recommending the people of New Jersey to adhere to a resolution just passed by the Continental Congress, prescribing that "all exportations to Quebec, Nova Scotia, St. John's, Newfoundland, Georgia (except the parish of St. John's), and East and West Florida" should immediately cease, and that no provisions or other necessities should be furnished to British fishermen on the American coasts.

A committee for opening a correspondence with the recently organized Provincial Congress of New York was appointed, and a draft of a letter to that body was adopted, informing it of the organization of the Provincial Congress of New Jersey, suggesting a uniform plan of action, and offering and inviting in return a "free communication" from time to time of such measures and intelligence "as may be judged most conducive to the interest of the common cause," which letter, a few days later, was cordially responded to.

Articles of association were adopted and ordered to be sent to the Committee of Observation and Correspondence in all the counties, with instructions that they should procure them to be signed by the freeholders and inhabitants of the several townships, reciting the design of the British ministry to raise a revenue in America; referring in indignant terms to the cruel hostilities commenced in Massachusetts; expressing the conviction that the preservation of the rights and privileges of America depended, under God, on the firm union of its inhabitants and their abhorrence of slavery; solemnly resolving, under the sacred ties of virtue, honor, and love of country, personally and by their influence, to support and carry into execution the measures recommended by the Continental and Provincial Congresses for defending and preserving inviolate the Constitution; and pledging themselves, so far as was consistent with the measures adopted for the preservation of American freedom, to support all existing magistrates and civil officers in the execution of their duty, and to guard against the "disorders and confusions to which all citizens were exposed by the circumstances of the times."

These measures having been taken for co-operation with the Continental Congress, and for the preservation of the internal order of the province, a still more decided and menacing revolutionary step was taken on the last day of the session, June 3, 1775, by the adoption of a bill for regulating the militia of the colony. The preamble of this important bill indicates that all expectation of a redress of grievances and of a re-establishment lishment of the old relations between Great Britain and the colonies was rapidly vanishing, or, perhaps, that it had already vanished; and its expression of a hope for "the restoration of the old relations" seems to have been merely a politic expedient, resorted to out of deference to those of their fellow-citizens who were not yet prepared for, and might be dismayed by, the spectre of extreme measures. Referring to the "arbitrary measures adopted and pursued by the British Parliament and Ministry for the purpose of subjugating the American colonies to the most abject servitude," and expressing the apprehension "that all pacific measures for the redress of our grievances will prove ineffectual," the Congress boldly declared that it is "highly necessary that the inhabitants of this province be forthwith properly armed and disciplined for defending the cause of American freedom," and "that such persons be intrusted with the command of the militia as can be confided in by the people, and are truly zealous in support of our just rights and privileges." The Congress meant war, if war should be necessary for the maintenance of liberty, and at once set about to prepare for it. They therefore prescribed that one or more companies of eighty men each be immediately formed in each township or corporation, to be taken from the inhabitants capable of bearing arms between the ages of sixteen and fifty, each of which companies should choose by plurality of voices four persons from among themselves of sufficient capacity and substance for its officers, namely, one captain, two lieutenants, and one ensign. These officers were authorized to select fit persons for sergeants, corporals, and drummers. The remainder of the act provides for the formation of regiments and the election of regimental officers, for the mustering of the men, for their assemblage for drill, general muster, and review, and for their equipment with arms, ammunition, and camp equipage.

The next business of the Congress, logically necessitated by the militia bill, was the passage of an ordinance for raising by taxation ten thousand pounds proclamation money for the use of the province, which tax was apportioned to the several counties as follows:

Bergen, £664 8s. 0d.; Essex, £742 18s. 0d.; Middlesex, £872 6s. 6d.; Somerset, £904 2s. 0d.; Monmouth, 1069 2s. 8d.; Morris, £723 8s. 0d.; Sussex, £593 5s. 4d.; Hunterdon, £1368 16s. 8d.; Burlington, £1071 13s. 4d.; Gloucester, £763 2s. 8d.; Salem, £679 12s. 0d.; Cumberland, £385 6s. 8d.; and Cape May, £166 18s. 0d.

The remainder of this ordinance details the principles that should govern assessments and taxables, settles when the tax should be collected, and directs its payment by the county collectors to the provisional county committees.

Finally the Congress appointed Hendrick Fisher, of Somerset; Samuel Tucker, of Hunterdon; Daniel Hunt, of Hunterdon; Frederick Frelinghuysen, of Somerset; Isaac Pierson, of Burlington; Azariah Dunham,¹ of Middlesex; John Schureman, of Middlesex; John Hart, of Hunterdon; Joseph Borden, of Burlington; Jonathan Deare, of Middlesex; Jonathan Baldwin, of Middlesex; Peter Schenck, of Somerset; Ralph Hart, of Hunterdon; and Nathaniel Heart, of Middlesex, or any three of them, with the president or vice-president, a Committee of Correspondence, with power to convene the Congress. The Congress then adjourned.

The second session of the Provincial Congress was held at Trenton, beginning on Saturday, Aug. 5, 1775, and continuing till Thursday, Aug. 17, 1775. In the interval, since its adjournment on the 3d of June, the battle of Bunker Hill had been fought, Washington had been appointed commander-in-chief, and it was becoming plain that the controversy between Great Britain and the United Colonies was to be referred to the arbitrament of war. The object for which the Congress now met was to prepare for this dread alternative by taking efficient measures for the collection of the tax which had been levied at the former session and remained unpaid; to ascertain what persons refused to pay the same or to associate in the measures recommended by the Continental Congress; to provide for the government of the province and for the perpetuation of the Provincial Congress as the successor and substitute for the overthrown royal Governor and Colonial Legislature; to perfect the organization of the friends of liberty by the election of county and township Committees of Observation and Correspondence; to further perfect the bill passed at the preceding session for the regulation of the militia; and to appoint persons as a Committee of Safety, to act during the recess of the Provincial Congress and in its stead.

The number of deputies in attendance at this second session of Congress was eighty-three, four of the Essex deputies who were present at the former session being absent. The great body of the delegates was composed of those who were present in June, but in several of the counties there were changes; the only change in Middlesex County was the substitution of Lucas Schenck for David Williamson.

The first business which occupied the attention of the Congress was to provide for the collection of the tax levied by the previous session, payment of which seems to have been avoided or refused in many instances. The persons authorized to collect the quotas of the several townships were required to pay the money collected by them to the county collector on or before September 10th prox., and if any refused payment a list of their names was ordered to be sent to their several committees, which committees were also ordered to send the names of such delinquents, as well as of those who had refused to sign the articles of association recommended by the Continental Congress, to the next Provincial Congress. Provision was made for paying assessors and collectors of taxes for their services, and for refunding to the several county committees any surplus of the money raised by taxation that might remain over and above what should be needed for the public service.

¹ Azariah Dunham and John Schureman resided in New Brunswick, Jonathan Deare and Jonathan Baldwin at Princeton, and Nathaniel Heart at Woodbridge.

The causes that made it desirable to have a new election for deputies to the Provincial Congress are very clearly set forth in the preamble to an ordinance which was adopted on Saturday, August 12th, the language of which evinces that all hope of a peaceful accommodation with the mother-country had nearly died out, and also illustrates the strict regard that was paid to the will of the people as the fountain of authority. "Whereas," says this grave document, "it is highly expedient, at a time when this province is likely to be involved in all the horrors of a civil war, and when it has become absolutely necessary to increase the burden of taxes already laid upon the good people of this colony, for the just defense of their invaluable rights and privileges, that the inhabitants thereof should have frequent opportunities of renewing their choice and approbation of the representatives in Provincial Congress, it is therefore resolved that the inhabitants in each county qualified to vote for representatives in General Assembly do meet together at the places hereinafter mentioned on Thursday, the 21st day of September next, and then and there, by plurality of voices, elect and appoint any number not exceeding five substantial freeholders as deputies, with full power to represent such county in Provincial Congress to be held at Trenton, in the county of Hunterdon, on Tuesday, the 3d day of October next." The remainder of the ordinance merely prescribes the routine details respecting the elections for deputies, and also of Committees of Observation and Correspondence.

Having thus provided for the perpetuation of the civil government of the province, the Congress turned its earnest attention to the more effective organization of the military strength of the colony. To this end a series of resolutions were adopted, of which the following is a summary: The county and township committees were instructed to send the names of their several officers of militia to the Provincial Congress, or to the Committees of Safety it should appoint, that they might be duly commissioned, reserving to the Congress the appointment of all officers above the rank of captain, save those already appointed under the ordinance of the last Congress. It was ordered that the militia of Bergen and Salem should each compose one regiment; of Essex, Middlesex, and Somerset, each two regiments; of Morris and Sussex, each two regiments; and one battalion; of Burlington, two regiments and a company of rangers; of Monmouth, three regiments; of Hunterdon, four regiments; and of Gloucester, Cumberland, and Cape

May, respectively three, two, and one battalions,—in all equal to about twenty-three regiments. Disobedience or irregular behavior on the part of officers while on duty was ordered to be reported to the committees of their respective counties, who were empowered to suspend offenders and report the charges and evidence against them to the Committee of Safety, or to the next Provincial Congress, for their action. Those inhabitants between the ages of sixteen and fifty who should refuse to enroll themselves and bear arms were to be required to pay four shillings per month as an equivalent, or upon their refusing such payment were to be reported to the Provincial Congress or the Committee of Safety, "to be dealt with as they shall direct." Persons who had signed the muster-roll and neglected to attend on mustering day were to be fined two shillings for each such absence (the fines of parties under age to be paid by their parents or masters), not to exceed two fines in a month, and be reported to the Township Committee and the next Congress. The moneys so received of delinquents by the several captains to be applied for defraying the expenses of instructing and equipping their companies. Each private soldier was to be furnished with good arms, powder, and ball by the county or Township Committee when he was himself unable to procure them. The precedence of rank in the militia was established in the following order: 1, Essex; 2, Salem; 3, Gloucester; 4, Morris; 5, Sussex; 6, Cape May; 7, Monmouth; 8, Somerset; 9, Bergen; 10, Cumberland; 11, Middlesex; 12, Hunterdon; 13, Burlington. But no reason was assigned for this particular order, nor is it easy to conceive of one. Besides the above twenty-three regiments of militia, it was ordered that four thousand able-bodied effective men be enlisted as volunteers and enrolled under officers appointed and commissioned by the Provincial Congress, but nominated by the county and township committees, who should be denominated "Minute-Men," and who should hold themselves in constant readiness on the shortest notice to march to any place where their assistance might be required "for the defense of this or any neighboring colony," who should also pay due obedience to their officers, "agreeably to the rules and orders" of the Continental or Provincial Congress, or during the recess of the latter of the Committee of Safety. These minute-men were to be mustered in companies of sixty-four men each, officers included, of which six companies were to be raised in each of the counties of Essex, Middlesex, Monmouth, and Morris; five each in Somerset, Sussex, and Burlington; eight in Hunterdon; four each in Bergen and Gloucester; three each in Salem and Cumberland; and one in Cape May; and they were to be formed into ten battalions,—one each in Bergen, Essex, Middlesex, Monmouth, Somerset, Morris, Sussex, Hunterdon, and Burlington, and one in Gloucester and Salem. The three companies from Cumberland and one from Cape May were to act as independent companies of light infantry and rangers. It was stipulated that these minute-men should receive like pay as the Continental army, should be furnished with camp equipage and provisions, be provided for if wounded or disabled, that they should serve for four months, and should have precedence of rank over the militia.

Before adjourning the Congress passed a series of resolves, which I summarize as follows: Recommending persons whose religious principles would not allow them to bear arms to contribute the more liberally for the relief of their distressed brethren in the several colonies; requiring that before persons received military commissions they should sign the "Association;" appointing Jonathan D. Sergeant, of Somerset, treasurer of the province; and recommending the several county committees immediately to employ gunsmiths to make the arms necessary and wanting in their counties, in conformity with the direction for their manufacture set forth by the Continental Congress.¹

The Congress then appointed Henry Fisher, of Somerset, Samuel Tucker, of Hunterdon, Isaac Pearson, of Burlington, John Hart, of Hunterdon, Jonathan D. Sergeant, of Somerset, Azariah Dunham, of Middlesex, Peter Schenck, of Somerset, Enos Kelsey, of Somerset, Joseph Borden, of Burlington, Frederick Frelinghuysen, of Somerset, and John Schureman, of Middlesex, a Committee of Safety to act during the recess of Congress, and thereupon adjourned "to the 20th day of September next, unless sooner convened by the Committee of Safety."²

Up to this time the Provincial Congress had been purely provisional. Its deputies had not been elected in conformity with any law that had been enacted by any really representative or authorized body, but had been chosen on the informal call only of self-constituted or spontaneous meetings or conventions in the several counties. The grave exigencies of the times, as was stated in the preamble to the act of the Provincial Congress providing for a new election of deputies by the people, which has been already quoted, now demanded a formal resort to the people as the source of power and authority for a choice of those who were to represent and legislate for them, and whose acts would probably convert them into rebels against the arms of Great Britain or into pusillanimous supplicants for her clemency and protection. Accordingly the Provincial Congress which met at Trenton on Tuesday, Oct. 3, 1775, and continued its sessions until the afternoon of Saturday, October 25th, was composed of deputies just elected by the people, fresh from among them, and fully understanding their wishes. It was no longer a provisional body, but was a regularly elected representative assembly. Its powers were peculiar and undefined. The royal authority had been tacitly superseded, though still existing in form; royal charters were held in abeyance; royal writs were disregarded; royal Governors, Legislatures, and other officers were suspected, set at naught, and emptied of power. There was as yet no constitution in the form of a written instrument; and save as it was restricted by the operation of the common law, and of former statutory enactments, and by sufferance of old forms and usages, or held in check by a regard for the opinions and interests of those who brought it into being, there was no limitation upon its powers by any instrument then existing to which they or the people of the province acknowledged fealty. They could and did imprison, exile, confiscate, lay taxes, emit money, exercise power over life and death, call out the militia, and levy war.

The new Congress consisted of forty-eight delegates, whose names are appended in a note,³ and nine of whom were also members of the House of Assembly, five each from Essex, Morris, Sussex, Hunterdon, Burlington, Gloucester, and Salem, two each from Bergen, Middlesex, and Cumberland, three each from Somerset and Monmouth, and one from Cape May, but in voting each county had only one vote, as ordered by the previous Congress. On the first day there was not a quorum present, the minutes stating that "several of the deputies" assembled. On the following day, Oct. 4, 1775, it organized with Samuel Tucker, of Hunterdon, president; Hendrick Fisher, of Somerset, vice-president; and John Mehelm, of Hunterdon, secretary. On a subsequent day John Carey, of Salem, was appointed secretary, with Abraham Clark, of Essex, and Charles Stewart, of Hunterdon, assistants.

This session was a busy, earnest, and laborious one. The minutes of the Congress reveal the revolutionary state of the province, the unrest and agitation that

² Bergen, John Demarest,* ¹ Jacobus Post.
Essex, Abraham Clark, Lewis Ogden, Samuel Potter, Caleb Camp, Robert Drummond.

Middlesex, Azariah Dunham,* John Dennis.
Morris, William Winda,* William DeHart, Jacob Drake, Silas Condit, Ellis Cook.

Somerset, Hendrick Fisher,* Cornelius Van Muliner, Ruloffe Van Dyke.

Sussex, William Maxwell, Ephraim Martin, Thomas Potts, Abia Brown, Mark Thompson.

Monmouth, Edward Taylor,* John Covenhoven, Joseph Holmes.
Hunterdon, Samuel Tucker,* John Mehelm,* John Hart, Charles Stewart, Augustine Stevenson.

Burlington, Isaac Pierson, John Pope, Samuel How, John Wood, Joseph Newbold.

Gloucester, John Cooper, Joseph Ellis, Thomas Clark, Elijah Clark, Richard Somers.

Salem, John Holme, Edward Keasly, Benjamin Holme,* John Carey.
Cumberland, Theophilus Elmer,* Jonathan Ayars.
Cape May, Jesse Hand.

¹ The recommendation of the Continental Congress was in the following term: "That it be recommended to the makers of arms for the use of the militia that they make good substantial muskets, with barrels three feet and a half in length, that will carry an ounce ball, and fitted with a good layonet and steel ramrod, and that making such arms be encouraged in these United Colonies."—Passed July 18, 1795.

² For proceedings of Committee of Safety see next chapter.

³ Deputies marked * were also members of the House of Assembly.

prevailed among the people, and the industrious preparation that the patriots were making for the war that they perceived was soon to roll towards them. The minutes also reveal the steady growth of the democratic principle of equality among the people, counting a man a man whether he owned property or whether he did not. Petitions flowed into the Congress on a multitude of subjects from every county and from nearly every township,—from committees, municipal corporations, and individuals,—questioning the election of some of the deputies to the Congress, and of members of the county and township Committees of Observation and Correspondence; craving military commissions or objecting to some that had been issued; soliciting the appointment of particular field, regimental, and other officers, or indicating a preference between candidates; presenting the choice of companies that had been formed for one regiment rather than another; praying that money at interest and also mechanics and lawyers be taxed; from numerous quarters and from all parts of the province urging strongly that all who pay taxes, whether freeholder or otherwise, be admitted to vote at the elections for deputies to the Provincial Congress; asking that elections be by ballot, that suits at law for the recovery of debt be conditionally suspended until the final settlement of the dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies; that persons (mostly Quakers and loyalists) who refused to pay the tax ordered by the former Congress be compelled to do so, and that the making of saltpetre, cartouch-boxes, etc., be encouraged. All these petitions received respectful consideration, and the action that was taken upon them was dispassionate, wise, independent, and dignified.

Besides the consideration of these petitions, which, as a purely popular body, deriving its power and even its very existence from the will of the people, it could not and did not disregard, the Congress was engaged in receiving and scrutinizing the reports of the "associations" and committees that had been formed in the various townships and counties; in corresponding with the Continental Congress as to the raising, equipment, organization, footing, payment, and forwarding of troops; and with the Congresses and Committees of Safety of other colonies, and the county and township committees of the province, on subjects pertaining to the general welfare; in examining into the state of the finances of the province, and estimating the expenditure that would be required for the arming, equipment, and maintenance of the militia, etc., and for carrying on the government; in preparing ordinances for the regulation of the militia, for raising additional troops, for enforcing the former taxes and levying new ones, for raising money by the emission of bills of credit, and for the apprehension of deserters. Their attention was also largely occupied in examining and deciding upon complaints that were showered upon them, denouncing loyalists and sympathizers with Great Britain, and in considering public and private grievances of every form and variety.

It will be perceived that the "Ordinances," as all formal and grave enactments of this body were styled, which were passed by the Provincial Congress were of a fundamental character, embracing the evolution of a State and the administration of civil government within its bounds, while it was itself passing through a period of revolution, and was threatened with civil war within and invasion from without. The machinery was to be adjusted to an edifice whose walls were yet unbuilt, and the greatest wisdom and prudence, mingled with courage and fortitude, were required for the undertaking. To this difficult work the Congress addressed itself with equal industry and devotion, and every portion of the task received the anxious deliberations of the deputies unremittingly given by day and by night.

The ordinance to compel the payment of the ten thousand pounds tax of the previous Congress required collectors to return the names of delinquents to the county committees, which committees were ordered to make "distress on the goods and chattels" of the said delinquents, and after five days' notice by advertisement, to sell them at public vendue, any surplus remaining after satisfying the tax and costs to be returned to the owner. Provision was made to fill vacancies in the office of collector. Where owners of large and profitable tracts of land were non-residents, and the taxes were thus avoided, the goods and chattels of the tenant or agent were made liable to be distrained and sold in satisfaction of the tax, and the tenant was authorized to deduct the amount out of the rent. Appeals in cases of alleged excessive taxation were allowed to the county committee, who might order the amount remitted to be repaid, but no appeal was permitted to be heard until the assessment had been first paid. Severe pecuniary penalties were prescribed for non-performance or neglect of duty by collectors, or for their failure to pay over the moneys collected, which penalties might also be enforced by distress and sale of their goods and chattels, or in case of default by collectors, when sufficient property could not be found, their "bodies" might be taken and confined until the moneys and costs were fully paid.

The estimate of the amount required for the "defense of the colony," as finally arrived at, was the result of a prolonged consideration by a special committee, and of several earnest debates. It finally culminated in ordering the purchase of three thousand stand of arms, ten tons of gunpowder, twenty tons of lead, one thousand cartouch-boxes, two medicine chests, four hundred tents, with the necessary furniture, besides canteens and knapsacks, and two thousand blankets. It also appropriated one shilling per man per day for troops in actual service until they arrived at the place of destination; £8585 as a fund for the payment of troops for one month when in actual service; £300 for axes, spades, and trenching tools; £500 for a train of artillery; and £1000 as a bounty of "one shilling a pound" for the manufacture in the colony of "any quantity not exceeding 20,000 pounds of saltpetre on or before Jan. 1, 1777."

In order to meet these expenses the Congress deemed it be necessary that the sum of £30,000 proclamation money should be immediately emitted in bills of credit for the use of the colony, and it appointed a committee, consisting of Hendrick Fisher, John Hart, John Mehelm, Theophilus Elmer, and Azariah Dunham, to draft an ordinance for that purpose, with provision to "sink the money" so emitted, and designating the commissioners to purchase and procure the articles enumerated in the foregoing estimate. The ordinance drafted by this committee and adopted by the Congress appointed Samuel Tucker, Abraham Hunt, Joseph Ellis, and Alexander Chambers commissioners for the western division of the province, and Hendrick Fisher, Azariah Dunham, Abraham Clark, and Samuel Potter commissioners for the eastern division, with authority to contract with artificers for or otherwise purchase the articles named in the estimates, and to supply the troops of the colony when called into action in this or any of the neighboring colonies with one month's subsistence, provided that no provision for the same were made by the Continental Congress. To defray these expenses the sum of £30,000 in proclamation money was ordered to be printed, to pass current in all payments within the colony, as follows: five thousand seven hundred bills, each of the value of £3; six thousand bills of £1 10s. 0d. each; four thousand bills of 15 shillings each, and three thousand bills of 6 shillings each, which when printed were to be delivered to Hendrick Fisher and Azariah Dunham, of the eastern division, and to John Hart and John Carey, of the western, who were to be the signers thereof for the respective divisions (those for the western division in conjunction with John Cooper, one of the treasurers of the colony for the western division, and those of the eastern division in conjunction with John Dennis, also one of the treasurers of the colony for the eastern division). The ordinance details with the utmost minuteness, and an exactitude that illustrates the wary circumspection of our ancestors, how the bills shall be signed, countersigned, counted, inspected, receipted for, sworn to, protected from fraud or peculation, etc., and provides for a tax to be levied annually in 1784, 1785, and 1786 for sinking and retiring the bills emitted. The apportionment of this tax among the counties indicates the then relative wealth of each as follows: Portion of the £10,000 tax to each county: Hunterdon, £1363 16s. 8d.; Burlington, £1071 13s. 4d.; Monmouth, £1069 2s. 8d.; Somerset, £904 2s. 0d.; Middlesex, £872 6s. 8d.; Gloucester, £763 2s. 8.; Essex, £742 18s. 0d.; Morris, £723 8s. 0d.; Salem, £679 12s. 0d.; Bergen, £664 8s. 0d.; Sussex, £593 5s. 4d.; Cumberland, £385 6s. 8d.; Cape May, £166 18s. 0d.

The ordinance for the further regulation of the militia forces of the colony provided for a more accurate and exhaustive enrollment. Each man enrolled was to be furnished at his place of abode with one pound of powder and three pounds of "bullets to suit his firelock or musket," and he must "furnish himself with a good musket or firelock, and bayonet, sword, or tomahawk, a steel ramrod, worm, priming wire and brush, a cartouch-box, twelve flints, and a knapsack," under penalty of the "forfeiture of two shillings for want of musket or firelock, and of one shilling for the want of the other above-enumerated articles." Provision was made for more frequent and thorough drills, and for general musters, and heavy pecuniary penalties, collectable by distress, were prescribed for failure to attend either by officers or privates. To secure the execution of these warrants of distress the persons whose duty it was to serve them were themselves made liable to fine for neglect or failure of duty, which fines were in like manner collectable by distress upon their goods and chattels. In the event of alarm or invasion by an armed force, every enrolled subaltern soldier of the militia or minute-man was to "repair immediately to his captain's residence properly armed and accoutred," and the captain "was at once to march his company to oppose the enemy," first having "sent an express to the commanding officer of his regiment," who, in his turn, was to "march with the whole or part of the forces under his command as he, before receiving orders from one of the general officers, might judge necessary in order to prevent the enemy from landing or penetrating into any part of the country, and at the same time should send an express to the general officer nearest him," giving intelligence of "such alarm or invasion." During such times of alarm or invasion the officers and soldiers were to be subject to court-martial, but it was expressly stipulated that "no pains and penalties imposed by a court-martial shall extend to the taking life or member of any delinquent or offender who shall be called out as aforesaid." Persons between sixteen and fifty capable of bearing arms who came from any neighboring province were required within two weeks of their arrival to enroll in the militia, and to be subject to the same duties, fines, and penalties as other citizens. A special provision was inserted to the effect "that minute-men, when called out to the assistance of a neighboring colony," shall be "under the direction of their own officers, unless a Continental officer of superior rank be present, to whom, in such case, they are to yield due subordination." Directions were given for raising, equipping, and disciplining companies of light-horse, not to exceed one for each county, and each to consist of forty privates, "the officers to rank with the militia officers of the foot," the whole to be formed into regiments, subject to the command of the brigadier-generals of the colony, the Provincial Congress, or the Committee of Safety. Respecting persons "whose religious principles would not suffer them to bear arms," it was ordered as an equivalent, and in lieu of future voluntary contributions "for public and benevolent uses," that they should pay into the hands of the chairman of the county committees four shillings per month for such exemption, and on their neglect or failure to do so they should be proceeded against by the issue of warrants of distress on their goods and chattels. The same equivalent was required from persons under age who were capable of bearing arms, and in default payment might be demanded of the "parent, master, or person such delinquents are under," and in case of neglect or refusal the same should be recovered by distress and sale. But persons who were sick and unable to bear arms, or out of the province, or necessarily engaged in the public business of the colony were to be exempt. Appeals might be taken by persons for distress made for fines and forfeitures within two months to the committee of the township or county, who were empowered to afford equitable redress.

Among other important matters connected with the public defense that came before the Congress was a resolution of the Continental Congress dated Oct. 9, 1775, recommending "the Convention of New Jersey" to raise immediately "at the expense of the continent two battalions" of eight companies each, each company to consist of sixty-eight privates, "officered with one captain, one lieutenant, one ensign, four sergeants, and four corporals," the privates to be enlisted for one year at £5 per month, and to be liable to discharge at any time on allowing them one month's pay extraordinary. Each private was to be allowed, "instead of a bounty, one felt hat, a pair of yarn stockings, and a pair of shoes," and was to find his own arms. The pay of the officers was to be the same as those of the Continental army. With this resolution came a letter from John Hancock, President of the Continental Congress, dated Oct. 12, 1775, agreeing "to furnish the men with a hunting shirt, not exceeding the value of one dollar and one-third of a dollar, and a blanket, provided these can be procured; but these are not to be made a part of the terms of enlistment." Accompanying this letter were forty-eight blank commissions for the captains and subalterns of the two proposed battalions. The resolution of the Continental Congress and the letter of President Hancock were received by the Provincial Congress on the 13th of October, and "after some time spent" in their consideration a response was sent declaring that the Congress of New Jersey was "animated with equal affection to the common cause of America with the other provinces, and an equal desire to promote its general interest," but expressing regret that one of the resolutions of the Continental Congress proposed to suspend the "appointment of field-officers" for the two battalions "until the Continental Congress shall take order in that matter." The Provincial Congress thought that it would expedite the raising of the men if the nomination of the field-officers were first ascertained to belong to the New Jersey Congress, and that the reverse would impede enlistments. It also suggested that as other provinces had been allowed this privilege, its members could not, in justice to their constituents, nor consistently with the honor of the province, give up this claim. They therefore asked a reconsideration of the resolution so far as it related to the appointment of field-officers. No reply having been received to this remonstrance, a second letter was dispatched to the Continental Congress on the 21st of October, expressing anxiety for a reply, and conveying the assurance that "from every appearance the two battalions will speedily be completed" if the purport of the letter of October 13th were acceded to. Without waiting further for the reply, on the 26th of October the Provincial Congress passed the form of an advertisement which was ordered to be "sent to the press as soon as possible, and that two hundred copies be printed for this house," which recites the resolution of the Continental Congress, and announced that warrants should be issued to "proper persons for immediately raising the said two battalions," which, it was stipulated, should be made up of "able-bodied freemen." Elias Dayton, Azariah Dunham, Joseph Ellis, or John Mehlem, or either of them, were appointed muster-masters, to review and accept the companies and "to certify the same to the Provincial Congress, or in its recess to the Committee of Safety." On the 27th of October a letter was received from the Continental Congress saying that as "the Congress are waiting the return of the committee from camp, in order to establish permanent regulations for all Continental forces they for the present incline to suspend a determination on the question about the appointment of regimental officers." On the 28th the Provincial Congress recommended field-officers for the two battalions, the one having been raised in the eastern and the other in the western part of the province, and they were subsequently appointed by the Continental Congress. On November 10th six companies of the First (or Eastern) Battalion were ordered to garrison the fort in the Highlands, on the Hudson; on the 27th of November the remainder of the battalions were ordered into barracks near New York, and on December 8th they were ordered to the city of New York, where they were mustered into the Continental Army on the 26th of December, Lord Stirling being the colonel of the Eastern, and William Maxwell of the Western Battalion.

The Congress among other matters which occupied their attention adopted resolves respecting the apprehension of deserters from the Continental troops, which empowered any member of a town or county committee to issue his order to the commanding officer of any company of militia or minute-men in such town or county, requiring him to send one or more men to search for and apprehend such deserter, and to confine him safely till he can be conducted to the army; but if the party denied that he was a deserter, he might have a hearing before the town or county committee, which should be convened for that purpose. The expenses of such arrest, confinement, etc., were to be paid by the town or county collectors or treasurers, and the accounts sent to the Provincial Congress or the Committee of Safety, to be by them forwarded to the Continental Congress for reimbursement. All the inhabitants of the colony were desired to exert themselves in arresting deserters, and were authorized to apprehend them without waiting for any order from any committee.

The important question of the qualification of voters for deputies to the Provincial Congress, which had been the subject of numerous petitions from various parts of the State, but especially from Hunterdon and Sussex, was brought up in the Congress by the deputies from Salem on a motion "that as soon as this session is ended this Congress doth dissolve itself, in order that a new election may take place upon more extensive principles, to wit: that at such new election some householders or reputable single men as are possessed bona fide of a personal estate to the value of fifty pounds proclamation money, or upwards, and have been resident at least one year in the county, may be admitted to vote with those that are freeholders." The consideration of this motion was postponed until Congress should "determine the petitions from the counties of Hunterdon and Sussex, praying that householders may be admitted to vote at future elections." At length, "after having duly weighed and considered," says the minute in the records of the Congress, "the several arguments for and against the prayer of the said petitions, and also the above motion of the deputies of the county of Salem for a dissolution of this Congress, the previous question was put whether this Congress shall proceed to determine the consideration of the above petitions and motion at this time or postpone the same to the next session, in order that the sense of the colony in general may be known." The resolution to postpone was carried, seven counties (Bergen, Essex, Somerset, Monmouth, Burlington, Gloucester, and Cape May) voting to postpone, and six counties (Middlesex, Morris, Sussex, Hunterdon, Salem, and Cumberland) voting against postponement. The principle we may anticipate here by observing was successful in the next and last Provincial Congress, held in 1776 (whose history I hope to comprise in a future paper), and was incorporated into the Constitution which they formed and under which our State was governed until 1844.

Among the latest acts of this active and important session of the Provincial Congress, which fairly launched our State on the ocean of revolution, was the appointment of a Committee of Safety "to act for the public welfare of this colony in the recess of this Congress," for which position the following gentlemen were chosen: Mr. President, Samuel Tucker, of Hunterdon; Mr. Vice-President, Hendrick Fisher, of Somerset; John Hart, of Hunterdon; Abraham Clark and Lewis Ogden, of Essex; Joseph Holmes, of Monmouth; John Mehelm and Augustine Stevenson, of Hunterdon; Isaac Pearson and John Pope, of Burlington; Azariah Dunham and John Dennis, of Middlesex; and Ruloff Van Dyke, of Somerset. The Congress of 1775 then adjourned to meet at New Brunswick on the first Tuesday of April, 1776, unless sooner convened by the president or vice-president or the Committee of Safety. Thus closed the final session of the Provincial Congress of 1775.

CHAPTER LXV.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY IN THE REVOLUTION.—

(Continued.)

Council of Safety.—Before taking up the proceedings of Provincial Congress for the year 1776, it will be well to notice "The Committee of Safety" authorized by that body to act during the recess of its meetings. "This committee," says Mr. Deshler, "in effect constituted a practical dictatorship, residing not in one man, indeed, but in a majority vote of eleven or more persons, who were appointed by the Provincial Congress from time to time. Its members were invariably chosen by the deputies to the Provincial Congress from among their own number, and were men upon whom they could rely for courage, prudence, firmness, activity, and sagacity. They exercised, as a committee, all the powers intrusted to or assumed by the Provincial Congress save that of legislation. They conducted all the correspondence and conferences with the Continental Congress and the Provincial Congresses of the other colonies. They gave orders for the arrest of suspicious or disaffected persons. They tried and acquitted, or condemned to imprisonment or detention, men who were charged with disloyalty or acting in concert with or giving information to the enemy. They kept expresses in constant readiness to forward intelligence with all speed. They appropriated public moneys, commissioned officers in the militia or the corps of minute-men, held prisoners of war, settled controversies between officers, civil and military, acted as a court of admiralty, confiscated the property of those who aided and abetted the public enemy, took order for the general security of the province and for its defense, and, in fine, they were the executive branch of the government, as the representatives of the power and authority of the Provincial Congress during its recess, all which they exercised with an ability and integrity that has never been impeached till they were superseded in October, 1776, by the first Legislature under the new State constitution (adopted July 2, 1776), which invested the Governor and a Council of twenty members with certain powers for a limited time, under the title of "The Governor and Council of Safety."

The Committee of Safety met during the recess of Provincial Congress at Princeton on Jan. 9, 1776. There not being a quorum present, they adjourned to the 10th of January, at which meeting there were present Samuel Tucker, president; Hendrick Fisher, vice-president; Abraham Clark, deputy secretary; Azariah Dunham, Roelef Van Dyke, John Dennis, Augustine Stephenson, and John Pope.

"The president laid before the committee a letter from the Provincial Congress of New York, inclosing resolutions of the Continental Congress and the Congress of New York relative to establishing posts at proper distances, to carry intelligence to the different parts of the colony or elsewhere, as occasion may require, and for erecting beacons at proper distances, which the Congress of New York recommended to the Congress of New Jersey, which letter and resolves were read in the committee, who after duly considering the same approve of the expediency of establishing posts as aforesaid; therefore, Resolved, That a man and horse be kept in constant readiness by each of the several committees of Newark, Elizabeth Town, Woodbridge, New Brunswick, Princeton, and Trenton, whose business it shall be to forward all expresses to and from the Continental Congress. And that the aforesaid Town Committee shall, on every intelligence of any invasion or alarm, send expresses to the neighboring town committees, who are directed to provide expresses to forward the same from town to town, to the Town Committees, and to such officers of the militia as they may think proper to notify thereof throughout the colony, with as much expedition as may be in their power. And that all the expenses incurred by such expresses, the treasurer of this colony, appointed by Provincial Congress, or either of them, are hereby required to pay on order or orders, signed by the chairman of either of the committees of the township in this colony. Which orders, with indorsements thereon by the person or persons to whom the same are made payable, shall be sufficient vouchers to the said treasurers, or either of them, for such sums of money as they, or either of them, may pay thereon as aforesaid."

In the minutes of the committee at this date appears a recommendation from Lord Stirling that Matthias Halsted, of Elizabethtown, be made first lieutenant, and Yelles Mead ensign, in Capt. Meeker's company. The committee of Woodbridge sent in two recommendations, one recommending James Bonny as captain, James Manning as first lieutenant, David Crow as second lieutenant, and John as ensign of a company of militia in that town; the other recommending Elias Barron as captain, Rolph Marsh first lieutenant, Matthew Freeman second lieutenant, and Jonathan Bloomfield ensign of another company in Woodbridge. All were commissioned.

A certificate was produced from the chairman of the committee of the North Ward of New Brunswick, certifying that John Taylor was elected captain, Jacob Measural, first lieutenant, James Schureman, second lieutenant, and John Voorhees, Jr., ensign of a company of minute-men in Col. Neilson's battalion. They were ordered commissioned accordingly. Notwithstanding the extraordinary powers exercised by this committee, they refused to stretch their authority beyond proper limits or what they conceived to be for the good of the colony. One remarkable instance of this is found in the fact that they declined to issue commissions on recruiting warrants for the raising of the new battalion of Jersey troops called for by the Continental Congress, "being," as they say, "persuaded that the appointment of officers by the Congress will give much greater satisfaction to the colony than if appointed by the committee." At the same time they "recommended Azariah Dunham, Esq., to be appointed commissary for supplying such battalion when raised." It was the urgent responsibility of raising this battalion which they did not like themselves to assume that induced them to convene the Provincial Congress before the time appointed, to which the Congress had adjourned at its last session the previous year. There were also other important matters, such as establishing a Court of Admiralty, issuing regulations for the Continental forces, and enacting civil and military ordinances, which required the early meeting of the Provincial Congress. Hence the committee at their meeting, Jan. 12, 1776, agreed to call the Congress to meet at New Brunswick on Wednesday, the 31st day of January, then instant.

Provincial Congress of 1776.—The Provincial Congress of 1776 met accordingly; there not being a quorum present they adjourned till the first day of February, at nine o'clock A.M., and still a quorum not having arrived, adjournment was had till two o'clock P.M.

The minutes of the Provincial Congress for the preceding year, together with the military ordinance, had been in the mean time printed, and were ordered distributed in the several counties as follows:

	Minutes.	Military Ord.
To Bergen County.....	66	35
Essex County.....	74	37
Middlesex County.....	87	43
Somerset County.....	90	45
Monmouth County.....	106	53
Morris County.....	72	36
Sussex County.....	59	30
Hunterdon County.....	136	68
Burlington County.....	107	53
Gloucester County.....	76	38
Salem County.....	67	33
Camden County.....	38	19
Cape May County.....	16	8

Petitions were sent from the people of Essex and Somerset Counties, praying that householders not freeholders and all persons paying taxes be allowed to vote, and also that money at interest and other effects bear an equal proportion of the taxes.

The meetings of the Congress during the early part of the year were occupied chiefly with military affairs. Little had been done as yet towards raising and equipping an army. Lieut.-Col. Wind's regiment was stationed at Perth Amboy, but was destitute of ammunition. Somerset and Middlesex Counties temporarily supplied him, the former with "four quarter-casks of powder," and the latter with "150 pounds of lead," which the Congress agreed should be replaced at "some convenient time." Col. Maxwell had been ordered to march with the Eastern Battalion to Canada to assist our forces, who had been defeated at Quebec, and had been awaiting the meeting of Provincial Congress to secure the necessary assistance to put his battalion in marching order. They had neither arms, ammunition, nor equipments of any kind.

On the 2d of February, Col. Maxwell came to New Brunswick, with his marching orders from Continental Congress, and laid them before the Congress of New Jersey. They were read and filed, and the following action taken thereon:

"WHEREAS the Continental Congress have ordered Colonel Maxwell's battalion to March to Canada, as soon as the men can be furnished with arms, and other articles absolutely essential; and whereas arms are extremely scarce, and indeed impossible to be procured in time for the equipment of the said battalion, without making application to the several counties in this province,

"Resolved, That the Committees or other public bodies in whose hands any of the New Jersey provincial arms and accoutrements are deposited, do deliver the same to the commanding officer of said battalion, or his order; of whom they are required to take vouchers, with the valuation of said arms, &c., there underwritten; and that this Congress will either immediately pay for said arms, agreeable to appointment, or replace them as soon as possible, whichever the said Committees, or public bodies, shall think most proper."

The Congress, determined to raise all the arms it could in this way, addressed, through its president, the commanding officers and chairmen of the county committees in the province:

"GENTLEMEN:

"The late repulse at Quebec requires every exertion of the friends of American freedom, in consequence whereof Colonel Maxwell's battalion is ordered to march forthwith, and the Continental Congress have applied to our body, urging the greatest dispatch in procuring arms and necessities for their expedition. Therefore, in pursuance of the aforesaid application, we request you, gentlemen, to use the utmost diligence and activity in collecting all the public arms belonging to your county, being your proportion of the provincial arms unsold. Dispatch in this case is quite necessary, as no doubt the arms are distributed in the hands of the associators; it will be necessary for every officer to do his part. The value of the arms will be paid in money, or the number be replaced; and the expenses of collecting and forwarding them punctually discharged. We put you to this trouble with regret; but the necessity of the measure must apologize. You will have the arms collected in your county, valued by good men, and sent to Burlington or Trenton under the care of such officers of Colonel Maxwell's battalion as may be the best for hereof."

Part of the arms for Col. Maxwell's battalion were furnished by the people of Middlesex County, as we learn from the following minute of Feb. 8, 1776:

"The resolution of the justices and freeholders, county committee, and field-officers of Middlesex, purporting that they would furnish Colonel Maxwell's battalion with fifty stand of arms, etc., was read; whereupon it is ordered that Mr. Martin, Mr. Camp, and Mr. Pope be a committee to inspect said arms and to report thereon."

We learn also that some of the arms for Maxwell's battalion were purchased by John Posee, Esq., who was ordered to give them up to Col. William Maxwell, or his order, Jan. 13, 1776. About the beginning of this year one hundred stand of arms were borrowed from the province of New York.

On requisition from Lord Stirling, the committee of Elizabethtown furnished him with six thousand cartridges, Somerset County with four quarter-casks of powder, Woodbridge with a considerable quantity of the same, and New Brunswick with one hundred and fifty weight of lead.

John Dennis, Esq., laid before this Congress an appraisal of the blankets in the barracks in New Brunswick by John Schureman and William Applegate, which is in the words following:

"NEW BRUNSWICK, Feb. 6, 1776.

"In pursuance to order of the Provincial Congress, directed to us the subscribers for appraising all the blankets in the barracks at New Brunswick, we find as follows:

62 blankets, which we value at 15s.....	£46 10s. 0d.
23 " " " 12s.....	13 16s. 0d.
5 " " " 7s. 6d.....	1 17s. 6d.
Proclamation.....	£82 3s. 6d.

"JOHN SCHURMAN.

"WILLIAM APPLIFICATE.

"TO JOHN DENNIS, Esq."

The new battalion called for should consist of eight companies, and each company of seventy-eight privates, and officered by one captain, two lieutenants, one ensign, four sergeants, and four corporals. The plan for raising the troops was reported by Hendrick Fisher, chairman of the committee. It provided that the officers be immediately recommended for commissions; that the captains and subalterns be appointed, and warrants issued to them to enlist the necessary complement of men. None but healthy, sound, and able-bodied freemen, none under sixteen years of age, no apprentice without the consent of master or mistress could be recruited; parents or guardians could secure the discharge of an enlisted minor by applying to the officer within twenty-four hours after enrollment, refunding the money or necessities with which the recruit had been supplied, or paying an equivalent therefor. The pay and subsistence of the soldiers was determined by general ordinance of Continental Congress. The prescribed oath of enlistment was in the following words:

"I, A. B., have this day enlisted myself as a soldier in the American Continental Army for one year unless sooner discharged; and do bind myself to conform in all instances to such rules and regulations as are or shall be established for the government of the said army. So help me God!"

For the purpose of raising the companies of this battalion and seeing that the captains properly executed their warrants, Azariah Dunham, of Middlesex, John Mehelm, of Hunterdon, Joseph Ellis, of Gloucester, and Edmond Thomas were appointed by the Provincial Congress muster-masters, to review the said companies and administer the requisite oath to the captains, said oath being in the words following, to wit:

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear that all the men whose names are entered in the muster-roll by me produced are truly and bona fide enlisted, and so far as I know or believe intend going in the service of the United Colonies in the Third Battalion raised or raising in this colony. 'So help me God!'"

Upon the certificate of the muster-master attached to the back of the muster-roll of each company, and presented to Provincial Congress, or in its recess to the committee of safety, the commissions of the officers were issued.

The following were the officers named and commissioned: Elias Dayton, colonel; Anthony Walton White, lieutenant-colonel; Francis Barber, major.

Samuel Potter, captain; Rinear Blanchard, first lieutenant; Josiah Quimby, second lieutenant; Cornelius Hennion, ensign.

Thomas Patterson, captain; John Mott, first lieutenant; William McDaniel, Jr., second lieutenant; Edward Patterson, ensign.

John Ross, captain; Edward McMichael, first lieutenant; Richard Cox, Jr., second lieutenant; Thomas Coachey, ensign.

William Eugene Inlay, captain; Richard Lloyd, first lieutenant; Daniel Pierson, second lieutenant; Edgar Ganlidet, ensign.

Peter Dickinson, captain; Stephen Dunham, first lieutenant; David Tuttle, second lieutenant; William Tenbrook, ensign.

Thomas Reading, captain; John Anderson, first lieutenant; Ralph Guild, second lieutenant; John Hagan, ensign.

Joseph Bloomfield, captain; Joseph Seely, first lieutenant; William Gifford, second lieutenant; Ebenezer Elmer, ensign.

Anthony Sharp, captain; Samuel Flanagan, first lieutenant; Samuel Hazlett, second lieutenant; Nathaniel Leonard, Jr., ensign.

The Committee of Safety of New York, Feb. 12, 1776, sent a requisition to the Provincial Congress of New Jersey for troops to prevent the British from landing on Staten Island. The Congress unanimously resolved that a detachment of volunteers, consisting of three hundred militia of the county of Middlesex, three hundred of the militia of the county of Essex, and one hundred of the militia of the county of Somerset, be ordered immediately to march to Staten Island, under the command of Col. Nathaniel Heard, Lieut.-Col. Edward Thomas, and Maj. John Dunn, to prevent the enemy from landing on the said island, and carrying off live-stock and provisions. They were to remain on the island until further orders, and Azariah Dunham, of New Brunswick, was appointed commissary to supply them with provisions and other necessities.

The ordinance of Oct. 28, 1775, appointing commissioners to purchase fire-arms and military stores, restricted them to a certain prescribed price. This was found to be a hindrance, and was repealed Feb. 10, 1776, it being "unanimously voted that the said commissioners proceed in the purchase of fire-arms upon the best terms in their power, without any limitation or restriction, and that this Congress will in convenient time pass an ordinance for that purpose."

This ordinance was the first among ten passed at the session in New Brunswick in February and March, 1776. The entire list of ordinances passed at this session is as follows:

"An Ordinance Directing the manner of signing the General Association by persons of tender conscience, and enforcing the same, and also for amending the militia ordinance passed at the last session of this Congress."

"An Ordinance for exempting persons who enlist in the service of the united colonies from arrest."

"An Ordinance for striking the sum of fifty thousand pounds, five shillings, in bills of credit, for the purpose therein mentioned, and directing the manner of sinking the same."

"An Ordinance to prevent persons deserting places in danger of being attacked, and for restraining such as are dangerous to the common cause from taking refuge in this colony."

"An Ordinance for directing the mode and fixing the time for the election of deputies to serve in Provincial Congress for this colony, and also to ascertain the qualification of electors."

"An Ordinance for raising two Artillery Companies in New Jersey, and providing for their pay and subsistence."

"An Ordinance for paying a bounty on saltpetre and common salt, manufactured in New Jersey, and for purchasing saltpetre."

"An Ordinance to provide for the payment of incidental charges."

Among the items provided for in the last-named ordinance are such as the following:

"To each of the muster-masters of this colony the sum of twenty-five shillings for every company he has reviewed or shall review by order of this Congress."

"To the door-keeper the sum of five shillings per diem for each day that he hath or shall attend this Congress."

"To Myndert Voorhees the sum of fifteen pounds for firewood and candles, and for the use of his large room during the present sitting of this Congress."

"To John Carey, Esq., as a recompense for his services as secretary during the last sitting of this Congress at Trenton, and for revising and copying the minutes for the press, the sum of eleven pounds four shillings proclamation money."

"To Dr. Moses Scott the sum of one pound sixteen shillings and three pence, in full of his account for attending certain sick soldiers in New Brunswick."

"To Robert Drummond, Esq., the sum of nine pounds three shillings and four pence, in full of his account for removing the treasury and records in the secretary's office at Perth Amboy to New Brunswick."

"To John Dennis, Esq., the sum of seven pounds eight shillings and three pence for sundry expenditures as per account."

"To Elias Cook, Esq., the sum of one pound six shillings and eight pence, in full of his account for removing the records in the surveyor-general's office at Perth Amboy to New Brunswick."

"To Azariah Dunham, Esq., the sum of two pounds for his expenses in going to and returning from Philadelphia on a message to the Hon. Continental Congress."

"To Abraham Clark, Esq., for copying and correcting the minutes and ordinances of this session for the press, such sum as Azariah Dunham and John Dennis, Esqs., shall agree to be paid for that service."

The first election held under the ordinance extending the right of franchise to all persons of full age, whether freeholders or not, who had resided one year in the county, and was worth fifty pounds proclamation money in personal estate, and had signed the articles of association, took place on the fourth Monday in May, 1776. The names of the deputies chosen were the following, with the names of their respective counties:

Bergen.—John Demarest, Jacobus Post, John Van Boskirk, Jacob Quackenbush, Daniel Isaac Brown.

Essex.—Stephen Crane, Abraham Clark, Lewis Ogden, Caleb Camp, Robert Drummond.

Morris.—Silas Condict, Jacob Drake, Elias Cook, William Woodhull, Jacob Green.

Sussex.—Ephraim Martin, Casper Shaver (Shafer), Thomas Potts, Isaac Van Campen, John Cleves Symmes.

Somerset.—Frederick Frelinghuysen, William Paterson, John Witherspoon, Jacob R. Hardenbergh, James Linn.

Middlesex.—Moses Bloomfield, John Wetherill, John Dunn, Jonathan D. Sergeant, John Combs.

Monmouth.—Edward Taylor, John Covenhoven, Joseph Holmes, James Mott, Josiah Holmes.

Hunterdon.—Philemon Dickerson, John Allen, Samuel Tucker, John Hart, John Mehelm.

Burlington.—Peter Tallman, Thomas Reynolds, Thomas Fennimore, Charles Read, Caleb Shreve.

Gloucester.—John Sparks, John Cooper, Elijah Clark, Joseph Hugg, Joseph Ellis.

Salem.—Andrew Sinnickson, John Holme, Joseph Shinn, Whitten Crips, Samuel Dick.

Cumberland.—Theophilus Elmer, Jonathan Ayers, Ephraim Harris, John Buck, Jonathan Bowen.

Cape May.—Elijah Hughes, Jesse Hand, Thomas Leaming, Jr., Joseph Savage, Hugh Hathorn.

This body of men composed the Congress which convened at Burlington on Monday, June 10, 1776, and continued by adjournments to Trenton and New Brunswick to hold its sessions until the 21st of August following. The most important acts of this Congress were the deposing of Governor Franklin and the adoption of the first constitution of New Jersey. The series of resolutions touching the case of Governor Franklin was begun by the introduction of the following on Friday, June 14, 1776:

"1. Resolved, That in the opinion of this Congress the proclamation of William Franklin, Esquire, late Governor of New Jersey, bearing date on the thirtieth day of May last, in the name of the king of Great Britain, appointing a meeting of the General Assembly to be held on the twentieth of this instant, June, ought not to be obeyed."

The above resolution passed as follows:

Yeas, 38.—Mr. A. Clark, Mr. Condict, Mr. Drake, Mr. Cook, Mr. Woodhull, Mr. Green, Mr. Frelinghuysen, Mr. Paterson, Dr. Witherspoon, Mr. Hardenbergh, Mr. Linn, Mr. Hart, Mr. Mehelm, Mr. Covenhoven, Mr. Mott, Mr. Sparks, Mr. Cooper, Mr. E. Clark, Mr. Hugg, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Elmer, Mr. Ayers, Mr. Harris, Mr. Bowen, Mr. Hand, Mr. Leaming, Mr. Hathorn, Dr. Bloomfield, Mr. Wetherill, Mr. Dunn, Mr. Sergeant, Mr. Combs, Mr. Martin, Mr. Shaver, Mr. Van Campen, Mr. Symmes, Mr. Sinnickson, Mr. John Holme.

Nays, 11.—Mr. Drummond, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Allen, Mr. Joseph Holmes, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Savage, Mr. Demarest, Mr. Post, Mr. Van Boskirk, Mr. Brown, Mr. Potts.

It will be seen that all the members from Middlesex voted in the affirmative.

The discussion and passage of this resolution occupied all day Friday, from 8 o'clock A.M. to the hour of adjournment. The first thing on reconvening at 8 A.M. on Saturday was the reading of a petition of sundry inhabitants of the North Ward of the city of Perth Amboy and inhabitants of the township of Shrewsbury, in Monmouth County, praying that the government of the Province of New Jersey may not be changed. A respectful hearing was given to these petitions, but they did not affect in the least the action of the Congress. Resolution No. 2 was then introduced, viz.:

"2. Resolved, That in the opinion of this Congress, the said William Franklin, Esquire, by such proclamation has acted in direct contempt and violation of the resolve of the Continental Congress of the fifteenth day of May last."

The vote on this resolution being taken, stood as follows:

Yeas.—A. Clark, Condict, Drake, Cook, Woodhull, Green, Frelinghuysen, Paterson, Witherspoon, Hardenbergh, Linn, Hart, Mehelm, Covenhoven, Mott, Josiah Holmes, Elijah Clark, Sparks, Cooper, Hugg, Ellis, Elmer, Harris, Bowen, Hand, Leaming, Hathorn, Bloomfield, Wetherill, Dunn, Sergeant, Combs, Demarest, Post, Quackenbush, Martin, Shaver, Van Campen, Symmes, Sinnickson, Holme, 41—a gain of three over the last vote on the affirmative, Messrs. Demarest and Post changing their votes from the negative, Mr. Ayers not voting, and Mr. Quackenbush and Josiah Holmes being new members.

Nays.—Drummond, Dickinson, Allen, Jos. Holmes, Hughes, Savage, Van Boskirk, Brown, Potts, Taylor, the latter being the member from Monmouth not present when the first vote was taken, or at least not recorded among the first voters. It is probable that this member came in on Saturday, bringing the petition against the change of the government, signed by numerous citizens of his county, and that he was pledged to his constituents to vote against the censure and removal of Franklin; at all events, he voted in that way upon the second, third, and fourth resolutions. The following are the two other resolutions adopted by the Congress:

"3. Resolved, That in the opinion of this Congress the said William Franklin, Esquire, has discovered himself to be an enemy to the liberties of this country, and that measures ought to be immediately taken for securing the person of the said William Franklin, Esquire."

The yeas and nays on this resolution were the same as on the last, except that Savage voted in the affirmative and Post in the negative, the numbers being still the same on both sides.

"4. Resolved, That in the opinion of this Congress all payment of money on account of salary or otherwise to the said William Franklin, Esquire, as Governor, ought from henceforth to cease; and that the treasurers of this province shall account for the money in their hands to this Congress, or to the future Legislature of this Colony."

On taking the vote upon this last resolution it was found that the nays had diminished to three, viz.: Allen, Brown, and Potts.

It is evident from the wording of the last resolution that the members of the Congress considered their mission only provisional. They had assumed extraordinary powers, the exercise of the functions of government while a government authorized by the king existed, and resistance to which was high treason, for which every one of them would have suffered death in the event of failure. But they made it high treason to resist their government, which they put in place of that of the king and his loyal representative, "William Franklin, Esq." It is evident that they only regarded their work as that of providing for the exigencies of the colony until a constitution and better system of government could be adopted. Hence they speak of "the future Legislature of this Colony" in anticipation of the work that was to be accomplished in less than three weeks from the date of the passage of these resolutions.

The resolutions were carried into effect under the following order, approved June 15, 1776:

"Resolved, That the following order do issue to Colonel Nathaniel Heard, of the first Battalion of Middlesex County:

"THE Provincial Congress of New Jersey, reposing great confidence in your zeal and prudence, have thought fit to entrust to your care the execution of the enclosed resolves. It is the desire of Congress that this necessary business be conducted with all the delicacy and tenderness which the nature of the business can possibly admit. For this end you will find among the papers the form of a written parole, in which there is left a blank space for you to fill up, at the choice of Mr. Franklin, with the name of Princeton, Bordentown, or his own farm at Rancocas. When he shall have signed the parole, the Congress will rely upon his honour for the faithful performance of his engagements; but should he refuse to sign the parole, you are desired to put him under strong guard, and keep him in close custody until the further order of this Congress. Whatever expense may be necessary for this service will be cheerfully defrayed by the Congress. We refer to your discretion what means to use for that purpose, and you have full power and authority to take to your aid whatever force you may require."

Col. Heard, in obedience to this instruction, waited upon Governor Franklin at his residence in Perth Amboy, and read to him the parole, which he absolutely refused to sign, and forbade the colonel at his peril to carry the order into execution. The colonel then placed a guard of about sixty men around the Governor's house, and reported to the Provincial Congress at Burlington. That body immediately sent Col. Heard the following order:

"Sir: It is the desire of Congress that you immediately bring William Franklin, Esquire, to this place, under such guard as you may think sufficient."

Being brought before the Provincial Congress, "to be examined touching such portions of his conduct as were deemed inimical to the liberties of America, Mr. Franklin refused to answer the questions put to him, denying the authority of this body, which he alleged had usurped the king's government in this province." It was thereupon resolved that the said William Franklin be confined in such place and manner as the honorable the Continental Congress shall direct.

Upon the same day that the symbol of British authority was thus deposited in the person of the royal Governor, the Congress of New Jersey, in pursuance of a special order, went into the consideration of the propriety of forming a State government, agreeably to the recommendation of the Continental Congress, which had been passed on the 15th of May preceding. The vote in favor of the proposition was almost unanimous, only Messrs. Allen, Taylor, and Brown voting in the negative.

June 27, at eight o'clock A.M., the Congress resolved itself into a committee of the whole, and Mr. Covenhoven being in the chair, took under consideration the draft of a constitution. It was voted that twenty of the members of this Congress be a quorum sufficient to transact any business except such as may respect the formation of the constitution, that required the committee of the whole. On Tuesday, the second day of July, the draft of the constitution was reported, and after full discussion and sundry amendments was ordered accepted and printed.

In order to "prevent the failure of justice" pending the organization of government under the constitution, it was resolved that all judges, justices of the peace, sheriffs, coroners, and other inferior officers of the late government within this colony proceed in the execution of their several offices under the authority of the people until the intended Legislature and the several officers of the new government be settled and perfected, having respect to the present constitution of New Jersey as by the Congress of late ordained, and the orders of the Continental and Provincial Congresses; and that all actions, suits, and processes be continued, altering only the style and form thereof, according to the terms of the said constitution prescribed, in the further prosecution thereof."

Thus by the efficient action and wise management of the Provincial Congress the chasm was entirely bridged over from the king to the people, from a dependent colony subject to the royal pleasure to an independent, sovereign State. This had been done in a little over two years from the first meeting of the Congress at Trenton, 23d of May, 1775, and this body had, during the same time, carried the colony through the most critical period of its history—furnishing it with all needed guidance and direction to meet every emergency. Scarcely can we find in history a body of men deserving more credit for their practical wisdom, their energy, their firmness in holding on to the great principles of free government amidst circumstances the most discouraging.

Hendrick Fisher, Esq., was the first president of the Congress, and served in that capacity till Oct. 4, 1775, when Samuel Tucker was chosen president, and Hendrick Fisher vice-president. Samuel Tucker remained president until the Congress finally adjourned. Jonathan D. Sergeant, Esq., was the first secretary, with William Paterson and Frederick Frelinghuysen, assistants. William Paterson was made secretary Oct. 5, 1775, and was succeeded by John Carey; William Paterson again from February, 1776, to the close of the Congress.

Speaking of the services of this body, Mr. Deshler says,—

"It is impossible for us duly to estimate the value of the services of these wise, indefatigable, and courageous men. It is utterly beyond the scope or the power of our vision, accustomed as it is to an atmosphere whose skies are golden with peace and prosperity, to descry the cloud of gloom and apprehension that enveloped our State one hundred years ago. But though we may not see this murky and lowering cloud, we may yet hear a faint echo coming to us over the chasm of these hundred years, coming from the lips of the brave and patriotic men whose deliberations we have been pondering this evening. It was one of their latest utterances, made by them to this our own city, and published to the people of New Jersey in an ordinance organizing the militia. It was an appeal to our people to choose between freedom and servitude. Let us listen reverently to it, and let it sink deep into our hearts, inciting us to hold fast with unyielding grasp the liberties they secured for us. 'In this interesting situation,' they said, as they contemplated the storm of war that was rolling rapidly toward them, and called upon the people to enroll for the common defense, 'in this interesting situation, viewing on the one hand an active, inveterate, and implacable enemy, increasing fast in strength, daily receiving large reinforcements, and industriously preparing to strike some decisive blow; on the other, a considerable part of the inhabitants supinely slumbering on the brink of ruin, moved with affecting apprehensions, the Convention think it incumbent upon them to warn their constituents of the impending danger. On you, our friends and brethren, it depends this day to determine whether you, your wives, your children, and millions of your descendants yet unborn shall wear the galling, the ignominious yoke of slavery, or nobly inherit the generous, the inestimable blessings of freedom. The alternative is before you. Can you hesitate in your choice? Can you doubt which you prefer? Say! Will you be slaves? Will you toil and labor and grieve together a little property merely that it may be at the disposal of a relentless and rapacious conqueror? Will you, of choice, become hewers of wood and drawers of water? Impossible! You cannot be so amazingly degenerate as to lick the hand that is raised to shed your blood! Nature and nature's God have made you free! Liberty is the birthright of Americans. The gift is of heaven! And the instant it is forced from you, you take leave of everything valuable on earth. Your happiness or misery, virtuous independence or indignant servitude hang trembling in the balance. Happily, we know we can anticipate your virtuous choice. With confident satisfaction we are assured that not a moment will delay your important decision—that you cannot feel hesitation whether you will tamely and degenerately bend your necks to the irretrievable wretchedness of slavery, or, by your instant and animated exertions, enjoy the fair inheritance of heaven-born freedom, and transmit it unimpaired to your posterity!'"

COL. JOHN NEILSON, a member from New Jersey of the Continental Congress of 1778, was born at Raritan Landing, near New Brunswick, on the 11th of March, 1745. His father, John Neilson, M.D., had recently removed to this country from Belfast, Ireland, with his brother, James Neilson, who settled at New Brunswick as a shipping merchant and shipowner. His vessels traded with Belfast, Lisbon, Madeira, and the West India Islands.

The south half of the house on Burnet Street below Green Hall, still in the possession of the family, was built by him. He also owned lands on Sonnan's Hill, now owned by Mr. Jacob S. Carpenter, and also the mills and water-rights on Lawrence Brook, now the city water-works. James Neilson was also the presiding judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Middlesex County.

Dr. Neilson married Joanna, daughter of Andrew Coeymans, who came from Holland with his mother, the widow of Andreas Coeymans, and settled on the Hudson on Coeyman's patent, afterwards removing to Raritan, or Raritan Landing, N. J. Dr. Neilson died in 1745, in consequence of an accident, and while a young man.

His only son, the subject of this sketch, was married Dec. 31, 1768, to Catharine Voorheese, daughter of John Voorheese, who owned and lived on lands now the College Farm, including the site on which James Neilson, their son, some sixty years ago, built the house now in the possession of his widow and son. John Neilson settled at New Brunswick with his uncle as a shipping merchant, and succeeded to his business. In those days New Brunswick was the market and shipping-point for a large section which has since found various outlets by rail and canal.

The commercial importance of the city at this early date appears from a letter of James Alexander to ex-Governor Hunter in 1731, in which he asserts "that a lot of ground there is grown to near as great a price as so much ground in the heart of New York." In a previous letter the same year he says, "Plantations north of the Raritan have risen extravagantly high, even to three, four, and five pounds per acre." He had refused twelve hundred pounds for five hundred acres of improved land south of the Raritan, belonging to Governor Hunter. The small sea-going vessels of that day sailed up the Raritan directly to New Brunswick. As has always been the case, wealth and intelligence followed in the track of commerce. New Brunswick rapidly became a flourishing town, and among its inhabitants were to be found a large proportion of men of note in the State and nation.

At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war with Great Britain, John Neilson, "bitterly resenting," to use his own words, "the attempt of a venal Parliament, bought by an oppressive ministry, to tax his country," threw himself with energy into the struggle, reminding his fellow-citizens "that the only alternative was victory or slavery." He raised a company of militia, was appointed their captain, and was soon called into service to the east end of Long Island, under command of Gen. Heard, for the purpose of disarming the Tories there. On Aug. 31, 1775, he was appointed colonel of the battalion of minute-men in the county of Middlesex, and was commissioned by the Provincial Congress of New Jersey. His commission was signed by Hendrick Fisher, president. A draft of an address made by him on assuming command remains among his papers, and reveals a man who had thrown his whole soul into the struggle, with a thorough appreciation of the merits of the contest, and must have awakened a spirit of enthusiasm among his hearers.

Such was the public appreciation of Col. Neilson's ability and patriotism that he was urged early in 1776 to take a seat in the Continental Congress of that year, which was to consider the grave measure of the declaration of independence. His presence in the State was, however, considered so necessary that he was led to decline the honor.

A copy of the Declaration was sent him by Congress, as the man whose patriotism and influence would be most likely to secure it a favorable reception in his part of the State. A meeting, which comprised a large portion of the inhabitants of the neighborhood, was held on the public streets of New Brunswick to hear it read, and a violent opposition was feared; but Col. Neilson, fearless of personal danger, read the instrument to the people, and at its conclusion was greeted with loud cheers by so great a majority that the opponents of the measure did not dare to avow themselves.

John Neilson

During the dark and gloomy days of 1776, when Washington's army was reduced to a mere handful, and his country's cause was trembling in the balance, Col. Neilson was bending every energy to its service. He devoted himself to recruiting, the most important service, perhaps, of the time, infusing his own patriotic spirit into his countrymen, was employed in guarding the State from the incursions of the British, cutting off their supplies, and otherwise harassing them.

Appointed colonel of the Second Regiment Middlesex militia Aug. 1, 1776, in September and October he served in command of his own regiment and of the Middlesex militia on the lines in Essex and Bergen Counties.

In December he retired with the army under Gen. Washington to the west bank of the Delaware, with Lieut.-Col. Taylor and Maj. Van Emburgh, field-officers of his regiment, and Col. Frelinghuysen, and others of the Somerset militia, all of whom joined the army as volunteers.

On the 31st of December, Gen. Washington issued an order directing Col. Neilson, with the militia officers before mentioned, to proceed into New Jersey, and use their exertions to call together and embody the militia of the State.

The efforts of these and a few other brave men at this critical time, and the patriotic response of the State militia, made possible the victories of Trenton, Princeton, and Monmouth, which turned the scale from deep despondency, and finally resulted in the establishment of American independence.

On Feb. 18, 1777, with a detachment of his regiment, he surprised and captured every man of an outpost of refugees stockaded on Bennett's Island, or Lawrence's Neck, now known as the Island Farm, about three miles below New Brunswick on the river, without firing a gun. The colonel and his kinsman, Capt. Farmer, both powerful men, seized the sentinels and bound them before they could give the alarm. In acknowledgment of his services he was appointed brigadier-general of militia, Feb. 21, 1777.

During the winter of 1777 the British troops had gone into winter-quarters at New Brunswick, Lord Howe making his headquarters at Col. Neilson's house in Burnet Street, which building remains in the possession of his grandchildren. An old sycamore-tree, now some four feet in diameter, from which the British flag then floated, still flourishes in front of the door.

In the months of September, October, and November, 1777, the colonel was in service on the lines at Elizabethtown, with the militia of Middlesex and Somerset Counties. In June and July, 1778, he served in Monmouth County, being part of the time under command of Gen. Dickerson, and a part holding a separate command.

On Nov. 6, 1778, he was chosen by the Assembly and Council of the State a delegate to the Continental Congress, together with Witherspoon, Scudder, Frelinghuysen, and Fell, but again his services could not be spared from the State for the length of time required for this service, so that he never took his seat.

In January and February, 1778, he served as a delegate from this State, together with John Cleves Symmes and Moore Furman, to meet delegates from the Middle and Eastern States at New Haven, on the recommendation of Congress, to devise, if possible, some means of arresting the alarming depreciation of the currency.

In the spring and summer of 1779 he commanded the militia on the lines at Elizabethtown and Newark, and on the 20th of September, 1780, he was appointed deputy quartermaster-general for the State of New Jersey. This position threw upon him great responsibility, while the State frequently failed to provide for the support of the army either by taxes or loans. The currency was depreciated, and forage, food, clothing, and transportation was at best hard to be obtained. He continued in this position until the close of the war.

On the 18th of June, 1782, he was appointed, with W. Houston and James Ewing, commissioners to settle the remaining account of depreciation in the money value of their pay with the New Jersey line, thus closing his useful and honorable Revolutionary career.

Col. Neilson enjoyed the confidence and friendship of Washington, Lafayette, Governor Livingston, and indeed of all with whom he was associated who were inspired with the same lofty purpose.

Lafayette, in evidence of his appreciation, presented him with a sword, and during his visit to this country in 1824 called on him and evinced the warmest pleasure at seeing him again.

While the British occupied New Brunswick, Mrs. Neilson was at Morristown with the army. Her seat at table was next Gen. and Mrs. Washington.

After the war, Washington never passed through New Brunswick without calling on Col. Neilson.

So well assured were the enemy of the importance of the colonel's influence and exertions to the American cause that many attempts were made to seize his person. His popularity was the means of preserving him from these attempts, as he always received sufficient notice from some one of his numerous friends to enable him to escape.

At the close of the war he succeeded to the property and business of his uncle, James Neilson, to whom reference has been made and by whom he had been adopted, and carried on an extensive trade with Lisbon, Madeira, and the West India Islands.

He was still called upon for services to the public, being a delegate from his county to the State Convention called to consider the adoption of the present Constitution of the United States. Of the forty members of that convention he was the last survivor.

In 1790 and 1791 he was appointed by act of the Legislature one of the commissioners to build bridges over the Hackensack, Passaic, and Raritan Rivers. The names of John Bayard, Andrew Kirkpatrick, Dr. Lewis Dunham, Jacob R. Hardenbergh, and others were included in the same service.

In 1800 and 1801 he was a member of the Assembly, where, as usual, he took a prominent part.

Throughout his life he was an active and devout member of the Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick, also an elder and trustee. He remained clerk of the session for fifty years, which position, together with that of president of the board of trustees, he held to the end of his life. His death, which occurred on the 3d of March, 1833, in his eighty-eighth year, was regarded as a public loss. Business was suspended on the occasion of the funeral, and the long procession of citizens who followed his remains to their last resting-place gave evidence of the affectionate regard with which his memory was cherished.

The Common Council of the city adopted resolutions which but reflected the public appreciation of his high character; referring to his services in the field and his virtues as a man, they testified to his daily life as the walk of a consistent and humble Christian, eminently worthy of all commendation.

The title of colonel has been used throughout this sketch as that by which he was familiarly known by his family and townsmen. He was entitled to that of brigadier-general.

JAMES NEILSON, son of Col. John Neilson, was born at New Brunswick in December, 1784, just after the close of the Revolution. He inherited from his parents a strong love of his country, his State, and his native town. As a young man he was engaged in the shipping business with his father, and later with his brother, A. S. Neilson.

During the war of 1812 he raised a company, was elected their captain, and was stationed at Sandy Hook, in expectation of the landing of the British forces. He was afterwards commissioned colonel of the State militia.

He was greatly interested in the public works of the State, and was recognized as the prime mover in the organization of the Delaware and Raritan Canal Company. He was the treasurer of that company from its organization until 1852, and continued a director and member of the executive committee of the joint canal and railroad companies until his death in 1862.

Mr. Neilson perceived at an early day that the commercial importance of New Brunswick could not continue, and failing to interest others, he, together with Commodore R. F. Stockton, organized the New Brunswick Manufacturing Company about 1845, and built a mill for the manufacture of print cloths, which concern was merged after his death in the Norfolk and New Brunswick Hosiery Company, and which at present contributes to the prosperity of the city by furnishing employment to one thousand people.

Mr. Neilson took the same interest in the Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick as did his father. He became a member, was generous in his gifts, and continued president of the trustees until his death. As a business man he was liberal as well as successful. He recognized that business transactions should be for the advantage of both parties. He was a trustee of Rutgers College and of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Princeton.

CHAPTER LXVI.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY IN THE REVOLUTION.—

(Continued.)

Condition of Affairs in 1776.—The latter part of the year 1776, which witnessed the occupation of New Brunswick and the country adjoining by the British, was the darkest hour of the war of the Revolution. No aid had been received as yet from France, and as yet was scarcely hoped for. A portion of the people sympathized with the invaders; and the patriots were everywhere exposed to their bitter hatred or despicable cupidity, and were kept in constant dread of their treachery. Neighbor suspected neighbor, friend distrusted friend, and even fathers and sons ranged on opposite sides. Trade and industry were paralyzed. The husbandman hesitated to plow his fields or plant a crop; or, if he did so, confined his labors to the production merely of what was absolutely necessary for the bare subsistence of his family. The precious metals had vanished from the land as the armies of the king swept triumphantly along; and the paper money had little more value than the brown forest-leaves of that bitter autumn. The means of the patriots were almost exhausted, and their hope was well-nigh extinguished. They had responded again and again to the calls for men and other material aid, until none but old men and women and children remained at home; and their houses and garners were gleaned of every superfluity, and even of the necessities of life.

An illustration is furnished of the doubt and suspicion which prevailed, and of the summary methods that were resorted to by the patriots to intimidate the disaffected Tories, in a letter written at the time by a British officer to a friend in England. "Everything," he says, "is transacted by the Committee,¹ which is composed of barbers, tailors, cordwainers, etc., whose pertness and insolence would raise any Englishman's indignation, for the better sort endeavor to keep their own necks out of the halter, and make use of these fellows only as catspaws. One of our friends had got several thousand in the back country brought over to our interests; but about a month ago a mob of about 100 dissolute fellows surrounded his house, with an intention to tar and feather him, upon which he came out armed, and while he was reasoning the case with them at the door he was knocked down with the butt end of a musket, then laid like a calf across a horse, and tied to a tree, while yet insensible, and tarred and feathered."²

¹ From a historical paper by Charles D. Deshler.

Another instance is related by another British correspondent, who quotes from a "rebel newspaper," as follows:

"At Quilbectown, Middlesex Co., N. J., Thomas Randolph, cooper, who had publicly proved himself an enemy to his country by reviling and using his utmost endeavors to oppose the proceedings of the Continental and Provincial conventions and committees in defence of their rights and liberties, and he being judged a person of not consequence enough for a severer punishment, was ordered to be stripped naked, well coated with tar and feathers, and carried in a wagon publicly round the town, which punishment was accordingly inflicted; and as he soon became duly sensible of his offence, for which he earnestly begged pardon, and promised to atone as far as he was able by a contrary behavior for the future, he was released and suffered to return to his house in less than half an hour. The whole was conducted with that regularity and decorum that ought to be observed in all public punishment."³

A glimpse is afforded of a still different form of "public punishment" inflicted by the patriots on their Tory neighbors in a letter from an officer in the British army to his friends in England, to whom he writes under date of Aug. 17, 1776: "The persecution of the loyalists continues unremitting. Donald Maclean, Theophilus Hardenbrook, Young Feuter, the Silversmith, and Rem Rappalge have been cruelly rode on rails, a practice most painful, dangerous, and peculiar."⁴ Even the boys shared the sympathies and antipathies of their fathers, forming themselves into bands for "liberty" on the one side and the "king" on the other, resulting in innumerable blackened eyes and broken heads. I have heard my grandfather, the late Jacob Dunham, M.D., of New Brunswick, relate that when he was a lad eight or ten years old and went to school in that city, his preceptor, much to the disgust of the great body of the scholars, was an ardent loyalist, and outspoken in his disapproval of the "irregular" proceedings of the Whigs. The boys determined upon a "public punishment" suitable to school-boy ideas. Overawing into silence a few of their comrades who sympathized with the teacher, they prepared a large foolscap placard, on which they printed in huge letters the obnoxious word "TORY!!!" Seizing the opportunity of the dismissal of school at noon, they stealthily pinned this upon the master's back, who, unobservant of the trick, walked down the street to his house, followed by the boys marching in procession behind him at a safe distance from his cane, and furtively pointing out to the passers-by the label with which they had adorned him. This school-boy trick led to the dismissal of the preceptor from his position and the breaking up of the school, to the great satisfaction, doubtless, of the youthful patriots.

Unquestionably the Tories had hard lines measured out to them by the Whigs. If persons were known or suspected to be "disaffected," to have "spoken disrespectfully" of the Provincial or Continental Congress or of the Committee of Safety, to have encouraged opposition to the laws and regulations that were put forth by either of these bodies, or to be engaged in stimulating gatherings or uprisings against the revolutionary authorities, they were promptly reported to the Provincial Congress, or in its recess to the Committee or Council of Safety, when they were speedily arrested, examined, confronted with their accusers (who oftentimes were of their own kin), and if specially malignant or obstinate were confined in jail, or if repentant were required to take the "oath of allegiance," and to give bonds for their behavior. In numerous instances they and their families were summarily driven into the lines of the enemy with whom they sympathized, and their property was either confiscated or suffered to run to waste. I have not discovered an instance, however, where any one of the Tories was deprived of his life, or suffered any further violence than either a "whipping," a coat of tar and feathers, or an unpleasant ride upon a rail. Although an innocent man may have occasionally suffered through the accusations of vindictive personal enemies, in the main there was ample confirmation of the charges brought against them, and they were afforded a fair and full hearing before men who were carefully observant of the rights of others, and of the forms and safeguards of law, and whose decisions appear to have been singularly dispassionate, deliberate, and equitable.

The Tories, on the other hand, retaliated with alacrity whenever they had the opportunity. When the British army made its appearance in a neighborhood they industriously pointed out those who were directly or remotely identified with the party of liberty. They maliciously led them to the spots where the patriots had concealed their property and valuables, and aided them to pillage or destroy them. The most of the foraging parties of the enemy were accompanied or guided by such as these, and nothing escaped the keen scent of their hatred. As was naturally to have been expected, they exhibited intense bitterness, and many of their acts were marked by

¹ Referring to the Committee of Safety.

² Scots' Magazine, 1776.

³ Ibid., for February, 1776.

⁴ Ibid., October, 1776.

meanness, cupidity, cowardice, despicable treachery, and relentless barbarity.

Immediately after the battle of Brooklyn, which was followed by the evacuation of Long Island and the city of New York, the storming of Fort Washington with the loss of its valuable stores and over two thousand men, and the evacuation of Fort Lee (which last event occurred Nov. 18, 1776), the American army retreated across New Jersey, too weak to make a stand at any point, and so completely bereft of all means of defense as to be "without a single intrenching tool."¹ They were rapidly followed by the British so closely that the music of one army was often heard by the other, who spread themselves over the entire central, wealthiest, and most populous portion of the State. On the 28th of November, 1776, Washington retreated, says Marshall,² "to Brunswick, a small village on the Raritan," and on the same day the enemy entered Newark. During the few days that Washington lay at New Brunswick before he was again forced to retire before the invaders a large portion of his army became entitled to their discharge, and it was impossible by any remonstrance to detain them. They abandoned the cause of their country at the hour of its supremest need, and left Washington powerless of all means of offense or defense, and almost so of the ability to flee. He could offer no resistance, and on the 2d of December, 1776, as the British advanced guards showed themselves at the opposite side of the bridge he evacuated New Brunswick, retreating through Princeton to Trenton, and the British occupied the place.³

The gloom which hung over the patriot army, and which in a special manner enveloped all this part of New Jersey, was now at the blackest. No ray of hope penetrated the darkness. The protracted campaign had been marked by rapidly successive disasters. The whole country was in possession of the British soldiery, who insulted and preyed upon the people. The British army was large, well supplied with all the effective means for waging war, and presented a splendid appearance, while the fugitive American army (of whom one-third were Jersey militia) consisted of less than three thousand men, shortly afterward diminished to fifteen hundred, was almost destitute of the commonest munitions of war, was obliged to rely for its bullets upon the lead that could be gleaned from "in and about houses," from "the leaden weights from windows and clocks," and from those used "in shops, stores, and mills," and its men were tentless, shoeless, ragged, squalid, hungry, and lacking even the utensils for dressing their food. At this supreme crisis it was reported, and the report seemed so probable as to be generally believed, that the Continental Congress was about to disperse and to abdicate its powers. Everything seemed lost.

At this juncture Lord Howe, the British commander, issued a proclamation commanding all persons assembled in arms against the British government to disband and return to their homes, ordering all civil officers to relinquish their usurped authority, and offering a FULL PARDON to every person who would within sixty days subscribe a declaration of submission to the royal authority. The proclamation completed the apparent ruin of the patriot cause. Timed, as it was, when everything seemed lost, it was taken advantage of by thousands throughout the State who had hitherto espoused the side of independence more or less warmly, and who now flocked daily to make their peace with the successful representatives of the crown, and to obtain their protection. For ten days after the publication of this proclamation two or three hundred persons a day came in to Lord Howe at New Brunswick to renounce their adhesion to the patriots, and to take the oath of allegiance to the British crown. Among these were Samuel Galloway, a member of the first Continental Congress; Col. George Taylor, of Monmouth, successively colonel of the battalion of "Detached" Militia of Monmouth County and colonel of the First Regiment of Monmouth; and Col. John Dnyckinck, of Middlesex, successively first major of the Second Regiment of Middlesex, major of Col. Samuel Forinan's battalion of "Detached" Militia, lieutenant-colonel of the Second Regiment of Middlesex, and colonel of the Third Regiment of Middlesex. These were all gentlemen of consequence and influence, and their desertion to the enemy produced great despondency. But among all those prominent and influential persons who abandoned the cause at this dark hour the one whose weakness or treachery provoked the profoundest dejection was Samuel Tucker, of Trenton. Representing the body of the people,—he was a cowlainer,—he had early embraced the cause of independence; had been a delegate to the Provincial Congress in the sessions of May, June, August, and October, 1775; was elected its vice-president in May, 1775, and its president in October, 1775, and acted in this latter capacity so near the period of his defection as August, 1776. He had also been one of the Committee of Safety, appointed to act, with extraordinary powers, in the recess of the Provincial Congress, and one of the treasurers of the colony. His defection was a cruel, almost a stupefying, blow. The people felt that their earliest and most trusted leaders were abandoning them, and they knew not who next would follow.

Not only was the gloom impenetrable from these and other causes, but the suffering of the people of Middlesex County was intense and their destitution deplorable. A cold and boisterous winter had set in early and with unusual rigor. Numbers had been forced to flee from their homes at this inclement season, leaving their families without protection and support, and were either in hiding or were wanderers in a desolated country. A hostile army occupied their towns and villages, and harried their farms with oppressive exactions. Their horses and cattle were stolen; their stores of hay, flour, corn, bacon, and provisions were plundered; their houses, churches,¹ stores, mills, barns, and fences were burned or devastated; their household goods were spoliated and carried away; their wives and children were maltreated and insulted, and despoiled of their clothing, rings, trinkets, and even the cradles in which the helpless infant was rocked to sleep. Nowhere was any alleviation of the distress to be found, nor could any prospect of its termination be described. And yet amid all this desolation, rapine, and insult,—and perhaps because of them,—the people of Middlesex and of the town of Brunswick remained steadfast to their apparently ruined cause. Here and there a few whose names are preserved but need not now be repeated became “adherents of the enemy,” as they were then styled; but the great body, almost the entire population of the county, continued unfaltering in their devotion to freedom and independence. The journals of the “Committee of Safety,” and of its successor, the “Council of Safety,” give the names of over one thousand persons in New Jersey who were disaffected and were required to give bonds and take the oath of allegiance to the Revolutionary authorities; and of this number, notwithstanding the overshadowing influence of the British army, which was quartered on the county nearly seven months, only twenty-six were inhabitants of Middlesex County. Besides, it furnished over fifteen hundred soldiers for the State and Continental military establishments. And on a subsequent occasion, when Sir Henry Clinton was about to march through the State, just before the battle of Monmouth, and needed guides for his army, he applied for them to Col. Simcoe, whose “Rangers” were largely made up of refugee Jerseymen. But although that dashing partisan had a book in which he says “was inserted the names of every soldier in his corps, the counties in which they were born, and where they had lived, so that he was seldom at a loss for guides in his own corps,” and although he “had also,” as he tells us, “many refugees with him” outside of those who belonged to his corps, “who served as guides,” he was obliged to reply to Sir Henry that “he had none who knew any of the roads to New Brunswick,” which could not have been the case if he had had any from Middlesex County in his corps.² In addition to this unintentional tribute to the patriotism of the people of Middlesex, on two other occasions Col. Simcoe refers, in his journal,³ to the “vindictive spirit” uniformly exhibited by them towards the British troops, and describes them as “most virulent in their principles,” and as “attacking from their coverts the British foraging parties in 1776, and insulting their very outposts,” adding that they had thus “acquired a great degree of self-confidence and activity.”

¹ Marshall, vol. i. p. 119. ² Ibid., vol. i. p. 121. ³ Ibid., vol. i. p. 121.

The British occupied New Brunswick and its vicinity, including Six-Mile Run, Middlebrush, Piscataway, Woodbridge, and Bonhamton, from Dec. 2, 1776, till June 22, 1777. On the morning of the day last named they retreated by way of Piscataway to Perth Amboy,—“burning many houses as they passed along.”⁴

During their stay they levied severe contributions upon all who espoused or were connected with those who espoused the side of independence, and their outposts and foraging parties pillaged the people without mercy. In retaliation for their “vindictive spirit,” the “virulence of the principles,” and “their activity in attacking the British foraging parties,” to which Col. Simcoe bears testimony, their property was ruthlessly destroyed. Within the brief period of six and a half months the British spoliated over six hundred and fifty persons and burned more than one hundred dwellings, mills, and other buildings within the present limits of Middlesex County, valued at £86 21s. 4d.; and counting eight shillings to the dollar, and considering that one dollar in 1776 was equivalent in purchasing power to three dollars at this day, the loss was equal to $646,605 of our present currency. The proportional loss may be more clearly understood if it is borne in mind that the total population of the county in 1775 was about twelve thousand. If from this number are deducted thirteen hundred negroes and seven hundred adult white males who were not heads of families, the population among whom all this devastation was distributed did not exceed ten thousand, of whom, if we adopt the established average, only one-fifth, or two thousand, were householders. If this estimate be correct one in every three was pillaged, and one in every twenty had a house burned.

In the forays of the enemy the dinner prepared by the family was often ravished from the table by the Hessians, whose avidity for plunder and brutal outrage drew upon them the execrations of the people. No respect was paid to age or sex, and even articles of female wear, indeed everything, however minute, which had any value were swept into the capacious maw of these rapacious mercenaries. Again and again our ancestors were required to furnish provisions for large parties of Hessians and forage for their horses, and the demand was enforced at the point of the bayonet. On one occasion thirty Hessians imposed themselves upon a single family at Woodbridge⁵ and demanded breakfast and supper; the cowardly plunderers usurped the seats of the family at the table,

¹ The British spoliated six churches in Middlesex County, viz.: “The Dutch Reformed Church at New Brunswick, £300; Christ Church of New Brunswick, £40 15s.; St. James’ Church in Piscataway, £110 16s. 9d.; the Presbyterian Meeting-House at New Brunswick, £400; the Princeton Meeting-House, £160 4s. 2d.; and the Congregation of Metuchen, £14 5s.”

² Simcoe’s Journal, p. 66.

³ Pp. 109 and 316.

⁴ Marshall, vol. i.

⁵ See inventory of damages in Middlesex, p. 248.

forced them to wait upon them, and not content with this indignity drank or stole twenty gallons of rum, five gallons of brandy, and a barrel of cider, which the good man of the house had stored in his cellar in brighter days, and when they decamped they robbed his wife of her stockings and the blankets from their beds, broke his doors and windows, and drove off three cows and his "fine 8 year old Mare." Nor was this a solitary instance. Such outrages were of daily occurrence among the people of Middlesex, who were thus welded by fire and rapine into "vindictive" patriots, whom no adversity could subdue and no disasters could entirely dishearten.

Damages by the British.—The foregoing view of the condition of affairs in Middlesex County in 1776 is presented as a suitable introduction to a description of an interesting relic of the Revolutionary war, from which many of the facts related have been drawn, to which public attention has never been directed hitherto, and which affords us a close view of the social surroundings of our ancestors. This relic is a record of the "Damages done by the British and their Adherents to the Inhabitants of Middlesex County" during the Revolutionary war, and is preserved in the State Library at Trenton. It is in the form of a bound folio manuscript volume, of between three and four hundred pages, and contains the inventories of over six hundred and fifty persons whose property was plundered or destroyed by the British between 1776 and 1782, but mainly in 1776 and 1777. Each inventory is entered in detail in this volume, with the valuation of every article, and is certified to under oath or affirmation by the person damaged or his representative before one of the appraisers appointed by the State for the purpose.

The authority for these inventories is to be found in an act of the Legislature, originally offered March 8, 1780, when it was lost, which was finally passed Dec. 20, 1781, and they were made, as the preamble recites, in the expectation that the losses would be reimbursed by the State, as they were afterwards in some of the other colonies. In New Jersey they never were reimbursed, and the only fruit of the labor has been to preserve a record of the injuries sustained by our ancestors, and to present a vivid picture of their sufferings, their social surroundings, furniture, dress, etc.

This act provided that two separate registers of inventories should be made, the one being of the property damaged or destroyed by the "enemy and their adherents," and the other of the property damaged or destroyed by the "Continental army, or by the militia of this or of the neighboring States;" that the appraisers were to value and appraise the articles inventoried at the prices current at the opening of the war in 1775; that the inventories were to be certified to by oath or affirmation; that nothing was to be admitted in the inventories for which any restitution had been made or satisfaction received; that no inventory was to be received from persons who were of a suspicious character, or who failed to substantiate that they had been friends of the government established under the authority of the people; that forged or feigned inventories would render the utterers liable to severe penalties; that the losses sustained by privateers or vessels of war, merchant ships or trading vessels, their tackle, furniture, or cargo from the enemy were not to be admitted to be inventoried; and that the appraisers were each to receive as compensation for their services "seven shillings and sixpence by the day," and "nine pence per sheet" of ninety words for registering the inventories and vouchers.

The volume of records now under consideration is the one which relates to the damages done by the "enemy and their adherents,"¹ and the appraisers appointed by the act for Middlesex (Benjamin Manning, Joseph Olden, and Nathaniel Hunt) faithfully performed the duties assigned to them. They were all gentlemen of consideration, and noted for probity and patriotism. Benjamin Manning resided in Piscataway, and was one of the delegates to the Assembly from Middlesex from 1778 till 1785. Joseph Olden resided in Windsor township, near Princeton, and was a grand-uncle of ex-Governor Charles S. Olden. Nathaniel Hunt also resided in one of the Windsors, and early in the war served as colonel of the Second Regiment of militia of Hunterdon County.

In conformity with the act the inventories that were presented were sworn to by the claimants before one of the appraisers, the usual form of the affidavit being as follows: "Edward Van Harlingen declares on oath that the above inventory is just and true to the best of his Knowledge. That he has not received any satisfaction for any of the articles therein contained. And that he hath good reason to believe that the above articles were taken, carried off, and destroyed by the enemy." When personal property only had been plundered or destroyed, the oath of the party injured alone, or of his representatives if dead, was taken in the above form. When a claim was made for real property burnt or damaged, in addition to the oath of the claimant, an additional oath was required from one or more carpenters who had "viewed" the premises and estimated the loss, and was commonly in this form: "Joseph Vickers and John Voorhees, being carpenters, declare on their oaths, that they knew the buildings of Gette Voorhees, widow, which were destroyed by the Enemy, and also do adjudge the damages to the amount of £235 to the best of their knowledge." Ordinarily, when several buildings were destroyed, the affidavit of the experts contained a detailed valuation, as follows: "Isaac Cotheal, being a Carpenter, declares on Oath that he Knew the buildings of James Colyer as destroyed by the Enemy, and Judge the value of them as follows, to wit,—Crist-Mill, £200; Saw-Mill, £50; House, Slaughter- do, & Smith Shop, £30; and y^e other House and Barn, £110." If a building was only partially damaged the form varied as follows: "Joseph Vickers being sworn saith that he in conjunction with John Voorhees, being called upon to view the damages done the buildings of the Rev^d Johannes Light, and having viewed the same, do adjudge the said damages done to said buildings to y^e am^t of £19.0. to the best of their Knowledge." Where woodland was destroyed a third person was called upon to estimate the loss, and his affidavit was annexed in this form: "John French being sworn saith that he Knew the Timber land of James Richmond as above mentioned, which was destroyed by the Enemy, and do judge the said damages was worth £160.0. to the best of his Knowledge." When valuable horses were inventoried, the oath of the claimant was supplemented by the affidavit of a neighbor, which was almost invariably in the curious form following: "John Bennet declares on oath that he was knowing to the Enemies taking and destroying the articles contained in the above inventory of Barent Stryker. And that he personally Knew the said horse (or mare), and do adjudge he was worth £15."

¹ I have examined the record of the "property damaged or destroyed by the Continental army or by the militia," etc., in New Jersey. The entire record is contained in one small volume, which is preserved in the State Library. The counties from which there are returns are Bergen, Morris, Essex, Somerset, and Burlington. No damages seem to have been committed in Middlesex by our armies, for the reason probably that their operations were principally confined to the hilly portion of the State lying to the north, and also because the British had so completely stripped the people of Middlesex as to leave nothing worth taking for the patriot troops.

Some of the affidavits annexed to these inventories reveal very interesting facts illustrating the events of that period, and afford glimpses of the personal fortunes of our ancestors, showing the straits to which they were often reduced, and presenting brief but vivid pictures of the dismay which attended the incursions of the British marauders. For example: On the approach of the British to New Brunswick in 1776, John Dennis, who was a wealthy merchant and an active patriot (having been a delegate to the Provincial Congress for Middlesex County in 1775, a member of the first Committee of Safety, and one of the commissioners for emitting and signing the colonial bills of credit), distributed a large part of his property among various persons in the town and country adjacent, in the hope that it might thus escape the notice of the enemy. Among other things, he sent "sundry trunks, barrels," etc., containing valuable goods, to the farm-houses of Jeremiah and John Field in Piscataway township, who secreted a part in their cellars and barns, and a part they buried under a stack of buckwheat; but the enemy, guided by some sure intelligencer, discovered and plundered or destroyed the whole. Mr. Dennis presented ten different inventories of as many separate lots, recording very heavy damages to his property left in the town as well as to that stored in different places. He was also the owner, or part owner, of a number of vessels which were carried off by the enemy. One of these was a sloop named the "Cluster Valle," another was the sloop "Mary and Elizabeth," and another the schooner "General Lee." They all had considerable cargoes, which shared the fate of the vessels. Each of these ten inventories has a separate affidavit annexed. In one of these Mr. Dennis "and his wife Mary" make oath that they left their house in New Brunswick on the 1st day of December, 1776, "when the enemy was on the other side of the river." In another he declares that he "locked up his store-house" in New Brunswick "at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 1st of December," and that the enemy "took possession of said store-house at near twelve o'clock the next day." In this inventory Mr. Dennis records the loss of a great quantity of wine; and Joseph Robinson (of whom a further record appears elsewhere in this paper) certifies as a witness that he "knew numbers of pipes" were in the store-house, and, further, that "he was in the Store-house when the wine was almost over his shoes on the floor, when he saw the Enemy take some of the hogges' fat" (of which Mr. Dennis had left a considerable stock in the same store-house) "to stop the holes in the pipes," thus "robbing Peter to pay Paul." Mr. Dennis had also stored eighteen tierces of flaxseed in the barn of Dr. Jaques, near New Brunswick; and John Whitlock testifies to its wanton destruction by "a party of the Enemy." He says that in March, 1777, he saw these tierces, "some with all and some with a part of the heads knocked out and the flaxseed laying all over the yard," that "a rain fell a few days after and the flaxseed lay matted or caked together between two and three feet high." Concerning the sloop "Mary and Elizabeth," Mr. Dennis and John Lyle, Jr., testify that she was a new sloop, and when the enemy occupied the town she "lay at the dock of Capt. Gibbs,¹ near his garden fence, in the slip before his door." (This is the slip between Agnew's & Rolfe's saw-mill.) Concerning the "General Lee," George Leach testifies that "she was built on Gano's dock," that she was seized by the British when they entered the town, and that he (George Leach) "was compelled by the Enemy to carry the said schooner to New York." Mr. Dennis' own affidavit concerning the loss of this vessel contains a touch of grim humor, as follows: "John Dennis declareth on oath that the above schooner was taken by the Enemy and their Adherents, and that he this deponent saw said schooner in the hands of the Enemy, in Perth Amboy harbour, when he was put on board a boat as a prisoner to be conveyed to the Provost gaol in New York. He further declareth that he never hath received one farthing as a recompence for no part of the same, excepting one year's close confinement in a loathsome Gaol, and further saith not."

¹ Capt. Richard Gibb resided in New Brunswick in the house lately known as John Hicks', 143 Barnet Street, and had a farm near by which the old inventory says was called Longfield's farm. This was at or near the present site of Weston's mills. His houses at both places were pillaged, and the one at "Longfield's," which he says in his inventory was three-quarters of a mile from town, was totally destroyed. His losses are inventoried at over £440.

John Fisher, of New Brunswick, was convinced that he had "just reason" to believe "that his goods were taken by the enemy, as stated in his inventory, because all the above articles was left in New Brunswick when the British troops took possession of that place, and they was all gone after they left there." Peter Obert, of South River, in presenting his damages, declares that "he was at a small distance and see the Enemy take, carry off, and destroy the above-said articles," which must have been very tantalizing to Peter, although he contrived to save himself from being carried off also. Samuel Sayre, of Woodbridge, who was robbed of three fine horses, testified that he had "since seen some of the ^sd horses in the enemy's possession when he was a prisoner among them." "When I was a prisoner" is a not infrequent record in these inventories. John Mercerau, of Woodbridge, testifies that among other things the British took from him a "Stage Coach, for which he had been offered £60 without the wheels." John Ward, also of Woodbridge, swears that his "two likely cows 5 years old and forward with calf" were "taken by a party of the enemy under y^e command of Col. Simcoe, a British officer," and his affidavit is corroborated by Adolph Jones, who makes oath that he "saw Col. Simcoe and his men drive away the two cows" of said Ward. We have several other glimpses of this active and daring partisan leader. Cornelius Van Duyⁿ deposes that in December, 1776, "he was in Boundbrook with a horse, when he was surprised by the British Light Horsemen in the night, and fled a few hundred yards out of the town, and on his return the horse was gone, and he verily believes the said Horsemen took him." As Col. Simcoe states in his journal that he was with the British army while it was in winter-quarters at New Brunswick in 1776, it is probable that he commanded this party, especially since it appears by another affidavit, given in connection with inventory of Ennis Graham, that the "Queen's Rangers," of which Simcoe was colonel, were at Bound Brook on the 19th of December, 1776. Two weeks earlier than this a body of "German troops" made a foray upon Bound Brook, and among others whom they plundered was Elias Van Conrt. His affidavit gives a graphic description of the rapacious character of these hated mercenaries. He states that he was absent from home at the time, and that on his return a few hours after their departure, "he found his wife in great distress, who is since dead. She told this Deponent that about forty Hessians had the night before quartered in their house and gone away very early in the morning, which was December 7, 1776, and that all her bedding and sundry other things had been plundered and taken away by them."

In October, 1779, Col. Simcoe made his famous raid from Perth Amboy through Woodbridge, Quibbletown, and Bound Brook, his ostensible object being to destroy the boats belonging to our army which had been collected at Van Vechten's bridge, but his real aim being to take Governor Livingston prisoner. The early part of the march was prosecuted very quietly, and without any depredations beyond seizing all the good horses he could find; and his party gave out that they were a detachment from Washington's army in order to prevent any alarm from spreading. They thoroughly succeeded in keeping up this delusion until after they had left Quibbletown, when their real character was discovered by a man who knew Col. Simcoe. After this they began to plunder without stint, and from Bound Brook to Somerset Court-House, and on their return from thence to New Brunswick, they left behind them a trail of burning hay-stacks, barns, and houses. Rachel Ladner testifies to their firing a hut and some stacks, in which property of Archibald Van Norden was destroyed. William Cock also deposes that "a party of Horsemen under the command of Col. Simcoe of the British Army put fire to the Court-house at Hillsborough, and that the said Cock's house kecht fire from the same and burnt down." Nelly Smock substantiated this recital. In singular requital for the outrages committed by his men, it was the previous burning of a house by the British which led to the capture of Simcoe and a portion of his command, as the finale of this expedition, by throwing them out of their way into an ambuscade, at the precise spot he had aimed to avoid. Col. Simcoe himself tells the story. In his "Journal" (pp. 117, 118) he says, "His guide misled him; nor was the reason of his error the least uncommon of the sinister events which attended this incursion. When the British troops quitted the camp at Hillsborough and marched to Brunswick, among other houses which were unwarrantably burnt was the one which the guide relied upon as marking the private road the party was to take. He knew not of its being burnt, and that every vestige had been destroyed, so that he unintentionally led them into the ambuscade . . . on the high grounds beyond the barracks at Brunswick."

The march of the British forces through Woodbridge and Piscataway to New Brunswick in November, 1776, and their retreat through the two former in June, 1777, were marked by devastated and burned dwellings and other buildings, two hundred and forty-four persons having been plundered, and forty houses, mills, barns, etc., having been burned in Woodbridge, and one hundred and thirty-one persons plundered and thirty-one houses, mills, barns, etc., burned in Piscataway. The affidavits accompanying many of these inventories fairly place us in the light of these burning dwellings. Thus Thomas Edgar bears witness "that on or about the last of June, 1777, he saw the House late of Samuel Parker, as above mentioned, in flames, a-burning, immediately after the enemy past it, and that he verily believes they set it on fire, and that he believes the said house was worth £200 as money went in the year 1775." Hiram Frazee also testifies "that he saw the house of Thomas Force on fire, and see at the same time a number of people at the said house which he took to be British troops, as they then (in November, 1776) was a-passing along the road." And, again, Phineas Randolph testifies that in December, 1776, he saw the new, two-story, well-finished house of Justus Dunn "a-burning, and at the same time a number of the Enemy around it, and have good reason to believe they set it on fire and burnt it." Instances of this kind might be cited in great numbers, but these will serve for examples. One notable circumstance runs through them all, namely, that those whose property was the most mercilessly pillaged or devastated were the most confirmed and obnoxious patriots.

¹ This and the four following affidavits are to be found in the "Records of Damages" in Somerset County.

The plundering of their horses and cattle entailed severe losses upon the people of Middlesex, the number carried away or killed within its limits having been nearly eighteen hundred; and the affidavits accompanying the inventories reveal that in many cases this particular business was inspired or conducted by "refugees" and "Tories," who knew just where to lay their hands on the most valuable and serviceable animals, and who could thus wreak their revenge or retaliate their wrongs on their old neighbors or acquaintances. The enormous destruction of fencing and of growing or gathered crops was another noteworthy feature. In numerous cases not a panel of fence was left, the grain and hay were all carried off or destroyed, fruit-trees and orchards were hacked down, woodland was ravaged, and the most thrifty farm converted into a ruin of desolation. To aggravate the indignities which were heaped upon them, our people were often "pressed" by the British into the work of carting away the property and valuables of their friends and neighbors. Numerous cases of this kind are interspersed over the old record we are considering. It sometimes happened that plundered articles and even captives were "held to ransom" by the British, or more probably by the mercenaries in their employment, though it generally happened that they contrived to carry away both the plunder and the money also by which it might have been redeemed. Thus John Ross, of Woodbridge, was robbed of "1 new Oyster craft and 3 oyster tongs by a British armed boat," but he was afterwards allowed to ransom it by the payment of six pounds. Daniel Dunn, of Piscataway, whose mare was taken Dec. 1, 1776, and kept till Aug. 1, 1777, was allowed to redeem her on paying two pounds five shillings.

And John Noe, of Woodbridge, who besides having his horse stolen was himself stolen, records that "he gave £6 ransom money for to let him go when taken a prisoner in January, 1777."

A clear notion of the character of these inventories, their exhibition of the honest exactitude of our ancestors, and their illustration of the food, dress, household goods, and manner of life of the times can be best gained from an inspection of their curious and precise details. As specimens I have made a literal transcript in the appendix¹ to this paper of five different inventories, exhibiting the losses sustained by as many different and representative classes, of a prosperous mechanic, a well-to-do farmer, a wealthy merchant, a "lone woman," who was either a widow or a spinster, and of a gentleman of the old school. The last mentioned is the inventory of Mr. Ennis Graham, who lived near Bound Brook. He was not living when the appraisement was made, and his inventory was presented by his sister, who was his executrix. Her affidavit is so characteristic of the sex, and affords so graphic a picture of the time, that I repeat it in this place, as follows:

"MIDDLESEX COUNTY, ss. Personally appeared before us the appraisers Elizabeth Graham and being duly Sworn depose and Saith that the Articles innumarated in this Inventory was taken from Ennis Graham to the best of this Deponents Knowledge and behalf, in the following manner, that is to say: On the 24th of December 1776 their came to the house of the said Ennis Graham, then living near Boundbrook in the County of Middlesex, three British Soldiers, in appearance, And demanded of the said En^d Graham his watch which they took and rode off with, in the presence of this Deponent.

"That on or about the fifth of said month being the day a large body of Hessians marched through Boundbrook on their way to Trenton or Pennayton A negro Fellow named Oliver the property of s^d En^d Graham either went off to or was carried off by the Enemy or their Adherents.

"That on the Evening of the 19th of said December their came to the house of the said En^d Graham, A party of British Soldiers called the Queen's Rangers, and Sundry Tory Refugees, commanded as they informed this deponent by one George H. Fisher, where besides abusing Sundry of the Family to the great endangering of their lives, they dug up in the Barn of the said En^d Graham (where the said Ennis Graham and this deponent had buried it) a Chest or Box in which was contained the Cash, Plate, Watches and Jewelry &c mentioned in this said Inventory under the date of the 19th of December. That this deponent Saw them take Some of the things out of the box and put some in their pockets. And upon this Deponents importing them not to take the things away, the above named George H. Fisher Demanded the British Soldiers and ordered them to run this Deponent thro^u with their Bayonets if she did not go into the House; upon which two of the said Soldiers came and pushed with their Bayonets the said Deponent out of the Barn, and drove the said Deponent and the said Ennis Graham into the House, and there stood with their Bayonets fixed close to the breast of this Deponent and of the said Ennis Graham for a considerable time, till there was a Gun fired by the party at the Barn, upon which the said Soldiers went out of the house, and the party at the Barn also went away. And when they were out of sight this deponent and the said Ennis Graham went to the barn and found the box which contained the Articles mentioned under the 19th of Dec^r, entirely emptied and the property taken away. That on or about the 23rd of the said December the s^d Ennis Graham went from home to go to Brunswick to try if he could not recover some of his property, and as he was passing the Street there came up to him a British Soldier and Demanded his horse saying an Officer had sent him for it. Mr Graham went with the Soldier to the Officer who insisted upon having the Horse, saying it looked like a good Strong Horse, and they wanted it for his Majestys Service. Mr Graham remonstrated that he was a good way from home and could not walk it, he replied his

¹ Omitted here on account of lack of space.

Majesties Service could not be retarded for any excuses, and then pointed to an old worn out Horse (a mere Skeleton) and told him he might take that, perhaps it might carry him home. Mr Grahau finding there was no alternative took him, but as Soon as he got on his back the horse fell down with him, he however brought him home, where he died soon after. This account this deponent had from the Said Ennis Graham at his return, and verily believes it to be true.

"And this Deponent further declares that neither she nor the said Ennis Graham to her Knowledge or belief never received any Kind of satisfaction for any of the Articles Mentioned in this Said Inventory (excepting as herein excepted) and further this Deponent saith not.

"Sworn the 4th of Oct 1782

"ELIZ GRAHAM

before me BENJN MANNING Appr."

A large proportion of those whose inventories are preserved in this record of damages served as officers or soldiers in the patriot armies during the Revolutionary war, and with their relatives and friends seem to have been specially selected for spoliation by the British. In order that this may be made apparent, that the substantial character of the men who composed the Revolutionary armies may be seen, and that the names of these patriotic men may be preserved, together with some record of their services and losses, I present a list of nearly two hundred of those whose inventories are given in this old manuscript and who served in a military capacity, with such brief particulars of their services and references to their losses as I have been able to gather which are noteworthy for their peculiarity.

William Applegate, of New Brunswick, was a private in the Middlesex militia early in the war, and afterward in Capt. Voorhees' company of the Third Regiment of State troops. Notable among the things of which he was despoiled were "2 Barrels of Bohca tea, about 100 pounds each," and "½ Bbl. of Sugar, 100 lb.," besides damages to his house and fence. Mr. Applegate was an active officer of the Presbyterian Church at New Brunswick.

Samuel Ayres and Jacob Ayres, both of Woodbridge, were privates in the Middlesex militia. They escaped quite lightly, the losses of the former being chiefly cattle, sheep, and hay, and of the latter various articles of female apparel, prominent among which were "1 black Calamanco Cloak lined, new," and "1 Scarlet Cloak, part worn."

Reuben Ayres, of Woodbridge, served as a private in Capt. Asher F. Randolph's company of State troops. His barn was destroyed, his horses carried off, also a "good Gun," and other considerable losses.

Simon Addis, of New Brunswick, was first a lieutenant and afterward a captain in the Middlesex militia. The enemy rewarded his patriotism by running off his "three Milch Cows."

John Arnold, of Piscataway, was a private in the Middlesex militia. Apparently he was not in active service when he was pillaged, since the enemy carried off his "Gun, Cartouch Box, and Bayonet," together with a "pair of holsters and a sword," besides a fine "four year old Sorrel Mare," valued at £30.

Robert Armstrong, of South Brunswick, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and also records the loss of "a good gun, worth £4."

Joseph Brown, of Piscataway, was a private in Capt. Reuben Randolph's company of Middlesex militia. He was robbed of a number of small articles, mostly clothing and household utensils. Also "1 Small Bible, six shillings."

James Bishop, of Piscataway, served first as a private in the Middlesex militia, and afterward in the same capacity in the Continental army. Among his losses he records "2 Guns and accoutrements."

John Brown, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia. The enemy visited him six times, and plundered him at each visit. Among his losses he recites thirty-one cattle, three horses, and a large number of sheep. In his inventory he states that the enemy killed "1 calf of yr old & past & wounded 2," evincing that their destruction of his property was to a certain extent wanton.

Solomon Brecount, of Woodbridge, who was a private in Capt. Asher F. Randolph's company of State troops, was plundered on three separate occasions. The enemy stole his horses, destroyed his apple orchard of fifty trees, and burnt his fencing.

Daniel Brecount, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, was visited twice, and each time robbed of a horse.

Moses Bloomfield, of Woodbridge, was a private in Capt. Asher F. Randolph's company of State troops, who was greatly harassed by the enemy. He was plundered at five different times, robbed of ten cattle and seven horses, and his property laid waste. Among his losses he recounts the astounding item of "32 shirts, part homespun and part bought linen," together with such articles of finery as "2 pr. of Silver Shoe Buckles, a pair of Silver Knee buckles, a Silver Stock buckle, and 3 large new Silver Spoons." The enemy also despoiled his neighbor, James Bonny, who was a captain in the Middlesex militia, of "4 Silver tea-spoons."

Ezekiel Bloomfield, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and was twice visited by the British and their adherents, when he was pillaged of his horses, cattle, hogs, and poultry; his windows and doors were broken, the weather-boards stripped off his house, his fencing and hay were destroyed, and his trusty "gun" appropriated.

Cornelius Baker, of Woodbridge, was another long-suffering private in the Middlesex militia. Besides his horses, hogs, sheep, and poultry, he chronicles among numerous other things the loss of "A new pair of Velvet Breeches," and "a pair of boots almost new," "3 Large Silver Shoe Buckles and 1 do. Knee buckle," together with "40 Galls. of Rum, Brandy, and Gin," and "£10 in cash, greatest part hard."

Jonathan Bloomfield, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, as was also Thomas Bloomfield, of the same place. They were plundered on several different occasions, of horses, cattle, crops, and household goods.

Alexander Cotheal, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia. The enemy carried off his cattle, sheep, and hogs, robbed him even of his "2 beds and bedding," and burned his dwelling-house and barn.

Isaac Cotheal, of Woodbridge, was a private in Capt. Marsh's company of light-horse, and a much aggrieved patriot. He was not only himself taken prisoner near his home, April 19, 1777, but in July of that year his schooner of "about 42 tons burthen, loaded with pork, flower, and butter," with his "negro boy 12 years of age £50," were carried off; and the rapacious marauders also stole his silver watch, which he assures us was "good and cost £8 10s.," a "new pare of Leather Britches," and "6 pare of Ankeen and Drillin D^r new," "a dozen of Shirts new," "6 Wastcoats Ankeen and Striped Silk, good," and "2 Coats, 1 Ankeen and 1 Cloth." From all which it would seem that this worthy patriot was careful of his personal appearance, at least in the matter of his attire.

Ephraim Compton, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and paid dearly for it. He was literally despoiled of everything. His inventory consists of over one hundred entries, and comprises his crops, horses, and cattle, his household and farming utensils, his bedding, and his own and his wife's clothing. Among the items are "2 Common Bibles, 1 Testament, and 1 Psalm Book." So that he was bereft of even these sources of consolation. Only his buildings were spared.

Gabriel Compton, of Woodbridge, was a still greater sufferer. He was a private in the Middlesex militia. His dwelling-house, "Large Dutch Barn," corn-crib, and cider-mill were burned to ashes, and a clean sweep made of his crops, cattle, horses, fencing, wagons, clothing, and household and farming utensils. He seems to have been literally stripped of everything. He makes special mention of "A silver hilted sword, musket, and bayonet," of "1 worked pocketbook with £9 cash in it," and of "1 ditto with 20/ hard money and 8 Dollars paper in it."

Samuel Crow, of Woodbridge, was successively a captain in the First Regiment of Middlesex, first major and lieutenant-colonel in the same. His property was twice visited by the enemy and relieved of a number of articles of little value.

Joseph Crowell, of Woodbridge, was first a private in the Middlesex troop of light-horse and then in the Continental army. He was plundered on three different occasions, principally of horses and cattle.

Edward Crowell, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and came off with comparatively light loss, having been plundered of a horse only.

Jeremiah Clarkson, of Woodbridge, was first a private in the Middlesex militia, then in Capt. Asher F. Randolph's company of State troops, and lastly in the Continental army. He laments the loss of "a fine mare 6 years old, near 15 hands high."

Stephen Cutler, of Woodbridge, a private in the Middlesex militia, was plundered twice, each time of articles of small value.

David Chambers, of South Brunswick, captain in the Third Middlesex Regiment, was plundered of articles of slight value.

John Chamberlain, of Windsor, is one of the few who are dignified in the "Record of Damages" by the title "Esquire." Nevertheless he was only a private in the Middlesex militia. He was twice plundered, the first time of "£8 1. in hard money, 1 Silver Watch good," and "1 good 4 Horse Waggon." The second time he chronicled the loss of "£1000 Continental Money," appraised at £15 13s. 4d., "3 Silver Shoe Buckles, & 3 do. Stock do," "½ doz. Teaspoons & 3 pr. do. Sleeve-bnttons," besides "1 Gun and Bayonet & 1 lb. of powder, and 1 or 2 lbs. of shot and 2 powder horns." He also reports the loss of twenty-one shirts, and hence, possibly, his appellative of "Esquire."

John Conger, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and was several times a victim to British rapacity or thirst. He is another of those upon whom was conferred the rare title "Esquire," although there is no evidence that he was the distinguished owner of as many shirts as his brother patriot Chamberlain. Evidently he was a well-to-do person, since he had stored in his cellar "4 Hhds. of Cider, ½ Pipe Madeira Wine, 10 Galls. Brandy, 7 Galls. Jamaica Spirits, ½ Barrel of Cherry Rum, and ½ of a Barrel of Porter." These were sufficiently patrician belongings, certainly, to cause him to be dubbed "Esquire," unless he derived the title from the exercise of the then important and highly respectable function of an inn-keeper. Be this as it may, the enemy imbibed or carried away his liquors, and then gave evidence of their potency by destroying his barn, damaging his house, tearing down and burning the fencing on his garden and farm, and finally by smashing fifty panes of glass in his windows. There can be little doubt that his liquors were good, judging by their effect upon his unwelcome visitors.

Dugal Campbell, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia. Among the articles of which he was plundered were his hay and cattle, and "1 Gun and bayonet and Cartridge-box, 2 Knapsacks, and 2 Canteens."

Samuel Compton, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and suffered severely from the enemy. They burned his "Grist-mill, Dwelling-House & Barn, worth £355," together with 1022 panels of fence, and cut down "8 acres of good Wood and Timber; also 50 bearing Apple-trees."

There were ten of the Drake family in the military service of their country in various capacities. They all escaped the ravages of the enemy with the exception of George and Ephraim, both of Piscataway, who were robbed of their horses, cattle, and household goods generally.

Elijah Disbrow, of South Amboy, was a private in Capt. Morgan's company, Second Regiment, of Middlesex. He lost "Two Skiffs, one a new large Skiff, the other a small one."

The Dunn family seem to have been specially selected by the enemy for their attentions, no less than eleven of them having been plundered out of fifteen who were soldiers in the patriot army. Among these were the following:

Daniel Dunn, of Piscataway, a private in the Middlesex militia, presents a long list of sundries stolen, including the rare luxury for those times of "1 Set of China Tea-Cups and Saucers, & a large China bowl, £10."

Benjamin Dunn, of Piscataway, a private in the Middlesex militia, was a heavy sufferer, his inventory footing up over £700. Besides his horses, many head of cattle, and a great store of grain and hay carried off, "650 Trees and Saplings cut down," "200 acres of land mowed and pastured," "Firewood cut and drawn for 2 large fires and one small one for 5 months," and 5378 rails and stakes destroyed, he recounts the loss of "1 Stout Negro Man, 30 years of age, £100," "1 Large Looking-Glass, 3 by 2 feet, broke, £8," his "Gun, Cartouch box, Bayonet, and 3 Cutlasses," and his valuable library, consisting of two books, "Salman's Gazetteer and Harry."

Hugh Dunn, of Piscataway, was a captain in the First Middlesex Regiment, and was twice spoiled, principally of his "stock," grain, and household goods. Though he was not despoiled of his stout negro man, as was the case with Benjamin, he pathetically bewails the loss of a "New Coat for my Negro," as doubtless also did that sable chattel. Besides he has an item of "Wood for One fire for a picket of 25 men for 5 months £5," showing that his farm was the point at or near which the British outposts were quartered.

John Dunn, of Piscataway, was first a major in Col. Heard's battalion of "minute-men," afterwards a major in Col. Samuel Forman's battalion of "Detached Militia," and subsequently first major of the First Middlesex Regiment. He was plundered of his horses, grain, farming utensils, household goods, etc., to the extent of £313 5s. 5d. Among his losses he enumerates "£18 in Continental Cash," "1 Clock without the case, of the best kind, £30," and "1 Do. with the Case £16."

Jeremiah Dunn, of Piscataway, a private in the Middlesex militia, was robbed of his horses, cattle, crops, etc., to the amount of £113 3d. But Micajah Dunn, of the same place, who was a lieutenant-colonel in the First Middlesex Regiment, did not suffer in proportion to his superior rank, his entire loss being a horse, two guns, one great-coat, and a pair of shoes.

The Dunhams were generous contributors to the cause of independence, fifteen of their number having served in the army in various capacities, and nine having been spoiled by the enemy. Among these last were the following:

Azariah Dunham, of New Brunswick. Before the war he was a civil engineer, and was largely employed in that capacity by private parties, the Legislature, and other public bodies. In May, 1775, he was elected a member of the Colonial Assembly, and during that year proceeded to the city of New York to confer with other patriotic delegates from the sister colonies as to the measures to be adopted for the preservation of their menaced liberties. He was a member of the first Provincial Congress of New Jersey in 1775-76, and was appointed by that body one of the "Committee of Safety," which exercised extraordinary powers in its recess. As a member of the Provincial Congress he served on numerous important committees, and drafted and reported various weighty measures. Among these were "a resolution respecting apprehending deserters from the Continental troops," an "ordinance to compel payment of a tax of £10,000 from such persons as have refused to pay the same," an ordinance permitting £30,000 of credit," and an ordinance for the "manufacture and purchase of saltpetre." In 1775-76 he was appointed to review and muster in the troops raised in the province, and was made one of the committee to adjust and settle the accounts of powder furnished to Earl Stirling by Somerset, Brunswick, Woodbridge, and Elizabethtown. In 1776 he was lieutenant-colonel of the Second Battalion Middlesex militia, but resigned from it to devote himself to the duties of "superintendent of purchases" for the province, of commissioner to raise troops, and a commissioner to sign bills of credit for the Eastern Department of New Jersey, positions to which he had been elected by the Provincial Congress, and which he filled till the close of the war. Before the enemy occupied New Brunswick he had been able to remove his plate and valuables to the Ford mansion at Morristown (his wife was Mary Ford); but one of the British officers was quartered in his house, and he was plundered of household goods to the value of £218. His father, Rev. Jonathan Dunham, a venerable man of eighty, residing in Piscataway, was also plundered to the amount of £80.

Elisha, Jonathan, Josiah, and John Dunham, of Woodbridge, and David, David, Jr., and Samuel Dunham, of Piscataway, were all of them privates in the Middlesex militia, and experienced the tender mercies of the British. The three last named had their houses and barns burned after having been first pillaged, their grain, etc., carried off, and twenty-five thousand rails and stakes destroyed, footing up for the three an aggregate loss of about £1000.

William Davison, of South Brunswick, was a sergeant in Capt. Morgan's company of the Second Middlesex Militia, and was plundered of two horses and a wagon, the latter of which he assures us was "as good as new."

Cornelius Dehart, of South Brunswick, was a private in the Middlesex militia. He was visited by a foraging party of the enemy, who stole his "seed wheat and rye," and after their virtuous performances warmed themselves over a good fire made of his "rail fence."

James Debow, of South Brunswick, was a captain in the Middlesex militia. His losses were not heavy, but still comprised his cattle, swine, and clothing, besides a general destruction of his windows and shutters.

Jonathan Deare, of Princeton, at the outset was first major of the First Middlesex Regiment and subsequently its lieutenant-colonel. He resigned in March, 1778, having been elected collector of customs for the Eastern District of New Jersey. He was a prominent lawyer. The enemy made a full sweep of his household goods and his orchards and cellars. Among the former were a "number of law and other books value of £40," and among the latter "1 hamper of wine in bottles, 6 Dozen," some of his pillagers evidently having been of a studious and others of a convivial turn of mind.

William Evans, of New Brunswick, a private in the Middlesex militia, was twice visited and relieved of sundry luxuries, among which were "1 Set of Cups and Saucers best quality," "Cash in silver 126, and in Continental money 40," a "pair of gold locket sleeve-buttons and a gold finger-ring," and "several fine books," the authors not named.

James Edgar, of Woodbridge, a private in the Middlesex militia, was visited three times and very effectually pillaged. Among his losses he records that of a fine five-year-old mare and a number of cattle, "taken by Col. Simcoe."

Isaac Furman and John Fisher, of New Brunswick, and John Flatt, of Woodbridge, all were privates in the Middlesex militia, and were thoroughly despoiled of their cattle and household goods, special attention having been paid to their ample stores of women's clothing and bedding. Among the multitude of caps, aprons, gowns, kerchiefs, and other articles of female wear of which the last-named was robbed he laments "1 pair of Stays as good as new," which some uxorious British or Hessian soldier appropriated for the wardrobe of his better half. Mr. Flatt also records in one item the loss of "1 Common Bible, 1 good Rifle, and a Bullet-mould," an odd admixture of weapons, spiritual and carnal.

Jonathan Freeman, of Woodbridge, was first a private in Capt. Morgan's company of the Second Middlesex Regiment, and afterwards in Capt. Nixon's troop of light-horse. He was robbed of his household goods, and had a fine horse shot. Besides him eleven others of the Freeman family were privates in the Middlesex militia, but two only of them, Israel and Samuel, both of Woodbridge, were molested. The latter suffered the loss of four fine horses, and among other things "6 Silver teaspoons and a set of china."

There were nine of the Fields of Middlesex in the patriot service, and of these three were pillaged. Benjamin and Richard, both of Piscataway, were privates, and Jeremiah, also of Piscataway, was first a private, then sergeant, and finally a lieutenant in the First Regiment of Middlesex. Their inventories amount to a total of £414.

William French, of Piscataway, a private in the Middlesex militia, to use an expressive colloquialism, was thoroughly "cleaned out." The enemy burned his "Dwelling-House large, and a Store-House adjoining the same," "1 other Dwelling-House," "2 Barns and a Smoke-House," valued by William Horn and John Shippey, carpenters, at £316. They carried off his horses, cattle, sheep, wagons, sleds, pleasure sleighs, grain and hay, and robbed him of his household goods and farming utensils. From the character of many of the articles, which could only have proved useless impediments to the marauders, it is evident that they must have been wantonly consumed with his buildings. In his inventory we find mentioned that favorite article of furniture with our ancestors, "3 Cupboards of Dutch make equal to new." Also "3 Swords & 1 Gun and Bayonet good," and "3 bibles, 1 large dutch y^e other English, worth £2.11.6." William had a Bible for each sword, and, doubtless, was equally a man of war and of prayer.

Henry Fouratt, of Piscataway, was a private in the Middlesex militia. It is evident from his inventory that he combined the occupation of an oysterman with that of a farmer. Besides his "green grain in the ground" he recites the loss of a "Skiff 17 feet long, 2 Oyster Rakes, 1 pr. of Tongs, 1 Anchor, and a New Cable."

Moses Guest, of New Brunswick, the author of an odd compound entitled "Guest's Poems and Journal," was first an ensign in Capt. Voorhees' company in the Third Middlesex Regiment, and afterwards a captain in the Second Regiment. While in the former capacity he had the good fortune to capture the daring partisan, Col. Simcoe, the incidents attending which he himself relates as follows:¹ "Simcoe was not discovered to be an enemy until he had got seven miles north of N. Brunswick at Quibble town, from which place an express was dispatched to Col. John Neilson, at N. Brunswick, who immediately ordered out his regiment. We were soon marched to the bridge at Raritan Landing. From Quibble town Col. Simco proceeded rapidly to Col. Van Horne's house at Middlebrook. He was much disappointed in not finding the Governor there [Governor Livingston was then at N. Brunswick]. He then went on to Van Vechten's bridge on the Raritan river, and set fire to some forage and flat-bottom boats; from which he went to Millstone, a small town 8 miles N. W. of Brunswick; here he set fire to the court-house and jail. While we were at the landing bridge we discovered the smoke of those buildings. It was then thought probable that the enemy would endeavor to pass this bridge in their retreat. Col. Neilson therefore continued there, being in hopes of cutting off their retreat, and dispatched me with thirty-five men with orders to endeavor to fall in with them, and to annoy them as much as possible. Soon after getting on the road leading from Millstone village to the bridge I was informed by an express that the enemy was within a few hundred yards of me; I had just time to get to an open piece of woods when they made their appearance. We attacked them as they came up, but they came on so rapidly that we could only give them one discharge. Col. Simco's horse received three balls, fell on him and bruised him very badly; there was one man killed and several wounded. I left a physician with Simco, and proceeded on. We soon found his party had halted on the heights west of Brunswick. They sent a doctor and his servant to us bearing a flag. The doctor requested permission to attend Col. Simco, which was granted, but as the enemy was proceeding on their retreat whilst the flag was negotiating, which is contrary to the rules of war, the doctor and his servant were considered as prisoners. After Simco fell, Major Stuart (a refugee, who had piloted him) took the command. Soon after we dismissed the doctor, we witnessed a scene that was truly distressing. We found Captain Peter Voorhes lying in the road mortally wounded, and to all appearance nearly breathing his last breath.¹ He had just returned from General Sullivan's army, and with a few militia horsemen was pursuing so close on the enemy's rear as to cause a detachment to sally out. They soon came up with him and cut him with their broadswords in a most shocking manner, which caused his death in a few hours. We pursued them until we got to South river bridge, 8 miles south of Brunswick, at which place we received information that 500 men had been landed at South Amboy to cover their retreat, and that they were embarking for Staten Island."

¹ Guest's Poems and Journal, pp. 144, 145, 146.

So far as the "Record of Damages" shows, Capt. Guest was not despoiled of any property; but his relatives, Henry and John Guest, also of New Brunswick, and who were privates in the Middlesex militia, did not fare so well. Henry was a tanner, and was well carried by the enemy. In his inventory he enumerates, among other things, "122 Slaughter Hides from Fort Lee," which had just before capitulated to the British. This item suggests an incident which I have heard my grandfather (Dr. Jacob Dunham, late of New Brunswick) describe with great animation. The British during the Revolution had a fort opposite New Brunswick on the east side of the Raritan, near the present residence of Mr. Augustus T. Stout. At one period they expected the approach of a body of American troops by way of the road from Trenton, and were vigilantly on the lookout. One night Mr. Guest, whose tannery was just above New Street on Livingston Avenue, put out a large number of hides to dry, possibly the identical "122" above named, hanging them on his fences. When the sun rose the British mistook the hides for the long expected American troops, and set up a brisk cannonade from the fort. But fire as furiously as they might they could make no impression on the foe, who held their position firmly without manifesting the least disorder. They were as unflinching as any veterans, and the thing began to grow serious. It was not until field-glasses were brought into use that the enemy discovered they had been training their batteries for several hours on a lot of "recreant" hides. When this had been ascertained there was a sudden cessation of hostilities; and the joke becoming widely known caused great merriment among all good patriots in the town at the expense of the redcoats.

David Gilliland, of New Brunswick, was a lieutenant in the Third Middlesex Regiment. He had his wagon and pleasure-sleigh confiscated, and these comprised all his losses.

Richard Gibson, of Woodbridge, and James Griggs and John Gronendike, of South Brunswick, were privates in the Middlesex militia. Their losses were chiefly of horses and cattle. But John Gillman, of Piscataway, another private, records a sweeping destruction of his fencing, cattle, grain, and household articles.

George Harriott, of Woodbridge, was first a captain in the Third Middlesex Regiment, and afterwards in the First. In one of their forays the enemy robbed him of his horses, cattle, and numerous other valuables. But David Harriott, also of Woodbridge, who was only a private in the Middlesex militia, was literally stripped of everything "when the enemy passed through in November, 1776, and some time after." They confiscated his household finery, consisting among other things of a "Set of Homespun curtains wove damask flowers, 1 do. of White in large damask flowers, and 1 do. of double dimons;" his abundant store of napkins, quilts, bedspreads, sheets, "large flowered damask tablecloths," and sundry linen articles. They plundered his wife of her "long gowns," and "short gowns of chintz, of calico, of striped Holland and homespun;" of her forty-two "bed sheets of 3½-hundred linen," and "1 do. of 5-hundred linen;" of her "28 yards of new whitened diaper-wove Huckabuck;" of her "Shifts of 5-hundred linen;" of her six "petticoats, 1 of them of flannel," and "1 of damask, new;" of her handkerchiefs of "lawn, gauze, and silk;" of her aprons of "new flowered lawn," of "striped muslin," of "fine linen," and of "homespun;" and of her "8 caps, cambric and lawn, all new," comprising a complete female outfit, even including "2 diaper bibs for a child." Finally, they stole his boots, his "broadcloth coat," his "velvet Jacket & breeches," and other unmentionables innumerable; besides "Cash £6.4., his silver teaspoons, silver stock-buckle, and silver sleeve-buttons. They smashed in his windows and doors, tore up his floors, broke down his partitions, destroyed his grain and fencing, stampeded his cattle, and did not leave him so much as a bed, a trammel, or a gridiron." His neighbor, James Hampton, also of Woodbridge, and a private in the Middlesex militia, lost "a cow and calf."

¹ My grandfather pointed out to me when I had the place of Voorhes' death. It was on the road between the Potter's Field and Town Lane, that ran from the Trenton turnpike to George's road, now within the city limits of New Brunswick.

William Hoagland, of New Brunswick, a private in the Middlesex militia, met with a "mixed" loss, among the articles of which he was despoiled being "1 Gun, bayonet, Cartouch box & Cutlass, 2 pair of Stays, 100 lbs. of Tobacco, and a linen wheel."

His townsman, John Halfpenny, was a private in Capt. Voorhees' company, Third Middlesex Regiment, and afterwards in the State troops. He seems to have followed the same occupation as Hortwick, and lost "1 Scow of ten tons burthen valued at £80, & 4 Oyster Rakes."

Thomas Hadden, of Woodbridge, was first a captain, then major, and at length lieutenant-colonel of the First Middlesex Regiment. He escaped fortunately with the loss of three fine horses only.

Nathaniel Heard, of Woodbridge, was one of the first of our patriotic ancestors to take the field. In 1775 he raised a body of troops which he placed at the disposition of the Provincial Congress and the Committee of Safety. At first he was colonel of the First Middlesex Regiment, then colonel of a battalion of "minute-men," then colonel of a battalion named after himself—"Heard's Battalion," then brigadier-general commanding the same, and finally brigadier-general of militia. He suffered a heavy penalty for his patriotism, his inventory of losses amounting to £2186 17s. 6d. His grain (over one thousand bushels) was carried away, together with seventy tons of hay, one thousand panels of fence, twenty-two hogsheads of cider, and two splendid horses. And, in addition, his "two dwelling-houses, 4 rooms on a floor, 2½ stories high, well furnished, and 50 feet in length," were burned to the ground, as also were his "Boalting House, Hatter's Shop, Weaver's Shop, Chair House, & 2 Barns."

James Jones, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and suffered only the loss of some fencing, sheep, and cattle.

John Jordan, of New Brunswick, was a private in the Middlesex militia. Before the war he, like other heroes, pursued the peaceful avocation of a tanner, with the difference that it was diversified by that of a fisherman. He recounts the loss of fifty-two kegs of lampblack, a lot of calf-skins and sides of leather, a fishing-boat, and two oyster-rakes.

Peter Keenan, of New Brunswick, was first a private in the Second Middlesex Regiment, then in the State troops, and afterwards in the Continental army. His loss was limited to a few articles of clothing.

Robert Kip, of Raritan Landing, a private in the Middlesex militia, was thoroughly despoiled. It is evident from some phrases in his inventory that he had attempted to secrete a portion of his valuables from the enemy, but their scent was too keen or their information too sure for anything to escape. Among the numerous items in his inventory are "2 Hogsheads of Rum, nigh half full," "½ Barrel of Metheglin," and "2 Sets of cooper's tools." He also records the loss of "1 Hog" of good Tobacco, and the frequent recurrence of entries of similar large lots of the "weed" in the "Record of Damages" provokes the inquiry whether it was raised in Middlesex County or brought from one of the other colonies.

Barnet Hagaman and William Hillyer, both of South Brunswick, were privates in Capt. Morgan's company in the Second Regiment of Middlesex. Besides a wagon and other articles, the former was plundered of his sword-belt, while in the inventory of the latter such things figure as "bobben," "luten," "millenet and white gause," and "790 sewing-needles," indicating that he was in the dry goods line. Among his other entries appear the following: "60 shillings in hard cash" and "600 Dolls. in Continental currency," the last named being appraised at £214s. 6d.

John Hampton, of Woodbridge, an ensign in the First Middlesex Regiment, was another heavy sufferer. Apparently he was an inn-keeper, since among his losses are "60 Galls. Spirits," "40 Galls. Rum," "30 Do. Cherry Rum," "30 Do. Brandy," "15 Do. Cherry Brandy," "60 Do. Madeira Wine," "40 Do. Teneriffe Wine," "40 Do. Country Gin," and "200 lbs. of Tobacco." He was pillaged on three several occasions, and his total losses exceeded six hundred pounds. His bedding, clothing, furniture, crockery (which was unusually plentiful and good), and household stores were mercilessly ransacked and appropriated. He records the loss of "Cash £20, taken at Quibbletown," and "400 Continental Dollars," the latter of which, however, were worth little more than a "continental darn," their appraised value being £6 18s. 8d. He also inventories a "Sloop of 32 tons taken at Paulus Hook in Dec. 1776, when the British first came to New York," and "2 pipes of Wine taken out of Col. John Neilson's store at New Brunswick, paid him for it £200 York money, Octr. 1776."

Jacob Hyer, of Princeton, was first lieutenant-colonel of the Third Middlesex Regiment, and afterwards became its colonel. He, too, must have been either an inn-keeper or a "fine old gentleman of the olden time," since he notes (and if he were an inn-keeper doubtless his guests sorely bemoaned) the loss of "60 Galls. Madeira Wine," "65 do. best Claret," "8 Barrels Hores' best porter," "30 Galls. Cherry Whiskey," "6 Groce Black Bottles," "20 Gin Cases and flasks," besides spits, saucepans, pie-pans, bake-ovens, etc., innumerable. That he was an inn-keeper is made further probable by such items as "5 fluted brass candle-sticks, best kind," "2 pr. Comon do.,"

"1 Doz. Iron Do. and 10 pr. of Snuffers," "11 feather beds with bolsters and pillows," "6 pair new Slippers," and a great variety of other things betokening a well-to-do and amply furnished household. The enemy left him literally nothing, carrying away even his "Iron Chain for Smoke Jack" and the trammels appertaining. Like Gen. Heard, Col. Hyer appears to have exercised a care for the outer man. He was a hatter as well as a landlord and a soldier, there being recited among his losses "50 lb. of Hatter's wool carded, 14 Caster, and 20 Wool Hats and a new hat press."

Francis Letts, of South Amboy, was a corporal, and Elisha, Elijah, and John Letts, of the same place, were privates in Capt. Morgan's company of Middlesex militia. Francis and Elisha had their dwelling-houses and barns burned, besides experiencing other losses, and Elisha's mother, the widow Hannah Letts, was plundered of her cattle.

William Lake, of South Amboy, Benjamin Luker, and Aaron Longstreet, of South Brunswick, and John Langstaff, of Piscataway, were all privates in the Middlesex militia. They were plundered lightly,—Lake, of his cattle; Luker, of forage and provisions; Langstaff, of timber, clothing, and provisions; and Longstreet, who was a blacksmith apparently, of "300 Bushels of Coal," "200 lb. of Iron and Steel, and a Vice," "all the small tools belonging to a Smith's Shop," and sundry other things.

John Lyle, of New Brunswick, was first a captain and then a major in the Third Middlesex Regiment. Evidently he was another patriotic tanner, as he speaks of "1 shed and 3 platforms destroyed in y^e Tan-Yard," together with "30 Sides of Upper leather and a lot of bark." He also lost, or the contraband lost himself, "1 Negro Man, aged 20 yrs., £100." Mr. Lyle was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church at New Brunswick.

The Martin family had nineteen of their number in the patriot army, and twenty of that name were more or less severely pillaged. Of those who were in the army, David, Benajah, and Nathaniel lived in Piscataway, and were privates in the Middlesex militia, David having also served in Capt. Asher F. Randolph's company of State troops. Daniel, Eliakim, James, William, and John were privates in the State troops, James having afterwards served in the Continental army. William was the severest sufferer of them all. He was visited five times by the enemy between February, 1777, and April, 1781. Each time they carried off two or three horses, besides, at their several calls, seven geese, ten fowls, four ducks, three Guinea fowls, fifty-five sheep and lambs, and eight cows. He makes special mention in one entry of two of the luxuries of which they rifled him, namely, "6 lbs. of Tobacco and 6 lbs. of Sassafras." The losses of the others comprised horses, cattle, provisions, sheep, grain, hay, and household goods. Among the numerous entries there are none worthy of special mention, except "5 lb. of Spanish Tobacco," and "1 pr. of black Everlasting Breeches," recorded by James, and by John his literary collection, consisting of "1 Book call^d the London Art, 1716."

The Mundays of Middlesex were also good patriots, eleven of them having served in the Revolutionary armies. Of these, Martin, Reuben, Samuel, and Benjamin lived at Woodbridge, and Nicholas and Peter at Piscataway. They were all privates in the Middlesex militia, and were plundered of sundries which caused their inventories to range from £6 to £60 each.

James Morgan, of South Amboy, was first an ensign and then a captain in the Second Middlesex Regiment. He was afterward a captain in the State troops, and was very active. Of course he was not overlooked by the enemy. They destroyed his "kilo of stone ware not burned," broke open his desk and rifled it of a "Silver Watch and 300 Continental dollars," took off his wife's entire wardrobe (including that good lady's "velvet hood"), dashed in 23 of his window-panes, made free with his "4 pr. of Silver shoe buckles & 1 pair of silver knee buckles," besides carrying off such of his military trappings as they found, consisting of "1 Appalet," "1 Silver Hilted Sword," "1 Gun Good & 1 Gold lase & hat band."

Ephraim and John Morris and Samuel Moores, of Woodbridge; Andrew and David Manning and Richard Merrill, of Piscataway; John Messerol, of South Brunswick; and John and Humphrey Mount, of Windsor, all were privates in the Middlesex militia, and suffered for amounts varying from two to sixty pounds, except Merrill, whose loss exceeded £160.

William and Jeremiah Manning, of Woodbridge, both were captains in the First Middlesex Regiment, and were severely scourged by the enemy, especially Jeremiah, whose store-house, chair-house, stable, and barn were burned, his fine orchard containing "223 apple trees, 23 cherry trees, and a quantity of peach do.," were wantonly cut down, his fences leveled and burned, and scarcely an article left him for wear or use.

John Noe, of Woodbridge, was only a private in the Middlesex militia, but nevertheless he was as ruthlessly harried as if he were a brigadier. The enemy pillaged him on twelve different occasions, taking him away as a prisoner at one of their visits, and carrying off literally every article of clothing belonging to himself and family, besides "1 negro man named Fenox" (Phoenix?), and all his household goods, farm implements, provisions, horses, and cattle to the value of over £400.

Robert Nixon, of South Brunswick, suffered lightly. He was first a captain in a troop of light-horse, to which he was afterwards breveted major, and finally was first major of the Third Middlesex Regiment. He was another patriotic tanner, and the enemy appropriated from his establishment "75 Sides of Sole Leather, 17 Kip Skins, and 19 Calf Skins."

John Neilson, of New Brunswick, was first the colonel of a battalion of "minute-men," the colonel of the Second Middlesex Regiment, then colonel of a regiment of State troops, then brigadier-general of militia, and finally deputy quartermaster-general. He was pillaged of his household goods, of "2111 lb. of pork purchased that fall," and of a number of things from his store and warehouse, among which are mentioned, as exhibiting the heavy stock of certain goods required at that day as compared with the present, "25 dozen New England Scythes." His total loss somewhat exceeded £220.

Frederick Outgelt, Peter Obert, and Benjamin Ogden, of South River, and John Olden, of Windsor, were privates in the Middlesex militia, and were severally plundered to the extent of from £21 to £95. Obert's loss was the heaviest, being largely of cattle, besides "50 dollars in Cash." Ogden's loss was also of cattle mainly, ten head having been carried off in one swoop. Among his other losings were "1 fishing-net 65 fathom long," "2 skiffs and 1 good firelock." But among the items in his inventory the one on which he lingers the most regretfully perhaps of any is "1 Iron bound Cask containing 4 Barrels of very good cider."

Samuel Parker, of Woodbridge, I believe to be identical with the Samuel F. Parker who was first a captain in Col. Forman's battalion, "Heard's Brigade," and afterwards a major in the same. He was a printer, as was his father, James Parker, also of Woodbridge, who printed the "Votes and Proceedings" of Assembly from 1768, and perhaps earlier, until 1770. Early in the session of the Twenty-first Assembly, on Sept. 28, 1770, "a petition was presented to the House from Samuel F. Parker, setting forth that his late father, James Parker dec^d, was employed as printer to the Ho. of Assembly, and that the printing-office in Woodbridge has devolved on him, praying the House to appoint him their printer." On September 29th Isaac Collins presented a similar petition, and on October 1st the printing was awarded to Collins. That Samuel F. Parker and the Samuel Parker of the "Record of Damages" are identical is rendered probable by the circumstance that in the inventory of the latter, exhibited by his widow, one of the items is "Part of a printing office" and various articles of furniture for the same. His "dwelling house, well furnished," appraised at £200, was burnt, and a number of articles of unusual elegance for the time were destroyed or stolen. Among these were "1 large Silver Bowl would hold two quarts £20," "1 Large Silver Tankard £20," "1 pair of gold sleeve bottoms," "1 do. garnet ring 20s.," "Cash 20 Dolls.," "1 Silver Nitten Sheath," and "1 Silver Whistle for a child to play with 7s. 6d."

John Pane, of Woodbridge, was successively a lieutenant and a captain in the Middlesex militia. He was killed Sept. 25, 1781, at Spanktown (Rahway), and his widow presents an inventory of their other losses, principally of clothing, household goods, and horses.

The Randolph family were conspicuous for their patriotism, three of them having been officers and twenty-seven privates in the Revolutionary armies. One of the foremost of these patriotic men, Capt. Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, fortunately escaped any destruction of his property. Originally a captain in the Middlesex militia, he was elected naval officer for the Eastern District of New Jersey, Dec. 12, 1778; a sword was voted to be presented to him by Council on the 11th of that month "for his patriotism, vigilance, and bravery during the war;" he was taken from his bed by Tories in January, 1779, and imprisoned in New York, from whence he was exchanged May 26, 1780; and he died at Woodbridge, July 23, 1781, of wounds received in action.

Asher Fitz Randolph, of Woodbridge, was a spirited and valuable officer, and extremely popular among his neighbors, many of whom enlisted in his company. He was successively an ensign in Capt. Freeman's company of State troops, lieutenant in the same, major in Haye's battalion of State troops, and captain of a company of Middlesex troops. Although conspicuous and energetic, his losses were light, being principally of cattle, clothing, provisions, and a few household goods.

Samuel Randolph, of Piscataway, was first a captain and then a major in the First Middlesex Regiment. He escaped with slight loss, the chief item in his inventory being a fine stallion valued at £50.

Eseck and Malichi Randolph were first privates in the Middlesex militia and afterwards in Capt. Asher F. Randolph's company. Eseck was plundered at five different times of everything in the form of apparel that was at that time to be found in the house of a comfortable farmer, if, indeed, he were a farmer, which I am led to doubt from the items in his inventory of "70 gallons of rum" and "6 case bottles full of cherry and plain rum." Malichi was plundered twice only, but yet very effectually. The enemy burned his capacious barn, thirty-six by twenty-four feet in dimensions; destroyed his shed, cider-mill, and over five thousand rails and posts; damaged his dwelling-house, and wantonly laid waste his orchards, one of which, he says regretfully, was "in its perfection."

Phineas and Ephraim Randolph, of Piscataway, and Joseph Randolph, of Woodbridge, were privates in the Middlesex militia. Joseph's loss was small, but among the articles was a "ferry scow and canoe," from which the avocation of a ferryman may be inferred. Ephraim was pillaged four times, and on one of their visits the enemy must have made a long stay, since one of the items in his inventory is "for the use of my house 3 months £3." They seem to have made themselves entirely at home during their stay, all his grain, cattle, poultry, clothing, wood, household goods, and even his wife's "cotton petticoat" having been appropriated to their use by the marauders. Phineas, however, was the greatest sufferer of the three. The enemy burned up his fences, consisting of twelve thousand rails and stakes; fed up over four hundred bushels of his grain and thirty-six tons of hay; destroyed nine hundred and eighty-one trees and saplings, and carried off one horse and sixteen cows, with hogs, turkeys, and other edibles innumerable. They made free with his bedding and apparel, ate his "2 hives of honey" and a flock of sheep, and drove off with his pleasure-sleigh and his wife's "good red short cloak." His loss exceeded £440.

John Ross and James Rowland, of Woodbridge, and Joseph Robison, of New Brunswick, were privates in the Middlesex militia. Ross' loss was trivial. Among Robinson's losses were "1 pair of pockets with £6 in cash." It would seem that he was a cooper from the large quantity of "hogshhead staves and headings" that he records. Rowland's losses were very serious. The enemy burned his "dwelling-house, 49 feet by 31," "barn, 35 by 32 feet," "cider-house, 36 by 26," etc., and carried away his fine "half-blooded mares," his sheep, grain, hay, furniture, clothing, and "£14 in cash," to the total sum of £475.

William Scudder, of Windsor, at first was first major of the Third Middlesex Regiment, and afterwards lieutenant-colonel of the same. He was a miller, as his ancestors were and as many of his descendants continued to be to a late day, at Scudder's Mills. These consisted in the Revolution of a grist- and fulling-mill, which were totally destroyed by the enemy. The grist-mill is described in the inventory as "in good repair, with 2 pr. Stones and all the apparatus for carrying on the business in the most extensive manner, £900," and the fulling-mill consisted of "1 Fulling House & Mill, Press House, and all the apparatus for finishing Cloth, £200." Col. Scudder's entire loss amounted to £1188.

John Schenck, of Windsor, was a captain successively in the Second and Third Middlesex Regiments. His loss was a little over £45, and among the articles enumerated were "150 Rations of Hay, £7 in cash, and 3 Regimental coats."

Richard Skinner, of Woodbridge, was a captain in the First Middlesex Regiment, and was killed in a skirmish near Woodbridge, July 1, 1779. Two years before he had been plundered by the enemy of horses, cattle, clothing, and household goods, £54.

Thomson Stelle, of Piscataway, was a captain, and afterwards paymaster of the Middlesex militia. Among other things he was robbed of his horses, one of which he describes as a "half-blooded Mare with fold by true Britain." His hay, wheat, and household goods were all thoroughly plundered. The marauding party which visited him were truly catholic in their attentions, and stickled at nothing from an ox chain to a pair of silver shoe-buckles. Some of their number must have been of a literary turn of mind, since they carried off from his library "Phillipses Dictionary, Harris Do. in 2 Volumes, and 1 Bound Book of New Jersey Laws."

Joseph Skelton, of Princeton, was successively a lieutenant in the Middlesex militia, in Heard's brigade, and in the Continental army. His losses were quite large, and consisted principally of horses, cattle, and grain. In his inventory are several items which are suggestive of the peculiar hardships attending the visitations of the enemy, among which we instance "Hay and corn for 24 horses," "Team prest at suudry times," "The Dragons 1 Night fed hay & corn till morning."

Hendrick Smock, of Piscataway, was a private in the Middlesex militia and a heavy sufferer. His dwelling-house, kitchen, and barn, worth £250, were burned, together with twenty-three thousand rails, posts, and stakes. His horses, sheep, cattle, hogs, grain, and hay were carried off, besides almost everything that can be conceived of as forming the stock of household goods, clothing, and utensils of a prosperous farmer of that day. Undoubtedly wealthy as he was, the only articles in his very lengthy and minute inventory that might be deemed luxuries were "1 Quart China Bowl & 4 China Cups and Saucers," "1 pair of Silver Knee-buckles," and "1 Small Chest with 65 yds. of 7 Hud linen." Noteworthy among the other articles are "3 Spanish Dollars," "1 leather pocket-book with 1 Dol^r and 1 Guinea," and "1 Able-bodied Negro Man 29 y^rs of age, £90." His losses exceeded £833.

William and Samuel Stone, of Woodbridge, were privates in the Middlesex militia. William was three times pillaged, and Samuel twice. Their losses were large of horses and cattle, of which they had a great stock, besides grain, hay, etc.

George Soder, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia. His losses, or more properly the losses of his wife, were mostly of female clothing and bedding.

David Stewart, of Woodbridge, was a private in the Middlesex militia. The enemy robbed him of his shirts and trousers, but his wife was a great sufferer, all her wardrobe having been relentlessly spirited away, including her "Silk Bonnet," "Short Gownd," and even her "petticoat and 2 Shifts."

John Shippey, of Raritan Landing, was a private in the Middlesex militia. The enemy burned his dwelling-house, shop, and store-house, appraised at £320, together with several thousand rails and posts. They carried off his grain, hay, and "1 fish-net, 80 fathoms long, with land and sea warp;" also quite an armory, consisting of "1 Gun & Bayonet, 1 Sword, 1 Pistol, 2 powder-horns, and 1 Rifle frock."

Peter T. Schenck, of Raritan Landing, was a private in the Middlesex militia. His dwelling-house and fences were consumed.

Charles Suydam, of Raritan Landing, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and one of the heaviest sufferers from the enemy, his inventory amounting to £2033 8s. 5d. They spared his dwelling-house, but burned his barn, hovels, cider-mill and house, and wagon-house, and carried off a large amount of grain, hay, clothing, household goods, sheep, cattle, and horses. There are several noticeable items in his list, some of which betray wealth and, for the times, luxurious surroundings. Among these are "£650 in Cash," "2 Silver Tablespoons & Do. Teaspoons," "1 Quart China Bowl," "1 pr. new buckskin breeches & 10 Silver buttons," "1 Silver Watch," "1½ Barls of Metheglin & ½ Barl Rum."

John Smalley, Joseph Stelle, Henry Sutton, and Jonathan Sharp, all of Piscataway, were privates in the Middlesex militia. The three first named were robbed of clothing and household goods in considerable quantities. Sutton's barn and over twelve thousand rails and stakes were burned, and his grain, hay, and cattle carried away. Sharp also had his dwelling-house and barn destroyed, and a number of household and farming utensils pillaged.

Peter Stults, Jacob Skillman, John Sunderland, and Isaac Snediker, of South Brunswick, were privates in the Middlesex militia; and John Storey, also of South Brunswick, was a private in Capt. Morgan's company, Second Regiment. They were each pillaged of small amounts, apparently by foraging parties.

Garret Schenck, of Penn's Neck, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and lost quite largely, among other items "1 Negro Boy, 16 years old, cost £75."

Peter Stoothoof, near New Brunswick, was a private in the Middlesex militia, and was plundered of his horses, cattle, sheep, clothing, and household goods.

Jonathan Thorp and Isaac Tappen, of Woodbridge, were privates in the Middlesex militia, and Thorp also served in Capt. Asher F. Randolph's company of State troops. Thorp was robbed of stock, clothing, and household goods to an inconvenient amount, and Tappen was visited eight different times, and each time pillaged of valuable horses and cattle.

John Thomson, of New Brunswick, was a first lieutenant in Capt. John Lyle's company, Third Regiment. The enemy carried off his sloop of 30 tons burden and sundry other things.

Daniel Turner, John Van Harlingen, Richard Van Arsdalen, Isaac Van Arsdalen, Ephraim Vantine, and William Van Deursen, of New Brunswick, were privates in the Middlesex militia. Their losses were chiefly of horses, fencing, cattle, household goods, and damages to buildings. Van Harlingen's barn and Van Deursen's store-house were burnt by the enemy. Van Deursen was an influential member of the Dutch Church at New Brunswick, and acting in its behalf, exhibited the inventory of the damages which it suffered from the British.

John Van Emburgh, of New Brunswick, was successively second and first major of the Second Mid-dlex Regiment. He was taken prisoner by the enemy at Tom's River, May 14, 1780, but had the good fortune to effect his escape soon after. He was plundered of various household articles, provisions, etc. He was an active member of the Presbyterian Church at New Brunswick, and was one of its trustees in 1785.

William Taylor, John Thaxton, and Israel Thornal, of Woodbridge, were privates in the Middlesex militia. The losses of the two first named were light, but Thornal was a heavy loser. He was plundered at four different times of a large number of fine cattle and horses worth £245.

Jacob Van Deventer, of Piscataway, was a captain in the First Middlesex Regiment. He was visited three times by the enemy, and pillaged of household goods, grain, and clothing.

Simon Van Nortvick, James Wooden, Samuel Walker, Thomas Webster, and Samuel Whitehead, of Piscataway, were privates in the Middlesex militia, and were all preyed upon by the enemy. Walker apparently was in the tobacco trade, as among his losses were "1 Hog-shead of Tobacco of 1000 lb. weight," and "1 Barrel of Cut D^o 100 lb." Wooden's loss was large, of cattle, horses, timber, grain, sheep, and a great number of rails.

John Wetherill, of South Brunswick, at the commencement of the war was colonel of the Second Middlesex Regiment. He was plundered lightly.

John Webster, of Piscataway, was first a captain in the First Middlesex Regiment, and afterward successively its lieutenant-colonel and colonel. He was a farmer on a large scale, and was heavily robbed of hay, grain, cattle, flax, and household goods.

The examination of these inventories reveals many characteristics of the people of those times, and affords numerous glimpses of their social life. It is evident that they were thrifty, provident house-keepers and good lovers; frugal, careful in the sense that Martha was, and believers in the maxims then current, "Many a little makes a muckle," and "A penny saved is two pence clear." As to wealth, theirs was a day of small things, and the solicitude which they showed for articles of little intrinsic value according to our standards was due to the fact that their means were largely composed of such. We are not surprised, therefore, at the frequent record of articles damaged, destroyed, or stolen, the worth of which was measured by a sixpence, a ninepence, or a shilling. A paper of pins, a delit bowl, a pewter dish or platter, and the like were prime necessities, not easily replaced, the value of which to our ancestors we can scarcely duly estimate in our day of lavish and cheap comforts and conveniences. Still a silver thread of honesty and simple integrity and truthfulness runs conspicuously through all the tokens of their provident solicitude. This is apparent in their precise descriptions of their losses, and their evident anxiety that while their goods should be appraised at their full worth they should not be estimated above their value. Hence the frequent recurrence of such qualifying phrases as "new," "most new," "nearly new," "half-worn," "three-quarters worn," "part worn," "little worn," and "much worn," "the worse for wear," "but little the worse for wear," and "none the worse for wear," etc. If a horse or a cow was "valuable" they said so; if old or of inferior value they as frankly stated the fact. Nowhere can there be discerned any purpose to trick a bargain at the public expense; but their aim seems to have been to exhibit the exact loss they had suffered and to secure that they should be made whole. Their careful exactitude and honest truthfulness are marked features of all their inventories, and are in refreshing contrast with the reckless disregard for those cardinal virtues which distinguish kindred documents of our own times.

The men of "Seventy-six" were liberal "providers" so far as the creature comforts, food and drink and clothing, were concerned. Barrels of pork and beef, sides of beef, flitches and sides of bacon, carcasses of venison and mutton, and multitudes of gammons and shoulders frequently appear in these inventories in quantities of which we have no experience in these days of abundant shops and markets. The great number of roasting pigs, ducks, fowls, turkeys, and geese which the inventories show to have been carried off by the enemy at their advent in November and December, 1776, indicates not only the lavish store of these maintained by our forefathers, but also that they must have been put on "short allowance" for their Christmas and New-Year dinners in that calamitous year. Beside the meats already mentioned, they had pickled and smoked beef and pork, veal, sausages, wild fowl in abundance, and luscious tit-bits of coon and bear. Shad and herring were plentiful in their season, and were laid down by the barrel and even hoghead for winter use. Every household was supplied with butter, lard, molasses, sugar, and honey, the last mentioned being so common that almost every farmer had his hive or more of bees. Wheat, rye, buckwheat, Indian corn, potatoes, beans, turnips, and beets abounded, and there was a great wealth of apples, cherries, peaches, and pears. For beverage they had tea, coffee, cocoa, and chocolate, also cider and metheglin, the former by the barrel, and even by one, two, and ten hog-heads, and the latter by the keg and barrel, while for those who were not content with these there were brandy, cider, spirits, gin, and rum in all their variety, anised cordial, cherry brandy, and wines of all kinds. Almost every gentleman kept in his cellar a liberal supply of these, wine especially being stored by the barrel, or in cases each containing six or twelve large square flasks. Tobacco and snuff too were in quite general use, the last named being greatly affected by the gentility. Tobacco was smoked in pipes or chewed, but was not manufactured generally if at all into cigars, not a solitary instance appearing in all these inventories of a cigar as forming part of any of the losses.

The people of those times were respectably and comfortably clad. Their store of clothing was abundant and good; many of the fabrics used were elegant, and the fashion of their dress was frequently very stately. Pantaloon, it is true, were not yet in vogue, but instead there were breeches of leather, buckskin, worsted, homespun, stockinet, black and brown broadcloth, plush, and velvet for winter, and for summer of linen, cotton, nankin, white dymity, and drilling. Dress-coats, surtouts, and great-coats were made of bearskin, buckskin, homespun, denim, wilton, broadcloth, velvet, and sagatha.¹ Cloaks were of camlet, broadcloth, and velvet; vests of linen, twilled cotton, diaper, white dymity, serge, broadcloth, and velvet; gloves of leather; hats of felt, castor, and velvet; shirts of linen, cotton, homespun, and tow; stockings of woolen, cotton, linen, and yarn. For boots and shoes almost every householder had in his house whole calf-skins dressed, and sides of sole and other leather. Such were the materials of which the garments of the men of "Seventy-six" were made, and they bespeak comfort in every case and dignified respectability in most.

The apparel of the ladies was still more varied, and exhibits their characteristic love of gay colors and beautiful fabrics. The assortment is almost endless, combining the useful and the ornamental. Judging from the inventories presented by their husbands, the ladies of those times must all have considered caps and aprons indispensable to their toilet, the humblest among them having been the possessors of an indefinite number of each, the former being made for the most part of cambric, taffety, millinet, gauze, and linen, and the latter of lawn, Holland linen, taffety, muslin, millinet, check, homespun, and even tow. Their bonnets and hoods were of beaver, satin, and bright-colored silks and velvets; their cloaks of worsted, broadcloth, camlet, flannel, gay-colored silks, white and black satin, purple and black and blue velvet, and brilliant scarlet cloth. Their dresses formed a boundless variety of material. The common short gown, which seems to have been a great favorite with the ladies when they were not in full toilet, was of kersey, Holland linen, worsted, wilton, calamanco,² check, homespun, and linsey-woolsey. Their gowns were of check, striped cotton, worsted, striped homespun calico, "boughten calico," muslin, chintz, outside chintz lined with calico, white Holland, blue and striped Holland, black and blue durant,³ groset,² bombazine, blue and black russel,² moreen, poplin, velvet, French tabby, and of lutestring and white, crimson, and other colored silks and satins. For the hands they wore gloves of knit stuff, silk, and leather; their stockings were of thread, cotton, muslin, yarn, linen, worsted, and silk; and their shoes of cloth, prunella, calamanco, silk, and leather. Shawls were of cloth, cashmere, and taffety. Handkerchiefs and kerchiefs abounded in their wardrobe, and were of linen, cambric, taffety, muslin, gauze, and Barcelona silk. Of shifts and petticoats their supply seems to have been well-nigh inexhaustible, some ladies recounting as many as twelve or fifteen of each, the former being made of homespun and muslin at times, but chiefly of fine five- and six-hundred linen, and the latter of linsey, tow, flannel, kersey, dimity, bombazine, and calamanco.

¹ A kind of serge.

² Durant is the fabric known as "everlasting;" russel was a kind of linsey-woolsey. I have not been able to ascertain what groset was. Calamanco was a stuff resembling prunella.

Equally abundant and various were the articles of household wear. The bed and all that appertained to it was the special pride of the mistress of the house. It was almost invariably of sweet, soft, and downy feathers. Its sheets were of the finest "homespun" five- or six-hundred linen. The bedspreads were of calico, and of "blue and white stuff;" the quilts of calico, calamanco, black and blue durant, green and blue "Persian" and of lutestring; the blankets and rugs of homespun and imported spotted woolen and flannel, and especially the famous Rose blanket; and the towering posts at either corner suspended "testers" of cloth, and were garnished with valances and showy curtains of dimity, damask, calico, chintz, diaper, blue and white stuff, homespun striped and wove with damask flowers, or silk. For table use they had napkins of linen, and tablecloths of diaper, diaper-wove huckabuck, kersey, or damask plain and flowered.

The household furniture of those simple times was a strange contrast to the kinds now in use. China was as rare as gold; most commonly three china cups and saucers comprised the entire holiday outfit of a respectable family, though the number rose sometimes to six, but seldom to a dozen. These and bowls were usually of delft or queensware. Plates were equally seldom of china, but, together with servers, dishes, platters, spoons, tea-pots, coffee-pots, and tankards, were of pewter, brilliantly polished, and rivaling the richest silver in lustre. Pewter and copper were the ornamental, and iron was then as now the serviceable metal. Of the two former were also made basins, ewers, pint and quart mugs, porringers, ladles, and tea and coffee-kettles. There was but little white glassware in use, and the few jelly-glasses, wine-glasses, half-pint and gill glasses, salt-cellars, tumblers, and punch-goblets of glass that are enumerated were evidently highly prized. Looking-glasses and clocks embellished the houses of the wealthy or highly genteel, and the size of the former seems to have corresponded with the degree of their owners' social standing. Stoves were not in general use, and coal was unknown except for blacksmithing purposes. Wood, turf, and charcoal were the only fuels. The two former were beginning to be burned in "Franklins," and in cast-iron stoves, known as "ten-plate stoves," but were most commonly used in fireplaces, provided with dogs and andirons, and which in the kitchens were huge caverns, garnished with a forest of chains, hooks, pots and trammels, swinging on iron cranes, or "smoke-jacks," over fires that were fed by great logs from four to six feet in length.

The principal articles of furniture, even in the best ordered household, were not numerous. Mahogany was the most costly and the most aristocratic material, and of it were made their choice chairs, straight and high-backed, bedsteads, chests, drawers, stands, tables, and buffets. Few families were without a "dresser" and a "corner cupboard;" and the wealthier ones adorned their houses with the stately "Dutch cupboard," made of costly wood in Holland, and almost capacious enough for a town-meeting. The ordinary household furniture was usually made of bilsted, gum, pine, walnut, cherry, or red cedar. This last was the favorite, and being indigenous to the State it was within reach of all, and applied to almost every possible use,—for pails, tubs, piggon, lye-casks, tables, stands, cupboards, sawbanks,¹ churns, and because of its fragrant odor and indestructibility, as well as from the belief that it was never infested by vermin, was especially appropriated to bureaus, clothes-presses, and the like. If few families were without a cupboard, full as few were without the large and small wheel for spinning wool, linen, and cotton, and the loom for weaving these into the cloth for the varied uses of the household. It is rarely that these are absent from any extended inventory.

The men and women of the Revolution had few books, but what they had they mastered thoroughly and exhaustively. Out of the six or seven hundred whose losses are inventoried in the old record we are considering, only forty-three present any claims for books pillaged or destroyed. This may be due in part to the fact that the British and Hessian marauders attached slight value to books, especially the kind which formed the literary treasures of our ancestors, or that they considered them too cumbersome to carry off. Still they were not so cumbersome but that they might have been destroyed. The chief reason for the small losses of our ancestors in this line is doubtless that books were as rare as rubies, and were possessed by a few only. Wherever there were collections of them a Bible or a psalm-book were found in the number, and, indeed, most commonly constituted the entire library. As a matter of curiosity and historical record, I append the names of those who owned books, together with the titles of the latter and their value, as follows:

¹ A "sawbank," or "slabank," was an indispensable article to every housekeeper in the olden times. The name is derived from the Dutch "sluip tank," or sleeping-bench. It was sometimes constructed in the shape of a cupboard, with closing doors, and contained a bed. More commonly it was a box holding the bedding, which was attached to the wall by hinges. It was folded up against the wall by day, and at night was let down to the floor to serve as a bed. Occasionally it took the shape of a bench or sofa to sit on during the day, opening by hinges to form a bed by night.

Applegate, Josiah, New Brunswick, "1 Bound Book of John Milton's Work, 10/."

Ayres, Reuben, of Woodbridge, "2 Bibles & 10 other Books, £2.10."

Ayres, Joseph, of Woodbridge, "1 Bible, 1 hymn-book, and some other books, 12/."

Allford, Benjamin, of Woodbridge, "1 Small new Bible, 1 Psalm-Book, 8/."

Bray, John, of Baritan Landing, "The whole volumes of the Speculator, £3; Barknet on the New Testament, £2."

Bishop, James, of Woodbridge, "2 Bibles & 1 new Dictionary, 15/."

Deown, Joseph, of Piscataway, "1 Small Bible, 6/."

Brown, George, of Woodbridge, "1 Bible and some other Books, 15/."

Boice, Cornelius, of Piscataway, "1 Book bound with Silver and Silver Clasps, & a Silver Chain, £3.15."

Crawford, John, of Woodbridge, "1 Bible, 6/; 2 Sermon-Books, 1 large, 7/."

Compton, Samuel, of Woodbridge, "2 Common Bibles, 10/; 1 Testament, 3/; 1 psalm-book, 2/6/."

Dunn, Benjamin, Piscataway, "2 Books, Salinan's Gazetteer & Harvy, £1.4/."

Dally, Samuel, Woodbridge, "1 Bible & Sermon Book, 9/."

Deare, Jonathan, Princeton, "A number of Law & other books value of £40."

Evans, William, New Brunswick, "Several fine books worth 35/."

Flatt, John, Woodbridge, "1 Common Bible, 6/."

Field, Michel, Piscataway, "1 Small Bible, 4/6; 1 psalm-book, & 3 other books, 10/."

French, William, Piscataway, "3 Bibles, 1 large dutch, & other English, £2.6/6/."

Folkerson, Philip, Middlebush, "1 Large note-book, 3/; 1 Testament, 1 Spelling-Book, 6/6/."

Freeman, Henry, Woodbridge, "2 Volumes of Laws Bound, £3/."

Griggs, Benjamin, South Brunswick, "1 dutch Bible, Silver Mounted, £3.15/."

Hyer, Jacob, Princeton, "1 large chest of Valuable Books of different kinds, £10/."

Lester, Joseph, Woodbridge, "1 large new Bible, 30/."

Matcher, Mary, New Brunswick, "1 new Bible, 6/."

Moore, Samuel, Woodbridge, "Several Valuable books, worth 20/."

Martin, John, Woodbridge, "1 Book call'd the London Art, 17, 6/."

Nelson, James, New Brunswick, "1 Case of Books, worth £60/."

Pound, Isaac, Piscataway, "1 Bible 2 Small Books, 12/."

Roe, Rev. Azel, Woodbridge, "1 Very Elegant Bible, 4 to £3/."

Randolph Ruth, Piscataway, "1 Large Bible, 30/."

Read, Rev. Israel, Piscataway, "Considerable part of my Library which contained upwards of 150 volumes, £18.15/."

Schenck, Peter T., Baritan Landing, "4 Volumes of Josephes Works, £1.10/; 1 Silver Bound dutch Psalm Book, 15/."

Stivers, Randolph, Woodbridge, "1 Small Bible, 6/."

Stelle, Thomson, Piscataway, "Phillipses Dictionary, Harris D^o in 2 Vols, £1.4/; 1 Bound Book of New Jersey Laws, £1.10/."

Stewart, David, Woodbridge, "1 Bible, 5/."

Tombs, Michel, Woodbridge, "1 Bible, 1 Testament & Spelling Book, 9/."

Van Arsdala, Isaac, New Brunswick, "2 dutch books, 1 dav's psalms & other a prayer, 10/."

Van Deventer, Jacob, Piscataway, "1 Sclait, 3/; 1 Small bible, 6/; 1 book y^e y^e mans Com^o, 3/; 1 Psalter & Psalm book, 3/."

Voorhees, John (Shoemaker), New Brunswick, "2 English Bibles, 5 Testaments, and 1 Psalm Book, 11/." A large quantity of books worth £7/."

Voorhees, Gette, New Brunswick, "1 Psalm Book with Silver hooks and clasps, 15/."

Voorhees, John (carpenter), New Brunswick, "1 large Dutch Bible, 1 Testament, Silver Bound, £4.10. Harris's Travels, Builder's Diction^o, 2 Vols, £1.10/."

Van Heusen, William, New Brunswick, "a parcel of dutch & English Books."

Vantilburg, William, Kingston, "5 Maps of 4 Quarters of World & Globe, £7.10/."

Williamson, Samuel, Baritan Landing, "1 Bible."

The precious metals, and articles for ornament or use made of them, were almost as scarce as books.

Silver teaspoons were very rare, and the old record shows that not more than three or six were possessed by substantial farmers and mechanics, and more commonly they could boast of one only. Silver table-spoons were yet more rare. It was seldom that comparatively wealthy families owned them, or any other household articles made of that precious material. Occasionally, however, in these inventories we come across families who counted among their valuables a huge tankard, or a quart bowl, or a pint mug, or salt-cellars of silver. In one instance a silver server weighing fifty-nine and a half ounces is mentioned, and a dozen silver-handled knives and forks. Silver knee-buckles, shoe-buckles, and stock-buckles were largely worn by our ancestors when equipped in their best breeches of broadcloth, plush, nankeen, or velvet, as also silver vest and breeches buttons. Sleeve-buttons of gold and silver adorned their shirts, and frequently had lockets attached containing relics or miniatures. Watches and snuff-boxes of gold and silver formed an essential part of every well-bred gentleman's outfit, and the ladies wore finger- and ear-rings of gold, chains of gold, with pendants, trinkets, and lockets, and in some cases necklaces, solitaires, stars, and other ornaments of garnet and gold or gold and brilliants. But beyond the possession of a plain gold ring, these were rare and exceptional cases.

The modes of locomotion were widely different in those days from those which now prevail. There were then no turnpikes, macadamized roads, or railroads. The travel was tedious, and the country roads few and rugged. Journeys were mostly undertaken on horseback, and it was thus the men and women went to church, to mill, and "to town." Side-saddles and riding-coats and habits for women were therefore a universal necessity. The vehicles outside of the heavy lumbering wagon were riding-chairs, chaises, and gigs, the bodies sunk down between two high wheels and swung on wooden springs. In the winter sleds were used as now, and besides these nearly every man had his pleasure-sleigh for family use. It must have been a pleasant sight to see these when laden with ladies clad in their many-colored silks, satins, and velvets, and especially pleasant must have been the contrast of their brilliant scarlet cloaks with the snow-white mantle which covered the earth.

It is an interesting inquiry to compare with present prices those that then prevailed for such articles as constituted the necessities of life. And in prosecuting it we should bear in mind that our ancestors followed "York" currency, as indeed we continued to do until a recent period. A "pound" was twenty "York" shillings, and the "York" shilling was equivalent to twelve and one-half cents. A pound was therefore two dollars and fifty cents. If wheat be taken as the standard for arriving at the purchasing power of money, it will be found that one dollar would then buy as much as three dollars will now buy. It follows that a man who was then worth one dollar was as well off as one who to-day is worth three dollars, and this is the relative difference in the purchasing power of money at the two periods.

The men of those times studied brevity. This is apparent in all their writings, not so much perhaps in the expression of their ideas concisely as in their economy of letters. Their abbreviations of words, which was the fashion of that and much earlier days, were very numerous and perplexing from their peculiarity. Some of them require as much patience for their interpretation as a rebus. They were not confined to particular and much used technical words or to final syllables, but were applied indiscriminately. "The" was abbreviated to "ye," "your" to "yr," "companion" to "comp," "hundred" to "h^d," "young" to "y^e," "Fitz" to "Fz," and so on indefinitely. When two consonants came together one was usually dropped, and a circumflex over the one that was retained denoted the elision. Thus "wagon," according to the established usage of those days, was correctly spelled with two "g's," and when it was spelled with one only the writer signified that he knew better by resorting to the circumflex. So also with such words as common, trammel, cellar, pillow, committee, etc., one of the doublets was uniformly dropped, and the writer's knowledge of its absence indicated by the circumflex. Their capitalization was equally peculiar, and was as systematic as that now in use if less correct. The leading and emphatic words, or, in the language of a writer of that day, "all the more eminent words in a sentence," were written with capitals, and also all such as derived a certain stateliness or solemnity from their forming parts of legal phrases or doctrinal formulas, "all names of arts, sciences, and trades," and "all noun-substantives." In this, however, they followed a usage which had prevailed for many years even among elegant writers in the mother-country, and which continued here some years after it had become obsolete there. As having some relation to their style in composition, I am tempted to note here some very odd collocations that occur in these inventories, by which the most incongruous things are frequently jumbled together in strange companionship in one entry. They are very quaint, and their simplicity will provoke a smile. For instance, among the entries are such as these: "2 fine white Shirts and a pepper-mill;" "15 lbs. of Butter and pot and 6 Shifts;" "1 pillow-case with 7 lbs. of Sugar;" "1 Silk caulet Vest, 2 pewter plates;" "24 lbs. of cheese and 1 pr. of common Gloves;" "1 large Hog and 1 good Tea-kettle;" "1 Tankard and 1 pr. of new Sheets;" "1 Large Bible and 1 new Silk Bonnet;" "1 pr. of Striped Trowsers and 1 pewter teapot;" "1 looking Glass, 1 Bible, 1 hand-saw and 25 fowls;" "1 Heifer, 3 years old, and 2 new Shirts;" "1 Cradle and a large Bake Trough;" "1 good bedstead and 16 Bus, Turnips;" "1 new fine Shirt, 1 sheep;" "1 Tea-kettle and Grindstone;" "Sett Chaney and good Bible;" "1 English Bible and 1 Smoothing Iron;" "1 Musket and 1 Mair, 7 years old;" "1 yearling Calf and 1 Iron pot;" "1 psalm book and 2 bus. hard salt."

It is impossible to make even a cursory examination of these old inventories without remarking the great number of guns that were in the possession of our ancestors. The abundance of deer, bears, foxes, and wolves will partly but not entirely explain this. It is probable that their nearly universal distribution was largely due to the policy of the proprietors who originally owned and governed the State, and who made the ownership of a musket one of the conditions of their grants of lands to settlers. In their "Grants and Concessions," in order that "the planting of the province may be more speedily promoted," they stipulate to grant as follows: "Unto all persons who had already adventured to the province, or who shall transport themselves or servants before Jan. 1, 1665: To every Freeman who shall go with the first Governor" etc., "armed with a good Musket, bore twelve bullets to the pound, with ten pounds of Powder & 20 pounds of Bullets, with Bandeliers & Match convenient," etc., "150 acres; and for every able servant that he shall carry with him, armed and provided as aforesaid, 150 acres." The same stipulations were extended to those who should go in two successive years thereafter. And the policy was kept up by the proprietors to a much later date. Whatever was the cause of the general supply which was found to exist in 1775, it was most fortunate for our ancestors and their cause, since all soldiers of the State establishment or of the Continental army were required to furnish themselves with arms, the resolution of Congress being "that each of the privates be allowed, instead of a bounty, one felt hat, a pair of yarn stockings, and a pair of shoes, the men to find their own arms."¹

The study of our ancestors in Middlesex County, which we have now concluded, has been a prolonged and quite close one, and the views we have been enabled to take of their social condition have been clear and minute. We have crossed their thresholds and inspected the interiors of their households. We have seen their few comforts, elegancies, and luxuries, and have grown familiar with that which made up the sum of their common necessities. Their food, raiment, furniture, utensils, and industries have been inspected in more or less close detail. We have had near observations of their manners, customs, and peculiarities. We have been witnesses of their prevalent substantial well-being at the opening of the war of the Revolution; and of the privations which they endured and the indignities and outrages to which they were subjected when the British soldiery occupied their farms, villages, and towns and burned their dwellings and crops. Their patient endurance, their zealous patriotism, their unconquerable devotion to the cause of liberty and independence, their thrift, frugality, simplicity, rectitude, and fortitude have all passed before us like the scenes of a diorama, and the result has been to lift these men to a higher level. In all the qualities which constitute genuine manhood they were rich beyond precedent, and they remain at this day the best models for our imitation in all those solid and unobtrusive virtues which make a vigorous and great people. Their entire record may be scanned by those of us who are their descendants and inheritors with praiseworthy pride and reverential gratitude. May their memory remain green among us so long as liberty is worth sacrifices, sufferings, privations, wounds, and death!¹

¹ Journal of Congress, Oct. 9, 1775.

CHAPTER LXVII.

MIDDLESEX MEN IN THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Roster of State Troops.

BRIGADIER-GENERALS.

Heard, Nathaniel. Neilson, John.

COLONELS.

Hyer, Jacob. Taylor, Robert.
Taylor, John. Wetherill, John.

LIEUTENANT-COLONELS.

Crow, Samuel. Haddeo, Thomas.
Deare, Jonathan. Lott, Richard.
Dunham, Azariah. Scudder, William.
Dunn, Micajah. Taylor, John.

MAJORS.

Dunn, John. Parker, Samuel F.
Clarkson, Edgar. Potter, Renben.
Egbert, Thomas. Randolph, Samuel.
Lyle, John. Van Emburgh, John.
Nixon, Robert.

PAYMASTER.

Steele, Thompson.

QUARTERMASTER.

Van Kirk, John.

SURGEON.

Scott, Moses.

CAPTAINS.

Addis, Simon. Gulick, Joakim.
Anderson, Andrew. Harnott, George.
Barron, Ellis. Harttipee, William.
Barr, —. Hope, —.
Bonny, James. Hulick, —.
Chambers, David. Jaquish, —.
Combs, Thomas. Johnston, Henthcote.
Conover, William. Lupardus, Christian.
Curtis, —. Lapp, —.
De Bow, James. Manning, Jeremiah.
Dey, John. Manning, William.
Dunn, Hugh. McCullough, Benjamin.
Ferguson, Josiah. Moore, James.
Frazier, David. Morgan, James.
Freeman, Matthew. Nevius, Peter.
Guest, Moses. Pain, John.
Guest, William. Perrine, Peter.

Piatt, Jacob. Stelle, Thompson.
Piatt, —. Stout, Samuel.
Piatt, —. Ten Eyck, Jeremiah.
Randolph, Nathaniel Fitz. Van Deventer, Jacob.
Randolph, Reuben. Van Nest, Peter.
Ross, Robert. Van Winkle, Simeon.
Schenck, John. Voorhees, John, Jr.
Schuyler, Abram. Wentzel, —.
Scudder, —. Wetherill, —.
Sebring, Jacob. Wetherill, —.
Shearer, —. Williamson, William.
Skinner, Richard. Wood, —.
Smalley, David. Woolsey, —.
Statsons, John.

LIEUTENANTS.

Barricklo, Farrington. Van Felt, —.
Cape, John. Voorhees, Daniel.
Dean, Stephen. Voorhees, John L.
De Groot, William. Edgar, David.
Drake, John. Marsb, Ralph.
Field, Jeremiah. Mersarall, Jacob.
Fisher, Charles. Schureman, James.
Gilliland, David. Skilton, Joseph.
Lott, George. Terhune, Abram.
McDowell, Andrew. Thompson, George.
Morgan, Nicholas. Thompson, John.
Mount, John. Thompson, John.
Perrall, John.

ENSIGNS.

Bareford, Lewis. Morford, —.
Carman, Stephen. Morgan, James, Jr.
Dunn, Ephraim. Phares, John.
Gordon, Archibald. Randolph, Lewis F.
Grove, Samuel. Suydam, Hendrick.
Hampton, John.

CORNET.

SERGEANTS.

Buckalew, Josiah. Marsh, Joshua.
Burlew, Josiah. Messier, Simon.
Covenhoven, Peter. Morgao, Abraham.
Dailey, John. Nevius, Peter.
Davison, William. Nefies, Peter.
De Hart, William. Obert, Henry.
Disbrow, Daniel. Sutton, Joseph.
Flinn, Benjamin. Thompson, James.
Griggs, John. Voorhees, William.
Lyle, Moses. Williamson, Isaac.

CORPORALS.

Ball, William. Height, David.
Crow, Garret. Isleton, Jonathan.
Dunn, John. Letts, Francis.
Green, John. Toms, Michael.

FIFERS.

Coddington, Robert. Van Derventer, John.
Horrick, Barent.

PRIVATES.

Adams, John. Applegate, Thomas.
Addis, Simeon. Applegate, William.
Alger, Archibald. Applegate, Zebulon.
Allen, Henry. Armstrong, Robert.
Allen, Jonathan. Armstrong, William.
Allison, Seth. Arnold, James.
Anderson, John. Arnold, John.
Anderson, Joseph. Arnold, Lewis.
Appley, Ambrose. Arvin, James.
Applegate, Andrew. Arvin, John.
Applegate, Charles. Arvin, Peter.
Applegate, Nathaniel. Asbondon, William.
Applegate, Noah. Ashton, Robert.
Applegate, Robert (1). Atten, Evert.
Applegate, Robert (2). Attenger, John.

¹ Paper by Charles D. Deehler.

- Ayres, Benjamin.
 Ayers, Ezekiel.
 Ayres, Jacob.
 Ayers, Jedah.
 Ayers, Nathao.
 Ayers, Renben.
 Ayers, Samuel.
 Ayres, Elric.
 Ayres, Lewis.
 Ayres, Oladiah.
 Ayres, Isaac.
 Ayres, Phineas.
 Badcock, Joseph.
 Bailey, Daniel.
 Bailey, Richard.
 Baker, Cornelius.
 Baker, John.
 Baldwin, Caleb.
 Baldwin, Enos.
 Baldwin, Woolsey.
 Bale, John.
 Barclay, Lewis.
 Barkelow, Conrod.
 Barkelaw, Henry.
 Barkels, Farronton.
 Barkels, John.
 Bastedo, Leo.
 Bateman, Daniel.
 Bayles, Daniel.
 Bayles, Richard.
 Bayles, Samuel.
 Bennet, Abraham.
 Bennet, Hendrick.
 Bennet, William.
 Bennington, Israel.
 Berconout, Daniel.
 Bergeu, Christian.
 Berlew, Abraham.
 Bicknel, John.
 Bigner, Michael.
 Bingle, James.
 Bishop, Aaron.
 Bishop, James.
 Bishop, John.
 Bishop, Richard.
 Bishop, Shotwell.
 Bishop, William.
 Bisset, Andrew.
 Black, Alexander.
 Black, Benjamin.
 Blackford, David.
 Blackford, Nathan.
 Blackford, Phineas.
 Blanchard, Clark.
 Blanchard, Isaac.
 Blane, Robert.
 Bloodgood, John.
 Bloomfield, Elias.
 Bloomfield, Ezekiel.
 Bloomfield, John.
 Bloomfield, Jonathan.
 Bloomfield, Moses.
 Bloomfield, Nathan.
 Bloomfield, Thomas, Jr.
 Bloomfield, Thomas, Sr.
 Bloomfield, William.
 Boice, George.
 Boinger, John.
 Boorum, Hendrick.
 Boorum, John.
 Boorum, Nicholas.
 Borbis, James.
 Bowers, John.
 Bowman, Andrew.
 Bowman, Peter.
 Bowne, John.
 Bradbury, Hezekiah.
 Bradbury, Hosea.
 Bradley, Robert.
 Breccourt, Solomon.
 Brewer, Thomas.
 Brickcourt, Daniel.
 Briggs, John.
 Britton, Joseph (1).
 Britton, Joseph (2).
 Brookes, John.
 Brotherton, David.
 Brotherton, William.
 Brawer, Thomas.
 Brown, Benjamin.
 Brown, James.
 Brown, John.
 Brown, Joseph (1).
 Brown, Joseph (2).
 Brown, Joseph (3).
 Brown, Lewis.
 Brown, Peter.
 Brown, William.
 Brown, Zebulon.
 Buckalew, Alexander.
 Buckalew, Cornelius.
 Buckalew, Edward.
 Buckalew, Frederick.
 Buckalew, Gilbert.
 Buckalew, Isaac.
 Buckalew, John.
 Buckalew, Peter.
 Buckalew, Runyon.
 Buckalew, Samuel.
 Buckalew, William.
 Bullin, James.
 Barcourt, David.
 Burdine, James.
 Burding, Abel.
 Burtin, Alexander.
 Burtin, Edward.
 Berlen, Frederick.
 Berlen, Frederick, Jr.
 Burtin, Gilbert.
 Burtin, Samuel.
 Burtin, Thomas.
 Burtin, William.
 Burtin, Peter.
 Burrill, Robert.
 Burwell, Robert.
 Cahill, James.
 Camborn, Joseph.
 Camp, John.
 Campbell, Benajah.
 Campbell, Dugal.
 Campbell, Eliscus.
 Campbell, Ellis R.
 Campbell, John.
 Campbell, Lewis.
 Campbell, Nathaniel.
 Campbell, Robert.
 Campbell, Spencer.
 Cufon, Levi.
 Cafon, Robert.
 Carlisle, William.
 Carman, Richard.
 Carr, Samuel.
 Carson, Joseph.
 Carter, Richard.
 Caterline, Ebenezer.
 Caywood, John.
 Caywood, Thomas.
 Caywood, William.
 Celly, Jesse.
 Chamberlain, John.
 Chamberlain, Joseph.
 Chamberlain, Lewis.
 Chambers, James.
 Chapman, Daniel.
 Chapman, James.
 Childs, John.
 Chessman, John.
 Chessman, Joseph.
 Chessman, Samuel.
 Chessman, William.
 Chessman, Zachariah.
 Clark, Alexander.
 Clark, Benjamin.
 Clark, Eli.
 Clark, Peter.
 Clark, William.
 Clarkson, Jeremiah.
 Clarkson, Randolph.
 Clarkson, Traker.
 Clarkson, James.
 Clarkson, Lewis.
 Clinton, James.
 Cock, John.
 Coddington, Enoch.
 Coddington, James.
 Coddington, John.
 Colleger, Joseph.
 Coloni, Caleb.
 Combs, Jonathan.
 Combs, Samuel.
 Combs, Stephen.
 Combs, William.
 Compton, Ephraim.
 Compton, Gabriel.
 Compton, John.
 Compton, Samuel.
 Con, Elisha.
 Condon, John.
 Conger, David.
 Conger, John.
 Conger, Jonathan.
 Connel, Michael.
 Connelly, John.
 Connelly, Ned.
 Connelly, William.
 Cook, David.
 Cook, Elisha.
 Cook, Peter.
 Cornelius, John (1).
 Cornelius, John (2).
 Cornell, Peter.
 Cornell, Roeliff.
 Cornell, Elisha.
 Corriell, Abraham.
 Corriell, David.
 Corsat, Anthony.
 Cortelyou, Hans.
 Cortelyou, John.
 Cortelyou, Roeliff.
 Cotheal, Alexander.
 Covenhoven, Francis.
 Covenhoven, Garret.
 Covenhoven, John.
 Covenhoven, Lucas.
 Covenhoven, Rester.
 Covenhoven, William.
 Covart, John.
 Covert, Thomas.
 Craig, Daniel T.
 Craig, David.
 Crane, Seth.
 Craw, Thomas.
 Crawford, William G.
 Creasey, Alexander.
 Creasey, William.
 Creasey, Andrew.
 Crow, Abraham.
 Crow, Eleseus.
 Crowell, David.
 Crowell, Edward.
 Crowell, Joseph.
 Cuffes, Amos.
 Culver, Nathaniel.
 Culvert, Azariah.
 Cutter, John.
 Cutter, Kelsey.
 Cutter, Sannel.
 Cutter, Stephen.
 Dally, Jeremiah.
 Dally, Sanael.
 Daniels, Jeremiah.
 Daniels, Randolph.
 Damets, Richard.
 Davidson, George.
 Davidson, John.
 Davis, Benjamin.
 David, David Rhay.
 Davis, Edmond.
 Davis, John.
 Davis, Lewis.
 Davis, Nathan.
 Davis, Peter.
 Davison, James.
 Davison, Jediah.
 Davison, Jephtha.
 Davison, John.
 Davison, Thomas.
 Davison, William.
 Dean, Abraham.
 Dean, Daniel.
 Dean, Jacob.
 Drake, Abram.
 Drake, Benjamin.
 Drake, Cheesman.
 Drake, Chesur.
 Drake, Elisha.
 Drake, Ephraim.
 Drake, George.
 Drake, Joseph.
 Drake, Sannel.
 Drake, Simon.
 Dungan, Samuel.
 Dunham, Asher.
 Dunham, Davis.
 Dunham, Elijah.
 Dunham, Enoch.
 Dunham, Frazee.
 Dunham, Jacob.
 Dunham, John.
 Dunham, John (1).
 Dunham, John (2).
 Dunham, Jonathan.
 Dunham, Joseph.
 Dunham, Joshua.
 Dunham, Samuel.
 Doryea, Frederick.
 Doryea, John.
 Dunn, Benjamin.
 Dunn, Clawson.
 Dunn, Daniel.
 Dunn, Enoch.
 Dunn, Ephraim.
 Dunn, Gershom.
 Dunn, Ichabod.
 Dunn, Isaac.
 Dunn, James F.
 Dunn, Jeremiah.
 Dunn, Joel.
 Dunn, Moses.
 Dunn, Philip.
 Dunn, Renben.
 Dunn, Thomas.
 Dye, Amos.
 Dye, Daniel.
 Dye, James.
 Dye, John.
 Dye, Joseph.
 Dye, Lawrence.

Dye, Thomas.	Gordon, Samuel.	Honke, Tobias.	Lickran, Jacob.
Eastburn, Robert.	Gordon, William.	Hudson, Nathaniel.	Light, Peter.
Eastburn, Thomas.	Graham, James.	Hudson, Samuel.	Lile, John, Sr.
Eastwood, Amariah.	Griffith, John.	Hulick, Henry.	Lile, John, Jr.
Edgar, James.	Griggs, James.	Hulick, John.	Lile, Moses.
Edgar, William.	Griggs, Samuel.	Hulet, William.	Lincoln, John.
Egbert, James.	Griggs, Thomas.	Hull, Benjamin.	Lurcom, Jacob.
Egbert, Lewis.	Grove, John.	Hull, John.	Lurcom, John.
Egerton, Matthew.	Grove, Robert.	Hull, Reuben.	Lipes, John.
Ellason, Daniel.	Grove, Samuel.	Hulet, John.	Lisk, John.
Ellason, Joseph.	Grosvendike, John.	Hulet, William.	Liston, John.
Ellason, Samuel.	Grosvendike, Samuel.	Hunt, James.	Levin, Richard.
Ellason, Seth.	Guest, Henry.	Hutchings, Isaac.	Livingston, William.
Elliott, Daniel.	Guest, John.	Hutchinson, Cornelius.	Livingston, Robert.
Ellis, Joseph.	Gulacar, Lewis.	Huyler, William.	Loiskerom, Jacob.
Ellison, Samuel.	Gulick, Abram J.	Isleton, Matthew.	Longstreet, Aaron.
Elston, Andrew.	Gulick, Benjamin.	Isleton, Samuel.	Longstreet, Samuel.
Eumons, Isaac.	Gulick, Cornelius.	Jackson, Lewis.	Lorton, James.
English, David.	Gulick, James.	James, Thomas.	Lorton, John.
English, Robert.	Gulick, Peter.	Jamison, Alexander.	Lott, Abraham.
Ensley, Daniel.	Gum, John.	Jaquish, Jonathan.	Lott, Gershom.
Erwin, John.	Hagerman, Barret.	Jeffries, John.	Lott, Henry.
Ertle, William.	Hagerman, Garret.	Jewell, Ichabod.	Lott, John.
Evans, Crowell.	Hagerman, Henry.	Jewell, William.	Lott, Peter.
Evans, James.	Halfpenny, Isaac.	Job, Richard.	Loughborough, John.
Evans, William.	Halfpenny, James.	Johs, Samuel.	Loucherry, Elias.
Everingham, John.	Halfpenny, John.	Johnson, Andrew.	Low, Benjamin.
Farcy, Amariah.	Hall, William.	Johnson, Barret.	Luke, John.
Ferner, George.	Hampton, James.	Johnson, John.	Luker, Benjamin.
Farmer, Jasper.	Hansell, Anthony.	Johnson, Lewis.	Luston, Jonathan.
Farmer, Nathan.	Harber, Edward.	Johnson, William.	Lusley, Abraham.
Farmer, Peter.	Harber, Obadiah.	Johnson, Jacob.	Lyon, William.
Feather, John.	Harboun, Edward.	Jonas, John.	Magee, James.
Field, Benjamin.	Harcus, William.	Jones, David.	Manning, Andrew.
Field, Dennis.	Harriott, Samuel.	Jones, James.	Manning, Benjamin.
Field, Elnathan.	Harris, David.	Jordan, John.	Manning, Enoch.
Field, Jeremiah B.	Harrison, George.	Jorney, John.	Manning, David.
Field, John.	Harrison, Isaac.	Keevan, Peter B.	Manning, John, Sr.
Field, John B.	Hart, Cornelius D.	Kelly, Abraham.	Manning, John, Jr.
Field, Jonathan.	Hartman, Christian.	Kelly, Jesse.	Manning, Phineas.
Field, Richard.	Hartman, Conrad.	Kemp, John.	Manning, Samuel.
Field, Richard R.	Hartman, Cornelius.	Kent, Phineas.	Manning, Thomas.
Fisher, Jacob.	Hatfield, John.	King, George.	Mople, Stephen.
Fisher, John.	Hauk, Jacob.	Kiney, James.	Muple, William.
Fisher, William.	Hayback, Solomon.	Kipp, Robert.	Martin, Nathaniel.
Flat, John.	Hazling, Richard.	Knowles, Jesse.	Martin, Benjamin.
Flood, Stephen.	Hedden, Jos.	Knox, Joseph.	Martin, Daniel.
Force, Samuel.	Hendrickson, Cornelius.	Lain, Abraham.	Martin, David.
Force, Thomas P.	Hendrickson, Oaky.	Lain, Abraham.	Martin, Elakim.
Fordyce, John.	Herbert, Obadiah.	Laird, Richard.	Martin, Gerstom.
Forman, Isaac.	Herbert, Robert.	Lake, Benjamin.	Martin, Irinais.
Foster, Nathaniel.	Herrord, Samuel.	Lake, William.	Martin, Isaac.
Fourat, Henry.	Higley, Henry.	Lambert, David.	Martin, James.
Frazer, Benson.	Higley, John.	Lamberton, Cornelius.	Martin, John.
Frazer, Hiram.	Higley, Obadiah.	Lamberton, David.	Martin, Joshua.
Frazer, Morris.	Higgins, Jediah.	Lamberton, Elijah.	Martin, Lewis.
Frazer, Moses.	High, Nathan.	Lamberton, Garret.	Martin, Merrick.
Foxy, Benjamin.	Hight, John N.	Lamberton, John.	Martin, Michael.
Frederburgh, Wm.	Hill, John.	Lamberton, Joshua.	Martin, Moses.
Gartiss, John.	Hillyard, Wm.	Lamberton, Simon.	Martin, Mulford.
Garrison, John.	Hinds, William.	Lamberton, Thomas.	Martin, Nathan.
Garrison, Peter.	Hogland, Abram.	Lane, Isaac.	Martin, Nathaniel.
Gilds, John.	Hogland, John.	Lane, Jacob.	Martin, Robert.
Gibson, David.	Hogland, William.	Lane, John.	Martin, Will am.
Gibson, Richard.	Hobbs, David.	Langstaff, Henry.	Mason, William.
Gibson, William.	Holeman, Thomas.	Langstaff, James.	Matterson, Aaron.
Gilliland, David.	Holl, Jacob.	Langstaff, John.	Mattison, Jacob.
Gilliland, Matthew.	Holloway, Richard.	Leach, Richard.	McAfee, Benjamin.
Gillman, Charles.	Holten, Ephraim.	Leforge, Benjamin.	McAfee, Richard.
Gillman, John.	Holton, Jos.	Leonard, William.	McDowell, Thomas.
Gillman, John, Jr.	Holton, Peter.	Leonard, William (2).	McFadden, Connolly.
Gilmore, Charles.	Hooper, William.	Lester, Samuel.	McGer, John.
Gadden, Amos.	Horn, John.	Letts, Elijah.	McGer, William.
Goodwin, Amos.	Horn, Stephen.	Letts, Elihu.	Melvin, Daniel.
Gordon, Archibald.	Horn, Will am.	Lotts, John.	Melvin, George.
Gordon, Ezekiel.	Horner, Timothy.	Letts, William.	Melvin, John.
Gordon, James.	Hartwick, John.	Lewis, John.	Melvin, Thomas.

Merrill, Richard.
 Mershon, Henry.
 Mershon, Robert.
 Mershon, William.
 Messerol, Charles.
 Messerol, Jacob.
 Messerol, John.
 Messerol, Nicholas.
 Messerol, Peter.
 Messerol, William.
 Messler, Abram.
 Mickel, John.
 Miers, John.
 Miller, Halse.
 Miller, Marsh.
 Miller, Noah.
 Minor, William.
 Mitchell, John.
 Moon, Jacob.
 Moore, David.
 Moore, James.
 Moore, Matthias.
 Moore, Samuel.
 Morehead, Andrew.
 Morgan, Abraham.
 Morgan, John.
 Morgan, Philip.
 Morgan, Ephraim.
 Morgan, Elijah.
 Morris, John.
 Morris, Rand-lph.
 Morris, Reuben.
 Morris, William.
 Morrison, James.
 Morse, Randolph.
 Morton, Joseph.
 Moses, Kandolph.
 Moss, James.
 Mount, Hezekiah.
 Mount, Humphrey.
 Mount, Joseph.
 Mount, Richard.
 Mount, William.
 Mulford, James.
 Mullen, William.
 Munday, Benjamin.
 Munday, Clarkson.
 Munday, Gabriel.
 Munday, Henry.
 Munday, Martin.
 Munday, Nicholas.
 Munday, Peter.
 Munday, Reuben.
 Munday, Samuel.
 Myers, John.
 Myler, Cornelius.
 Myeler, Simon.
 Neifes, Garret W.
 Nettes, John.
 Neifus, William.
 Neplus, Jacob.
 Nevins, Peter, Sr.
 Nevins, Peter, Jr.
 Newton, Gilbert.
 Newton, William.
 Nickolls, Lewis.
 Nickson, Alexander.
 Nifus, Garret.
 Nixon, Richard.
 Noe, Andrew.
 Noe, James.
 Noe, John.
 Norris, William.
 Oakley, Abraham.
 Olvert, George.
 Olart, John.
 Olart, Peter.

Obert, George.
 Ockema, Garline.
 Ockeman, John.
 Ogden, Benjamin.
 Ogden, John.
 Olden, John.
 Orman, Benjamin.
 Orman, Stephen.
 Ontsell, Frederick.
 Overt, George.
 Pack, Edward.
 Pain, Isaac.
 Pangborn, Peter.
 Pangborn, William.
 Paotman, Peter.
 Parker, John.
 Parr, Thomas.
 Patrick, Samuel.
 Paul, John.
 Paul, Benjamin.
 Pearson, Benjamin P.
 Pence, William.
 Perrine, Andrew.
 Perrine, Daniel.
 Perrine, Henry.
 Perrine, John.
 Perrine, Joseph.
 Perrine, Matthew.
 Perrine, William.
 Perry, Thomas.
 Pettit, Daniel.
 Pettit, David.
 Pettit, Edward.
 Petty, Andrew.
 Phares, Amariah.
 Phares, Andrew.
 Phillips, Ralph.
 Piatt, John.
 Pike, Asher.
 Pike, James.
 Pike, Thomas.
 Plum, John.
 Porter, Nathaniel.
 Potter, Enoch.
 Potter, Gilbert.
 Potter, Joseph.
 Potter, Robert.
 Potts, Samuel.
 Powell, Thomas.
 Powelsou, Powell.
 Powers, John.
 Pricket, Isaac.
 Pricket, John.
 Pricket, Stephen.
 Pricket, William.
 Prolan, Garret.
 Provost, David.
 Provost, Jasper.
 Provost, John.
 Provost, Jonathan.
 Provost, Peter.
 Quackenbuss, Isaac.
 Ray, John.
 Reelan, John.
 Reynolds, James.
 Reed, James.
 Reed, Peter.
 Reed, John.
 Rice, Richard.
 Richmond, William.
 Richers (?), Abraham.
 Rino, William.
 Robbins, Jesse.
 Robertson, Joseph.
 Robinson, Andrew.
 Roe, Asabel.
 Roff, Ebenezer.

Rolan, George.
 Rolen, James.
 Rolcr, George.
 Roler, William.
 Rolle, Moses.
 Rose, William.
 Ross, Isaac.
 Ross, John.
 Orman, Stephen.
 Rowland, Jacob.
 Rowleson, William.
 Rue, Matthew.
 Runnals, Jas.
 Ranyan, Asa.
 Ranyan, Enoch.
 Ranyan, Hugh.
 Ranyan, Job.
 Ranyan, Richard.
 Ryder, Bernardus.
 Ryder, Garret.
 Ryder, John.
 Ryder, William.
 Ryon, William.
 Salard, Benjamin.
 Sanderson, John.
 Sands, Jos.
 Savia, David.
 Schenck, Garret.
 Schenck, Jos.
 Schenck, Peter F.
 Schenck, Roeloff.
 Schurenman, Abraham.
 Scott, John.
 Scott, Thomas.
 Scott, William.
 Sebring, George.
 Sedam, James.
 Sedam, Ryke.
 Seller, William.
 Selover, Isaac.
 Service, John.
 Service, Joseph.
 Service, William.
 Sharp, Jonathan.
 Shaw, David.
 Sheldon, Ephraim.
 Shippey, John.
 Sherd, Hugh.
 Shotwell, Manning.
 Shulart, James.
 Shulart, John.
 Simpson, Abraham.
 Skillman, Jacob.
 Skinner, John.
 Skinner, William.
 Skirton, Thomas.
 Shaylack, Abel.
 Slover, John.
 Smealley, John.
 Smith, Andrew.
 Smith, Gileon.
 Smith, Hezekiah.
 Smith, Jeremiah.
 Smith, John.
 Smith, Simon.
 Smith, William.
 Smuck, Hendrick.
 Smuck, Robert.
 Snap, George.
 Snedeker, Cornelius.
 Snedeker, Garret.
 Snedeker, Isaac.
 Snedeker, Jacob.
 Snedeker, John.
 Solen, John.
 Solen, Thomas.
 Solomon, John.

Sofer, Benjamin.
 Sofer, Jonathan.
 Sofer, Joseph.
 Sofer, Reuben.
 Sonlan, Benjamin.
 South, Elijah.
 South, Isaac.
 South, William.
 Southard, Zachariah.
 Sparling, Abraham.
 Sparling, Isaac.
 Sparling, James.
 Sparling, John.
 Sparling, Jos.
 Sparling, Peter.
 Spencer, Jos.
 Stanbury, Joshua.
 Stanley, Isaac.
 Starkey, William.
 Stelle, Abel.
 Stelle, Isaac.
 Stelle, Jacob.
 Stelle, Jonah.
 Stelle, Jos.
 Stelle, Samuel.
 Stephens, Jos.
 Stephenson, John.
 Stephenson, William.
 Stewart, David.
 Stillwell, Daniel.
 Stimas, Christian.
 Stinton, Jos.
 Stoue, David.
 Stone, William.
 Stoneker, John.
 Storey, Daniel.
 Storey, John.
 Storey, William.
 Stotchoff, Peter.
 Stont, Abel.
 Stout, John.
 Stricker, Cornelius.
 Stultz, Henry.
 Stultz, Jacob.
 Stultz, Peter.
 Sudam, John.
 Sullivan, Patrick.
 Sunderland, Thomas.
 Sunderlin, John.
 Surl, William.
 Sutphen, Dirck.
 Sutphen, James.
 Sutphen, James (2).
 Sutton, Henry.
 Sutton, Henry (2).
 Sutton, Jenny.
 Sutton, John.
 Sutton, Joseph.
 Sutton, Nihemiah.
 Sutton, Peter.
 Sutton, Peter (2).
 Sutton, William.
 Suydam, Cornelius.
 Suydam, Charles.
 Suydam, Jacob.
 Suydam, Simon.
 Swart, Baltus.
 Swart, Stephen.
 Talmage, Thomas.
 Tallyon, Peter.
 Tomton, Francis.
 Tappan, Abraham.
 Tappan, Isaac.
 Taylor, Lewis.
 Taylor, William.
 Ten Broeck, William.
 Tewell, Enoch.

Tharp, Baker.
 Tharp, Benjamin.
 Thaxton, John.
 Thomas, William.
 Thompson, William.
 Thomson, Charles.
 Thomson, Cornelia.
 Thomson, David.
 Thomson, Hugh.
 Thomson, James.
 Thomson, John.
 Thom, Richard.
 Thornell, Benjamin.
 Thornell, Israel.
 Thorp, Jonathan.
 Till, Peter.
 Tilley, Peter.
 Tindall, John.
 Tindall, Richard.
 Tindall, William.
 Tomba, Lewis.
 Totten, John.
 Totten, Thomas.
 Tournee, Peter.
 Toy, John.
 Trembley, Alexander.
 Trout, Jacob.
 Turner, Daniel.
 Uoderdunk, Isaac.
 Uplyke, Clement.
 Uplyke, William.
 Van Arsdale, John.
 Van Arsdale, Urias.
 Van Campen, Gideon.
 Van Cleaf, Michael.
 Van Derbeck, Benjamin.
 Van Derhaven, James.
 Van Derveer, Abraham.
 Van Derventer, Christian.
 Van Derventer, Isaac.
 Van Derventer, Jacob.
 Van Derventer, James.
 Van Deursen, William.
 Van Dyke, Hendrick.
 Van Harlingen, John.
 Van Hess, Garret.
 Van Hess, John.
 Van Kirk, Arthur.
 Van Kirk, Jameson.
 Van Kirk, William.
 Van Zandt, John.
 Van Lew, Frederick.
 Van Mickler, John.
 Van Nest, Henry.
 Van Nice, John.
 Van Nortwick, Samuel.
 Van Orsdel, Cornelius.
 Van Orsdel, Isaac.
 Van Orsdel, Jacob.
 Van Orsdel, John.
 Van Ostrand, John.
 Van Pelt, Joseph.
 Van Pelt, John.
 Van Pelt, Jacob.

Vao Pelt, Isaac.
 Van Pelt, Abraham.
 Van Sickle, John.
 Van Sickle, Stephen.
 Van Tilburgh, Henry.
 Van Tilburgh, John.
 Van Tilburgh, William.
 Vantine, Abraham.
 Vantine, Ephraim.
 Vantine, Isaac.
 Van Wiekler, Evert.
 Van Zandt, Peter.
 Vaugh, Jacob.
 Vliet, William.
 Voorhees, Abraham.
 Voorhees, James J.
 Voorhees, James R.
 Voorhees, James.
 Voorhees, Nicholas.
 Voorhees, William.
 Voorhees, Garret R.
 Voorhees, Jacob.
 Voorhees, Martinus.
 Voorhees, Daniel.
 Voorhees, John R.
 Vreeland, Abraham.
 Waldron, Chris.
 Walker, Asher.
 Walker, Francis.
 Walker, Robert.
 Walker, Samuel.
 Wall, James.
 Wartenby, William.
 Wartemba, William.
 Watrs, Jacob.
 Webster, Thomas.
 White, John.
 White, Samuel.
 Whitehead, Moses.
 Whitehead, Samuel.
 Whitlock, William.
 Wickoff, Garret.
 Wickoff, Jacob.
 Wilcocks, Isaac.
 Wilkins, Jephth.
 Willett, Harthorn.
 Willett, Samuel.
 Williams, Isaac.
 Williams, Stephen.
 Williamson, Henry.
 Willis, Henry.
 Willis, Joseph.
 Willis, Samuel.
 Willock, William.
 Wilmonth, Lazarus.
 Wilson, Daniel.
 Wilson, Garret.
 Wilson, Isaac.
 Wogham, John.
 Wooding, James.
 Wortman, David.
 Wright, Smith.
 Wyckoff, John.

Perth Amboy, being intended as the capital and the commercial rival of New York, drew thither at the time of its founding and soon after a class of men who had studied law and politics in the schools of England and Scotland. At a later period New Brunswick took the lead in professional men,—in the law, in medicine, and in divinity.

The first record we have of the names of counselors being called in the courts of this county was at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace held at Perth Amboy in September, 1708. They may have practiced at an earlier date even than this, perhaps beginning soon after the opening of the courts in the reign of Queen Anne, but the minutes being lacking from the close of the proprietary government till the year 1708, there is no means of ascertaining whether there were lawyers or not in the courts prior to the latter date. The record of September, 1708, mentions the calling of the names of Francis Sites, John Lofton, and Corse Froam (probably Vroom), "counselors," but none of them appearing, "the under sheriff informed the Court that Corse Froam was sick." The reason of the absence of the others is not mentioned; but they were all in court in August, 1709, and with them Andrew Gordon, a lawyer of Perth Amboy. The latter appeared in nearly all the courts, and had much business for more than a quarter of a century.

From 1741 to the commencement of the Revolution we find the following lawyers practicing in the courts of the county: Philip Kearney, 1741; John Smyth, 1741; Francis Costigin, Richard Williams, John Price, John Lawrence, and Messrs. Rosevelt and Patrick McEwers, 1741-42; Cortland Skinner, Lewis Morris, and David Ogden, 1742; Messrs. Lyne, Lurtin, and Anthony White, 1743; Barnardus Lagrange, 1745; Elisha Parker, 1746; Messrs. Lewis M. Ashfield and Coxe, 1748; Peter Kemble and Anthony Waters, 1749; Messrs. Kelly, William Pidgeon, R. Lawrence, Jacob De Hart, Abraham Cottnam, from 1750 to 1753; Thomas Kennedy, 1754; Richard Stockton, 1755; James Hude, Jr., 1760; Cornelius Low, 1760; William Thomson, Jonathan Deare, G. Ross, Elias Boudinot, Ravand Kearney, 1762-63; Jasper Smith, Ephraim Anderson, James Graham, — Waddell, 1763-64; John De Hart, 1765; Henry Allen, 1766; Messrs. Cuyler, Chetwood, and De Bow, 1767; Jonathan Sergeant and Bowes Reed, 1768; Bryan and John Laferty and Abraham Ogden, 1769.

During this period the following were judges of the Common Pleas and Quarter Sessions of the Peace:

CHAPTER LXVIII.

BENCH AND BAR OF MIDDLESEX.

LAWYERS appeared in regular practice in the courts of this county at an earlier period than we find them in any other county of East Jersey except Bergen. The cause of this is found in the fact that 1741. Robert Huda.

 James Thompson.
 Henry Freeman.
 Ezekiel Bloomfield.
 Benjamin Hull.
 Samuel Nevil.
 James Huda.
 John Heard.
 James Smith.

1741. Jeremiah Field.
 Richard Cutter.
 1742. Pontius Stelle.
 1743. Stephen Warua.
 1746. John Nevil.
 Nicholas Everson.
 Runt Runyon.
 Thomas Gach.
 1747. William Hutchinson.

1748. William Cheesman.
Jedediah Higglee.
1749. James Neilson.
Josiah Davisco.
John Barclay.
1751. Abraham Lane.
Jonathan Frazee.

1754. William Heard.
1760. Nehemiah Dunham.
William Crawford.
1761. James Parker.
Thomas Walker.
1762. Samuel Barrow.

William Reiley, Jr., June, 1869.
Charles H. Ruoyon, February, 1876.
J. Kearney Rice, November, 1876.
William Stoddard, November, 1877.
David A. Storer, November, 1877.
Edward W. Strong, June, 1875.
Allee H. Strong, November, 1877.
Willard P. Voorhees, November, 1874, November, 1878.
M. Bedell Vail, November, 1879.
H. Brewster Willis, June, 1881.
J. W. Beekman, February, 1875, February, 1878.
J. M. Chapman, April, 1846, July, 1849.
William Patterson, November, 1838.
Ephraim Cutter, November, 1877.
Charles Morgan, June, 1860.
A. S. Cloke, February, 1862, February, 1866.

The following have been chief justices and associate justices of the Supreme Court of New Jersey :

CHIEF JUSTICES.

1709. Thomas Gordon.
1728. Thomas Farmer.
1777. Robert Morris.
1803. Andrew Kirkpatrick.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

1710. Peter Sonmans.
1711. Lewis Morris.
Thomas Farmer.
1735. John Hamilton.
1739. John Allen.
1748. Samuel Neville.
1797. Andrew Kirkpatrick.
1838. James S. Nevins.
1845. Joseph F. Randolph.
1859. John Van Dyke.

MEMBERS OF THE MIDDLESEX BAR SINCE 1800.

Joseph Warren Scott, February, 1801, February, 1804.
Jacob R. Hardenbergh, February, 1805, February, 1859.
Cornelius L. Hardenbergh, September, 1812.
James S. Nevins, November, 1819, September, 1823.
Littleton Kirkpatrick, May, 1821.
John S. Blauvelt, November, 1825, February, 1829.
George Richmond, November, 1825.
William H. Leupp, September, 1827, September, 1830.
George P. Molleson, February, 1828, May, 1831.
Robert Adrian, Jr., September, 1830, November, 1833.
Benson Milledoler, September, 1830, September, 1833.
George H. Vroom, September, 1833.
Henry V. Speer, February, 1834, November, 1839.
John Van Dyke, February, 1836, February, 1839.
Garnet B. Adrian, September, 1836, September, 1839.
John C. Elmendorf, November, 1837, September, 1841.
Edward S. Vail, September, 1842, January, 1847.
Abraham V. Schenck, November, 1843, January, 1847.
James G. McDowell, September, 1838.
Charles S. Scott, February, 1844.
Warren Hardenbergh, October, 1848.
William Hartough, January, 1849.
Alexander C. Stark, April, 1850.
John H. Frazee, April, 1850.
Benjamin R. W. Strong, February, 1852.
George C. Ludlow, November, 1853, November, 1868.
George R. Dutton, November, 1857.
J. Elmer Stout, November, 1857.
Charles I. Rutgers, November, 1857.
Charles Morgan Herbert, June, 1860, November, 1866.
Charles Morgan, June, 1860.
Joseph J. Ely, June, 1860, June, 1868.
Herbert Stout, June, 1861, February, 1865.
Theodore Strong, Jr., November, 1861.
J. Randolph Appleby, February, 1862.
Henry L. R. Van Dyke, June, 1862.
Samuel M. Schanck, November, 1862, November, 1865.
Jonathan Dixon, Jr., November, 1862, November, 1865.
Oliver E. Gordon, June, 1864, June, 1867.
Charles T. Cowenhove, November, 1865.
James H. Van Cleaf, June, 1867.
Beasley Mercer, Jr., June, 1865.
Edward Wood.
William Disbrough.
Alpheus Fremas.
George W. Atherton, June, 1875.
George Berdino, February, 1875, February, 1878.
Daniel H. Boice, June, 1870, June, 1873.
A. K. Cogswell, November, 1870, February, 1875.
J. V. De Mott, June, 1877.
Silas D. Griested, November, 1872, November, 1875.
Howard McSherry, —.
James Nielson, November, 1871, November, 1874.

THOMAS GORDON was chief justice of the province of New Jersey in the year 1709. He was from Aberdeen, Scotland, and came to Perth Amboy in 1684, with his wife, Helen, four children, and seven servants. The wife and children died soon after of a fatal disease then prevalent. Mr. Gordon became a very useful and prominent man in the province. In 1692 he was appointed deputy secretary and register for the proprietaries by William Dockwra, their chief secretary in London. The same year he was made clerk of the Court of Common Right, register of the Court of Chancery, and a commissioner, with David Mudie and James Dundas, for the trial of small causes at Perth Amboy. The ensuing year he was appointed judge of probate, and in 1694 an officer of the customs, Amboy being made a port of entry. He was intrusted by the proprietors in America with an important mission to England in their interest in 1695; and in 1702, on the vacation of the office by Mr. Dockwra, he was appointed chief proprietary secretary and register. Besides these responsible positions he held various local and political offices of trust, being the representative of Middlesex County in the General Assembly from 1703 to 1709, and part of the time Speaker of the House. He was a member of Governor Hunter's Council, and held the same office under the administration of Governor Burnet. From June, 1710, to March, 1719, he was receiver-general and treasurer of the province.

THOMAS FARMER was one of the provincial justices of the Supreme Court, having been appointed an associate in 1711, soon after his arrival at Amboy from Staten Island, where he had previously resided. He was made chief justice in 1728, and presided over the court for that year. He represented Middlesex County in the General Assembly during the administration of Governor Morris, 1740 to 1743. Judge Farmer for some time before his death was insane. He kept a country store in Amboy. He had several sons, who were interested in military expeditions against the Spaniards in the West Indies in 1740-42.

PHILIP KEARNEY was one of the first lawyers at the Middlesex bar. He was a son of Michael Kearney, of Monmouth County, a native of Ireland, who in 1716 purchased a lot of land and settled in Perth Amboy. He was soon appointed to the secretaryship of the province (Oct. 24, 1720), was made clerk of the Assembly, Dec. 16, 1720, and of the Court of Common Pleas, April 23, 1731. His mansion house at Perth Amboy became the residence of Governor Hunter upon his accession to the office, and was subsequently occupied by his son Philip, the lawyer. Philip was twice married. His first wife was Lady Barney Dexter, whose maiden name was Ravaud, and who was a client of his in Philadelphia. He became interested in the widow, as well as in the defense of her property, and married her. They had a son, Ravaud Kearney, who became a member of the bar in 1762, and practiced in the courts of this county. The children of Philip Kearney by the first marriage were Philip, Elizabeth, Susannah, and Ravaud. He married for his second wife Isabella, daughter of Robert Lettice Hooper, of Trenton, chief justice of the province, by whom he had five children, viz.: Sarah, Michael, Frances, Joanna, and Isabella. Mr. Kearney died July 25, 1775, "universally lamented," having practiced in the courts of Middlesex and other counties thirty-four years, and by his honorable character and social position exerted a wide influence. He was one of the first lawyers of this section of country, and was very able and popular.

Philip, his son, lived for a time at Amboy, in the house occupied of late years by Hon. James Parker. He was a man of wealth, and subsequently removed to the west bank of the Passaic River, above Newark, where the old mansion is still in the possession of his descendants. He was the father of the Kearney Brothers, merchants, of New York, and grandfather of Gen. Philip Kearney, of the United States army.¹

Ravaud Kearney inherited his father's law library. He lived at one time near South River, and also for a time in Monmouth County. He married Ann, daughter of James Hude, one of the judges of the county court, and died Sept. 3, 1806, in his sixty-eighth year. His widow, who was a very estimable lady and held in high esteem, survived him until April 3, 1828, when she died at the advanced age of ninety. (For further information respecting the family the reader is referred to the history of Perth Amboy in this work.)

CORTLANDT SKINNER was a lawyer in this county for thirty-four years, having made his first appearance in the courts in 1742, and practiced till he left the country at the outbreak of the war for independence. His residence was at Perth Amboy. As a lawyer and statesman he occupied a distinguished position. He was attorney-general of the province and Speaker of the last General Assembly under the crown. There is evidence that Mr. Skinner, although an uncompromising loyalist, disapproved of the arbitrary and repressive measures of the British ministry towards the colonies, regarding that policy as calculated to drive them all the sooner into a fruitless attempt to secure their independence of the mother-country. To Governor Boone, of South Carolina, he wrote in October, 1775,—

"Taxes and a restraint on the West India trade are most likely to force the colonists into manufactures and put independence into their hands. They are on the high road to it now, and though 'tis true that they have not strength to effect it, but must submit, yet 'tis laying the foundation for great trouble and expense to Britain in keeping that by force which she might easily do without, and alienating a people which she might make her greatest prop and security."

As attorney-general he continued to occupy his position during the year 1775, although the object of continued distrust and suspicion on the part of the determined Whigs; but in January, 1776, a letter of his to his brother, a lieutenant-colonel in England, was discovered, which induced Continental Congress to order that it should be sent to the Committee of Safety of New Jersey, and that orders be sent to Lord Stirling to take with him a sufficient force and immediately apprehend and keep in safe custody the said Cortlandt Skinner, of Amboy, until further orders. The said Cortlandt Skinner, however, had taken pains to leave the colony and take refuge on a British man-of-war, and all the Provincial Congress could do was to direct their treasurer not to make any further payment of his salary. It does not appear that he ever made any attempt to act as attorney-general after this. He no doubt confidently expected to resume the position before many years, but the opportunity to do so never came.

Governor Joseph Bloomfield, of Woodbridge, and Andrew Bell, of Perth Amboy, had been students at law with Mr. Skinner. The latter, like his preceptor, embraced the royal cause; the former, after receiving his license and practicing a short time in Bridgeton, was, in February, 1776, commissioned a captain in the Third New Jersey Regiment, under command of Col. Elias Dayton. Bloomfield's company of sixty-five men, recruited in Salem County, started on the march to join the Northern army in Canada on the 26th of March, and on the 18th of April arrived in Perth Amboy. Here, by a singular coincidence, Capt. Bloomfield was ordered by Lord Stirling to execute the order of Continental Congress in the arrest of Mr. Skinner, it not being yet known that he had escaped and taken refuge with the enemy.

Mr. Whitehead, in his "Contributions to the Early History of Perth Amboy," remarks that the "first duty Capt. Bloomfield undertook, or upon which he was sent, is believed to have been the arrest of his former friend and adviser, Mr. Skinner." And he adds, "It is to be hoped that the duty was delegated, not assumed. We will not venture to analyze the feelings with which the house in which he had ever found a home was carefully searched in the hope of securing the convicted loyalist. Fortunately its mistress was absent; but it was under any circumstances a trial of no ordinary character to have one who had dwelt beneath their roof, and been warmly cherished, thus diligently seeking to entrap the object of her highest regard, particularly as there was no reason for presuming Mr. Skinner to be in Amboy."

¹ In the "Old Merchants of New York" is a sketch of the Kearney family. The author is probably in error in supposing that the father of John W. and Philip Kearney, founders of the well-known mercantile house in New York in 1803, came from Ireland and was the ancestor of the Kearney family in America. He was of the third generation, a grandson of Michael Kearney, of Monmouth, and went from Perth Amboy to his residence on the Passaic.

There can be no doubt but Bloomfield acted under precise orders, and he may have been selected on account of his knowledge of the premises. The company remained two days at Amboy, and then proceeded to Albany, arriving there on the 3d of May. On the 5th they were to be in readiness to march to Quebec; but the news of the retreat from that city caused a change, and on the 20th a part of the regiment was ordered to march up the Mohawk, "to subdue Johnston and his brood of Tories." On the evening of May 19th, Capt. Bloomfield returned to Albany with Lady Johnston a prisoner, bringing news that the regiment was to be stationed at or near Johnston Hall to keep back the Indians. Johnston and his Mohawks fled to Canada, where they remained permanently.

Mr. Skinner "took a commission as brigadier-general from General Howe, with authority to raise five battalions from among the disaffected of New Jersey, of which he only succeeded in obtaining five hundred and seventeen. He did all he could to aid the royal cause, and after the Revolution went to England with his family, and received from the government compensation for his forfeited estate, and half-pay for life."

Mr. Skinner was the eldest son of Rev. William Skinner, who in 1721 was sent out as a missionary to Perth Amboy by the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts," and became the first rector of St. Peter's Church of that place. His mother was Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Stephen Van Cortlandt. His brothers and sisters were Stephen, William, John, and Gertrude. Cortlandt Skinner was educated for the bar, and studied the profession with David Ogden, of Newark, who preceded him and was associated with him at the bar of this county.

In 1752 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Philip Kearney, Esq., of Amboy, another distinguished legal contemporary at the Middlesex bar. As a lawyer, Mr. Skinner took first rank among those of his day. "Although not of studious habits, he became eminent in his profession, his natural abilities being good, and his oratorical powers considerably above mediocrity."

It is stated by Elmer and others that Cortlandt Skinner died at Bristol, England, in 1799, at the age of seventy-one. We think the statement with regard to his age must be a mistake. It would make his birth to have occurred in 1728, and the minutes of the courts of this county show that he was in the practice of law in 1742; hence he must have been in practice at the age of fourteen, which is improbable.

His father died at the age of seventy-one in 1758. Cortlandt Skinner had been ten years in practice before he was married, and at that time he was probably about twenty-eight.

STEPHEN SKINNER, a younger brother of Cortlandt Skinner, of Perth Amboy, was one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas of Middlesex County. He was also treasurer of East Jersey, and claimed to have been robbed on the night of July 21, 1768, of over six thousand pounds in coin and bills. Suspicions were entertained of various individuals, and some doubted whether there had been any robbery. In 1770 the General Assembly took up the subject and referred it to a committee, who reported that the loss should be attributed to the negligence of the treasurer, and that he should be held accountable for it, and to this report the Assembly agreed. The Governor (Franklin) took part with Skinner, and a controversy arose which was ended only when the Revolution had so far progressed as to make other questions more engrossing. James (afterwards chief justice) Kinsey was put at the head of the other committee in 1773, to whom the message of the Governor on the subject was referred. His report took a different view of the subject from that advanced by the Governor. The subject was resumed in 1774, when the committee reported: "It would give us pleasure to be able to join your excellency in opinion that the robbery of the Eastern Treasury had been brought to light; but after having considered your excellency's message, and examined the papers laid before us, we cannot but think that this affair still remains in an obscurity which we must leave for time to unravel." The popular feeling both against Skinner and the Governor became so great that the former was compelled to resign the treasuryship, and the latter, with his Council, confirmed a new nomination by the Assembly. A suit was commenced against Skinner, but it was never tried; he adhered to the royal cause, became a wanderer, and died in Nova Scotia.

GEO. JOSEPH BLOOMFIELD was born and spent the early part of his life in this county. He was the son of Dr. Moses Bloomfield, of Woodbridge, in which township he was born in 1755. While a youth he was sent to a classical school taught by Rev. Enoch Green in Deerfield, Cumberland Co., after which he became a student of law in the office of Cortlandt Skinner, attorney-general of the province, at Amboy, and was admitted to practice in 1775. He settled as a lawyer at Bridgeton, but in 1776 entered the military service of the colonies, in which he remained till 1778, when he resigned his commission. In the fall of that year he was chosen clerk of the Assembly, and was for several years register of the Court of Admiralty:

In 1783, upon the resignation of William Paterson, he was elected by the joint meeting attorney-general of the State; was re-elected in 1788, and resigned in 1792, being then succeeded by Aaron D. Woodruff.

He was the first Governor of the State elected on the Democratic (then called Republican) ticket. In the fall of 1801 the Legislature of New Jersey (for the first time) was Democratic, and at a joint meeting held October 31st, Joseph Bloomfield received thirty votes for Governor, against twenty cast for Richard Stockton. In 1802 the parties were equally divided, so that on the first ballot Bloomfield received twenty-six votes and Stockton twenty-six, and on the second ballot there was a like result; on the third ballot Aaron Ogden was substituted for Stockton, but there was no change in the vote. An attempt was made to compromise, the Federalists offering to give the Democrats their choice of the Governor or the senator if they would give the other to them; but the Democrats, under the lead of William S. Pennington, refused the proposition, and the consequence was that the State had no Governor during that year, the duties of the office being performed by the Democratic vice-president of the Council, John Lambert. The next year Bloomfield had thirty-three votes and Richard Stockton seventeen, and in 1804 he had thirty-seven and Stockton sixteen votes. Afterwards he was re-elected up to 1812 without opposition.

It was while first presiding in the Court of Chancery that Governor Bloomfield took occasion to make a short address to those present, saying that he was a Republican, and did not desire to be addressed by the title of excellency, and was replied to as follows by Samuel Leake, an old and somewhat eccentric lawyer:

"May it please your excellency: Your excellency's predecessors were always addressed by the title 'your excellency,' and if your excellency please, the proper title of the Governor of the State was and is your excellency. I humbly pray, therefore, on my own behalf, and in behalf of the bar generally, that we may be permitted by your excellency's leave to address your excellency when sitting in the high Court of Chancery by the ancient title of your excellency."

Gen. Bloomfield, the head of the Democratic party at this period, has been compared in point of ability with Alexander Hamilton, the great leader of the Federalists, who in 1804 sacrificed his life rather than his honor as a soldier in a duel with Aaron Burr. He was a general of militia, and in 1794 took the field as a commander of a brigade called into service to quell the Whiskey Insurrection in Pennsylvania, proceeding with the troops into the immediate neighborhood of Pittsburgh, and accomplishing the object intended without bloodshed.¹

¹ It was for the occasion of this expedition that Governor Howell* composed the song entitled "Jersey Blue," to be sung by the soldiers:

* Richard Howell, Governor of New Jersey from 1793 to 1801. He came from Wales in 1729; at twenty-one entered Col. Maxwell's brigade as captain, served till nearly the close of the war, became a lawyer in Cumberland County; commanded the right wing of the army in the

In the war of 1812 he was appointed by President Madison a brigadier-general in the army designed for the invasion of Canada. His brigade marched to Sackett's Harbor, and early in the spring of 1813 a part of the troops under the command of Gen. Pike crossed into that province and made an attack on Fort George, but were repulsed, and Gen. Pike was killed by the fall of a stone from the blown-up magazine. It does not appear that Gen. Bloomfield gained any laurels as a military commander.

In 1816 he was elected on the Democratic ticket a member of Congress, and was re-elected in 1818, serving from March 4, 1817, to March 4, 1821. He was very appropriately placed at the head of the committee on Revolutionary pensions, and introduced and carried through the bills granting pensions to the veteran soldiers of the Revolution and their widows. He died in 1825, in the seventieth year of his age, in Burlington, where he had resided since his entrance upon public life.

RICHARD STOCKTON, SR.—The name of this distinguished lawyer and judge appears frequently upon the minutes of the courts of this county before the Revolution. The first record of his presence appears in 1755. He married a sister of Elisha Boudinot, an accomplished woman of highly cultivated "To arms, once more our hero cries,

Sedition lives and order dies;
To peace and ease then bid adieu,
And dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue.

"Chorus.

"Dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue,
Jersey Blue, Jersey Blue,
And dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue.

"Since proud ambition rears its head,
And murders rage, and discords spread,
To save from spoil the virtuous few
Dash over the mountains, Jersey Blue.
Dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue, etc.

"Roused at the call, with magic sound
The drums and trumpets circle round,
As soon as the corps their route pursue;
So dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue.
Dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue, etc.

"Unstained with crime, unused to fear,
In deep array our youths appear,
And fly to crush the rebel crew,
Or die in the mountains, Jersey Blue.
Dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue, etc.

"The tears bedew the maiden's cheek,
And storms hang round the mountains bleak;
'Tis glory calls, to love adieu,
Then dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue,
Dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue, etc.

Should foul misrule and party rage
With law and liberty engage,
Push home your steel, you'll soon review
Your native plains, brave Jersey Blue.
Dash to the mountains, Jersey Blue, etc."

Whiskey riots; died at Trenton at the age of forty-three in 1803. He was the grandfather of Mrs. Jefferson Davis, wife of the late President of the U. S. A.

mind and literary taste, and lived upon his estate at Princeton. These were the parents of Richard Stockton, Jr., the eminent statesman and lawyer. The latter graduated at Princeton before he was seventeen years of age, studied law at Newark with his uncle, Elisha Boddinot, afterwards one of the justices of the Supreme Court, was licensed as an attorney in 1784, when only about twenty years old, was afterwards admitted as a counselor, and in 1792 made a sergeant-at-law.

The younger Richard Stockton had no superior—if indeed he had an equal—at the bar of the State during the first quarter of the present century. One of the marked traits in his character was the pleasure it evidently gave him to assist younger members of the profession. He, with Josiah Ogden Hoffman, afterwards a distinguished lawyer in New York, Gabriel H. Ford, and Alexander C. McWhorter, who were law students together in Newark, founded the "Institutio Legis," a sort of mock court, which was kept up for many years, and which helped to prepare them and others who succeeded them for those forensic encounters in which they became so famous. In the absence of any law-school, this institution was a great benefit to the profession for many years.

Mr. Stockton was during his time almost the only lawyer of New Jersey who argued causes before the Supreme Court at Washington. His manner in speaking was dignified and impassioned, and he held his subject with a profound and comprehensive grasp, no less than with a thorough knowledge of its details.

In 1796 he was chosen a senator of the United States, and served in that body until 1799. In 1813 he was elected a member of the Thirteenth Congress. He took a leading part among the able men then in the House, including Webster, Calhoun, and Clay.

The elder Richard Stockton was an accomplished and eloquent lawyer, a judge of the Supreme Court before the Revolution, and one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Several of the early lawyers of the State were trained to the profession by him,—Jonathan Dickerson Sergeant, William Patterson, and others. His name appears in the court records of this county in many of the most important cases from 1755 to the outbreak of the Revolution.

JAMES HUDE was one of the prominent citizens of New Brunswick. His father was a Scotch Presbyterian who had fled from religious oppression in his native country, and came early to America. Mr. Hude was judge of the Common Pleas of Middlesex County for eleven years, filled all the civil offices in the city, and spent most of his life in the service of the government. He was a member of the Assembly in 1738, was one of the council of Governor Morris, and for several terms mayor of the city. He was a man of great benevolence, and on his death, Nov. 1, 1762, the New York Mercury in an obituary notice speaks of him as "a gentleman of great probity, justice, affability, moral and political virtues." His residence was on Albany Street in the house known as the Bell Tavern. Catherine, a daughter of Mr. Hude, married Cornelius Lowe, and a daughter of theirs married Hon. J. R. Hardenbergh.¹

LEWIS MORRIS, whose name appears as a lawyer at the bar of this county in 1742, was at that time Governor of New Jersey, and resided in the gubernatorial mansion at Perth Amboy. His ancestor, Col. Lewis Morris, came from the island of Barbadoes in 1676 and located a tract of three thousand five hundred and forty acres of land in the township of Shrewsbury, Monmouth County. The grant is dated Oct. 25, 1676. Full liberty was given to him and his associates "to dig, delve, and carry away all such mines for iron as they shall find or see fit to dig and carry away to the iron-works, or that shall be found in that tract of land that lies inclosed between the southeast branch of the Raritan River and the Whale Pond on the seaside, and is bounded from thence by the sea and branch of the sea to the eastward to the Raritan River, he or they paying all such just damages to the owners of the land where they shall dig mine as is judged is done by trespass of cattle or otherwise sustained by the carting and carrying of the said mine to the work."² In 1682, Col. Morris had on this land "extensive iron-works, employing sixty or seventy negroes, in addition to the white servants and dependents."

Col. Morris was one of the councilors under Rudyard in 1682. His son Lewis first appears as a member of the Council of Governor Hamilton in 1695, together with "John Inians, of Raritan River, David Mudie and James Dundas, of Perth Amboy, John Royse, of Roysefield, Samuel Dennis, of Woodbridge, and John Bishop, of Rahway." Mr. Morris represented Monmouth County. He was not in the Council of Governor Basse, owing to his opposition to the Governor. The record of the first court under Governor Basse, held in May, 1798, contains the following entry:

"Lewis Morris, Esq., came in open Court and demanded by what authority they kept Court. The Court declared by y^e Kings Authority. He denied it, and being asked, Who was dissatisfied besides himself, he said One and all. The Court commadog y^e said Morris to be taken in custody, Col. Richard Towaley, Andrew Hamilton, both of Elizabeth-town, and three or four more cried one and all, and y^e said Lewis Morris said he would fain see who durst lay hold on him, and when a Constable by order of y^e Court laid hold on him, he, in y^e face of y^e Court, resisted."

A manuscript in the library of the New Jersey Historical Society gives the result:

"Att the Court of Common Right, held at Perth Amboy ye 11th day of May, 1698, the Court ordered that Lewis Morris, Esq., for denying y^e Authority of this Court, And his other contempts, shall be fined fifty pounds, and be Committed to prison till paid. By order of y^e Court, Edward Slater, Clerke. To y^e Sheriff of y^e County of Mddx:

"A True Copy.

"JOSEPH ROLPH, Shr'f."

¹ Whitehead's Amboy, p. 374; Dr. Steele's Discourse, p. 38.

² East Jersey Records, B. p. 155.

Mr. Morris was imprisoned in a log house, but his friends raised the logs sufficiently for him to escape.

Morris lived at this time in Amboy, for when the Assembly, resolving that no one who favored the proprietors should hold a seat in their body, summarily expelled George Willocks in 1699, the people of Amboy returned Morris to fill the vacancy, although he was still a firm supporter of the proprietary interests. Both Morris and Willocks were summoned to appear before the Court of Common Right at its October term, and to give security for their good behavior, but they refused so to do, and were allowed to go on their parole, and on the 16th of May they wrote a letter to the Council informing that body that they were prepared to resist any proceedings against them. They were neither of them ever tried, for every day brought greater anarchy, and hastened the downfall of the government under Basse. Under the administration of Hamilton, which succeeded, Morris was restored to the Council. In the spring of 1701 he went to England for the purpose of aiding in the establishment of a settled government. He desired to secure the confirmation of Hamilton's authority until the proprietary right to the government could be determined or measures taken for its relinquishment to the crown. The former could not be accomplished, and in the latter Mr. Morris took a prominent and influential part.

He was very popular with the people. In the new government under Cornbury he was appointed a member of the Council, and held various other responsible offices during the rest of his life.

He was the first Governor of New Jersey appointed from among the people, a native of the province, and the first under the crown who had not also been Governor of New York. In the summer of 1738 a royal commission arrived from England to Lewis Morris as Governor of New Jersey separate from New York; he served until his death, 1746. He was followed successively by President Hamilton, 1746; John Reading, 1746; Jonathan Belcher, 1747; John Reading, 1757; Francis Bernard, 1758; Thomas Boone, 1760; Josiah Hardy, 1761; and William Franklin, son of Benjamin Franklin, in 1763, the last royal Governor, he being deposed, arrested, and sent a prisoner to Connecticut in 1776.

ROBERT MORRIS, the chief justice, resided at New Brunswick. He was a son of Robert Hunter Morris, chief justice of the province from 1738 until his death in 1764. The son Robert was the first chief justice of the State under the constitution, having been elected by joint meeting in February, 1777. His associates were Isaac Smith and John Cleves Symmes. They entered upon their respective duties, and appear afterwards to have opened a court and sworn a grand jury as was the custom then at the regular terms held in April, May, September, and November.

In May, 1777, it was the province of Chief Justice

Morris to hold a term of the Oyer and Terminer in Sussex County, in obedience to an appointment made by the State Council. Many prisoners of the State, charged with treason and other crimes, were lodged in the jail at Newton, and the government deemed it expedient that they should be speedily tried, and that, too, by the most competent judge of the bench. None of them except Morris had had any experience, he only through what he knew by his study of the English courts, and the proceedings of his father upon the bench when he was a young man. The situation would have been trying even to the most experienced judge, for it was in that transition state when the old colonial forms were awkward and inapplicable, and nothing had been done towards the reorganization of the courts under the constitution. Judge Morris wrote from Newton a characteristic letter to Governor Livingston, showing how the situation appeared to him, June 14, 1777:

"SIR: Inclosed your excellency has a list of the convictions and the judgments thereon at this very tedious and I would have said premature court if the Council had not thought expedient on mature deliberation to have appointed it. I had the pleasure to find Mr. Justice Symmes here at my arrival, and confess if I had supposed the Council would have spared him for the business, I would not have traveled fast over the mountains through the rain and late into the night on so very short notice."

He then goes on to describe the condition of things:

"Judges young in office, and not appointed for their legal erudition; associates but reputable farmers, doctors, or shopkeepers; young officers, no counsel nor clerk, for want of timely notice, which was not even given to the sheriff; and this in a disaffected county, both witnesses and criminals to be collected from all parts of the State. Thus circumstanced was a court of the highest expectation ever held in New Jersey; a court for the trial of a number of State criminals, some for high treason, a crime so little known in New Jersey that perhaps the first lawyer in it would not know how to enter judgment under our Constitution. It would make an excellent paragraph in Gaines' Veritable Mercury; no other printer could venture to publish it. . . . We have sat with great patience, and have now closed the third week. Had it not been for the negligence or villany of a rascally jailor in suffering John Eddy, the only person indicted for high treason, to escape yesterday morning, I flatter myself we should have acquitted ourselves with tolerable success, and I hope have given satisfaction to the good people."

It was too bad that this traitor, Eddy, after having been suitably caged and indicted already for these raw justices to try their hands upon, should have escaped and robbed them of their anticipated glory! In this letter Mr. Morris rather curtly answers an insinuation in Governor Livingston's letter to him that his not attending the court at Burlington had given some uneasiness:

"Whatever private individuals might have thought, I am persuaded no member of the Legislature had the least right to expect my attendance. Two hundred miles a day is rather hard travelling, and even that would not have done unless they supposed me possessed of a spirit of divination. I accepted my present office to manifest my resolution to serve my country. I mean to do the duty of it while I hold it according to my best judgment. Whenever the Legislature think they can fill it any more advantageously, the terror of my commission shall not disappoint them."

In accordance with his recommendation the Legislature in September, 1777, passed an act directing that when any person should be convicted of treason the sentence therefor should be the same as in case of murder, hanging, instead of quartering, as under the English law; and that all persons who before July 2, 1776, had committed a crime not barred by the statute of limitation might be proceeded against and punished as if committed against the State; and that all indictments found in the name of the king should be prosecuted as if in the name of the State. An act was also passed by virtue of which special commissions for Courts of Oyer and Terminer continued to be issued until 1794, when an act was passed constituting these courts substantially as they now are.

Chief Justice Morris held the office only about two years, resigning in 1779. In 1790, upon the death of Judge Brearley, he was appointed by President Washington judge of the District Court of the United States for New Jersey, an office which he held until his death in 1815.

ANDREW KIRKPATRICK.—His grandfather, Alexander Kirkpatrick, was a Scotch Presbyterian, who migrated first to Belfast, Ireland, and after a few years' residence there sailed for America with his family in 1736. He settled in Somerset County, about two miles west of Basking Ridge, and died in 1758. His second son was named David, who soon after the death of his father purchased the homestead of his brother, which, according to the law of that day, had descended to the eldest son.

David Kirkpatrick, as described in the memoir prepared by James Grant Wilson, "was a rigid Presbyterian of the John Knox school, plain and simple in his habits, of strict integrity and sterling common sense, of great energy and self-reliance. He lived to attain his ninety-first year; educated with a view to his entering the ministry one son at the College of New Jersey; know of at least six grandsons who were liberally educated, and at his death, in 1814, left a numerous posterity to bless his memory. . . . His wife was Mary McEwan, a native of Argyleshire, who with her family crossed the Atlantic in the ship in which the Kirkpatricks took passage. She died in 1795."

Andrew, the third son of David, was born in Somerset County, Feb. 17, 1756, and spent his boyhood there. He received the best education the times afforded, and graduated at Princeton College in 1775, during the presidency of Dr. Witherspoon. He was accustomed to walk to and fro between his father's residence and Princeton, a distance of not less than thirty miles, carrying his homespun and home-made clothing in a small knapsack. His father had educated him with a special view to the ministry in the Presbyterian Church, and after his graduation he commenced a course of theological studies with the Rev. Mr. Kennedy, a celebrated Scotch divine settled at Basking Ridge. A few months' study satisfied him that he ought not to enter the ministry, and he determined to study the law. To do this he was obliged to relinquish any pecuniary support from his father, and to rely upon his own exertions. His mother presented him with all her little hoard of ready money, consisting of a few pieces of gold, as she saw him, with many tears, her handsome son, and the pride of her heart, depart to carve out unaided his own career in the world.

Now in his twenty-first year, he resorted for a support, and to procure resources for his future studies as a lawyer, to the business of teaching. He first became a tutor in the Taliaferro family of Virginia, in which Mr. Southard afterwards filled the same place, subsequently at Esopus, Ulster Co., N. Y., and then obtained the position of classical instructor in Rutgers College Grammar School. While thus engaged in teaching he pursued with diligence in his leisure hours the study of the law. Soon he entered the office of William Paterson, then an eminent counselor, as a regular student, and was licensed as an attorney in 1785, when he had attained the age of twenty-nine. He then took up his residence in Morristown, and succeeded in obtaining a respectable practice. Having the misfortune to lose his small library by fire in 1787, he returned to New Brunswick, where he continued to reside during the remainder of his life.

His practice was soon considerable, a result which has always been attributed to his untiring industry and to his attention to his favorite maxim, that "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well." He was naturally energetic, and capable of great exertions, and his acquirements as a profound lawyer attest the high order of his intellect.

In the year 1792 he married Miss Jane Bayard, the beautiful daughter of Col. John Bayard, of Revolutionary memory, a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, who had removed a few years before to New Brunswick. Andrew Kirkpatrick and Jane Bayard were at the time of their marriage called the handsomest couple in New Brunswick, and this tradition exists with many still living who knew them at a later period in their lives.

In 1797 he was elected one of the members of Assembly from Middlesex County, and at the adjourned session in November of that year was appointed by the joint meeting one of the justices of the Supreme Court to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Justice Chetwood. Upon the death of Chief Justice Kinsey in 1803 he was elected by a Democratic joint meeting chief justice, and having been twice afterwards re-elected, he sat as a judge of the Supreme Court twenty-seven years, a longer term than any other judge except Isaac Smith. He was at the bar about twelve years, but spent most of his professional life on the bench. In 1820 he was elected a member of the Legislative Council, the constitution then in force admitting such a union of offices.

Mr. Elmer, in his "Reminiscences," from which most of the above has been taken, speaks thus of the appearance and character of Chief Justice Kirkpatrick :

"When I first became acquainted with him he had attained the full maturity of his powers, and was certainly the most imposing judge I have ever seen. He was a very handsome man, with a white head of hair, still wearing a cue, but not requiring the powder with which, in accordance with the fashion, he had been accustomed to whiten it at an earlier day. He had a very fair complexion and a remarkably fine voice. He spoke and wrote correct and idiomatic English; was a learned, and in the law of real estate a profoundly learned, lawyer; a complete master of the abstruse learning of Coke and the black-letter reporters, but not well versed in modern innovations, which he regarded as blemishes and not as improvements, and did not care to study.

"His opinions, as published in Pennington and Halsted's Reports, upon questions relating to the law of real estate deserve the most careful study of every lawyer aspiring to understand this most difficult branch of the law. They will be found to exhibit a fullness and accuracy of knowledge, a clearness of comprehension, and a justness of reasoning which secured him the confidence of the profession, and entitled him to rank among the most eminent of American jurists."

From 1809 until his death he was one of the trustees of Princeton College, and seldom failed to attend the meetings of the board. He died in 1831.

LITTLETON KIRKPATRICK, son of Chief Justice Andrew Kirkpatrick and Jane, daughter of Col. John Bayard, of Revolutionary fame. Col. Bayard was a distinguished patriot and soldier, and held a high command during the war in the Pennsylvania line of the Continental army. After the war he was distinguished as a civilian, and held important offices in the State. He was also one of the ruling elders of the Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick, and the first president of the Humane Society of that city, which for more than half a century was a successful agency for the relief of the wants of hundreds of people.

Littleton Kirkpatrick graduated at Princeton College, and studied law in the city of Washington, D. C. He was admitted both as an attorney and counselor¹ in May, 1821. He was during one term a member of Congress, but he was no seeker of office, nor did he court popularity by the artifices of the politician. Possessing ample means, after he left Congress he withdrew to private life, but not to inactivity. He took a lively interest in several of the institutions of the city of his nativity; was a trustee of Rutgers College at the time of his death and president of the Library Company; gave liberally and in a wholly unostentatious manner to the poor, while his contributions to particular religious societies, especially to the Domestic Missionary Society of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, were large and constant. He died at Saratoga Aug. 15, 1859, and his funeral was attended in the Presbyterian Church at New Brunswick on the 17th.

JAMES S. NEVIUS was born in Somerset County in 1786, and graduated at Princeton College in 1816. Having studied law with Frederick Frelinghuysen, he was licensed as an attorney in 1819, admitted as a counselor in 1823, and called to be a sergeant-at-law in 1837, among the last upon whom that honor was conferred in the State.

In 1838, upon the death of Judge Ryerson, he was chosen by the joint meeting a justice of the Supreme Court, and was again appointed by the Governor in 1845, serving on the bench fourteen years.

He followed his profession in New Brunswick, where he continued to reside until after the expiration of his second term as judge in 1852, when he removed to Jersey City, where he died in 1859.

As a judge he was considered able and well informed. His ability was especially displayed in presiding at the circuits and in charging a jury. The characteristics which most endeared him to his personal friends were those of the friend and companion. His impulses were generous, his sympathies easily excited, and he was ready in showing favors to others, often to his own detriment. His unfailing humor and love of anecdote made him the life of the social circle at home and abroad.

CHARLES KINSEY, a son of Chief Justice Kinsey, was associated in practice with Col. J. Warren Scott in New Brunswick prior to 1825. He was a good lawyer, in full practice, but apt to be rather prosy in his arguments. The following anecdote is told of a joke being perpetrated upon him by his partner, Col. Scott. The latter having made his argument left the court while Mr. Kinsey was speaking. It happened that at the next term when he entered the court-room Mr. Kinsey was again on his feet. Scott, going near, lifted up his hands in mock astonishment, and exclaimed in a whisper loud enough to be heard and enjoyed by the court and bar, "What, Charley, at it yet?"

GEORGE WOOD, of New Brunswick, had a very high reputation at the bar. He was born in Burlington County, graduated at Princeton in 1808, studied law with Richard Stockton, and was admitted to the bar in 1812. He immediately settled at New Brunswick in the practice of his profession, and it was not long before he rivaled his master, to whom in some respects he was superior. His intellect was of the highest order, entitling him to rank with Mr. Webster. His power of analogical reasoning was very striking; the most difficult subject seemed to arrange itself in his mind in its true proportions. He had the faculty attributed to Lord Mansfield, of so stating a question as to make the mere statement a sufficient argument. He generally spoke from mere short memoranda in pencil, and was so accurate in the use of language that what he said would when written down prove entirely correct.

¹ This was unusual, though it is shown by the record to be a fact.

It has been said that Mr. Wood was probably the ablest man New Jersey has produced. His reputation, however, is mostly connected with the New York bar, for after a few years' practice here he removed to the city of New York, where he took rank among the leaders, and was the equal, if not the superior, of the best of them. Until his death in 1860 he was engaged in the most important causes, not only in New York but in other States. He was among the few eminent lawyers of the country who held no office. Upon the death of Judge Thomson in 1845 he was strongly recommended to President Tyler to take his place on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, and there can be no doubt he would have adorned the station.¹ His political education was as a Federalist; but he was not addicted to politics, and in later years was quite conservative.

JOSEPH WARREN SCOTT was a son of Dr. Moses Scott, of New Brunswick, whose memoir is given in the history of the medical profession in this work. He was the grandson of John Scott, who came to this country from Scotland at an early period, and was an elder in the old Neshaminy Presbyterian Church, in Bucks County, Pa. He removed to New Brunswick before the war of the Revolution, where his family was reared, and where he spent the remainder of his life as an eminent physician, and was prominent in ecclesiastical and civil matters in the town.

His son, Joseph Warren, was born in 1779, graduated at Princeton in 1795, before he had attained the age of seventeen, studied medicine for a short time with his father, then studied theology; but he soon abandoned the design of being either a physician or a minister, and determined to become a lawyer. He studied law with Gen. Frelinghuysen, and was admitted as an attorney in 1801, as counselor in 1804, and was made a sergeant-at-law in 1816. He married soon after being admitted as a counselor. He attained to a large practice, was several times voted for as attorney-general and as judge of the Supreme Court, but declined every office except that of Presidential elector in 1824 (when he voted for Gen. Jackson) and prosecutor of the pleas for the county of Middlesex. He was profoundly learned in the law and apt in tracing principles to their sources; had a wonderfully retentive memory, and was often truly eloquent.

When John Van Dyke was prosecutor of the pleas for Middlesex County an indictment was found against John B. Berrian for perjury on purely technical grounds. He was convicted and fined one thousand dollars. The conviction was removed to the Supreme Court, and thence to the Court of Errors and Appeals, where the judgment of the Oyer and Terminer was reversed, through the efforts and legal acumen of Col.

Scott. The case is reported in the Supreme Court in 2 Zabriskie, 9, January Term, 1849, and in the Court of Errors and Appeals, 2 Zabriskie, 679, January Term, 1850.

The last time he appeared in court was as counsel for Donnelly (2 Dutch, 463) on his trial for murder in 1857, when he was nearly eighty years old. He had practically given up his profession nearly twenty years before this. He died in May, 1871. Rev. Mr. Jewett, in the address delivered at his funeral, said,—

"He was an accomplished scholar, well versed in the Latin classics, and accustomed frequently to correspond with his friends in the Latin language, even to the last year of his life. . . . He was a fine belles-lettres scholar, and had the 'pen of a ready writer.' He was well versed in English literature, and familiar with the old poets.

"We stand to-day by the side of one who looked upon and was familiar with the forms of generals, statesmen, and theologians, men whose names are sacred to America and the world. We stand by the coffin of one who served in the war of 1812; of one who stood by the bedside of the dying Hamilton (that brightest intellectual star in the galaxy of patriots); of one who heard, amongst divine men great in the history of the American church, Witherspoon, Samuel Stanhope Smith, John M. Mason, Livingston, and Bishop Hobart. Not a few of the great men of the church and in the State were his warm personal friends."

To illustrate how his life connects the past with the present it may be mentioned that he graduated at Princeton in 1795, under Dr. Witherspoon, and that in 1868 he attended the inauguration of Dr. McCosh. Thus, with his associate, Judge Herring, then the two oldest living graduates of Nassau Hall, the link was supplied between two distinguished men invited from Scotland to preside over this institution. On this occasion he received the honorary degree of LL.D.

He also remembered having seen Gen. Washington in his childhood. When he was a little boy, playing in front of his father's house, a gentleman called and asked him,—

"Is Dr. Scott at home?"

"No, sir."

"Mrs. Scott?"

"Yes, sir."

"Please go in and tell your mother that Gen. Washington would like to see her."

"The boy," as he said, "gazed at him eagerly, much impressed with the idea that he was only a man, and much like other men of imposing presence."²

Joseph Warren Scott was received as a member of the New Jersey Society of the Cincinnati, as the representative of his father, Surgeon Moses Scott, in 1825. In 1832 he was chosen assistant treasurer of the general society, and in 1838 the treasurer-general. In 1840 he became the vice-president of the State society, and from 1844 until his death was president. He died at the age of nearly ninety-three years.

Important Trials.—The first trial held in the present court-house of Middlesex County was that of the State against Peter Robinson, who was indicted for the murder of Abraham Suydam, at that time president of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of New

¹ Elmer's Reminiscences, pp. 417-18.

² Ibid., p. 475.

Brunswick. The case attracted great attention on account of the standing of Mr. Suydam and the peculiar circumstances of the murder. George P. Molleson was at that time attorney-general, and John Van Dyke was prosecutor of the pleas for the county of Middlesex. They conducted the prosecution on the part of the State, and the prisoner was defended by David Graham, the celebrated criminal lawyer of New York, and Edward Wood, a brother of George Wood, who was then practicing law in New Brunswick. Chief Justice Hornblower presided at the trial. Robinson was convicted and executed.

Molleson was a very brilliant speaker, but not profoundly versed in the law. Van Dyke was a very strong and able advocate, especially forcible in the presentation of his facts before a jury. He was the law partner of Abraham V. Schenck, Esq., from 1847 to 1855. He removed from New Brunswick to Trenton, and was afterwards appointed by Governor Newell associate justice of the Supreme Court. After the expiration of his term of office he removed to Minnesota and died there.

Several amusing incidents occurred during this trial, among them the following: David Graham moved to quash the indictment on the ground that it did not specify the degree of murder charged in it. He cited a large number of authorities, and many of them cases in the courts of the Southern States. His motion was overruled, and Chief Justice Hornblower remarked that he did not think it necessary to go south of Mason and Dixon's line in order to ascertain the law to settle the degrees of murder in the State of New Jersey. The retort was a most happy one in its effect, and reassuring to the New Jersey judges and lawyers present.

While proceeding to impanel the jury in the case Graham was very zealous in challenging jurors for cause, fully realizing that there was a strong prejudice in the community against his client. The stereotyped questions, whether they had formed or expressed an opinion upon the subject, and whether they had read the newspaper accounts of the murder, were put to juror after juror as they were successively called to the bar, until finally the chief justice, becoming impatient, asked one stolid-looking juror whether he believed everything he read in the newspaper. He replied, "Yes, pretty much everything." The chief justice then asked him if he believed in the publications respecting the "moon hoax," referring to certain alleged discoveries made in the moon by Sir William Herschel which were then current in the newspapers. The reply was, "Yes, of course." The chief justice, with an air of most profound disgust, amidst the universal laughter of bench and bar, decided that the juror must suffer the penalty of his extreme credulity by standing aside.

Another incident was this: In summing up the case to the jury Attorney-General Molleson, in quite an impassioned appeal, attempting to quote the words from Scripture, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed," got lost in the passage and was compelled to refer to the Bible to find his way out. The embarrassment and perplexity of the moment was mortifying to the attorney-general, but it was amusing to the lawyers and spectators. The incident was a standing joke at the bar for many years after.

The next most celebrated trial in the county was of the case of the State vs. John Fox. The latter had been indicted for the murder of John Henry, son of Alderman Henry, of the city of New York. The place where the murder was committed still bears the name of Fox's Gully, just below the city of New Brunswick. George A. Vroom, then prosecutor of the pleas for Middlesex County, prosecuted the case, assisted by John Van Dyke. Fox was defended by Henry V. Speer and Abraham V. Schenck.

In this case the question of the right to challenge jurors for cause arose, and the case was carried by writ of error to the Supreme Court by defendant's counsel, where the principle involved was ably and elaborately argued, and was finally settled by the decision of the Supreme Court in this case. The case is reported in 1 Dutcher, 566, June Term, 1856.

Mr. Speer had the reputation of being a very able and astute lawyer; he was engaged in many important suits in Middlesex County; was elected to the State Senate, of which body he became president, and shortly afterwards died. He was a bachelor, having never been married.

Charles M. Herbert was prosecutor in the next criminal case of importance in the county, viz.: that of the State vs. Bridget Durgan, indicted for the murder of Mrs. Coriell, wife of Dr. Coriell, of New Market. He was assisted in the prosecution by George M. Robeson, then attorney-general. The counsel for the defense were Garnett B. Adrain and William H. Leupp, Judge Vredenburg, of the Supreme Court, presiding. He also presided at the trial of the case of the State vs. Fox, above referred to, and the case of the State vs. Donnelly, a celebrated murder case in Monmouth County. It has been professionally said of Judge Vredenburg that his charges to juries in criminal cases were more dreaded by counsel for the defense than the arguments of their opponents. Bridget Durgan was convicted and executed.

Charles Morgan Herbert, the prosecutor, was quite a brilliant young lawyer, but he died just as he was about gaining a reputation in the profession.

The next case of importance tried in this county was that of the State vs. Michael Sullivan, indicted for the murder of Daniel Talmage, a farmer of Piscataway township. The murder was committed under circumstances of great atrocity. The trial was very interesting because the evidence was purely circumstantial. Abraham V. Schenck, being prosecutor of the pleas, conducted the prosecution. Sullivan was defended by Garnett B. Adrain and Charles T. Co-wenhooven, who succeeded Mr. Schenck in the office of prosecutor of the pleas. The manner in which Mr. Schenck handled the purely circumstantial details of this case and presented them in his argument to the jury gained him great credit for sagacity, good judgment, skill, and ability as a lawyer. Sullivan was convicted and executed.

Gerritt B. Arian

Mr. Schenck was prosecutor of the pleas for Middlesex County from the December term, 1871, when he was appointed to fill a portion of the unexpired term of Mr. Herbert, till February, 1877, when his own full term expired. During that time, although he prosecuted persons charged with various degrees of crime, not one of his indictments was ever quashed nor one of his convictions reversed or carried to a higher court for review.

Abraham V. Schenck was born in New Brunswick in 1821, his ancestors having settled in that place before the Revolutionary war. He is the son of Henry H. Schenck and Eva, daughter of Martinus Voorhees and Maria Van Campen, of Newburgh, N. Y. It appears from the Schenck genealogy that this family are lineally descended, through Hendrick Schenck, of Millstone, N. J., from Peter Schenck, brother of the celebrated Sir Martin Schenck, mentioned by Motley in his "History of the Netherlands." From Hendrick Schenck, on the mother's side, are descended the Frelinghuysens, the Van Deveres, and the Mercers. Henry H. Schenck was long a resident of New Brunswick, one of its active business men, a liberal supporter of the First Reformed Church, a member of its consistory through five different terms, and one of its elders at the time of his death, in 1851.

Abraham V. Schenck was educated at New Brunswick, studied law with Henry V. Speer, was admitted to the bar in 1843, and soon entered into active practice. For nearly forty years he has been a member of this bar, and has taken part in some of the most important causes in the county. Among these may be mentioned the case of the chosen freeholders of Middlesex County vs. the receiver of the State Bank at New Brunswick. In this case the question of the prerogative right of the State of New Jersey to priority of payment was raised and finally decided against such right of the State. It was argued by Attorney-General Stockton for the State, and by Mr. Schenck for the receiver. The case is reported in 2 Stewart, 268, February Term, 1878, in the Court of Errors and Appeals.

The next important case in the county was that of the State against Hart Moore, who was indicted for embezzlement as county collector. Charles T. Cowenhoven was then prosecutor of the pleas; he was assisted in the prosecution by Woodbridge Strong. Abraham V. Schenck was counsel for the defendant. In this case the important question arose whether the act of the Legislature which extended the time of the prosecution of public officers in the State from two to five years was an ex post facto law. Mr. Schenck took the ground in this trial that it was an ex post facto law, and that it impaired the vested rights of the defendant under the constitution. Judge E. W. Scudder, of the Supreme Court, who presided at the trial, overruled him on both points. The defendant was convicted under one indictment, but acquitted under the other. He carried the judgment of conviction by writ of error to the Supreme Court. Chief Justice Beasley rendered the opinion, affirming the judgment of the court below. He carried this judgment to the Court of Appeals, which reversed the judgments of the lower courts and fully sustained Mr. Schenck. This was one of the most important decisions in the State of New Jersey, and attracted the attention of the leading journals of the country. The case is reported in 12 Vroom, 208, June Term, 1880, of the Supreme Court, and in 14 Vroom, 202, March Term, 1881, of the Court of Errors and Appeals. It was a case of national importance, and is so reported in The Central Law Journal, vol. xiii, p. 70, July 29, 1881. Mr. Schenck's argument on the occasion is said to have been the ablest ever made in that court.

A very important and absorbing case in this county after the Hart Moore case was that of the State vs. Robert G. Miller, collector of the city of New Brunswick, indicted for embezzlement. Prosecutor Cowenhoven, assisted by Mercer Beasley, Jr., appeared on behalf of the State, and Abraham V. Schenck, Cortland Parker, and J. Kearney Rice, the present prosecutor, were counsel for the defendant. The case excited great interest on account of the social standing of Mr. Miller, and involving the investigation of the accounts of the city finance for a long series of years, made by expert accountants by order of a justice of the Supreme Court under a recent statute of the State. After a protracted trial, in which many interesting questions of law were raised and argued with great ability by the respective counsel, the defendant was finally acquitted.

George Richmond, of this bar, was a gentleman of wealth, and had been educated to the law. He was known as "Single-case Richmond," from the fact of his having had one suit; and in this respect he was likened to the celebrated "Single-speech Hamilton."

Littleton Kirkpatrick was a son of Chief Justice Kirkpatrick. He was educated to the bar, and was surrogate of the county of Middlesex from 1831 to 1836. For one term he represented this district in Congress. He married Miss Astley, a wealthy lady of Philadelphia, and having ample means in his possession, took the labor of his profession rather easily to attain to much prominence. He was a worthy and highly respected citizen.

John Van Dyke was a member of Congress, 1847-49.

HON. GARNETT B. ADRAIN.—His paternal grandfather, Robert, a native of France, with his two brothers, settled in the north of Ireland, fleeing from religious persecution following the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. They were manufacturers of mathematical instruments in their native country, but turned their attention to teaching for a time after reaching Ireland. Robert was for a time engaged in sailing a small vessel from Ireland to the neighboring islands. He was a man of fine cultivation, and remarkable for his brilliant wit and versatile powers of conversation. After reaching Ireland he married and reared a family of five children, of whom Robert was eldest, and was born at Carrickfergus, Ireland, Sept. 30, 1775. He early developed an aptitude for learning that amounted to genius, and his father determined to give him a thorough education and fit him for the ministry. When Robert was fifteen years old his father and mother both died, and with their death his experience as a pupil ended, and his life as a teacher began. He continued teaching until the breaking out of the Irish rebellion in 1798, in which he commanded an Irish company. Mr. Mortimer, an officer of the government, offered fifty pounds for his capture, and sent out emissaries after him in every direction. Mortimer was wounded the next day at the battle of Saintfield, and as far as he was concerned the pursuit was ended. Adrain being a genuine independent, opposed some measures in his division of the army, and was wounded by one of his own men, which gave rise to a rumor that he was dead, and all efforts for his capture came to an end. He recovered, and in the disguise of a weaver escaped to America. Arriving in New York he proceeded to Princeton, N. J., and at once obtained a place in the academy there, where he remained for about three years. He then became principal of the York County Academy in Pennsylvania, where his mathematical talents were brought before the public by his frequent contributions to the Mathematical Correspondent, published in New York, for which he received several prize medals, awarded for the best solutions of problems published in its columns. In 1805 he took charge of the Reading Academy in the same State, and while there declined the offer of the editorship of the Mathematical Correspondent and as principal of the mathematical school. Shortly after he commenced the publication of a mathematical periodical called the Analyst, which he continued for some three years, which made him extensively and favorably known throughout the country as an able mathematician.

In 1810 he was called to the Professorship of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in Queen's (Rutgers) College, at New Brunswick, N. J., and soon after the degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him. In 1812 he was elected a member of the American Philosophical Society, in the following year of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and subsequently of several of the philosophical societies of Europe. Besides other duties he edited the third edition of "Hutton's Course of Mathematics." In 1813 he was elected to the chair of natural philosophy in Columbia College. He accepted the position, and became the centre of a brilliant collection of mathematical talent and culture. All gathered around him, and all did him honor as their rightful leader. His contributions to the literature of mathematical science while in New York and subsequently were voluminous, and marked by a force and clearness, a profound and exhaustive knowledge, and an elegance of style that won the admiration and commanded the respectful attention of the scientists of the world. In 1825 he began editing the "Mathematical Diary," a work superior to anything that had been edited in this country. In 1826 he returned to Rutgers, and after three years accepted a professorship in the University of Pennsylvania, of which institution he was also vice-provost. He remained there until 1834, when he resigned his position and went to his New Brunswick home. Restive under idleness, the habit of teaching was so strong with him that although his wife's health had compelled him to return to New Brunswick, he went to New York and taught in the grammar school connected with Columbia College until within three years of his death, when, yielding to the entreaties of his family and friends, he relinquished teaching forever. He died Aug. 10, 1843.

Garnett, son of Prof. Robert and Annie (Pollock) Adrain, for many years a lawyer of New Brunswick, was born in the city of New York, Dec. 20, 1815. His preparatory education was received in the Rutgers College Grammar School, and in 1829 he entered Rutgers College, from which he was graduated in the class of 1833. After his graduation he entered the law-office of his brother, Robert Adrain, who was then a leading lawyer in New Brunswick; was licensed as an attorney in 1836, and as counselor in 1839. After his admission as an attorney he at once entered upon the practice of his profession in New Brunswick, where he became eminently successful both as an advocate and counselor, and where he remained in continuous practice until his death on Aug. 17, 1878.

He inherited the genius of his father and a good deal of his independence of spirit. His star gradually rose with undimmed lustre until about twenty years before his decease, when an affection of the throat led him to be more careful. He was recognized by the members of the bar of the State as a legal light of the highest order, and as a forcible, ready, witty, eloquent speaker who had few equals in the State. He was conspicuous as an advocate, never refused to lend his aid to any cause that claimed his services, and known as one of the first criminal lawyers in the State. Mr. Adrain was pleasant to everybody, rich and racy in his conversation, and his society was highly enjoyable. Upon the opening of the September term of the County Court and Court of Oyer and Terminer after his decease, Mr. A. V. Schenck, senior member of the Middlesex County bar, addressed the court, and among other resolutions moved the following, which was passed, and the court adjourned:

"Resolved, That by the death of Garnett B. Adrain the bar of the county of Middlesex has lost one of its most distinguished members, a gentleman of high literary tastes and acquirements, an able, earnest, and eloquent advocate, a genial and warm-hearted companion and friend, and a valuable citizen."

Other addresses were delivered by Judge John F. Hageman, of Princeton, and Judge Scudder, of Trenton, then holding court in New Brunswick.

In politics Mr. Adrain was a Democrat of the old school. He was an ardent adherent of Stephen A. Douglas, and concurred with him in the position he took on the Lecompton Compromise issue. In 1856 he was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Third District, was elected, and served his term. In 1858 there was a "bolt" from the regular congressional convention of Democrats at Somerville, and he was put in nomination by the bolting party and elected. His career in Congress was an active one, and was characterized by great ability and earnestness. Among the more noteworthy speeches delivered by him during his terms in the House were one on the "Treasury Note Bill," one on the "Neutrality Laws," "Against the Admission of Kansas," "Impeachment of Judge Watrous," "Election of Speaker," "Organization of the House," and one on the "State of the Union." After his retirement from Congress he took no active part in politics. He died Aug. 17, 1878. His wife, whom he married Jan. 3, 1838, is a daughter of Joseph C. Griggs, who for many years was one of the leading merchants of New Brunswick. There are four children who survive him, three daughters and one son, Robert, a graduate of Rutgers College in the class of 1873. He studied law with his father, was admitted as an attorney in 1876, as counselor in 1879, and is practicing his profession in New Brunswick.

Charles T. Cowenhoven studied law with A. V. Schenck, and was the first law judge of the Common Pleas, appointed in 1871. He was prosecutor of the pleas from 1877 to 1882.

Robert Adrain was a brother of Garnett B., and son of Dr. Robert Adrain, LL.D.,¹ Professor of Mathematics in Rutgers College. He was an able and learned lawyer, but labored under the disadvantage of being deaf in a measure. The case in which he displayed his abilities most signally was that of Rue vs. Rue (reported in 1 Zabriskie, 369, January Term, 1848), argued by Robert Adrain and Col. J. W. Scott for the plaintiff, and by R. S. Field and J. S. Green for the defendant. Of Mr. Adrain's argument in this case that eminent jurist, Chief Justice Green, remarked that it was the only argument that had ever changed his first convictions with regard to any case argued before him, a very high and yet justly-deserved compliment to Mr. Adrain's great powers as a lawyer.

He was a very courteous man, and exceedingly sensitive upon the subject of his deafness. If a person addressed him a question which he did not distinctly hear or understand he would simply reply, "Yes, yes." This habit at one time led to a laughable mistake while Mr. Adrain was surrogate. The administrator of an estate entered the surrogate's office and asked Mr. Adrain, who happened to be alone and otherwise engaged, whether it would be proper for him as an administrator to proceed and sell some lands of the intestate. Mr. Adrain, not fully hearing or comprehending the question, with his accustomed suavity of manner, replied, "Yes, yes; oh, yes!" The administrator, acting upon this advice, sold the land without an order from the court for that purpose, as required by the laws of New Jersey. The public and the profession were astonished at such a result from such a source, and it ended in a general laugh, in which Mr. Adrain himself joined, when it became understood that Mr. Adrain had answered the question proposed to him without knowing what was asked.

JACOB R. HARDENBERGH was admitted to the bar of Middlesex County in February, 1805. He was a son of Rev. Jacob Rutsen Hardenbergh, D.D., the principal founder and first President of Queen's (now Rutgers) College. Dr. Hardenbergh was president of the college before the Revolution, and aided in procuring its charter in 1770, while he was pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church at Raritan, now Somerville, Somerset Co., N. J. In 1785 the trustees of the college united with the consistories of New Brunswick and Six-Mile Run in calling Dr. Hardenbergh to be at once pastor of the two churches and permanent president of the college. He accepted, and continued in office, greatly beloved, until his resignation, a few months before his lamented death, in 1790.

The son, Jacob Rutsen Hardenbergh, was born in Somerville, N. J., and was educated under his father's auspices at Queen's College, now Rutgers. After his admission to the bar he practiced but a short time, the stronger inducements of business leading him into various active enterprises, which he followed with great ability and success. For many years he was president of the Bank of New Brunswick; founded the Bloomfield Works near Spotswood, where for many years he carried on a saw-mill, grist-mill, powder-mill, and large farm. He was an enterprising and useful citizen, filling many places of trust and responsibility, and discharging the duties of all with conscientious fidelity. He died on the 13th of February, 1841, and his wife died on the 23d, ten days afterwards.

His wife was Mary, daughter of Cornelius Low, of New Brunswick. They had the following-named children, viz.: 1, Cornelius L., mentioned below; 2, James, married Miss McKnight, and died when a young man at Spotswood; 3, Rutsen, married Mary, daughter of John Pool, of Raritan Landing (he was at the time of his death, about 1829, cashier of the Bank of New Brunswick, of which his brother, Cornelius L., was president); 4, Lewis D., married Ellen Voorhees, of Middlebush, N. J. (he was a lawyer in New Brunswick, admitted May term, 1825, and as counselor in 1828, and in later years was secretary of the Hudson County Insurance Company, in which office he died); 5, Frederick, married Emeline, daughter of Gen. James Morgan, of South Amboy, who was a member of Congress about 1828; 6, John, died in infancy; 7, Theodore, studied medicine with Dr. Charles Smith, and was house physician of the New York City Dispensary for more than twenty-five years, and died in New Brunswick, April 19, 1877; 8, Catherine, died unmarried, aged seventy-nine; 9, Maria, died single at the age of twenty-five; 10, Joanna, married Rev. Ransford Walls, of Conajoharie, N. Y.

¹ Dr. Adrain was born at Carrick-Fergus, Ireland, the home of the ancestors of General Andrew Jackson, Sept. 30, 1775, and died Aug. 10, 1843.

CORNELIUS LOW HARDENBERGH was born in New Brunswick July 4, 1790. He was the eldest son of Jacob Rutsen and Mary (Low) Hardenbergh, and was prepared for college at the Somerville Academy, entered Princeton, and studied there about a year, when he entered Rutgers, and graduated in the class of 1810. After studying law with his father, he was admitted to the bar at the September term, 1812, and became a counselor in September, 1815. He was called to be a sergeant-at-law in 1828.

He was a lawyer of superior abilities, excelling before a jury in criminal causes, and was an ambitious and indefatigable student, so much so, indeed, that he injured his eyes, becoming partially blind in 1836; by surgical skill one of his eyes was restored, but he was again attacked in 1843, and after seeking relief in vain for three or four years his blindness became permanent. He did sometimes afterwards plead causes when retained through the preference and urgency of personal friends. But his career as a lawyer, otherwise brilliant and promising, may be said to have ended with the loss of his sight. Besides his professional work he was engaged in business, and to some extent in politics. He followed his father as president of the Bank of New Brunswick, bought his father's works near Spotswood in 1836, and carried them on for a number of years; he was a member of the Legislature in 1835, and mayor of the city of New Brunswick in 1837.

Mr. Hardenbergh was married four times:

First, to Catharine, daughter of James Richmond, of New Brunswick, by whom he had one son, James R., now living in California.

Second, to Helen Mary, daughter of John Crook, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. One son was born of this union: J. Rutsen Hardenbergh, of New Brunswick.

Third, to Mary Hude, daughter of John G. Warren, of New York. Seven children were the fruit of this marriage, of whom three sons are living. Warren Hardenbergh, one of the sons, is a member of the present bar of the county of Middlesex, in active and successful practice; A. Augustus Hardenbergh, another son, president of Hudson County Bank at Jersey, and a member of Congress, now in his third term in that body. Mr. Hardenbergh died July 17, 1860, in New Brunswick.

JOHN C. ELMENDORF was born on the old Elmendorf homestead, near Somerville, Somerset Co., N. J., on March 6, 1814. His father, William Crook Elmendorf, was of German extraction, and came from Esopus, now Kingston, N. Y., where his ancestors in this country first settled. His mother was Maria, daughter of Peter Du Mont, of Huguenot ancestry. Mr. Elmendorf received his preliminary education in his native county, and graduated at Rutgers College in 1834. He studied law with Judge James S. Nevius, was admitted as an attorney in November, 1837, and as a counselor in September, 1841. After his admission he commenced practice in Flemington, N. J., where he remained about two years, and in 1839 removed to New Brunswick, which has since been the place of his residence.

In 1847, Mr. Elmendorf received the appointment of prosecutor of the pleas for Middlesex County. After serving a full term of five years he was re-appointed in 1852, and served another full term, being succeeded in 1857 by George A. Vroom, who served one term, up to 1862, when Mr. Elmendorf was again appointed, and finished his third term as prosecutor in 1867. On the 14th of May of the same year he was appointed a register in bankruptcy, which office he still holds.

In October, 1857, he was united in marriage to Maria Louisa Frelinghuysen, daughter of Hon. Frederick Frelinghuysen, father of the present Secretary of the United States. They have one son, John Edward Elmendorf, a graduate of Rutgers College in the class of 1878, and a member of the bar, having been admitted as an attorney in February, 1882, after having studied with his father and also in the office of Abraham V. Schenck, Esq.

WOODBIDGE STRONG was born in Clinton, Oneida Co., N. Y., in 1827, and came to New Brunswick with his parents when quite young. He graduated at Rutgers College in 1849, studied law with John Van Dyke, and has practiced his profession in New Brunswick ever since, except during 1849 and 1850, when he was in California and Oregon, and five years during which he was law judge of the Common Pleas, 1876-81.

Judge Strong has two sons in the profession who are his law partners; their names will be found in list of members of the bar.

JAMES M. CHAPMAN, son of Rev. James Chapman, was born at Perth Amboy, N. J., Dec. 15, 1822, and was educated at Perth Amboy and at Paterson. He read law with Judge Elias B. D. Ogden, and immediately after his admission to the bar he became the law partner of Walter Rutherford, with whom he remained for about four years, and nearly to the time of that gentleman's death. Mr. Chapman subsequently opened a law-office in Wall Street, New

J. M. Chapman

York, where he has continued the practice of his profession since. He was instrumental in building the branch railroad from Rahway to Perth Amboy, and has been a director since its construction. He labored earnestly to get the connection now being made with the Camden and Amboy Road for twenty years. Mr. Chapman served as mayor of Perth Amboy for 1869-70. He married, April 23, 1851, Louisa, youngest daughter of Robert Stockton Johnson, a prominent iron merchant of Philadelphia, and granddaughter of Thomas Johnson, once a leading lawyer of Hunterdon County. He has one son and five daughters. He resided in Jersey City from the time of his marriage until 1865, when he settled on the homestead at Perth Amboy with his brother, Joseph E., who was formerly a merchant in New York.

The history of his father is in the history of St. Peter's Church, Perth Amboy.

GEORGE CRAIG LUDLOW, Governor of New Jersey, was born at Milford, Hunterdon Co., N. J., April 6, 1830. His father was Cornelius Ludlow, and his grandfather, Gen. Benjamin Ludlow, of Long Hill, Morris Co., a leading Democrat of his time. At the age of five years his parents removed to New Brunswick, where he has since resided. He entered Rutgers College, and graduated therefrom in his twentieth year in 1850, and soon afterwards commenced the study of law in the office of W. H. Leupp, in New Brunswick. He also studied in the office of Robert Van Arsdaie, of Newark. In 1853 he was admitted as an attorney, and immediately commenced the practice of his profession in New Brunswick. In due time he was called to the bar as counselor, and earned for himself the reputation of being a sound and careful lawyer. He was selected as counsel for the city of New Brunswick, and acted in the same capacity for several corporations and many of the citizens of his county. He was a member of the board of chosen freeholders of Middlesex County, and for a number of years was president of the board of education of the city of New Brunswick. In 1876 he was elected senator from Middlesex County; in the second year of his term, 1878, he was chosen president of the Senate, which office he filled with ability and impartiality. He was nominated at the Democratic State Convention in 1880 for Governor, and after a closely-contested canvass was elected by a plurality of six hundred and fifty-one votes.¹

CHAPTER LXIX.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION IN MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

Early Physicians.—Probably the earliest physician who practiced in Middlesex County was the subject of the following sketch:

HENRY GREENLAND was one of the early settlers of Piscataway. His name appears in the annals of that town as one of those for whom lands were surveyed. He was styled "doctor" in 1678, and subsequently "captain," by which title he is designated in some disorderly proceedings in 1681, for which the General Assembly declared him incapable of holding any office, an act, however, disallowed by the proprietaries. He was probably the person alluded to in the following extract from Coffin's "History of Newbury, Massachusetts," pp. 64, 66, 67: "1662, Doctor Henry Greenland and his wife came to Newbury. He appears to have been a man of good education, but passionate, unprincipled, and grossly immoral. He of course soon became involved in difficulties with his neighbors, and caused great excitement among the sober citizens of the town, who had not been accustomed to such specimens of immorality as he had displayed before them." In March, for some gross offense against good morals, the court sentenced him to be imprisoned till the next sessions of the court, then to be whipped or pay a fine of thirty pounds, and be bound to good behavior. One of the witnesses in his behalf testified that "he had been a soldier, and was a gentleman, and they must have their liberties." Another asserted that as he was "a great man," it would be best not to make an uprore, but to let him go away privately." In September following (1664) he was convicted, with one other, of an assault, for which he was again fined and bound to keep the peace. He appealed to the General Court, but his sentence was confirmed, and he was ordered to "depart the jurisdiction, and not to practice physick or surgery." From 1666 to 1672 he resided at Kittery, and it is probable that soon after this he became a resident of New Jersey.

On a map of Hillsborough township, made in 1685, Dr. Greenland is noted as a purchaser of a lot of land at the mouth of Stony Brook, on the Millstone River. In the court minutes of Middlesex County for 1686 is the following entry: "Hugh Staniland, of Nothingham, West Jersey, having formerly accused Doctor Henry Greenland for buying and receiving stolen hogs and marked hogs of the Indians, came into court, and in open court acknowledged that he, the said Hugh Staniland, had falsely and maliciously slandered him, the said Henry Greenland, and desired God and the Court to forgive him."

MOSES BLOOMFIELD resided and practiced medicine in Woodbridge. He was a son of Joseph and Eunice Bloomfield. Dr. Bloomfield was twice married,—first to Miss Ogden, of Elizabethtown, and second to the widow of Dr. Samuel Ward, of Cumberland County. His son Joseph, by the first marriage, born in 1755, was Governor Bloomfield, of New Jersey, and had a brother Samuel who was a physician.

Dr. Bloomfield was considered one of the best physicians of his day. He was a man of fine appearance and of more than ordinary ability and culture. He was one of the constituent members of the New Jersey Medical Society upon its organization in 1766; was efficient in promoting its welfare, and for many years its secretary. He and Dr. Cochran, of New Brunswick, were the committee of the society to secure the passage of an act for the regulation of the practice of medicine in New Jersey, which act was framed by them and adopted by the Legislature in September, 1772. During the war of the Revolution he was an active patriot, and was commissioned surgeon United States Hospital, Continental army, May 14, 1777. He became senior surgeon.

¹ Legislative Manual, p. 45.

In local no less than in public affairs his opinion was highly valued and his services much sought. He was named as one of the trustees in the charter of the Presbyterian Church, 1756, and subsequently one of the trustees of the free school lands of Woodbridge. Being a "good penman," he was usually chosen clerk or secretary of the town-meetings of his town.

The daughters of Dr. Bloomfield were Hannah and Ann; the former married Gen. Giles, of Burlington, N. J.; the latter married Dr. Wall.

In the New Jersey Journal of Aug. 31, 1791, is an obituary notice of the doctor, from which we extract the following:

"He maintained an eminent character as a scholar, a physician, and a Christian. In the early part of his life he became acquainted with men as well as with books. When the war commenced he took an early and decided part in favor of his country. He served in civil offices of trust and honor. When his assistance as a physician was called for by the public he cheerfully stepped forward, and served with faithfulness and reputation as senior physician and surgeon until near the close of the war, when he retired to private life of his own accord. As a physician he was skillful, attentive, and successful; easy and familiar in his manners and address. He was benevolent and liberal to the poor without ostentation, religious without bigotry, never ashamed to owe in any company that he was a Christian, nor would he neglect his duty to God or to his fellow-men on any account whatever. His last illness, which lasted more than two years, he bore with an uncommon Christian patience and fortitude. To his death the State has lost a worthy citizen, and the Presbyterian Church an important member."

The following inscription is on his tombstone in the graveyard at Woodbridge:

"To memory of Dr. Moses Bloomfield, forty years a physician and surgeon in this town, senior physician and surgeon in the Hospital of the United States, representative in the Provincial Congress and General Assembly. An upright Magistrate, Elder of the Presbyterian Church, etc. Born 4th Dec., 1729, died 14th Aug., 1791, in his 63d year. Tim. i. 12: 'I know in whom I have believed.'"

JOHN COCHRAN was the son of James Cochran, a farmer in Pennsylvania, who emigrated from the north of Ireland and purchased lands in the province of Pennsylvania, which as late as 1828 were in the possession of his descendants. The ancestor of James migrated from Paisley, Scotland, to the north of Ireland in 1570. John was born in Chester County, Pa., Sept. 1, 1730. Being desirous of entering a learned profession, his father sent him to a grammar school in the vicinity of his home, conducted by Dr. Francis

Allison, one of the most correct and faithful grammarians that ever taught in this country. Having finished his preliminary studies, he commenced the study of medicine under the instruction of Dr. Thompson, of Lancaster. About the time when he completed his medical studies, the war of 1758 commenced in America between England and France. As there were at that time no great hospitals in the colonies, Dr. Cochran perceived that the army would be a good school for his improvement in surgery, as well as for the treatment of general disease. He obtained the appointment of surgeon's mate in the hospital department, and continued in that office during the whole of the war, enjoying the friendship and advice of Dr. Munro and other eminent English physicians. While lying off Oswego in a British vessel during that war, a shot from the French fleet entered the place where he was operating and carried away the operating-table and his instruments. He quitted the service with the reputation of an able and experienced practitioner. He then settled in Albany, N. Y., where he married Gertrude, then a widow, the only sister of Gen. Schuyler. In a short time he removed to New Brunswick, N. J., where he continued to practice his profession with great reputation. He was one of the founders of the State Medical Society in 1766, and in November, 1769, was elected president, as successor to Dr. Burnett.

"Dr. Cochran became a zealous Whig when the events occurred which resulted in war between the mother-country and her American colonies. After hostilities commenced he was driven from New Brunswick by the British, who burned his house. His family after this event went to the manor of Livingston, on the Hudson River, a daughter of Mrs. Cochran by her first husband having married the lord of the manor. The doctor offered his services in 1776 as a volunteer in the hospital department. Gen. Washington appreciated the value of a physician who joined an enlarged experience to diligence, fidelity, and sound judgment, and in the winter of 1777 recommended him to Congress in the following words: 'I would take the liberty of mentioning a gentleman whom I think highly deserving of notice, not only on account of his ability, but for the very great assistance he has offered us in the course of this winter merely in the nature of a volunteer. This gentleman is Dr. John Cochran, well known to all the faculty. The place for which he is fitted, and which would be most agreeable to him, is surgeon-general of the Middle Department. In this line he served all the last war in the British service, and has distinguished himself this winter particularly in his attention to the smallpox patients and the wounded.'

"He was accordingly appointed, April 10, 1777, physician and surgeon-general in the Middle Department. In the month of October, 1781, upon the resignation of Dr. William Shippen, Congress was pleased to commission him director-general of the hospitals of the United States, an appointment that was the more honorable because it was not solicited by him. He was attached to headquarters, to Gen. Washington's staff. His pay was five dollars a day. When he received his commission from Congress he was with the army at New Windsor. It was sent to him by Samuel Huntington, president of Congress, by letter, under date of Jan. 18, 1781.

"Upon the breaking up of the army at Newburg, upon the ratification of the Treaty of peace, Washington manifested his friendship and cordial relations with his army surgeon by giving him all his headquarters' furniture. One piece only is now left in the family, a small tea-table, now in the possession of Hon. John Cochrane, of New York, the doctor's grandson. That cordial relations were formed early in the war between the commander-in-chief and Dr. Cochran appears from a letter from the former, which is published in Irving's 'Life of Washington,' vol. iii, page 477, ed. 1861.

"The historian remarks of the letter that 'it is almost the only instance of sportive writing in all Washington's correspondence.' The letter informs the doctor that he has asked Mrs. Cochran and Mrs. Livingston to dine with him on the next day, and says that his table is large enough to hold the ladies, but deems it more essential to inform him 'how it is covered.' 'Since our arrival at this happy spot we have had a ham, sometimes a shoulder of bacon to grace the head of the table, a piece of roast beef adorns the foot, and a dish of beans or greens, almost imperceptible, decorates the centre. When the cook has a mind to cut a figure, which I presume will be the case to-morrow, we have two beefsteak pies or dishes of crabs in addition, one on each side of the centre dish, dividing the space and reducing the distance between dish and dish to about six feet, which without them would be twelve feet apart. Of late he has had the surprising sagacity to discover that apples will make pies, and it is a question if in the violence of his efforts we do not get one of apples instead of having both of beefsteak. If the ladies can put up with such entertainment, and will submit to partake of it on plates once tin, now iron (not become so by scouring), I shall be happy to see them.' The dinner party was at headquarters, West Point, 1779.

¹ Elmer's Reminiscences; Dally's Woodbridge; Wickes' History of N. J. Med., pp. 150, 151.

"It is hardly necessary to observe that Dr. Cochran was indebted very much to his observation and experience while in the British service for the great improvement he made in the hospital department from the time it was put under his charge. He seems to have been providentially raised up and trained for his work as no other surgeon in the country was. Nor is it necessary further to observe, and it is to his honor to add, that while others high in the medical staff were disgusting the public with mutual charges and criminalations, Dr. Cochran always preserved the character of an able physician and an honest and patriotic man.

"Soon after peace was declared he removed with his family to New York, where he returned to the duties of his profession in the quiet of civil life. Upon the adoption of the new constitution his friend, President Washington, 'retaining,' to use his own words, 'a cheerful recollection of his past services,' nominated him to the office of commissioner of loans for the State of New York. He held this office till a stroke of paralysis disabled him in the discharge of its duties. He therefore resigned and retired to Schenectady, N. Y. . . . Dr. Cochran died at Schenectady, April 6, 1807, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. . . . His remains were removed to Palatine, Montgomery Co., N. Y., by his sons, where his wife died in March, 1813, in the eighty-ninth year of her age, and where she was buried by the side of her husband. When the doctor's sons afterwards removed to Utica they caused the remains of their parents to be removed thither. There they now repose in Forest Hill Cemetery.

"Dr. Cochran had three sons,—John (who was killed when quite young by the kick of a horse), James, and Walter Livingston. James married (1) Elenor Barclay, of Philadelphia, and (2) Catherine V. R., youngest daughter of Gen. Philip Schuyler; he died at Oswego, N. Y., at an advanced age. They had no surviving issue. Walter L. married Cornelia W., only daughter of Peter Smith, of Peterboro', and sister of the late Gerrit Smith. He died in the city of New York, Aug. 13, 1857, aged eighty-six, leaving sons and daughters, of whom the eldest is Hon. John Cochran, of New York.

"A notice of the doctor, with a portrait, was published in the American Historical Record of July, 1874."¹

EDWARD CARROLL.—Little has been recorded of the life of this physician, except what is engraved on his monumental stone in the Episcopal churchyard at New Brunswick, to wit:

¹ "In memory of Edward Carroll, M.D., who departed this life 1840, Æ 73. Formerly of the Island of Jamaica, but for many years a reputed inhabitant of this town. He was a physician alike eminent for the Christian graces and virtues that adorned his life, and for the medical skill and science that ranked him high in his profession. The loveliness and purity of his character seemed to him the esteem of all and the friendship of many."²

Dr. Carroll did not practice after removing to New Brunswick. He had been a practitioner in Kingston, island of Jamaica, and had become wealthy. He came to New York, looking for a place to settle and enjoy leisure for the rest of his life. In that city he married a Miss Crawford, who was the aunt of the widow of the late Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt. It is said that she afterwards married an actor named Ball, who was an adventurer and soon squandered her property. Dr. Carroll became totally blind after his removal to New Brunswick. He died without issue.

HENRY DRAKE.—Born in New Brunswick in 1773. His father was James Drake, the proprietor and keeper of the Indian Queen Hotel of that place. As New Brunswick was on the route of travel between New York and Philadelphia, this hotel was noted as a resting-place for travelers. John Adams, Jefferson, Burr, and other distinguished men sought the comforts of the hostelry. The elder Wallack, while traveling in his own carriage, met with an accident while crossing the Raritan bridge, by which his leg was fractured. He became an inmate of this house during his enforced confinement. The New Jersey Medical Society when it met at New Brunswick frequently met "at the house of James Drake." The son studied medicine, and was reputed as a man of some talent and skill in his profession. He, however, abandoned practice and assumed the management of the hotel, becoming its proprietor. He died Dec. 24, 1817, aged forty-four, and his remains are buried in Christ churchyard.³

LEWIS DUNHAM was a son of Col. Azariah Dunham, grandson of Rev. Jonathan Dunham, of Piscataway, and great-grandson of Edmond Dunham, who was the first white child born in Middlesex County. His father, Azariah, was an active Revolutionary patriot, a surveyor by occupation, and an honored public servant in every capacity of trust from the local town committee to the Provincial and Continental Congress.

Dr. Dunham was born in New Brunswick in 1754, and died Aug. 26, 1821. He commenced practice in New Brunswick, and continued it till the breaking out of the war. He was commissioned surgeon, Third Battalion, First Establishment, Feb. 21, 1776; surgeon, Third Battalion, Second Establishment, Nov. 28, 1776; surgeon, Third Regiment, resigned. He became a member of the State Medical Society in 1783, and was constant in his attendance upon its meetings. He was elected president in 1791, and again in 1816. Upon retiring from the chair the first time he read a dissertation on the beneficial effects of bathing. His character is set forth in the monumental inscription over his remains in the Presbyterian churchyard of New Brunswick:

"HERE LIES THE REMAINS
OF
DR. LEWIS DUNHAM,
WHO DIED AUGUST 26, 1821,
AGED 65.

"Few men have ever shown greater energy of character wisely and uniformly directed in all the relations of life. Truly a patriot during the whole war of Independence, he was to his country a devoted son.

¹ Wickes' Hist. N. J. Med., pp. 204-10.

² Ibid., p. 238.

³ History of New Jersey, p. 238.

In peace he resumed his profession in this his native place, and during a practice of more than forty years he was indefatigable beyond expression. He was tender and skillful, to multitudes the blessed instrument of restored health. As a friend and a relative he knew no change. Affectionate and ardent in social life, sincere and independent in his principles, he early acquired and always retained the highest confidence of his fellow-citizens. He crowned a life of usefulness with a walk and example so Christian; he died so calm and collected, so full of hope and of humble trust in the Blood of the Atonement as to leave to all the consoling belief, 'The spark that animated him from Deity given, now beams a glorious star in Heaven.'"

JACOB DUNHAM, brother of Dr. Lewis Dunham, was born in New Brunswick, Sept. 29, 1767, and died Aug. 7, 1832. When nineteen or twenty years old he attended lectures at Philadelphia, where he was a classmate of Dr. William P. Dewees, with whom he remained a life-long friend and correspondent. The latter always sent him "authors' copies" of his works as they were published.

The doctor had an extensive practice in New Brunswick and the adjacent country, extending to Bound Brook on the north, to Six-Mile Run and Berrien's tavern (Rocky Hill) on the west, to Millstone (Dunham's Corner), Washington, Old Bridge, and Cross-Roads on the south, and to Piscataway, Woodbridge, and Metuchen on the east. His tombstone, in the churchyard of Christ Church, New Brunswick, bears the following inscription:

"IN MEMORY
OF JACOB DUNHAM, M.D.,
WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE
AUGUST 7TH, 1832,
AGED 65 YEARS."

MELANCTHON FREEMAN practiced in Metuchen, and attained considerable reputation as a medical man. He was a native of Piscataway township, born in 1746, and died in 1806, aged sixty years. Dr. Freeman's remains were buried in Metuchen. He had a son and a grandson, each bearing his name, who were physicians. Dr. Freeman was commissioned "surgeon of State troops, Col. Forman's battalion, Heard's brigade, June 21, 1776."

HARRIS.—Two physicians of this name are mentioned in Middlesex County: one "Dr. Harris" among the members of the First Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick, 1786, and Dr. Isaac Harris, of Piscataway township. The latter was born in 1741, and was educated in East Jersey. He married Margaret Pierson, of either Morris or Essex County, and had four children, two of whom studied law, and the third, Isaac, became a physician, and practiced at Woodstown, Salem Co., until his death, April 16, 1811. A son Samuel by a second marriage practiced medicine in Camden for twenty or thirty years previous to his death, which occurred in 1830.

Dr. Isaac Harris resided and practiced in the early part of his professional career near Quibbletown, Piscataway township, where he owned an elegant residence and farm, which were purchased by the father of Lewis Stille, and afterwards occupied by the latter. Dr. Harris, while residing and practicing here, was one of the first movers for the formation of a medical society, and was the sixth signer of the "instruments of association." He possessed a good medical library, and had the reputation of a prominent man in his profession.

In 1771 he removed to Pittsgrove, Salem Co., where he died in 1808, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. In the war of 1776 he was commissioned a surgeon in Gen. Newcomb's brigade, State troops.

ADAM HAY was a physician in Woodbridge as early as 1737. At least he resided in the town, for in that year his name is found attached to a subscription for raising a fund for inclosing the ground and plastering the church of St. Peter, Amboy, of which he was a vestryman in 1739. In his will, dated Nov. 12, 1739, he is styled "Adam Hay, Doctor of Physick." Admitted to probate June 3-5, 1741.¹

JOHN JOHNSTONE.—We find in Dr. Wickes' "History of New Jersey Medicine" the following sketch of Dr. John Johnstone and his son, Lewis Johnstone, physicians at Perth Amboy:

"The head of the Amboy family, supposed to be a son of John of Ochiltree, was of the company of emigrants on board the ill-fated 'Henry and Francis' that arrived in December, 1685. He was a druggist in Edinburgh, 'at the sign of the Unicorn.' He is said by Woodrow to have been married to Eupham, daughter of George Scot, before embarkation, but the family tradition has been that they were married on the voyage or soon after their arrival. An old record, the correctness of which there is no reason to question, confirms the latter supposition by giving as the date of their marriage April 18, 1686.

"On the 28th of July, 1685, in consideration of certain acts promotive of the advantage and interest of East Jersey, the proprietors in England granted five hundred acres of land to George Scot, on condition that he should reside in the Province with his family. In January, 1685-86, his daughter petitioned the proprietors to have the same confirmed to her, and on January 13th, following, her husband, Dr. Johnstone, was put in possession of the tract in Monmouth County. The doctor established himself first in New York. It is not known when he first removed to Amboy. It must have been before 1707, as in that year he is mentioned as 'of the Jerseys,' being the bail of the Rev. Francis Mackenzie, when arrested under the persecutions of Cornbury. For several years prior to that he spent much of his time on a plantation in Monmouth County, named in his patent 'Scotchchesterburg.' In 1709 and the following year he was a member of the Provincial Assembly of New Jersey, but was still occasionally styled as of New York. He soon after removed there, and was mayor from 1714 to 1718. In 1720 he was a member of Governor Burnett's Council for that Province. About that time he removed to New Jersey and permanently resided there, but was not superseded in the Council till 1723.²

"A few stones remained until recently on the banks of the Raritan designating the site of the doctor's mansion. It was not entirely destroyed until after the Revolution. It was a double two-story brick house, with a large barn and other outhouses, and attached thereto was a spacious garden, a well-chosen collection of fruit-trees and a fine orchard, of which a few aged trees marked the site in 1856.

"In his profession he was skillful, and availed himself of the opportunities it gave to exhibit his goodness of heart, his charity, and his estimable character. On his death the following obituary appeared in the Philadelphia Weekly Mercury:

"Perth Amboy, Sept. 19, 1732. On the 7th inst., died here in the 71st year of his age, Dr. John Johnstone, very much lamented by all who knew him, and to the inexpressible loss of the poor, who were always his particular care."

James Alexander, writing to the doctor's friend, Governor Hunter, Sept. 20, 1732, says,—

¹ History of New Jersey Medicine, pp. 278-79.

² Valentine's Manual.

"Dr. Johnstone died the 7th of this month, being spent with age and fatigue in going about to serve those who wanted his assistance. I believe his family is left in tolerable good circumstances. I drew his will for him a few years before he died, when, although he was worn almost quite away, he retained his good sense and spirit, and so I am informed he did to the last.

"He represented the people of Middlesex County and of Amboy thirteen years in the General Assembly of the Province, and for ten of them held the office of Speaker. He was one of the commissioners for settling the boundary between New York and New Jersey,¹ and at different times held other offices with credit to himself. He had several children, a full record of whom is given in 'Whitehead's Contribution to East Jersey History,' from which this sketch of Dr. Johnstone is obtained."

"LEWIS JOHNSTONE, sixthson of Dr. John Johnstone, was born in October, 1704. He resided in Amboy, in the house then standing near the site of the present mansion of Mr. Paterson, to which it gave place in 1795. He adopted the profession of his father, and was much respected as a man and a physician. His education was principally received at Leyden, in Holland, then the resort of all who sought the highest scholarship. After his return to this country he kept up a literary correspondence with several eminent men of Europe. Some interesting letters to him from Grovoniis, the botanist, written in 1735-39, are in the possession of Wm. A. Whitehead, Esq., extracts from which he has given in his 'Contributions,' etc.

"That he held a high place in the respect and confidence of his associates in the profession appears in the fact that in 1767, one year after the organization of the New Jersey Medical Society, it was resolved to appoint a committee 'to wait upon Dr. Johnstone and invite him to join the Society.' The committee subsequently reported that they had waited upon him, and that 'the doctor declined to become a member, yet assured the committee that he highly approved of the institution of the society, that he would countenance the same at all times, particularly that he would use his whole interest with the Legislative body of this Province whenever requested, in order to obtain a law, etc., for the countenance, honor, and advancement of the Society.'

"Dr. Lewis Johnstone died Nov. 22, 1773, at an advanced age. The announcement of his death is made in the papers of the day, with the remark that he was 'a physician of the highest reputation, and very greatly beloved by all who knew him.' He married Martha, daughter of Caleb Heathcote, of New York. They had two sons and two daughters.²

"Dr. Johnstone seems to have been a large land-owner in this county. In Rivington's Gazette for Jan. 27, 1774, James Parker, John Smith, and Heathcote Johnstone, executors, give notice to the debtors and creditors of Dr. Johnstone's estate for the settlement of unsettled accounts with the same, and on the 10th of February advertise to be sold the following tracts of land, being parts of the estate:

"660 acres adjoining the farms of Nicholas Van Vinkle and John Poe, situated on the west side of and adjoining the Matchaponix River, eleven miles from New Brunswick and Perth Amboy, and four from South river landing, in the neighborhood of two mills and two iron-works, 'both ready markets for all kinds of country produce, and has a fine outlet for cattle and hogs.' The place in the possession of John Van Schack, and improved by a good house, a Dutch barn, and a young bearing orchard. 300 acres are cleared land, 20 of which are good meadow and a great deal more may be made: is very well watered. The upland well timbered and proper for any kind of grain, and may be conveniently divided into two or three plantations.

"670 acres, formerly the property of Hugh Taylor, about thirteen miles distant from New Brunswick and Perth Amboy, and adjoins the lands of John Combs, Jacob Sydam, and John Johnston, with a large framed house and framed barn, a young orchard of about 200 apple-trees, 200 acres of cleared land, 30 acres of meadow, with a considerable quantity of bog meadow, capable of being made valuable by improvement.

"550 acres opposite Perth Amboy, adjoining the land of John Stevens, Esq., and the Raritan river; well timbered and so situated that the timber and firewood can be very easily transported to New York. 60 acres of this tract is described as 'cleared land whereon is a house and well-built barn, and a young bearing orchard of 200 apple-trees, grafted with the best fruit.'

"790 acres 'situated on the west side of South river, and near Manalapan river, being one-half of a tract remaining unsold and held in company with the desires of Andrew Johnston, deceased,' surrounding the village of Spotswood; well wooded and timbered, and a great part of it in a fine rich swamp adjoining 'the mills and iron-works of Messrs. Perry & Hayes, which lay in about the centre of it; the nearest part of it about half a mile and the most distant part about three miles from South river landing.'

"The tracts are offered entire or to be divided to suit. Title clear and indisputable."³

JOHN LAWRENCE was a practicing physician at Perth Amboy at the breaking out of the Revolution. He was a son of John Lawrence, of Monmouth County, born in 1747, graduated at Princeton, 1764, and at the University of Pennsylvania in 1768, being one of the first ten who received literary honors from that institution, and the recipient of the first medical degree in America. He commenced practice in Monmouth County, but removed to Amboy prior to 1776, as in July of that year Maj. Duyckink, who had been sent there by order of Gen. Washington, with the Middlesex militia, for the protection of the town, arrested the doctor, with eight others, and sent them to Elizabethtown. He was ordered by the Provincial Congress to Trenton, as a medical man, on parole.

In April, 1777, he, with others, including his father, was arranged before the Council of Safety. He finally withdrew from the State to New York, where, and in its vicinity, he practiced medicine, and was also in command of a company of volunteers for the defense of the city. In 1783 he returned to New Jersey, where he spent the remainder of his days.

"That Dr. Lawrence was held in high esteem in Amboy, is evident from the fact that the ladies of that town petitioned the convention which held him under arrest, that the doctor might be permitted to remain there, 'apprehending fatal and melancholy

¹ This is an error. He was one of the royal commissioners to determine the north station-point in 1719,—the commission for settling the boundary line.

² Whitehead's Contributions.

³ MSS. Hist. Notes, J. M. Toner.

consequences to themselves, their families, and the inhabitants in general if they should be deprived of the assistance of Dr. Lawrence.' The following courteous reply was ordered to be sent to Mrs. Franklin, one of the petitioners, signed by the president :

"Madam, I am ordered by Congress to acquaint you, and through you the other ladies of Amboy, that their petition in favor of Dr. John Lawrence has been received and considered. Could any application have procured a greater indulgence to Dr. Lawrence, you may be assured yours could not have failed of success. But, unhappily, Madam, we are placed in a situation that motives of commiseration to individuals must give place to the safety of the public. As Dr. Lawrence has fallen under the suspicion of our generals, we are under the necessity of abiding by the steps which are taken, and are Madam, yours, etc."

He used to say that his residence in Amboy was the happiest part of his life, for the reason that the officers of the crown resident there formed a social circle superior to that of New York or Philadelphia.¹

After his return to New Jersey he resided at Upper Freehold. He never married, but lived with his three sisters. He was quite wealthy, was full of life, and fond of convivial pastimes, fox-hunting being his favorite sport. He died while playing a game of chess in Trenton, April 29, 1830, aged eighty-three years.

NEHEMIAH LUDLUM was an early physician in this county. His ancestors lived on Long Island, whence he probably came to New Jersey. He graduated at Princeton in 1762, and in 1768 became a member of the New Jersey Medical Society, dying, a few months after his election, in early manhood. The following is the inscription on his gravestone at Cranbury :

"HERE LIES THE
BODY OF DOCTOR NEHEMIAH LUDLUM, WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE THE 2D DAY OF OCT., 1768, AGED 29 YEARS."

NATHANIEL MANNING practiced medicine for a time in Metuchen prior to 1771, in which year he went to England, and was ordained by the Bishop of London minister for Hampshire Parish, Hampshire Co., Va. In 1775 he was its incumbent. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1762, and appears in the catalogue as a clergyman, the profession probably having been entered at a later date. He received his medical education under the tuition of the "Faculty of Philadelphia," and upon testimonials from that body became a member of the New Jersey Medical Society in 1767. He was considered in Metuchen a most able and excellent physician, and upon leaving the country received a certificate from the society. He was present for the last time at its meetings in 1772.

REV. ROBERT MCKEAN, the first president of the New Jersey Medical Society, was ordained in 1757 to the mission of New Brunswick by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. His mission embraced the towns of Piscataway and Spotswood. In 1763 he removed permanently to Perth Amboy, his health being greatly impaired by his incessant labors.

As a physician he evidently ranked high, having been one of the original seventeen who founded the Medical Society in July, 1766, and having received the honor of being chosen its first president. In a letter dated Oct. 12, 1767, Rev. Dr. Chandler, of St. John's Church, Elizabethtown, informed the society that, "wasted away with a tedious disorder, the worthy, the eminently useful and amiable Mr. McKean is judged by his physicians to be at present at the point of death." He adds, "a better man was never in the society's services." He died October 17th. His remains rest in the graveyard of St. Peter's Church, Amboy, where a monument has been erected by Hon. Thomas McKean, an early Governor of Pennsylvania. It bears the following inscription :

"In memory of REV. ROBT. MCKEAN, M.A., Practitioner of Physic, etc., and Missionary from the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts to the city of Perth Amboy, who was born July 13th, 1732, N.S., and died Oct. 17th, 1767. An unshaken Friend, an agreeable Companion, a rational Divine, a skillful Physician, and in every relation in life a truly benevolent and honest man. Fraternal love hath erected this monument."²

ALEXANDER ROSS practiced medicine in New Brunswick. He was originally from Scotland, and later from the Island of Jamaica. While in New Brunswick he resided at Ross Hall, on the east bank of the Raritan, one mile above the city. Dr. Charles A. Howard, who studied medicine with Dr. Ross, after the death of the latter, married his widow, and resided on the Ross property.

Dr. Ross married Sarah, the youngest daughter of Thomas Farmer, of New Brunswick, a lady celebrated for her beauty. Her father removed from Staten Island to Amboy in 1711. He was a man of distinction, being second judge and subsequently presiding judge of the province. He was also representative of Middlesex County in the Assembly from 1740 to 1743, during Governor Morris' administration. Dr. Ross died at his home at the age of fifty-two, and was buried in Christ churchyard, where his monumental stone bears the inscription :

"In Memory of
DR. ALEXANDER ROSS,
Who Died the 30th of November, 1775,
Aged 52 years."³

MOSES SCOTT was one of the noted early physicians of New Brunswick. His tombstone, now somewhat defaced, stands in the Presbyterian churchyard, and bears the following inscription :

"In the Full triumph of Christian Faith
And the Certain Assurance of a Blessed Immortality
MOSES SCOTT, Esquire, M.D.,
Repaired to his Mansion Not Made
With Hands, Eternal in The Heavens,
On the 28th Day of Dec., 1821."

² Hawkins' Missions of the Church of England. Barber and Howe's Coll.

³ Wicke's New Jersey Medicine, pp. 376-77.

¹ Whitehead's Contributions, etc.

He was a son of John Scott, of Neshaminy, Bucks Co., Pa., born in 1738. At seventeen years of age he accompanied the unfortunate expedition under Gen. Braddock, and shared the privations incident to that memorable campaign. At the capture of Fort Duquesne, three years afterwards, he had risen to be a commissioned officer, but he soon resigned his position, and by the advice of friends entered upon the study of medicine. He seems to have first settled at Brandywine, whence he removed to New Brunswick about 1774, having already acquired some distinction as a practitioner. On Feb. 14, 1776, he was commissioned surgeon of the Second Middlesex Regiment, and was subsequently made surgeon in general hospital of the Continental army. He was liberal in making provisions for his outfit, procuring a supply of medicine and surgical instruments from Europe, chiefly upon his own credit; but almost before they could be used they fell into the hands of the enemy, who suddenly invaded New Brunswick. He had barely time to save himself from capture, being obliged to desert his dinner upon the table and escape, leaving his house and its entire contents in the possession of the British soldiers. The doctor's cases of medicines were emptied into the streets by the cautious officers, a Tory neighbor having reported the story that the doctor had poisoned them on purpose to destroy the British troops.

In 1777, Congress took the entire direction of the medical staff, and Dr. Scott was commissioned as senior physician and surgeon of the hospitals and assistant director-general. He was present at the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown. At Princeton he was near Gen. Mercer when he fell.

On the restoration of peace he resumed the duties of his profession at New Brunswick, where he continued to reside until his death. He became a member of the Medical Society of New Jersey in 1782, and was chosen its president in 1789. His reputation drew to his office young men from all parts of the State for instruction in medicine. In 1814 he was made a fellow of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York.

Dr. Scott during his life was an earnest Christian and a pillar in the Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick. He was an efficient elder and treasurer of the board of trustees. His death occurred Dec. 28, 1821, at the age of eighty-three. His wife's maiden name was Anna Johnson. She died Aug. 7, 1833, aged eighty-eight. Their children were Hannah, unmarried; Mary, married Dr. Charles Smith; Jane, married Abraham Blauvelt; Joseph Warren Scott, who became an eminent lawyer, died in New Brunswick, aged ninety-four; Anna, married Dr. Ephraim Smith, a practitioner in New Brunswick, who was mayor of the city and president of the State board; Margaret, unmarried; and Eliza, married Rev. Mr. Rousse.

CHARLES SMITH, physician of New Brunswick, was born near Princeton in 1768. By his own exertions he procured the means of acquiring a classical and professional education. He graduated at Princeton College in 1786, and studied medicine with Dr. Moses Scott, of New Brunswick, receiving his degree of M.D. from Queen's (Rutgers) College, in the first class which obtained its honors from that institution in 1792. He formed a partnership with his preceptor, and married his daughter, Mary Dickinson Scott. He was a surgeon in the State troops in the Whiskey Insurrection of 1794; was elected a trustee of Rutgers College in 1804.

Dr. Smith was a skillful and successful practitioner, and was considered the most scientific and accomplished physician of his day in the county of his residence. In 1814 he was elected a fellow of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York. He not only rose to eminence in his profession, but acquired an ample fortune. In his person he was large and of fine presence, genial in his manners, and without egotism.

He died without issue, leaving an estate valued at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The most of his property was left to ex-Governor Olden, who was a son of his sister. His death occurred May 7, 1848, aged seventy-eight years.

HEZEKIAH STILES practiced as a physician at Cranbury. He was descended from John Stiles, one of the original emigrants to New England, who afterwards migrated to Hempstead, L. I., and became one of the first grantees of that township. He lived to the extraordinary age of one hundred and twenty-two or one hundred and twenty-three years, and when upwards of one hundred was able to walk forty miles a day. His grandson, William, settled at Springfield among the first inhabitants, where his son John also resided, who was the father of Hezekiah. The latter was born in 1726, and, as we have said, practiced in Cranbury, in this county. He became a member of the New Jersey Medical Society in 1767, and was chosen its president in 1775. He married the daughter of James Patten. Upon the erection of the Presbyterian Church in Cranbury in 1785, he gave the congregation a bell. His remains rest in its graveyard, and by the inscription it appears that he died Nov. 17, 1790, in the sixty-fifth year of his age, and that his wife died April 14, 1794, in her fifty-seventh year.

AUGUSTUS R. TAYLOR was born in New Brunswick, N. J., in May, 1782. He received the rudiments of his education partly under the paternal roof and partly at Queen's College, in which his father was the Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. He removed to Schenectady, his father having been appointed Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in Union College, of which the celebrated Dr. Nott was then president, and graduated in 1800 with the highest honors of his class.

Having determined to pursue the profession of medicine and surgery, he returned to New Brunswick and entered the office of Dr. Moses Scott. In the following winter he attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, becoming a student of the celebrated Dr. Benjamin Rush, and received his degree in the spring of 1803, the subject of his thesis being "Insanity." At their parting interview Dr. Rush presented him with a pocket-case of lancets, and impressed upon him the necessity of bleeding in all cases, which advice he faithfully followed as long as he lived.

He returned to New Brunswick and immediately commenced the practice of medicine and surgery. He became a member of the Medical Society of the State of New Jersey upon its reorganization in 1816, and was chosen one of the first board of directors under section second of the charter adopted that year, with Drs. Lewis Dunham, John Van Cleve, Jacob Dunham, Nicholas Belleville, William McKissack, Nathaniel Manning, Enoch Wilson, Charles Smith, Peter I. Stryker, Matthias Freeman, Ralph P. Lott, Moses Scott, Charles Pierson, and Ephraim Smith as associates.¹

At this meeting committees were appointed to form district medical societies in the counties of Middlesex, Somerset, Monmouth, Essex, and Morris, agreeably to the third section of the act of incorporation. Dr. Taylor, living on the north side of Albany Street, was a resident of New Brunswick, and at the same time in Somerset County, and was appointed a member of the committee to form the Somerset District Medical Society. The entire committee consisted of Peter I. Stryker, Ferdinand Schenck, William McKissack, Augustus R. Taylor, Ephraim Smith, Moses Scott, and Henry Schenck. The committee to form the Middlesex District Society were Lewis Dunham, Jacob Dunham, Enoch Wilson, Matthias Freeman, Charles Smith, Nathaniel Manning, Ralph R. Scott, and John Van Cleve.²

At the annual meeting of the State Society in 1816, Dr. Taylor was appointed chairman of the committee to revise, correct, and amend the act of incorporation of that society, and in April, 1830, he procured the passage of an act by the Legislature amending the charter of the Medical Society of New Jersey, under which he was elected first president.

He married, in 1804, Catherine Schuyler Neilson, daughter of Col. John Neilson, of the city of New Brunswick. They had eight children,—six sons and two daughters. One son died in infancy; the other five are filling responsible positions in different parts of the country. The two daughters married clergymen of the Reformed Church.

Dr. Taylor's political friends sent him to the Legislature in 1839, and in consequence of the sudden change from active to sedentary habits the disease was brought on which caused his death the following August. He was an excellent and successful physician, and an eminently useful citizen, possessing in a high degree the esteem and affection of his patients and the confidence of his professional brethren. A friend of his paid him a proud but just compliment when he remarked that "Dr. Taylor never rose by depressing another." Those who desire to possess further information respecting his traits of character are referred to the tribute paid him by Dr. Pool, of South River, Middlesex Co. Dr. Taylor was eminently distinguished for science, beloved for the simplicity of his manners and the benevolence of his heart, respected for his inflexible integrity and his pure and unaffected piety. In all the relations of his professional life he was sagacious, candid, diligent, and humane. Few men ever united professional and personal worth in a higher or happier manner than did Dr. Augustus R. Taylor. He died at New Brunswick Aug. 19, 1840, and was placed in the family vault in the churchyard of the First Presbyterian Church.

AUGUSTUS FITZ RANDOLPH TAYLOR, son of Dr. Augustus R. and Catharine Schuyler (Neilson) Taylor, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1809. He attended Capt. Partridge's Military School at Middletown, Conn., two years, during 1825 and 1826, at the expiration of which time he entered the Sophomore Class of Rutgers College, from which he graduated in 1829. He immediately entered his father's office at New Brunswick as a student of medicine, and continued there till the winter of 1831-32, when he became a student in the office of Dr. Alexander H. Stevens, in the city of New York, and at the same time attended lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons. In the spring he returned to his father's office, intending to resume his studies and lectures in New York in the fall; but, on account of the breaking out of Asiatic cholera in New Brunswick in July, 1832, he was detained in practice in that city. The fatal disease had made its appearance simultaneously on the 16th day of July in Quebec, New York, and New Brunswick, and according to observations taken at that time the wind had blown steadily from the east for eleven consecutive days. New Brunswick was filled with laborers on the Delaware and Raritan Canal then in construction, among whom cholera began to make its deadly ravages. The contractors organized a hospital and placed Dr. Taylor in charge of it, although he had not yet been licensed to practice. He was also placed in charge of the hospital devised by the citizens, and fought heroically against the ravages of the fearful epidemic till autumn.

In the fall of 1832 he received a license to practice from the Medical Society of New Jersey, and the honorary degree of Doctor of Medicine was subsequently conferred upon him by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the City of New York. Dr.

¹ Those in italics belonged to Middlesex County.

² Those in italics living in New Brunswick.

Taylor has practiced medicine in New Brunswick for half a century, and is still consulted professionally, although he has suffered the loss of sight for many years, having been totally blind since 1866. He is a gentleman well up in his profession and in general information.

In 1839, as chairman of the committee of the Medical Society of New Jersey to whom was referred that portion of the president's address at the last annual meeting relating to a State Lunatic Asylum, he made an able and elaborate report on that subject, recommending that a petition be presented by the society to the Legislature. This was agreed to, and Dr. Taylor was appointed to get the memorial printed and place it on the desks of the members of the Council and Assembly at Trenton, which he did. The Legislature thereupon appointed a commission consisting of five persons, viz.: Hon. Lewis Condict, of Morris; L. Q. C. Elmer, Esq., of Cumberland; Dr. L. A. Smith, of Essex; Dr. Charles G. McChesney, of Mercer; and Dr. Augustus F. Taylor, of Somerset, to ascertain the number, age, sex, and condition of the Insanics and idiots of this State. The commission met and organized for action, distributing the territory among the members as follows: to Dr. Condict, Morris, Sussex, and Warren Counties; to Dr. Smith, Essex, Bergen, and Passaic; to Dr. Taylor, Middlesex, Somerset, Hunterdon, and Gloucester; to Dr. McChesney, Mercer, Burlington, and Monmouth; to Mr. Elmer, Cumberland, Atlantic, Cape May, and Ocean Counties.

The report of this commission and the valuable information furnished by it to the Legislature were the means of inaugurating the measures which resulted in meeting the long-felt want of thoughtful and benevolent men throughout the State in the founding and establishment of the Lunatic Asylum at Trenton. In the work of founding this institution Dr. Taylor took a prominent part, and his friends may well be proud of the fact that it will stand in some sense as a monument to his memory, and that of his co-workers, long after he shall have passed from the scene of his earthly labors.

Dr. Taylor married, in 1833, Cornelia A. Holcomb, daughter of Samuel Holcomb, Esq., of New Brunswick. She died April 30, 1872. Two daughters survive.

"NINETIETH ANNIVERSARY."—Under this heading the Lebanon (Ohio) Gazette, dated February 23d, comments as follows on the ninetieth anniversary of the birthday of Dr. John Van Harlingen, who graduated from Rutgers College in 1809:

"On Sunday last, February 19th, Dr. John Van Harlingen, well known to most people throughout this country, was ninety years of age. It has been a usual custom for his children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren to celebrate these occasions by gathering at one of their many cheerful firesides and enjoy the hospitalities that were ever ready and waiting for one and all. On this anniversary the day for celebrating was deferred till Monday, and the place selected was at the beautiful cottage home of his daughter Mary, the wife of the Rev. J. J. Hill. All the relatives save the doctor were notified of the event, but some were so far distant that it was impossible to be present. There were present his sons, Dr. R. L., Edward M. (of Columbus), and George, and members of their families, Mrs. Mary Shewey and son, of Fairfield, Dr. James Clark and daughter, Miss Julia Soule, and J. C. Van Harlingen and wife. The number present making twenty, with the doctor and his wife. A good time was had in social conversation and relation of incidents of the past before and while enjoying an excellently prepared and most sumptuous repast, which was continued afterward, while Dr. John smoked a 'pipe of peace' that a nephew of the Rev. Hill purchased from the great Indian chief Osceola fourteen years ago. At a late hour in the afternoon the Rev. Hill gathered us all together and, after a few of his characteristic, well-timed remarks in regard to the doctor and his descendants, read the 23d Psalm, followed by a prayer of thanks for the preservation and enjoyment of the blessings of life, and asking for their continuance, when all present joined in 'Old Hundred' till their voices echoed through the house, that of the doctor being prominent for clearness and sweetness among them, and the voices of some present were by no means bad. Then the benediction was pronounced, when we all took our departure, feeling that perhaps the same persons would never meet again on a similar occasion."

Dr. Van Harlingen was born at Milltown, in this county, and formerly resided on the southwest corner of George and Church Streets, in this city. He graduated from Queen's (now Rutgers) College in 1809, with William Croes, Cornelius L. Hardenbergh, William Van Deursen, all of this city, and Rynear Veghte, of Somerset County. Dr. Van Harlingen is the oldest living graduate of Rutgers College.

CORNELIUS JOHNSON, of Spotswood, practiced medicine and died there, May 11, 1828. He had a son, Cornelius Johnson, Jr., M.D., born Aug. 22, 1783, died Feb. 1, 1857. The senior Dr. Johnson was the father-in-law of Dr. Henry Du Bois Lefferts, of Spotswood.

HENRY DU BOIS LEFFERTS was born in Bucks County, Pa., on March 11, 1808, and died on Aug. 11, 1849, at Spotswood, N. J. He was the son of Leffert Lefferts, whose father also bore the same name, and all residents of Bucks County, Pa. He received his primary education at Middletown, Monmouth Co., studied medicine with Dr. Hubbard, of Linton Falls, Monmouth Co., and graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York.

RALPH P. LOTT was of English descent, and was born in Princeton, N. J., in 1770. He studied medicine with Dr. Hezekiah Stiles, at Cranbury, and graduated at the Medical College of Philadelphia, and practiced in Cranbury about forty years, having a large country practice. He often rode thirty and forty miles to visit patients. He was of a decided and somewhat original character, well versed in his profession, and highly esteemed. His characteristics have been given as follows: "He was skillful as a surgeon, exceedingly eccentric, terribly profane, and passionately fond of music; he would often dance, sing, and play the violin at the same time."

Dr. Lott married Annie Scudder, and had a son, a physician, mentioned below. He died of pneumonia, Sept. 17, 1845, and is buried in the Presbyterian churchyard at Cranbury.

John W. Lott, son of Dr. Ralph P. Lott, succeeded his father in the practice of medicine a short time at Cranbury, and then went West and founded Jerseyville, in Illinois. He subsequently left that place, and since then nothing has been known of him, though it has been rumored that he was killed in a duel in Texas.

William P. Lott was the son of Dr. John W. Lott, and grandson of Dr. Ralph P. Lott. He was born at Cranbury in 1825, studied with Dr. Selah Gulick, and graduated at the University of New York. He was never married. Owing to feeble health his practice was quite limited, but turning his attention to speculation in grain, he was quite successful. As a man, he was kind and genial; as a friend, true and steadfast. He possessed an unusual amount of information. His death occurred May 3, 1872, of consumption, being the last of the Lott family in this section.

SELAH GULICK, an old practitioner at Cranbury, was of German descent, born in Kingston, N. Y., about 1807. He died on the 24th of April, 1879, aged seventy-two. He studied with Dr. Howell, of Lawrence, and graduated in medicine at one of the colleges in Philadelphia. Dr. Gulick first located at Allentown, Monmouth Co., and after a short time spent there, removed to Cranbury, where he practiced fifty years. He had an unusually large obstetric practice, and was noted for his success in fevers. He was faithful to all his patients, never refusing a call to any one; worked very hard, was a poor collector, and consequently died poor. As a man, he was friendly, but talked little. His motto was, "Speech is silver, but silence is gold." He has left a memory dear to the people among whom he lived and practiced for half a century. He married Cornelia Jobs, and had a family of ten children, three daughters and seven sons.

HENRY B. POOLE was born in London, England, in 1790. He died at Washington, South River, Middlesex Co., N. J., Nov. 29, 1861. In the year 1802 he immigrated with his parents to America, landing in the city of New York. At the age of seventeen he entered Rutgers College, having had the early advantages of common-school instruction under his father, John Cyrus Poole, who was one of the most celebrated teachers of his time. He graduated after due course of study, attracting the particular notice of his preceptors for his proficiency in the languages and mathematics, and after graduation held for some time the position of private teacher to the Van Renssalaers of Albany. He then returned to New Brunswick and took the rectorship of the Lancasterian school, which he conducted for a number of years with great ability and success. Retiring from this school he commenced the study of law in the office of Abraham Blaufelt, Esq., but soon abandoned that for the study of divinity under Bishop Croes. Not being satisfied with the latter, or considering himself not adapted to it, at the age of twenty-six he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Augustus R. Taylor, with whom he continued until he received his diploma from the Medical Faculty of Queen's (now Rutgers) College, in New York, in 1828.

He first commenced practice at Middletown Point, where he remained one year and then removed to Flemington, N. J., and after practicing there two years removed to Washington, South River, in the year 1832, where he practiced his profession during the remainder of his life. As a physician he was one of the most careful, ever experimenting, always exercising his good judgment, which, together with his usually quick perception, enabled him to secure the full confidence of all who knew him. He was a man of fine literary attainments, having added to his college studies a knowledge of the French and Spanish languages, both of which he spoke fluently. For some years before his death he was quite closely confined to his room by a stroke of paralysis.

As a business man he was successful and useful to the county where he resided, being the ready local scribe and the authority on all things requiring mathematical calculation. He left a wife, one daughter, and four sons. "His affection for his family was of the most devoted kind, his whole soul appearing to be taken up in considering their welfare."

CHARLES MCKNIGHT SMITH, of Perth Amboy, died on the 3d of February, 1874. At the time of his death he was one of the oldest physicians in practice in the State. He was born at Haverstraw, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1803. His father, Samuel Smith, was a lawyer, who pursued the profession in Rockland County, N. Y. On the side of his mother he was named after his grandfather, Dr. Charles McKnight, one of the prominent surgeons connected with the American army during the Revolution. He studied medicine at Haverstraw with Dr. John Cornelison, and received his degree at the New York Medical College in April, 1827.

After practicing a short time in Maryland he removed to Perth Amboy, where he continued to reside, and was recognized as the most prominent physician until the day of his death.

He was no less prominent as a citizen in civil and political affairs, taking an active part in the municipal government, and filling many stations of usefulness and trust. He was collector of the port of Perth Amboy almost continually from 1841 till his death, his first commission being given under President Harrison, renewed under President Taylor, 1848, under Gen. Grant in 1869, and again under Grant in 1873. For many years he was the health officer of the city where he resided, and vestryman of St. Peter's Church.

E. FITZ RANDOLPH SMITH was born near New Brunswick in the year 1786. He pursued his literary studies under the care of Prof. Lindsey, of Newark, and entered the College of New Jersey in the year 1804; graduating thence he commenced the study of medicine under the supervision of Dr. Moses Scott, and finally graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in the year 1808. He filled the office of treasurer of the State Medical Society, was elected vice-president in 1830 and 1831, and president in the year 1832. As a physician he was eminently qualified for his profession, and enjoyed in a high degree the confidence of the community in which he lived. As a man and citizen he received many marks of esteem and public favor; he was for many years president of one of the most successful banking institutions, and it was largely through his instrumentality that it acquired and maintained its stable reputation. He was elected the mayor of the city of New Brunswick in the year 1842, which office he adorned. He fully retired from practice in the year 1854, devoting himself to the care of his property and especially to agriculture, of which he was very fond. Here the same results followed that had attended him in other walks of life. He was renowned for his good judgment and success. His final illness commenced in May, 1865, when he was found almost insensible from an attack of hemiplegia; he lingered with gleams of consciousness for three weeks, when the powers of nature sank exhausted. He was a just man. "The memory of the just is blessed."¹

JACOB T. B. SKILLMAN was born on the 10th of March, 1794, at Three-Mile Run, N. J., where his father, an intelligent and industrious farmer, lived in comfortable circumstances. After having pursued the usual course of instruction at a primary school, he was sent to the academy at Basking Ridge, then under the care of Rev. Dr. Finley. In 1816 he entered Union College, and in due course of time graduated with honor. One of his classmates was the late William H. Seward. After some time spent as tutor in Hampden-Sidney College, Virginia, in which he gained a high reputation, he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Augustus R. Taylor, of New Brunswick, and was licensed to practice in November, 1825. He at first settled in Woodbridge in partnership with Dr. Freeman, when a practice of three years enabled him to acquire much experience and skill, particularly in the cure of fevers. He afterwards settled and practiced for about two years in Rahway, and upon the solicitation of friends left that place and a good practice and removed to New Brunswick. Here during a period of thirty years he had the confidence and patronage of a large class, and was held in high esteem. It is said of Dr. Skillman that he did not refuse to call even where no compensation could be expected, but was remarkably liberal and generous towards the poor; he was also exact in the observance of professional etiquette, and at the same time firm and tenacious of his own rights. But that which most of all distinguished Dr. Skillman was his upright, moral, and religious character.

He was a member of the New Jersey Medical Society and its president in 1849. As a member of the District Medical Society of Middlesex County he was ever active and efficient, doing all in his power to promote true learning and science. He was president, and held other offices in the society.

Soon after his return from Virginia he married Miss R. C. Ayres, of Six-Mile Run, N. J. Of the children of this union only a son and a daughter survive.

In early life Dr. Skillman made a profession of religion, and was connected, both as a member and officer, with the First Reformed Church of New Brunswick. He died of paralysis June 26, 1864, in the seventy-first year of his age.

WILLIAM VAN DEURSEN was born in the city of New Brunswick, May 16, 1791. He graduated from Queen's College in the year 1809, and from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the year 1814, during the period when lectures were delivered in Barclay Street. Dr. Van Deursen was elected a member of the board of trustees of Rutgers College in the year 1823. He was first settled in Imlaystown, and afterwards at New Brunswick, at which place he secured an extensive practice. He was especially distinguished for his skill in surgery. In all the departments of his profession he was remarkably well read; he had many students who entered the profession from his office, among others Dr. W. A. Newell, late Governor of this State. In person Dr. Van Deursen was about the medium height, erect in his carriage and punctiliously neat in his dress; his manner was courteous, but guarded by a dignified reserve which forbade familiarity. For more than fifty years he was esteemed the leading physician of the town, and finally, full of years and of honors, he died on the 16th day of February, 1873, leaving the legacy of a good conscience, and bearing his testimony to the reality of the Christian faith, at the ripe age of eighty-two.²

SAMUEL ABERNETHY was born in Tinicum township, Bucks County, Pa., Feb. 22, 1806. He was deprived of both parents by death before he was thirteen years of age, and was sent to pursue his studies with Rev. Mr. Boyd, of Newtown, Bucks Co., and was in due time sent to Union College, in 1827. He graduated at the Medical University of Pennsylvania in 1830, and was directly after appointed surgeon in the Hospital of Philadelphia, and honorary member of the medical society of that city. In March, 1831, he removed to Rahway, where, at the age of twenty-five, he commenced practice, and which was the scene of his labors until his death, which occurred Feb. 13, 1874.

He had an extensive practice, and was widely known as an eminent physician and surgeon. "His genius was too great to allow his reputation to be merely local. Neighboring cities and States acknowledged him a peer and brought to him their tribute. Notwithstanding his great merits he was peculiarly unostentatious, and was never known to speak of what he had done, but seemed always to be looking forward to what he could do in the future."

¹ H. R. Baldwin in Transactions, 1866.

² Ibid., 1873, pp. 120-21.

Forty-three years he practiced his profession and lived among the people of Rahway, letting shine around him the light of his rare genius, his kindly spirit, and his practical usefulness. He thus endeared himself to the people in a manner rarely known.

The District Medical Society of the County of Union, of which he was the first president, attended the funeral services in a body, and drafted the following resolutions:

"WHEREAS, The District Medical Society of the County of Union has heard with heartfelt regret of the death of its oldest and one of its most esteemed members, Dr. Samuel Abernethy, of Rahway; and while we would be submissive to the will of an all-wise Providence, we would place on record our tribute of respect to the memory of our deceased brother; therefore,

"Resolved, That in the ability and devotion he so long manifested in his profession, in his kindness and courtesy of manner, shown both to his professional brethren and to his patients, and in the characteristics of a good citizen, he has endeared himself to all who knew him.

"Resolved, That his memory will be cherished with respect and grateful remembrance.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and that they be published in the Rahway Advocate and Times, National Democrat, Elizabeth Journal, and the Central New Jersey Times of Plainfield.

"T. N. McLEAN,
"Recording Secretary."

CHAPTER LXX.

MEDICAL PROFESSION.—(Continued.)

District Medical Society for the County of Middlesex.—"The following physicians and surgeons having convened at New Brunswick on the first Tuesday of May, 1816, for the purpose of forming themselves into a society by the style and name of 'The Medical Society of the State of New Jersey,' agreeably to an act of incorporation passed at Trenton, Feb. 16, 1816, and being so convened did proceed to appoint a chairman and secretary pro tem., when Dr. John Van Cleve was unanimously elected chairman and William McKissack secretary.

"Present, Drs. John Van Cleve, Lewis Dunham, Augustus R. Taylor, Jacob Dunham, Enoch Wilson, Nathaniel Manning, Ralph P. Lott, Ephraim Smith, James Elmendorf, Charles Pierson, Ferdinand Schenck, Jos. Quimby, William D. McKissack, Matthias Freeman, John Reynolds, Samuel Forman, William McKissack.

"It was moved and seconded that the present meeting proceed to appoint fifteen managers agreeably to the second section of the Act of Incorporation, when the following gentlemen were duly appointed:

"Drs. Augustus R. Taylor, Lewis Dunham, John Van Cleve, Jacob Dunham, Nicholas Belleville, William McKissack, Nathaniel Manning, Enoch Wilson, Charles Smith, Peter I. Stryker, Matthias Freeman, Ralph P. Lott, Moses Scott, Charles Pierson, Ephraim Smith.

"A motion was made and seconded to proceed to the appointing of county or district societies in the counties of Middlesex, Somerset, Monmouth, Essex, and Morris, agreeably to the third section of the said Act of Incorporation, when Doctors Lewis Dunham, Joseph Dunham, Enoch Wilson, Matthias Freeman, Charles Smith, Nathaniel Manning, Ralph P. Lott, and John Van Cleve were duly appointed for the county of Middlesex, to hold their first meeting on the second Tuesday of June next, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the city of New Brunswick.¹

"Agreeably to the foregoing appointment the committee met, every member attending, at Runyan's tavern, in the city of New Brunswick, on the day appointed. Dr. Lewis Dunham was chosen chairman, and John Van Cleve secretary of the meeting.

"The committee then proceeded to the formation of a society by electing by ballot Dr. Charles Smith president, Matthias Freeman vice-president, Jacob Dunham treasurer, and John Van Cleve secretary, whereupon Dr. Smith took the chair and the society proceeded to business."²

The first business transacted was the appointment of a committee, consisting of Lewis Dunham and Matthias Freeman, "to examine into the qualifications of such gentlemen as should make application for admission into the society." While the committee were attending to their duty a general discussion was had by the members present upon the subject of the by-laws of the society, after which a committee was appointed to draft a system of by-laws and report to the next meeting.

The committee appointed to examine into the qualifications of applicants for membership reported that Josiah B. Andrews, John Van Dyke, and William Van Deusen had given satisfactory testimonials of their having been regularly admitted to the practice of medicine and surgery; whereupon the society resolved that they be admitted without further examination.

Drs. Charles Smith, Enoch Wilson, and John Van Cleve, the committee on by-laws, reported the following at the next meeting, Dec. 11, 1816, which after suitable discussion and amendment were adopted:

BY-LAWS.

"I. This Society shall be known and distinguished by the name of The District Medical Society for the County of Middlesex, in the State of New Jersey.

"II. The officers of this society shall be a president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, to be chosen at each anniversary meeting of the society by ballot, to serve for one year; and should no election take place at the usual period they shall continue in office until others be chosen in their stead.

"III. It shall be the duty of the president to open the society with an address at the first stated meeting after his appointment, to preside at all meetings of the society, to preserve order, to regulate the debates,

¹ Minutes of the New Jersey Medical Society.

² Minutes of the District Society.

Clifford T. Morrey M.D.

to state and put questions, and declare the sense of the meeting after a vote shall have been taken, and to adjourn the society.

"IV. In the absence of the president the vice-president shall perform all the duties of the president, and when both president and vice-president are absent the society shall elect a president pro tempore.

"V. It shall be the duty of the secretary to take minutes of all the proceedings of the society, and to record them accurately in a book to be provided for that purpose. He shall keep a list of all the members, which he shall call over as soon as the society shall have convened.

"VI. It shall be the duty of the treasurer to receive all moneys due to the society, and make an entry thereof in a book to be kept for that purpose; he shall pay all drafts made on him by the president, and exhibit a complete statement of his accounts at every annual meeting of the society, or oftener if required; and at the expiration of his office shall deliver over to his successor all moneys and other property belonging to the society that may be in his hands.

"VII. The society shall at every annual meeting appoint five members, whose duty it shall be to examine all candidates who may apply for license to practice physic and surgery touching their knowledge in the said faculties, and if approved shall recommend them to the president of the medical society of New Jersey as fit persons to receive a license accordingly; not less than — of the committee shall be present every examination.¹

"VIII. The stated meetings of this society shall be held on the Wednesday of court week in June and December, and five members shall constitute a quorum to do business.²

"IX. No person shall be balloted for as a member of this society unless he shall have been admitted to the practice according to law, and shall, moreover, produce testimonials of his moral character and professional acquirements from at least two members of the society.³

"X. Every member shall on his election and subscribing the by-laws pay to the treasurer for the use of the society the sum of one dollar, and annually thereafter the sum of fifty cents.

"XI. No money shall be drawn from the treasury unless by order of the society, and certified by the president or presiding officer.

"XII. That it shall be the duty of every member to record accurately and circumstantially every extraordinary case in physic or surgery which may occur in his practice and its treatment, and lay the same before the society at their next meeting.

"XIII. Two or more members shall be appointed whose duties it shall be to keep accurate meteorological observations, together with a history of the prevailing diseases of the different seasons and their treatment, and lay the same before the society at its stated meetings.⁴

"XIV. The exercises of the society shall be conducted in the following order:

"1st. Calling the roll.

"2d. The president's address.

"3d. Reading minutes of last meeting.

"4th. Reports of committees.

"5th. Essays and communications.

"6th. Election of officers.⁵

"XV. It shall be the duty of the members of this society to discountenance irregular practitioners of physic, and not to consult or hold any professional intercourse with them.

"XVI. No member shall be expelled from this society unless by the concurring vote of two-thirds of the members present.

"XVII. That the table of fees and rates of charging for sundry articles and services in medicine and surgery as agreed upon and established June 12, 1810, by the Medical Society of New Jersey for the government of its members, be adopted by this society.⁶

"XVIII. That these laws shall not be altered or amended unless the alteration or amendment shall have been submitted to the society at a previous stated meeting, and approved by two-thirds of the members present."

We find in the record the following names subscribed to the laws:

Lewis Dunham,*†

Charles Smith.*

William Van Deursen.*

John Van Cleve.*

Nathaniel Manning.*

Jacob Dunham.*

Josiah B. Andrews.†

Enoch Wilson.*

Ralph P. Lott.*

Matthias Freeman.*

John A. Pool.*

J. T. B. Skillman.*

Solomon Andrews.*

Lewis A. Hall.†

James Clark.*

Garrat P. Voorhees.*

Benjamin E. Tomlinson.*

F. R. Smith.*

Lewis Drake.*

H. D. B. Lefferty.*

George M. Maclean.†

Ellis B. Freeman.*

Theodore Hardenbergh.†

Samuel Abernethy.*

John H. Van Deursen.*

A. D. Newell.*

Clifford Morrigh.*

Charles H. Voorhees.*

Augustus F. Taylor.

Charles Dunham, Jr.*

John C. Thompson.†

Henry M. Stone.*

James W. Leighton.*

Henry R. Baldwin.

George W. Britton.*

Joseph Stennett Martie.†

Ezra M. Hunt.

George H. Sears.†

L. T. Baker.*

C. McKnight Smith.*

Samuel E. Freeman.†

Ambrose Fregernowan.

George W. Stout.

F. S. Barbarin.

N. Kæmmerer.

J. W. Meeker.†

C. E. Woodward.†

John J. De Motte.†

C. M. Slack.

A. S. Titworth.†

David Stephens.†

Samuel St. John Smith.*

A. P. Knaspen.*

John Helm.*

D. C. English.

D. C. Van Deursen.†

S. V. D. Clark.

F. F. Corson.†

D. Brainerd Hunt.†

George J. Janeway.

Rush Van Dyke.

Henry T. Pierce.†

Nichols Williamson.

Samuel P. Harned.

Thomas T. Delivan.

W. E. Mattison.

George E. Blackham.†

J. H. Crawford.†

J. I. Marley.†

C. H. Andrews.

William V. Wilson.

F. B. Norton.

P. A. Shannon.

William W. Hubbard.

John G. Wilson.

Roland H. Stubbs.†

James B. Wainright.

Clifford M. Stille.

George G. Clark.

OFFICERS.—The following have been officers of the society since its organization in 1816:

Presidents.—Charles Smith, 1816; Matthias Freeman, 1817; Nathaniel Manning, 1818; Jacob Dunham, 1819; William Van Deursen, 1820; Josiah B. Andrews, 1821; Charles Smith, 1822; Jacob Dunham, 1825;⁸ Charles Smith, 1826–28; Jacob Dunham, 1829; Lewis A. Hall, 1830; J. T. B. Skillman, 1831; James Clark, 1834;⁹ F. R. Smith, 1835; Charles Smith, 1836–37; Lewis Drake, 1838–39;¹⁰ F. R. Smith, pro tem., 1840; Samuel Abernethy, 1841; Ellis B. Freeman, 1842; John H. Van Deursen, 1843; A. D. Newell, 1844–45;¹¹ Ellis B. Freeman, 1846.

From the above last date until 1857 the society was discontinued. The record of its reorganization appears in the minutes, as follows:

SOCIETY REORGANIZED.—"New Brunswick, Jan. 21, 1857. A meeting of Physicians of Middlesex County having been called for the purpose of organizing a Medical Society, Dr. Augustus F. Taylor was appointed Chairman, and Dr. Henry R. Baldwin Secretary. It was then unanimously

¹ This article was subsequently expunged.

² Time of meeting changed in 1831 to first Tuesday in May and November.

³ Amended June 24, 1857.

⁴ Amended June 24, 1853. No record of the meeting kept.

⁵ Amended Aug. 14, 1872.

⁶ Subsequently amended.

* Deceased; † Removed; ‡ Withdrawn.

⁸ No meeting recorded between 1822 and 1825.

⁹ No record between 1831 and 1834.

¹⁰ No meeting held in 1839.

¹¹ No meeting, 1845.

"Resolved, That we physicians of Middlesex County do hereby organize the District Medical Society of this county, and adopt its constitution and by-laws."

"It was then moved and seconded that Drs. Leighton, Janeway, Dunham, and Morrogh be appointed delegates to attend the meeting of the State Medical Society, and that the delegates and officers proceed to Trenton on Tuesday, the 27th inst. (Signed) HENRY R. BALDWIN, Sec."

The following is added:

"The delegates were cordially received by the State Medical Society, and the District Medical Society received in good standing."

Presidents since the Reorganization.—Since the reorganization of the society the following have held the office of president:

Augustus F. Taylor, 1857; Clifford Morrogh, 1858-59; J. T. B. Skillman, 1860; H. M. Stone, 1861; Henry R. Baldwin, 1862-64; Ezra M. Hunt, 1865; A. Fregernowan, 1866; Charles Dunham, Jr., 1867; Charles H. Voorhees, 1869; S. St. John Smith, 1870; A. Fregernowan, 1871; D. C. English, 1872; Rush Van Dyke, 1873; C. M. Slack, 1874; W. E. Mattison, 1875; Nicholas Williamson, 1876; T. T. Devan, 1877; P. A. Shannon, 1878; C. H. Andrews, 1879; J. W. Rice, 1880.

Secretaries.—The secretaries of the society from the first have been John Van Cleve, 1816; William Van Deursen, 1817-36; Jacob T. B. Skillman, 1836-46. Since the reorganization, Henry R. Baldwin, 1857; Charles Dunham, Jr., 1858; L. F. Baker, 1859; J. S. Martin, 1860; S. E. Freeman, 1861-64; George W. Stout, 1865; J. W. Meeker, 1866-68; David Stephens, 1868-74; Rush Van Dyke, 1874-76; W. E. Mattison, 1876-80; George G. Clark, 1880-82.

Treasurers.—Jacob Dunham, 1816-18; William Van Deursen, 1818; Nathaniel Manning, 1819-25; John A. Pool, 1825-38; Garret P. Voorhees, 1838; John A. Pool, 1839; Ellis B. Freeman, 1840-44; F. R. Smith, 1844-46; Henry M. Stone, 1857-60; J. C. Thompson, 1860; Joseph S. Martin, 1861-66; F. S. Barbarin, 1866-68; Charles Dunham, Jr., 1868-75; T. T. Devan, 1875; D. C. English, 1876-82.

DELEGATES TO THE STATE SOCIETY.—The following persons have been delegates from the District Medical Society of Middlesex County to the Medical Society of the State of New Jersey:

Joseph B. Andrews, Charles Smith, William Van Deursen, John Van Cleve, 1819-20; Matthias Freeman, Nathaniel Manning, Joseph B. Andrews, 1821-22; Joseph Dunham, John A. Pool, 1823; William Van Deursen, 1824; John A. Pool, Jacob Dunham, 1825; Joseph B. Andrews, Matthias Freeman, William Van Deursen, 1826; Joseph B. Andrews, William Van Deursen, Lewis A. Hall, 1827; Joseph B. Andrews, Lewis A. Hall, 1828-29; William Van Deursen, J. T. B. Skillman, Solomon Andrews, J. A. Pool, 1830; Charles Smith, J. T. B. Skillman, L. A. Hall, William Van Deursen, 1831; Garret P.

Voorhees, James Clark, 1832-33; William Van Deursen, George McLean, James Clark, J. T. B. Skillman, 1834-35; Garret P. Voorhees, J. T. B. Skillman, 1836; Lewis Drake, Garret P. Voorhees, Ellis B. Freeman, William Forman, 1837; Lewis Drake, Garret P. Voorhees, H. D. B. Lefferty, S. Abernethy, 1838; Samuel Abernethy, Lewis Drake, Garret P. Voorhees, H. D. B. Lefferty, 1839; Samuel Abernethy, Ellis B. Freeman, Theodore Hardenburgh, J. T. B. Skillman, 1840-41; Ellis B. Freeman, Samuel Abernethy, John H. Van Deursen, J. T. B. Skillman, 1842; Ellis B. Freeman, A. D. Newell, J. H. Van Deursen, J. T. B. Skillman, 1843; A. D. Newell, Samuel Abernethy, Ellis B. Freeman, J. H. Van Deursen, 1844-46.

From this date no delegates attended the State Society from the District Society of Middlesex till the annual meeting in January, 1857, when G. J. Janeway, C. Morrogh, Henry R. Baldwin, and C. Dunham were the delegates. From this time the District Society was represented as follows: C. Morrogh, J. C. Thompson, H. M. Stone, J. S. Martin, 1858; Clifford Morrogh, Ezra M. Hunt, S. St. John Smith, 1859-60; J. S. Martin, E. B. Freeman, S. St. John Smith, A. Fregernowan (alternates, Henry R. Baldwin, H. M. Stone, L. F. Baker, Clifford Morrogh), 1862; A. Fregernowan, J. C. Thompson, Henry M. Stone, S. E. Freeman (alternates, Clifford Morrogh, Henry R. Baldwin, Charles Dunham, Jr., Ezra M. Hunt), 1863; A. Fregernowan, C. McKnight Smith, R. I. Benmagin, J. S. Martin (alternates, Ellis B. Freeman, Henry M. Stone, J. C. Thompson, G. W. Stout), 1866; Charles Dunham, Jr., C. McKnight Smith, A. Fregernowan, 1867; S. St. John Smith, J. J. De Motte, C. H. Voorhees, 1868; J. W. Meeker, John Helm, A. P. Knapen, 1869; D. C. English, D. B. Hunt, S. V. D. Clark, D. C. Van Deursen, 1870; R. Van Dyke, C. Morrogh, J. W. Meeker, H. T. Pierce, 1871; R. Van Dyke, Ezra M. Hunt, C. H. Voorhees, C. Morrogh, J. W. Meeker, Charles Dunham, Jr., 1872; C. H. Voorhees, R. Van Dyke, D. C. English, J. W. Meeker, A. Fregernowan, 1873-74; William V. Wilson, C. H. Voorhees, — Holmes, R. Vandyke, 1875; G. J. Janeway, C. H. Voorhees, N. Williamson, C. M. Slack, 1876; T. L. Janeway, C. H. Voorhees, H. B. Garner, D. C. English, N. Williamson, 1877; C. H. Voorhees, T. L. Janeway, James B. Wainwright, George G. Clark, D. C. English, 1878; George G. Clark, D. C. English, C. H. Voorhees, C. H. Andrews, W. E. Mattison, 1879; C. H. Andrews, John Helm, D. C. English, Clifford M. Stelle, C. H. Voorhees, 1880; Clifford Morrogh, D. C. English, — Rice, W. V. Wilson, J. B. Wainwright, 1881.

Drs. Rush, Van Dyke, and P. A. Shannon, delegates to the American Medical Association held at Philadelphia, June 6, 1876; N. Williamson and C. H.

¹ No delegates appear to have been appointed from 1863 to 1866.

Prof. C. Thompson M.D.

Voorhees, 1878; Clifford Morrogh and John Helm, 1881.

The annual meetings of the Medical Society of New Jersey, with but one or two exceptions, were held at New Brunswick until 1852. In that city the society was first organized in 1766; here it was re-organized after its suspension in 1807, and again re-organized under a new charter in 1816; and in this city also, in the chapel of Rutgers College, was held the centennial or one hundredth anniversary of the society in 1866. In 1852 the annual meetings of the society were removed to Trenton, where they have since been held.

LICENSES GRANTED BY THE NEW JERSEY MEDICAL SOCIETY TO RESIDENTS OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY FROM 1816
TO 1842.

John A. Pool, Nov. 13, 1816.	George M. McLean.
James A. Scott, Dec. 20, 1816.	Benj. C. Tomlinson, Nov. 20, 1830.
George Van Nest, June 11, 1817.	Benj. P. Howell, June 14, 1831.
George O. Trenchard, 1818-19.	Selah Ghulick (diploma), May 14, 1833.
Hugh Kirkpatrick, 1818-19.	Ellis B. Freeman (license), Sept. 24, 1833.
Samuel K. Smallley, 1818-19.	Fred. W. Bockelew (license), Sept. 24, 1833.
Henry S. Harris, 1818-19.	Andrew Todd (license), June 18, 1834.
William R. Griffith, 1825-26.	Theodore Hardenburgh (license), June 18, 1834.
Garret Voorhees, Jan. 4, 1827.	Jonathan C. McChesney (license), June 8, 1835.
Elias Joseph Marsh, 1827-28.	Nelson Stelle, Sept. 3, 1835.
Solomon Andrews, 1827-28.	Isaac B. Hutchinson, June 8, 1835.
James Clark, May 12, 1828.	John N. Woodhull, Sept. 27, 1836.
Lewis Drake, May 12, 1828.	John H. Deursen, 1840.
Jacob P. Thornton, June 10, 1829.	Azariah D. Newall, 1840.
Charles C. Blauvelt, July 7, 1829.
Henry Vanderveer, Aug. 19, 1829.
Samuel C. Thornton, Dec. 17, 1829.
Richard Marsh, Jr., Dec. 17, 1829.
Samuel L. Howell, June 24, 1830.
J. J. Dunn, July 1, 1830.

Since 1816 the following physicians of this county have been officers in the Medical Society of New Jersey:

Presidents.—Lewis Dunham, 1816-17; John Van Cleve, 1818-19; Augustus R. Taylor, 1822; Augustus R. Taylor, 1831; J. T. B. Skillman, 1848.

Vice-Presidents.—Enoch Wilson, 1816; John Van Cleve, 1817; Augustus R. Taylor, 1821-22; Joseph Dunham, 1825-26; George McLean, 1839; J. T. B. Skillman, 1845-47; Augustus F. Taylor, 1847-48; C. C. Blauvelt, 1854-56.

Treasurers.—Ephraim F. Smith, 1818-30.

Corresponding Secretaries.—William Van Deursen, 1822-26; Augustus F. Taylor, 1844-45.

Recording Secretaries.—John Van Cleve, 1820-23; William Van Deursen, 1827.

CHARLES H. VOORHEES, physician, New Brunswick, N. J., descended from immigrants to America from Holland in 1670, a grandson of David Voorhees, a soldier in the Continental army, and a son of Ira C. Voorhees, was born in New Brunswick, Aug. 3, 1824; graduated from Rutgers College Grammar School, entered the Jefferson Medical College, and from that institution received his degree of M.D. in the spring of 1850. In the same year he established himself as a practitioner in New Brunswick.

He is a member of the Middlesex County Medical Society; was president of that organization in 1870. Since 1858 he has been frequently its representative (with others) in the conventions of the New Jersey State Medical Society; from the State Society he has been a delegate to the State Societies of Vermont and Pennsylvania, and to the American Medical Association.

He is a member of the New Jersey Microscopic Society, New Brunswick Society, New Jersey Sanitary Association, American Association for the Advancement of Science, American Medical Association, and Board of Health of the city of New Brunswick. He was county physician of Middlesex County for sixteen years, and served as surgeon of volunteers in the Union army from Feb. 1, 1862, to 1865.

Dr. Voorhees has assisted Dr. Wickes in the "Medical History of the State," gathering and compiling the materials in Middlesex County, and we are indebted to him for valuable aid in the preparation of the present chapter.

CLIFFORD T. MORROGH, M.D., was born in the city of Cork, Ireland, on July 31, 1821, and was consequently in his sixty-first year of age at the time of his decease, March 13, 1882. His father's family was an old, well-known family of Cork, and his mother, a Miss Plowden, came from one of those English families that had continued loyal through good and bad fortune, and through all the changes of State religion, to the Roman Catholic Church. The family, consisting of father, mother, and ten children, came to this country in 1834. Two sons entered the medical profession, one became a distinguished lawyer in New York, another a jurist of note in Louisiana, the youngest, ordained a priest in Rome, was for many years pastor of a prominent church in New York City, whilst one died quite young. The eldest sister married John L. Burtell, of New York; the second, Cavaliere Sussarelli, of Genoa; and two others successively married Gen. Avezzana, who took a very prominent part in all the wars for the unification of Italy. Dr. Morrogh entered the Medical School of the University of the City of New York, whence he graduated March 6, 1847, and came to New Brunswick the same year. His brother, Dr. Archibald Morrogh, came with him, and also achieved considerable reputation, afterwards went to the West Indies, but after some years returned to New York, where he died.

For some time after settling in New Brunswick Dr. Clifford T. Morrogh found difficulties almost insurmountable, but some fortunate and skillful operations gave him a reputation, and after that his progress was rapid and steady until he stood among the first in the State of New Jersey among physicians, and as a surgeon his reputation extended far beyond it. The same year of Dr. Morrogh's settlement in New Brunswick, Dr. A. F. Taylor being the township physician of Franklin, it became necessary to amputate a leg from each of two colored people in the town's charge, and Dr. Taylor called Dr. Morrogh to perform the operation. They made use of chloroform for the first time in this section of the State, and the operations were successful. A year or two afterwards he performed an operation for stone in the bladder upon a lad twelve years old. This operation, always difficult and dangerous, was the first one in the city, and was skillfully executed. He afterwards performed the operation thirty-two different times. He once performed a very difficult removal of a carious bone from the ankle-joint, the first time it had been attempted in this country, with a number of original and important modifications, yet it was not till some years after, when Dr. John Carnochan had received great praise for a successful operation of that kind without the ingenious modifications, that Dr. Morrogh was persuaded to make public the fact that he had previously done the same thing. With all his skill, Dr. Morrogh was so modest as never to take any steps to extend his reputation, nor would he often prepare for medical publication papers describing his operations.

As a physician he excelled in diagnosis, and would never give up a case until he thoroughly understood it, and rarely made a mistake. During the war he was summoned by Director Simpson after all the great battles on the Peninsula, at Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, etc., to assist the government in treating the wounded.

A part of the doctor's great success was doubtless owing to his ingenuity and fertility of resource in difficulty, which was well illustrated upon an occasion where he saved a woman from bleeding to death by an instrument which he devised and made on the spot from a stair-rod and the handle of a whisk-broom. In the sick-room he was like a ray of sunshine. There seemed to be healing in his very presence. The eye that had been dull and the face that had been languid would brighten at his approach. There was something about him that inspired implicit confidence, for, while full of life and wit, he was never undignified. He did not rely upon long words or professional utterance to inspire one with an idea of his importance, but his very simplicity conveyed the idea of power, and it was only necessary to mention his name among the surgeons of repute in New York to find in what estimation he was held by them. Careless of his own personal comforts, to his social surroundings he was singularly particular, his house, his offices, his vehicles, and all ministering to his recreation; his yachts and boats were models in their way and witnesses to his taste, to his ingenuity, and to his skill. In fact he never undertook anything the details of which he did not first master, and he possessed the faculty, peculiar to the few, of seeming himself to be instructed while he was imparting knowledge.

Dr. Morrogh never sought any public offices. He at one time took great interest in the Young Men's Catholic Association, and made the society a magnificent donation. He was a member of the Middlesex County and New Jersey State Medical Societies, and the week before his decease was elected a delegate to the United States Medical Association, which is to meet in May, 1882, in St. Paul, Minn. He was a director of the old State Bank, and was one of the founders of the New Brunswick Savings-Bank, in which he always took a great interest, and of which he was at the time of his death vice-president, and had been since the death of Sheriff Voorhees, acting president.

It was through the doctor's influence that the lots on which St. Peter's Church now stands were purchased. He drew the plans on which the church was built (which included a height for the steeple of one hundred and ninety feet from the sidewalk to complete the design), was appointed treasurer, and issued bonds to the amount of $60,000, which he succeeded in placing; and in great part by his exertions, when he went to Europe in 1868 but a few thousand dollars were outstanding. He was largely instrumental in securing for the church the chime of bells, which cost $4000, contributing liberally himself, and inducing many of his Protestant friends to contribute liberally also. He also took much interest in St. Peter's Hospital, and gave the Sisters $3000 for it; but the city did not as yet need such an institution, and it was discontinued.

Dr. Morrogh was twice married. Of his father's large family he outlived all but an elder brother, a lawyer in New York.

Following Dr. Morrogh's decease the board of managers of the New Brunswick Savings Institution held a meeting, March 15, 1882; the New Jersey State Microscopical Society held a meeting at Rutgers College, March 20, 1882; and the District Medical Society for the County of Middlesex held a meeting, March 15, 1882, and passed resolutions fitting the great loss they had sustained in the death of their associate and counselor.

Bishop O'Farrell, on the occasion of his funeral, said "that his acquaintance with Dr. Morrogh had been but brief, but from his knowledge of him he had looked forward with great hope that he would be a very great helper to the church in New Brunswick, by the nobility of his character in its example to the young, by the generosity of his soul and that simplicity of faith which is so admirable in a man of such superior intellectual abilities. Nowhere is such simple faith more admirable than in a man of that profession, whose intimate knowledge of the wonders of the physical frame often blinds them to the wonders of the soul and those higher mysteries which are revealed to us by the same God who created these wonderful physical frames. When, after taking charge of this diocese, I spoke of opening a house for young children in this city, the first response I had came from Dr. Morrogh, and I had looked to him to be almost a father to those orphans, and those little helpless children would have had one who would feel as deep an interest in them as a father in his children, and whose skill and scientific knowledge would have been of great service to them."

S M Sibson

STEPHEN M. DISBROW, M.D.—Mr. Disbrow is the great-grandson of John Disbrow, a hero of the Revolution, whose son, Nicholas Morgan, married Mary, daughter of Judge Cornelius P. Vanderhoef. Among their children was Andrew J., the father of the subject of this biographical sketch, who married Miss Margaret R. Searle, of Philadelphia, Pa., and had five children. One of this number was Stephen M., whose birth occurred Nov. 30, 1846, at Old Bridge, where his life until the age of seventeen was passed. During this period he improved the opportunities for education afforded at the public school, and also performed some labor upon the farm of his father. He then enlisted as a soldier in the Thirty-seventh Regiment New Jersey Volunteers for one hundred days, and served in the trenches in front of Petersburg. At the close of this period of service, and on his return, he became a student at the New Jersey Scientific and Classical Institute at Hightstown, N. J., where he pursued a course in civil engineering. At the close of his studies he returned to his home, and while occupied with the superintendence of the farm engaged in practical surveying, having been appointed deputy surveyor of East New Jersey, which position he still holds.

Dr. Disbrow determined in 1873 to adopt medicine as a profession, and began his studies with Dr. J. C. Thompson, of South River, N. J. He graduated from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, in February, 1877, and during his term of study had charge of the almshouse, penitentiary, lunatic asylum, and smallpox hospital of Hudson County, N. J., under the direction of Dr. Stout, then county physician.

He in 1877 chose Old Bridge as a desirable point of settlement, and there began the practice of his profession, where he has since remained. He speedily, by close application, acquired an extended field of labor, and now enjoys both a large and successful practice. The doctor is engaged in business aside from his profession, being the owner of a general merchandise store at Old Bridge, and largely interested in the culture of cranberries at Deep Run. He also holds the position of township physician for East Brunswick and Madison.

Dr. Disbrow is in politics a pronounced Republican, though more devoted to his profession than to politics; he holds the appointment of notary public and also of commissioner of deeds.

The doctor was on the 26th of February, 1880, united in marriage to Miss Anna Estelle, daughter of Capt. William Rogers, of Old Bridge.

JOHN C. THOMPSON, M.D.—The father of Dr. Thompson was Pierson Thompson, a native of Monmouth County, N. J. In early life he married Miss Eleanor Campbell, of Freehold, N. J., and settled near Englishtown, where he carried on the business of chairmaking until his death in 1851, Mrs. Thompson having died in 1842. They left four children, two sons and two daughters. Their eldest son, John C., was born Sept. 27, 1828, and spent his early years with his parents, where he followed the usual routine of labor and study. He meanwhile acquired a knowledge of civil engineering, and was commissioned deputy surveyor to T. W. Brinley, Esq., then surveyor-general, and for years performed the duties pertaining to that position.

In the mean time, an opportunity for studying medicine having been kindly offered him by Dr. Daniel D. Polhemus, of Englishtown, he entered his office as a student in the spring of 1850, and remained under his instruction for six years, graduating in March, 1856, at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. In May of the same year he established himself at South River, and on the 3d of April, 1858, married Miss Julia L., daughter of Thomas McDowell, of that village. Their only child, Ira Van Giesen, who was born June 19, 1859, died Aug. 6, 1862, his death having immediately followed that of his mother, which occurred on the 1st of the same month. In May, 1865, the doctor married Mary M., daughter of D. P. Merrick, of Rahway.

Politically, Dr. Thompson is a Democrat, though he feels little interest in party struggles and is never a participant in those contests. He has for many years been a member of the Middlesex County Medical Society, and has attained an enviable rank in his profession, his reputation being extended rather than local. Since his first settlement in South River his professional skill has been greatly in demand, and his practice now reaches far beyond the confines of his own county. This is due no less to a thorough knowledge of the science of which he is an exponent than to untiring devotion to the interests of the community in which he resides. The doctor has no children.

DR. JOHN C. BARRON, of New York, who possesses an experience and record as surgeon in the late war of which he may well feel proud, was born in Woodbridge, Middlesex Co., in 1837, and this county having been his home until the beginning of the war he is entitled to notice in connection with the medical profession of this county. For a full sketch of his life see biography of the Barron family of Woodbridge.

HENRY R. BALDWIN was born in the city of New York, Sept. 18, 1829, and is the son of Eli Baldwin, M.D., D.D., and Phoebe Van Nest. He received his early education in the schools of New York, prepared for college at Rutgers College Grammar School, graduated at Rutgers College in 1849, studied medicine, and took his degree at the College of Physicians in the city of New York in 1853. The same year he entered Bellevue Hospital as interne, and after leaving the hospital practiced about eight months on Staten Island, when he became surgeon of the steamship "Baltic."

On Dec. 27, 1855, he settled in New Brunswick, where he married Elizabeth V. C. Rutgers, and has had eight children, five sons and three daughters, of whom three sons and two daughters still survive.

Dr. Baldwin's career as a practitioner has been remarkably successful. But as he is still in the prime of life, and his practice has not yet probably attained its maximum extent and usefulness, it would be premature to speak of it more fully here. He is a permanent member of the American Medical Association, has been president and treasurer of the State Medical Society, and president of the District Medical Society of the county of Middlesex.

As a citizen he has taken an active part in the local municipal government and in affairs of public interest of the city of New Brunswick, having been identified with the establishment of the water-works, and for twelve years a member of its board, also of the board of aldermen and chosen freeholders, and for seventeen years a member of the board of education of the city of New Brunswick.

Dr. Baldwin has instructed about forty students in medicine during the twenty-six years of his practice in New Brunswick.

LIST OF DECEASED PHYSICIANS.

Augustus R. Taylor, New Brunswick.	— Latham, New Brunswick.
William Van Deursen, New Brunswick.	David C. English, New Brunswick.
John Van Doursen, New Brunswick.	Selah Gulick, Cranbury.
David Clark Van Deursen, New Brunswick.	Hezekiah States, Cranbury.
James Anderson, ¹ New Brunswick.	Ralph P. Lott, Cranbury.
Jacob T. B. Skillman, New Brunswick.	William P. Lott, Cranbury.
Nicholas Kammer, New Brunswick.	John W. Lott, Cranbury.
Charles Dunham, New Brunswick.	Nehemiah Ludlum, Cranbury.
William Campbell, ¹ New Brunswick.	— Clow, Cranbury.
John Adams Pool, ¹ New Brunswick.	H. B. Lefleris, Spotswood.
J. Hatfield Smith, ¹ New Brunswick.	Cornelius Johnson, Spotswood.
Theodore Hardenbergh, New Brunswick.	C. McKnight Smith, Amboy.
John Neilson, ¹ New Brunswick.	Solomon Andrews, Sr., Amboy.
Ralph Mundy, ¹ New Brunswick.	S. St. John Smith, Amboy.
Peter Joseph O'Neil, ¹ New Brunswick.	Solomon Andrews, Jr., Amboy.
Frederick Baker, ¹ New Brunswick.	Henry M. Stone, Amboy.
William Waldron, ¹ New Brunswick.	George Stout, South Amboy.
John De Motte, New Brunswick.	Henry B. Poole, Washington, S. R.
A. C. Boorman, ¹ New Brunswick.	W. S. Willis, Old Bridge.
Richard Manly, ¹ New Brunswick.	A. N. Knapen, Jamesburg (U. S. Navy).
	— Knight, Metuchen.
	Robinson Mundy, Metuchen.
	Lewis A. Hall, Metuchen.
	— Runyon, New Market.
	— Coriell, New Market.
	Matthias Freeman, Woodbridge.
	Ellis B. Freeman, Woodbridge.
	Samuel Abernethy, Rahway.
	Clifford T. Morrigh, New Brunswick.

¹ Never practiced here.

CHAPTER LXXI.

THE PRESS OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

The Guardian and New Brunswick Advertiser was established by Abraham Blauvelt in 1792. The paper was a zealous Federal organ, and one of the oldest and best papers then published in the country. In addition to home news, carefully selected foreign intelligence, etc., it had unusually able correspondents, and their articles would compare favorably with the best found in the leading papers of the country to-day. It evidently was extensively circulated in Monmouth, Somerset, and adjoining counties, as seen by its advertisements. The number for Dec. 24, 1799, is in deep mourning for the death of Washington.

Abraham Blauvelt, the publisher of this paper, was one of the most enterprising of the early citizens of New Brunswick. He died about 1834. He was born in Rockland County, N. Y., near Old Tappan, and also, in connection with his newspaper business, was to some extent a book publisher. He married Jane, daughter of Dr. Moses Scott, of New Brunswick, and had the following-named children: Cornelius,¹ who was a physician in Paterson, N. J.; Helen, who died young; John Scott Blauvelt, a lawyer in New Brunswick; Charles, a physician in Hightstown, N. J.; and Isaac Alston, a teacher by profession.

Mrs. John Scott Blauvelt, whose maiden name was Mary Boggs, Robert Boggs, James Lawrence, Jane Mitchel, and Frances Brenton Blauvelt are the surviving descendants in New Brunswick.

Under the head of the "City of New Brunswick in 1799" will be found many interesting items taken from an old file of The Guardian, or New Brunswick Advertiser, for that day. We take from the columns of this paper, September, 1816, in the possession of Mr. Albert L. Blue, of The Home News, the following cut and fac-simile of the advertisement of one of the sailing packets plying between New Brunswick and New York before the days of railroads and steam navigation. (See page 529.)

The New Brunswick Fredonian was established on the 10th of April, 1811, by the brothers James and David Fitz Randolph, who were born in the township of Piscataway, Middlesex County. They served an apprenticeship to the printing business in the office of the Gazette, at Alexandria, Va., and were but little past their majority when they commenced the publication of the Fredonian. The paper was at first printed on a medium sheet, issued weekly, and presented a creditable typographical appearance, the Randolphs being good practical printers in their day. The Randolphs were earnest Republicans of the Jeffersonian type, and advocated the principles of that party in the Fredonian, which at once took high rank in importance and influence in the State, the paper circulating largely in all the counties. The editorials were mainly written by James F. Randolph, were models in style, terse, vigorous, and brief, full of the advanced and cultivated thought of the day, and in consequence were quoted sharing equally the emoluments of any office or business in which either of them was engaged. They did not confine their labors solely to the printing business, but also engaged in other mercantile affairs a large portion of the time of their connection with the Fredonian. During the years 1828, '29, '30, '31, and '32, James was a member

¹ Father of the Rev. William Blauvelt, D.D., of Lannington, N. J., who has been in the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church there over fifty years.

New-Brunswick & New-York Packet,

THE Subscribers inform the public, that they have commenced running, as a regular PACKET, between this City and New-York,

THE NEW SLOOP BRUNSWICK, A. DEGRAW, MASTER.

She will sail, (wind and weather permitting) every Tuesday from Flagg and Degraw's wharf, New-Brunswick; and every Friday from the White-Hall wharf, New-York. The most assiduous attention will be paid to all ORDERS for or with freight, and every convenience and comfort in the power of the Master will be afforded to passengers, the vessel having good accommodations.

J. C. Van Dyke,
Flagg & Degraw.

New-Brunswick, Sept. 1816.

N.B. Coarse and Fine Salt, Plaister of Paris, &c. (at New-York prices, adding freight) for sale; and the highest price given for Corn and Produce generally, at Flagg & Degraw's Store, on the wharf next below the bridge.

largely in other newspapers, and made their mark upon the times. The brothers were active in all the social, religious, and political movements in town, county, and State, and frequently filled places of honor and trust in the community. They were honored with such offices as alderman, justice of the peace, judge of the Court of Common Pleas, mayor, county clerk, postmaster, etc., the brothers of Congress, and took an important part in the debates therein. In consequence of a growing deafness he resigned his seat in Congress in 1832. He continued very deaf during the remainder of his life. About the year 1848 James went to Easton, Pa., to reside, and there engaged in the wholesale coal business, in which he succeeded in accumulating a handsome fortune. He still continued to write the leading editorials of the Fredonian, which were regularly forwarded to it each week until the paper passed out of the hands of the Randolphs, in 1854. James was the father of Theodore F. Randolph, Governor of New Jersey from 1869 to 1872. During the period that the Fredonian was published by the Randolphs the paper supported the national administrations of Presidents Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Harrison, Taylor, and Fillmore, advocating the doctrines of the Whig party during the whole period that party was in existence. The brothers were model citizens, and highly respected wherever known. David died in New Brunswick in 1863, and James at Easton, Pa., in 1872. After publishing the Fredonian for a period of forty-three years, the establishment was sold to John F. Babcock on the 12th of April, 1854, Mr. Babcock having occupied a subordinate position in the office during the previous fifteen months. While the Randolphs published the Fredonian very little attention was given to the publication of local news, their efforts having been almost solely directed to State and national affairs. Under the editorship of Mr. Babcock the character of the paper was materially changed. Believing that the people of the county and vicinity were more interested in matters occurring immediately around them, the new editor devoted his attention mainly to the collection and publication of local news, national and foreign matters having only a secondary importance in the paper. This change proved to be a popular one, and a large increase in the number of subscribers followed, its present list not being exceeded by more than three or four newspapers in the State. Local news still continues to occupy the largest share of space in its columns. Upon the organization of the Republican party the Fredonian at once adopted its leading principles, and its editorial and political columns have ever since been in harmony with them. The Weekly Fredonian for many years of late was printed on a sheet twenty-eight by forty-two inches in size, and with its frequent supplements furnished a large amount of reading matter during each year,—more than the majority of the weekly newspapers in the State. The weekly edition of the Fredonian was discontinued in April, 1882, and its place supplied by the Semi-Weekly Fredonian, published every Tuesday and Friday, for two dollars a year in advance. The Semi-Weekly Fredonian is printed on a sheet twenty-four by thirty-eight inches in size, eight columns on a page, and has become even more popular with its readers than the Weekly Fredonian, because of the large amount of reading matter furnished and its frequent issues.

On Jan. 15, 1855, Mr. Babcock commenced the publication of a daily evening paper, which was at first called The Daily New Brunswicker. The title was changed in 1857 to the Daily Fredonian, which it has ever since maintained. The Daily Fredonian possesses the same general characteristics as the Weekly and Semi-Weekly Fredonian, mentioned above, being devoted largely to local affairs and Republican in politics. It is printed on a sheet twenty-four by thirty-eight inches in size, eight columns on a page, and sold for three cents a single copy, or six dollars a year in advance. It has a large and growing circulation.

In connection with the Fredonian office is a large book and job printery, with four steam-power presses and all the appliances of a modern printing establishment, which is located at No. 36 Dennis Street.

The Targum, a sixteen-page monthly paper, edited by the students of Rutgers College, and conducted in their interest, is printed and published at the Fredonian office.

In the summer of 1856, David N. Merritt bought an interest in the Fredonian establishment, and the business was conducted under the firm-name of "Babcock & Merritt" until the spring of 1861, when Mr. Merritt retired from the concern.

On the 1st of January, 1869, Samuel L. Johnson purchased an interest in the office, and the business was conducted under the firm-name of "Babcock & Johnson" until April, 1879, when Mr. Johnson retired, and the business continued since then by John F. Babcock alone.

JOHN F. BABCOCK, editor and proprietor of the New Brunswick Fredonian, was born in New York City, Aug. 20, 1825, the only son of John Babcock and Sarah Patch. The progenitor of the Babcock family here was one of the Roger Williams colonists in Rhode Island, and his ancestors were among the earliest settlers of Springfield and Northampton, Mass.

His grandfather, Elisha Babcock, resided at Northampton, was a chair manufacturer, and reared all his sons to the same business. He served seven years in the Revolutionary war, and at the advanced age of ninety-four years died about 1842. His wife was a Miss Windwell Burt. John, son of Elisha Babcock, born at Northampton, Mass., married Sarah Patch, and soon after his marriage, in 1824, settled in New York City, where he established the business of chair-making and fancy chair-painting on John Street. His business career was prematurely cut short by his death at the age of twenty-six years, on May 30, 1826. His widow and son John F. removed west, where she was afterwards married again, and resided until her death, which occurred at Cambridge, Mich., in 1873. The son, John F., is the subject of this sketch, and at the age of fifteen came to Dansville, N. Y., and for four years was an apprentice in learning the printing business. He went to New York City in 1844, where he was connected with the Home Journal publishing office, and became foreman and private secretary for the publishers, Morris & Willis. In 1850 he went into the phonetic office of that city, where he remained for two years, and for several years thereafter he was the only phonographer in the State of

John F. Balcock

New Jersey. Mr. Babcock had by this time become thoroughly conversant with publishing, and desiring to be master of his own pen he came to New Brunswick in 1852, and for two years was the superintendent and foreman in the Fredonian office. On April 12, 1854, he purchased this paper, and has remained its editor and proprietor since, a period of twenty-eight years. Under Mr. Babcock's management the circulation of the Fredonian has increased from three hundred and fifty to twenty-three hundred subscribers, and for many years has been not only one of the largest local papers, but has wielded an influence second to none in the State. He is a logical, terse, spirited writer, and his editorials and the whole tone of his paper are intended to place before his readers facts, and serve as an educator in all that pertains to locality, State, and nation.

Mr. Babcock was one of the founders of the State Editorial Association in 1857, secretary of the same for twenty-one years, treasurer for three years, and was elected its president in January, 1882. Since his residence in New Brunswick he has been prominently identified with the Republican party, and through his newspaper has unflinchingly advocated its principles of reform, not hesitating to criticise its measures when opposed to justice and right.

Mr. Babcock served the city as clerk in 1859-60, and was secretary of the New Jersey Senate for four years, 1861-64. He was united in marriage on May 1, 1851, to Gertrude Ann, daughter of William Williamson, of Franklin township, Somerset Co., N. J., by whom he has one son, F. Ford Babcock, foreman of the Fredonian news-room, and one daughter, Emily Augusta Babcock.

The New Brunswick Times and General Advertiser was started June 1, 1815, and was "printed and published every Thursday morning by Deare & Myer at 'Washington's Head,' New Brunswick, New Jersey." Its introductory editorial speaks of the growing importance of New Brunswick as a commercial and manufacturing town, and of the demands for the publication of a newspaper. It was "published at the rate of two dollars and fifty cents per annum, payable at the expiration of six months from the time of receiving the first paper after subscribing." The publishers announce that they are "attached to and the paper is conducted in the interest of the Federal-Republican party." Mr. Gordon has a number of The Times (vol. ii., whole No. 71), dated Oct. 3, 1816.

At what date The Times passed into the hands of Mr. Albert R. Speer we have not been able to ascertain, but he continued to conduct the paper until his death in 1869. He was an able and influential journalist and a Democrat of the Jeffersonian school, except for a brief period subsequent to 1846, when he espoused Free-Soil principles and turned over his paper to the advocacy of that faction of the Democratic party. This gave occasion for the establishment of the New Jersey Union as a regular Democratic organ by Alphonso E. Gordon in the latter part of May, 1847.

Alphonso E. Gordon was born in Philadelphia, Pa., March 12, 1826, and learned the printer's trade in the office of The Delaware State Journal, at Wilmington, Del. He was just past twenty-one, and was engaged in The Emporium office, at Trenton, N. J., when the opening occurred for starting the new Democratic paper, the Union, at New Brunswick. He immediately repaired thither, and issued the first number late in May, 1847.

First Daily in New Brunswick.—The Daily News was started by Mr. Gordon in March, 1851. It was conducted by him in connection with the New Jersey Union until February, 1855, when The Times, under Mr. Spear, having returned to its "first love," and there being two Democratic papers in the city, Mr. Gordon sold the good will of both the daily and weekly to Mr. Speer, and removed his printing materials to Grand Rapids, Mich. The Daily News and New Jersey Union were then merged with The Times, which latter Mr. Speer conducted till his death, as mentioned above, when The Times was sold to Hon. William B. Guild, then, as now, of the Newark Journal, who started the Daily Times in November, 1869.

Dec. 28, 1871, Alphonso E. Gordon bought The Times establishment, and has since conducted the Daily and Weekly Times.

The Home News (Daily) was started Feb. 1, 1879, by Albert L. Blue and Joseph Fischer, as a penny daily paper, in Hope's building, Hiram Street, New Brunswick, N. J. It started with an issue of seven hundred copies.

Summary.—The papers now published in the county are the following, viz.:

The New Brunswick Fredonian. New Brunswick. Daily and weekly. The weekly was first issued April 10, 1811; the daily, Jan. 15, 1855. The daily published in the afternoon, the weekly on Thursday. Daily, $6; weekly, $2. Republican. John F. Babcock, Dec. 15, 1852, editor and proprietor. Edward Tindell, 1863, local editor. Abraham B. Buzzee, 1849, accountant.

The New Brunswick Times. New Brunswick. Daily and weekly. The weekly was first issued in 1815, the daily in October, 1869. Daily published in the afternoon, the weekly on Thursday. Daily, $7; weekly, $1.50. Democratic. Alphonso E. Gordon, Dec. 28, 1871.

The Targum. New Brunswick. Monthly. First issued January, 1869. $1.50 per year. Devoted to the interests of the students of Rutgers College. Edited by students. Published by the Targum Association. Walter D. Hasbrouck, 1879, business manager.

Middlesex County Democrat. Perth Amboy. Weekly. First issue May 23, 1868. Published on Saturday. $2 per year. Democratic. Henry Farmer, 1868.

The Independent Hour. Woodbridge. Weekly. First issued April 13, 1876. Published on Thursday. $2 per year. Independent. Peter K. Edgar, 1879.

The Home News. New Brunswick. Daily. First issued Feb. 1, 1879. Published in the afternoon. $3 per year. Independent. Hugh Boyd, November, 1879.

CHAPTER LXXII.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY CIVIL LIST.

Members of the Legislature from Middlesex County.—The records of the Council from 1682 to 1750 are not to be found at Trenton, either printed or in manuscript, nor those for the years from 1750 to 1776. The records of the Assembly are imperfect up to 1740, previous to which time the only ones extant are those for the years 1710, 1716, 1723, 1733, and 1738. On the 2d of July, 1776, the State Constitution was adopted, from which time forward we find perfect minutes of the proceedings of the Legislature. The present constitution, ratified by the people Aug. 13, 1844, changed the title of the Upper House from Council to Senate, and the term of service of senators from one to three years. Several amendments to the constitution were ratified by the people Sept. 7, 1875.

MEMBERS OF COUNCIL AND SENATE.

1750. James Hude.	1822. Ercurius Beatty.
1776. John Wetherill.	1823-24. Robert McChesney.
1777-79. Jonathan Dears.	1825. William Edgar.
1780. Benjamin Manning.	1826. Robert McChesney.
1781-82. John Beatty.	1827-28. James T. Dunn.
1783. Benjamin Manning.	1829. James Cook.
1784-85. Samuel Fitz Randolph.	1830. Samuel Edgar.
1786-87. Samuel Randolph.	1831. Robert McChesney.
1788. Benjamin Manning.	1832. John T. McDowell.
1789-94. Samuel Randolph.	1833. Josiah B. Howell.
1795. Ephraim Martin.	1834. Andrew Snowhill.
1796. Samuel F. Randolph.	1835. John Perrine, Jr.
1797. Ephraim Martin.	1836-39. George T. McDowell.
1798-99. Andrew Kirkpatrick.	1840-44. David P. Appleget.
1800-5. Ephraim Martin.	1842-44. Abraham W. Brown.
1806-7. Ercurius Beatty.	1845-46. David Crowell.
1808. James Schureman.	1847-49. Adam Lee.
1809. Ercurius Beatty.	1850-52. Edward Y. Rogers.
1810. James Schureman.	1853-55. Ralph C. Stulta.
1811. John James.	1856-58. Henry V. Spaer.
1812. James Schureman.	1859-61. Abraham Everitt.
1813. John Neilson.	1862-70. Amos Robbins.
1814-17. Ercurius Beatty.	1871-76. Levi D. Jarrard.
1818. John N. Simpson.	1877-79. George C. Ludlow, Gov- ernor.
1819. James T. Dunn.	1880-82. Isaac L. Martin.
1820. Andrew Kirkpatrick.
1821. James T. Dunn.

REPRESENTATIVES IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

1710. Thomas Farmer.	1723. ³ John Kinsey.
Adam Hude.	Moses Rolph.
1716. ² Charles Morgan.	1733. ⁴ John Kinsey, Speaker.
John Kinsey.	James Hude.

¹ Under new constitution changed from Council to Senate, and elected for three years.

² No names recorded from 1710 up to 1716.

³ No names recorded from 1716 to 1723.

⁴ No names recorded from 1723 to 1733.

1738. ⁵ James Hude.	1776. John Coombs.
Edward Autill.	Daniel Moores.
1740. ⁶ Thomas Farmer.	Benjamin Manning.
Robert Hude.	1777. Benjamin Manning.
1741. Thomas Farmer.	Matthias Baker.
Robert Hude.	Jacob Vandike.
1742. Thomas Farmer.	1778. Benjamin Manning.
Robert Hude.	Jacob Schenck.
1743. Thomas Farmer.	Ebenezer Ford.
Samuel Nevill.	1779. John Neilson.
1744. Robert Hude.	Thomas Steele.
William Ouke.	Matthias Baker.
1745. John Heard.	1780. Jacob Schenck.
John Moores.	Jacob Saydam.
1746. John Heard.	Melanchton Freeman.
Philip Kearney.	1781. Jacob Saydam.
1747. John Heard.	Jacob Martin.
Philip Kearney.	John Conger.
1748. John Wetherill.	1782. Jacob Saydam.
James Smith.	John Conger.
1749. John Wetherill.	John Combs.
James Smith.	1783. John Combs.
1750. John Wetherill.	James Schureman.
James Smith.	Samuel Fitz Randolph.
1751. John Wetherill.	1784. John Combs.
Shobald Smith.	James Shureman.
1752. John Wetherill.	Moses Bloomfield.
Shobald Smith.	1785. John Combs.
1753. John Wetherill.	James Shureman.
Shobald Smith.	James Bonny.
1754. John Wetherill.	1786. John Combs.
Samuel Nevill.	James Bonny.
1755. John Wetherill.	James Douglass.
Samuel Nevill.	1787. John Combs.
1756. John Wetherill.	James Bonny.
Samuel Nevill.	James Douglass.
1757. John Wetherill.	1788. John Combs.
Samuel Nevill.	James Schureman.
1758. John Wetherill.	Melanchton Freeman.
Samuel Nevill.	1789. James Bonny.
1759. John Wetherill.	John Beatty, Speaker.
Samuel Nevill.	Thomas McDowell.
1760. John Wetherill.	1790. Thomas McDowell.
Samuel Nevill, Speaker.	Peter Vredenburg.
1761. John Wetherill.	John Runyon.
Samuel Nevill, Speaker.	1791. Peter Vredenburg.
1762. John Wetherill.	John Runyon.
Samuel Nevill.	John Combs.
1763. John Wetherill.	1792. Peter Vredenburg.
Samuel Nevill.	John Rattoon.
1764. John Wetherill.	Thomas McDowell.
Samuel Nevill.	1793. Peter Vredenburg.
1765. John Wetherill.	John Rattoon.
Samuel Nevill.	Thomas McDowell.
1766. John Wetherill.	1794. Peter Vredenburg.
Samuel Nevill.	James Morgan.
1767. John Wetherill.	Benjamin Manning.
Reune Runyon.	1795. Peter Vredenburg.
1768. John Wetherill.	James Morgan.
Reune Runyon.	Benjamin Manning.
1769. John Wetherill.	1796. James Morgan.
Reune Runyon.	Thomas McDowell.
1770. John Wetherill.	Joseph F. Randolph.
Reune Runyon.	1797. James Morgan.
1771. John Wetherill.	Gershon Dunn.
Reune Runyon.	Andrew Kirkpatrick.
1772. John Wetherill.	1798. James Morgan.
Reune Runyon.	Gershon Dunn.
1773. John Wetherill.	Thomas McDowell.
John Moores.	1799. James Morgan.
1774. John Wetherill.	Gershon Dunn.
John Moores.	Thomas McDowell.
1775. John Wetherill.	1800. William Edgar.
Azariah Dunham.	Gershon Dunn.

⁵ No names reported from 1733 to 1738.

⁶ No names reported from 1738 to 1740.

1800. John Neilson.	1826. John T. McDowell.	1846. Simeon W. Phillips.	1864. Miles Ross.
1801. Gershom Dunn.	James T. Dunn.	Ralph C. Stults.	David B. Wyckoff.
John Neilson.	1827. Charles Carson.	1847. Theodore F. King.	Abraham C. Coriell.
Erkarias Beatty.	James Parker.	Richard McDowell.	1865. Abraham C. Coriell.
1802. Gershom Dunn.	Andrew Snowhill.	Garret G. Voorhees.	Levi D. Jarrard.
Erkurias Beatty.	1828. Charles Carson.	John A. Davison.	James C. Goble.
John Combs.	Andrew Snowhill.	1848. Richard McDowell.	1866. Levi D. Jarrard.
1803. Gershom Dunn.	Nicholas Boeraem.	Melaucthon F. Carman.	Nathan H. Tizrell.
Erkurias Beatty.	1829. Littleton Kirkpatrick.	Lewis S. Randolph.	John Perrine.
James Voorhees.	Abraham Cruser.	Aaron Gulick.	1867. Levi D. Jarrard.
1804. Gershom Dunn.	Josiah B. Howell.	1849. Lewis S. Randolph.	Nathan H. Tizrell.
Erkurias Beatty.	1830. John T. McDowell.	Aaron Gulick.	John W. Perrine.
James Voorhees.	Charles G. McChesney.	William A. Gulick.	1868. George E. Strong.
1805. Erkurias Beatty.	Lewis Randolph.	1850. James Bishop.	Alfred W. Jones.
James Voorhees.	Abraham Cruser.	Henry Van Dyke.	William M. Cox.
Andrew Elstone.	1831. John T. McDowell.	Charles Abraham.	1869. Levi D. Jarrard.
1806. James Voorhees.	Charles G. McChesney.	Isabel R. Coriell.	Alfred W. Jones.
James Parker.	Lewis S. Randolph.	1851. Ralph M. Crowell.	William M. Cox.
Alexander Dunn.	David W. Vall.	David Dunn.	1870. Levi D. Jarrard.
1807. James Voorhees.	1832. David W. Vall.	Peter W. Dey.	Albert L. Runyon.
James Parker.	John H. Disbrough.	John B. Johnson.	George E. Browne.
Alexander Dunn.	Henry Van Dyke.	1852. Ralph M. Crowell.	1871. Albert L. Runyon.
1808. James Parker.	Simon Mundy.	Josephus Shann.	Isaac L. Fisher.
James Voorhees.	1833. John M. Tufts.	James Applegate.	Edward F. Roberts.
George Boice.	Abraham W. Brown.	1853. Josephus Shann.	1872. Isaac L. Fisher.
1809. James Parker.	Richard S. Field.	Martin A. Howell.	Joseph C. Letson.
James Voorhees.	Samuel C. Johnes.	Abraham Everitt.	Johnston Holcombe.
George Boice.	1834. Richard S. Field.	1854. Martin A. Howell.	1873. Isaac L. Fisher.
1810. James Parker.	Ralph M. Crowell.	Abraham Everitt.	Joseph C. Letson.
James Voorhees.	Elias Runyon.	Samuel E. Stelle.	Harry F. Worthington.
George Boice.	Henry Van Dyke.	1855. Martin A. Howell.	1874. John Van Denen.
1811. John Brewster.	Samuel M. Crowell.	Samuel E. Stelle.	John F. Ten Broeck.
John L. Anderson.	Elias Runyon.	William Hutchinson.	Joseph E. Magee.
James T. Dunn.	George P. Molleson.	1856. William Hutchinson.	1875. James H. Van Cleef.
1812. James Voorhees.	George T. McDowell.	John T. Jenkins.	Josephus Shann.
Erkurias Beatty.	1836. George P. Molleson.	Amos Robbins.	Joseph C. Magee.
James Parker.	William C. Alexander.	1857. Amos Robbins.	1876. Isaiah Rolfe.
1813. James Voorhees.	Thomas Edgar.	Henry Stults.	Charles A. Campbell.
Erkurias Beatty.	Samuel C. Johnes.	John D. Buckelaw.	Daniel Z. Martin.
James Parker.	1837. George P. Molleson.	1858. John D. Buckelaw.	1877. John Waldron.
1814. John N. Simpson.	William C. Alexander.	Ellie B. Freeman.	Charles A. Campbell.
William Edgar.	Samuel C. Johnes.	Garret I. Snediker.	Daniel Z. Martin.
Alexander Dunn.	Thompson Edgar.	1859. Ellie B. Freeman.	1878. Isaac L. Martin.
1815. John N. Simpson.	1838. George P. Molleson.	Garret I. Snediker.	Patrick Convery.
William Edgar.	Richard S. Field.	Andrew McDowell.	Vincent W. Mount.
Alexander Dunn.	David D. Appleget.	1860. Ellis B. Freeman.	1879. Isaac L. Martin.
1816. James Parker.	Lewis Golding.	Thomas Boeraem.	Patrick Convery.
Hezekiah Smith.	1839. George P. Molleson.	Elias Ross.	Vincent W. Mount.
Allison Ely.	David D. Appleget.	1861. Elias Ross.	1880. Robert G. Miller.
1817. James T. Dunn.	Lewis Golding.	James T. Crowell.	John M. Board.
Allison Ely, Jr.	Adam Lee.	Orlando Perrine.	Stephen Martin.
Frazee Ayres.	1840. Lewis Golding.	1862. Elias Ross.	1881. James H. Van Cleef.
1818. James Parker.	Frederick Richmond.	James T. Crowell.	Manning Freeman.
Allison Ely, Jr.	David Dunn.	Orlando Perrine.	Stephen Martin.
Frazee Ayres.	Cornelius C. Cruser.	1863. James T. Crowell.	1882. James H. Van Cleef.
1819. Charles Caton.	Adam Lee.	Miles Ross.	John Adair.
Samuel Edgar.	John Acken.	David B. Wyckoff.	James H. Goodwin.
James Cook.	Israel R. Coriell.
1820. James Cook.	Dean Britton.
Erkurias Beatty.	1842. John D. Field.
John T. McDowell.	Warren Brown.
1821. James Cook.	William Patterson.
John T. McDowell.	William L. Schenck.
Samuel Edgar.	1843. John D. Field.
1822. James Cook.	William Patterson.
John T. McDowell.	William L. Schenck.
Samuel Edgar.	Joel B. Laing.
1823. John T. McDowell.	1844. John D. Field.
James F. Randolph.	William Patterson.
David Schenck.	William L. Schenck.
1824. John T. McDowell.	Joel B. Laing.
James F. Randolph.	1845. Simeon W. Phillips.
David Schenck.	Ralph C. Stults.
1825. John T. McDowell.	David C. Dunn.
Charles Carson.	Charles Abraham.
James Cook.	1846. David C. Dunn.
1826. James Cook.	Charles Abraham.

JUDGES OF THE COMMON PLEAS.

1683. Samuel Dennis.	1796-1801. Jonathan Combs.
John Palmer.	1796. Ercurias Beatty.
1684-87. Samuel Dennis.	Jonathan Bloomfield.
1688. Samuel Winder.	1797. Ezekiel Smith.
1688-93. Andrew Hamilton. ¹	1798. Elijah Phillips.
1693-97. John Inians. ²	1799. Henry Marsh, Esq.
1697. John Boyce.	Thomas Stelle.
1698-99. Samuel Dennis.	Samuel Randolph.
1708-9. Peter Sonmans.	1801. John Katoone.
1710. Thomas Farnar.	Daniel Agnew.
1711-14. Elisha Parker.	John Dey.
1715-20. Adam Hude.	Ichabod Potter.
1718. Michael Van Veghte.	1803. Benjamin Lindsay.
1719. William Eier.	John James.
1796-1803. Evert Van Wickle, Esq.	1804. Samuel Randolph.

¹ Governor Hamilton.² The founder of New Brunswick.

1804. Nathaniel Hunt. Thomas Hill.	1832. Jacob Van Wickle. 1833. Peter P. Runyon. Simeon Mundy. M. Mundy.	1873. A. D. Browe. 1874. Woodbridge Strong. Andrew J. Disbrow.	1877. Charles S. Scott. 1878. Charles F. Newton. 1879-82. Andrew K. Cogswell.
1806. Andrew Rowan. Thomas Hance. Henry Freemans. William Tindall. Asa Runyon. David Dunham.	1834. A. W. Brown. William B. Manning. James Harriot. Samuel C. Johns.	CLERKS OF COURT.
1807. Ichabod Potter. John Rattoone. John F. Randolph. John L. Anderson.	1835. Jared I. Dunn. John S. Vandyke. Ichabod Potter. Joseph McChesney.	1683. John Pike. 1684-87. Edward Slater. 1687-90. Joseph Fitz Randolph. ¹ 1690-99. Edward Slater. ² 1709. George Ewbancke. ³ 1711-20. John Barclay. ⁴ 1749-75. John Smythe. ⁴ 1777-96. Jonathan Deare. 1796-1801. William Dunham.	1801-25. William P. Deare. 1825-28. James F. Randolph. 1828-29. Elias J. Thompson. 1829-33. T. S. Van Arsdale. 1833-57. Nicholas Booraem. 1857-62. George A. Vroom. 1862-72. J. Elmer Stout. 1872. Charles S. Hill.
1808. John Lewis. Robert McChesney. Jacob Van Winkle. John James.	1836. F. Hardenburgh. 1837. Joseph Ford. John La Tourrette. C. M. Campbell.	SHERIFFS.
1809. John James. Samuel F. Randolph.	1838. John Perrine, Jr. Jonathan Booraem. Jacob Van Wickle. D. W. Vail.	1750-53. William Deare. 1754-57. John Deare. 1758-61. William Deare. 1761-64. Samuel Throcmorton. 1783-85. Abraham Schuyler. 1786-89. Thompson Stelle. 1789-92. John Lyle. 1792-95. Thompson Stelle. 1795-98. John Marsalis. 1798-1800. Robert Ross. 1800-3. Andrew Lyle. 1803-6. Alexander Duon. 1806-9. Robert Ross, Jr. 1809-12. Alexander Dunn. 1812-15. Abraham Van Arsdale. 1815-18. Alexander Dunn. 1818-21. Abraham Van Arsdale. 1821-24. Charles Carson. 1824-27. Andrew Snowhill. 1827-30. Samuel Edgar. 1830-33. Andrew Snowhill.	1833-36. Abraham Crusier. 1836-39. Abraham W. Brown. 1839-42. James M. Brewster. 1842-45. Asher Bisset. ⁵ 1845. James H. Newell. ⁶ 1845-48. James C. Stout. 1848-51. Garret G. Voorhes. 1851-54. Jaques V. Gordon. 1854-57. Henry Acken. 1857-60. James Applegate. 1860-63. Obadiah Clark. 1863-66. William M. Cox. 1866-69. J. Manning Clarkson. 1869-71. George Farr. ¹ 1871. Elias D. Sneider. ² 1871-74. John D. Buckalew. 1874-75. M. Martin Lupardus. 1875-78. Edward F. Roberts. 1878-81. Charles C. Campbell. 1881. Andrew J. Disbrow.
1812. John Whit. George Boice, Jr. Andrew Elston. Nathaniel Hunt. David Chambers. Jacob Van Winkle. Robert McChesney. John James.	1839. Isaac Story. A. D. Tisworth. Joseph Ford. Ichabod Potter. 1841. Charles Abrahamus. 1842. Elias I. Thompson. John La Tourrette. Edgar Freeman. Haley Fisk. John Perrine, Jr. Peter Duncan.	SURROGATES.
1814. John Fitz Randolph. 1815. William Tindell. Robert Arnold. John Smith.	1843. Jonathan Booraem. Thomas Potts. Peter P. Measerell. Simeon Mundy. Peter P. Runyon. D. Fitz Randolph. Jacob Van Wickle. Bergan Scott. James Harriott. James Covever. Andrew Agnew. Joseph McChesney. Matthias Browe. Alanson Newton.	1804-6. J. Phineas Manning. 1806-26. John Heard. 1826. Charles Carson. 1826-31. David Menenan. 1831-36. Littleton Kirkpatrick. 1836-41. James C. Zabriskie. 1841-46. Josiah Ford.	1846-51. James G. McDowell. 1851-64. Theophilus M. Holcom. 1864-66. Robert Adrain. 1866-67. William Dunham. 1867-72. F. Schurman Holcom. 1872. William Reiley, Jr.
1816. Asa Runyon. Joseph McChesney. Thomas Hance. Benajah Mundy. 1817. George Boice. 1818. Nathaniel Hunt. Robert McChesney. 1819. John N. Simpson. 1820. John Gillman. John Smith. James Harriott. Joseph McChesney. 1821. Benjamin Mundy. N. Booraem, Jr. Bedford Joh. Jacob Van Wickle.	1844. John S. Crusier. M. Mundy. F. Stultz. Peter Cortelyou. Asher Martin. S. G. Delth. James N. Wan. Francis Huffman. John Van Breeke. 1846. John Perrine. 1847. A. D. Titeworth. 1848. Edgar Freeman. 1849. D. Fitz Randolph. 1850. Peter P. Runyon. 1851. Alanson Newton. 1852. A. P. Droust. 1853. Bethuel Ward. 1854. James C. Goble. 1857. Abram P. Punost. 1858. Joel B. Laing. 1859. John Perrine. 1862. A. R. Speer. Duyton Decker. 1869. Charles T. Cowenhoven. H. H. Brown. 1872. Elsin Cook.	COUNTY COLLECTORS.
1822. Nathaniel Hunt. 1823. R. McChesney. 1824. Samuel Stelle. John Gillman. 1825. John M. Cheney. James Harriott. Ichabod Potter. 1826. Jacob Van Wickel. Joseph Ford. N. Booraem. Thomas Hance. William B. Manning. 1828. Robert McChesney. 1829. N. Booraem. John B. Mount. James Harriot. John S. Vandyke.	1782-1823. Peter Vredenbergh. 1823-25. William P. Deare. 1826-68. Nicholas Booraem. 1847. John C. Elmendorf. 1852. George A. Vroom. 1857. John C. Elmendorf.	1868-72. Richard McDonald. 1872-73. Theodore B. Booraem. 1873. Hart Moore. PROSECUTORS OF COMMON PLEAS. 1877. Charles T. Cowenhoven. 1882. J. Keany Rice.
1830. Simeon Mundy. Joseph McChesney. William B. Manning. Ichabod Potter. 1831. Joseph Ford. Thomas Hance.	1850. Peter P. Runyon. 1851. Alanson Newton. 1852. A. P. Droust. 1853. Bethuel Ward. 1854. James C. Goble. 1857. Abram P. Punost. 1858. Joel B. Laing. 1859. John Perrine. 1862. A. R. Speer. Duyton Decker. 1869. Charles T. Cowenhoven. H. H. Brown. 1872. Elsin Cook.	JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.
	1683-87. Edward Slater. James Giles. John Bishop. Samuel Hale. Benjamin Hull. Joseph Fitz Randolph.	1688. John Campbell. John Stryker. Samuel Hale. Benjamin Clarke. 1690. Jonathan Bishop. 1691. Thomas Codrington.

¹ Mr. Fitz Randolph is said to have been of royal blood; he was ancestor of the family of Randolph of New Jersey, among whom Governor Randolph. His writing in the old minutes, as well as in records of Woodbridge, is the most peculiar and beautiful to be found any of the ancient records of the country.

² Probably remained clerk till 1705, as there is a break in the minutes.

³ Appointed by royal commission.

⁴ Barclay and Smythe are reported to have filled the entire term between 1714 and 1717, though the fact is uncertain on account of the records being inaccessible.

⁵ Died in office.

⁶ Elected to fill vacancy.

¹ Mr. Fitz Randolph is said to have been of royal blood; he was the ancestor of the family of Randolph of New Jersey, among whom was Governor Randolph. His writing in the old minutes, as well as in the records of Woodbridge, is the most peculiar and beautiful to be found in any of the ancient records of the country.

² Probably remained clerk till 1709, as there is a break in the minutes.

³ Appointed by royal commission.

⁴ Barclay and Smythe are reported to have filled the entire time between 1714 and 1717, though the fact is uncertain on account of the records being inaccessible.

⁵ Died in office.

⁶ Elected to fill vacancy.

1691. John Inians.
1692. David Mudie.
James Duodas.
John Royce.
1693. Samuel Dannis.
1694. David Mudis.
1708-9. Cornelius Longfeld.
John Tonison.
John Drake.
1710. Edmund Dunham.
Adam Hude.
John Bishop.
John Pike.
Elisha Parker.
1711. John Field.
Isaac Smalley.
Thomas Yates.
1712. Thomas Leonard.
1714. Moses Ralph.
1715. John Moore.
1717. John Brown.
1718. Robert Gilchrist.
Samuel Walker.
William Eier.
1779. Joseph Olden.
Elias Woodruff.
Jacob Martio.
Jeremiah Maoning.
Samuel Fitz Randolph.
James Dey.
Joseph Story.
Nicholls Mesroll.
James Johnstoa.
Jonathan Johnston.
John Woldron.
Peter X. Connett.
John Voorhis.
Henry Freeman.
1780. John Gilman.
Peter Vredenburg.
1780-87. Nathaniel Hunt.
1781. John Lloyd.
1784. John Vredenburg.
Thomas McDowell.
1784-89. Robert Barclay.
1785. Samuel Fitz Randolph.
James Douglass.
James Bonney.
John Miller.
John Conger.
1785-86. Robert Wilson.
1785-87. Abraham Schuyler.
1785-89. Jacob Suidam.
1786-87. Thomas Steele.
1787. John Beatty.
Moses Bloomfield.
William Lawson.
1788. John Combs.
1789. Thomas McDowell.
Jonathan Rettoon.
1796. Ercuries Beatty.
1797. Ichabod Potter.
Ezekiel Smith.
1798. Jonathan Combs.
Joseph Marsh.
John Combs.
John Dey.
1799. Alexander Dunn.
John Van Dyke.
Andrew McDowell.
Jacob Suidam.
Samuel Fitz Randolph.
John Combs.
Thompson Stelle.
1800. Jeremiah Manning.
James Bonny.
1801. Daniel Agnew.
1801. Robert Wilson.
John James.
1802. Phineas Manning.
1803. Jacob Van Wickle.
Andrew Rowan.
Ephraim Harriott.
George Harrison.
Henry Freeman.
John Randolph.
William Holmes.
Benajah Mundy.
William Tear.
Benjamin Lindsay.
John Postedo.
1804. Samuel F. Randolph.
William Tindall.
Thomas Hill.
Peter Vanderhoef.
1805. John Sanderson.
Daniel Attchley.
1806. Thomas Hance.
Josiah Davis.
David Turvery.
Asa Runyon.
Nathaniel Hunt.
Joseph Marsh.
John Lewis.
Robert Stansbury.
David Dunham.
John James.
1807. Ichabod Potter.
George Boice.
1808. Benjamin Mundy.
John Batteredo.
George Harrison.
Ephraim Harriott.
Robert McChesney.
Jacob Van Wickle.
1809. Peter Vanderhoef.
William Tindell.
Samuel F. Randolph.
John F. Randolph.
William Toan.
1811. Asa Runyon.
Thomas Isaacell.
Samuel Drake.
John James.
Samuel Willett.
Joseph McChesney.
Richard Marsh.
David Hall.
John Lewis.
1812. Jarvis Brasted.
John Vliet.
Josiah Davis.
George Boice.
Andrew Elston.
William Lawson.
1813. John Dey.
James E. Parker.
Nathaniel Hunt.
David Chambers.
Moses Morris.
David Bowne.
Andrew Rowan.
Benjah Mundy.
Robert McChesney.
Ephraim Harriott.
1814. John L. Anderson.
Robert Arnold.
Peter Vaaderhoef.
1815. William Tindall.
Samuel P. Amey.
James Winner.
John L. Anderson.
John Smith.
1815. Peter Vanderhoef.
1816. Andrew Rowan.
William Tindell.
William B. Manning.
John James James.
Stephen Hamilton.
David Hall.
Asa Runyon.
Richard Marsh.
Joseph McChesney.
1816-21. Thomas Hance.
Samuel Drake.
Samuel Willet.
1817. Oliver Johnson.
Josiah Davis.
George Boice.
1817-21. Redford Job.
Ichabod Potter.
William Tindall, Jr.
1818. John Hammell.
Moses Morris.
Samuel Gulick.
Nathaniel Hunt.
Nichols Booraem.
James Dunham.
Robert McChesney.
Benjh. Mundy.
John N. Dey.
1819. Josiah Ford.
John Bartode.
Robert Arnold.
John La Tourrette.
John N. Simpson.
1820. John Smith.
James Harriot.
James S. Primer.
Samuel Stelle.
Richard Marsh.
David Van Derhoff.
Andrew Rowan.
Joseph M. Chioney.
Samuel Gulick.
John Hammell.
William Herbert.
1821. Jacob Van Wickle.
1822. John Gilman.
Oliver Johnston.
William B. Manning.
Aaron Gulick.
Nathaniel Hunt.
Peter P. Maesserell.
1823. Nathaniel Booraem, Jr.
John Dey.
John Harriott.
Robert McChesney.
1824. John La Tourrette.
Drake Boice.
Thomas Arnold.
1825. John B. Mount.
James Winner.
Samuel Gulick.
John Hammell.
Daniel Hutchinson.
John Perrine, Jr.
Henry Shella.
James Harriott.
Joseph R. Kinney.
Richard Marsh.
Andrew Rowan.
Samuel Disbrow.
1826. Samuel Willetts.
William Herbert.
William Tindell.
Jacob Van Wickle.
Simeon Mundy.
1827. Enoch Fitz Randolph.
Ichabod Potter.
1827. William B. Manning.
Oliver Johnston.
1828. Robert McChesney.
James Cook.
Jonathan Hey.
N. Booraem.
Joseph Ford.
John T. Hutchinson.
Peter P. Maesserell.
James Dunham.
John Bartodo.
1828-35. John La Tourrette.
1829. C. M. Campbell.
Abraham W. Brown.
John S. Vandyke.
Drake Duun.
John B. Mount.
William Rowland.
Thomas Arnold.
James Harriott.
1830. Merrill Mundy.
Joseph McChesney.
Aaron Hassert.
A. Slack.
Isaac Stony.
Henry Stulta.
Andrew Rowan.
John Smith.
Samuel Gulick.
Thomas Blake.
Richard Marsh.
1831. William Tindell.
Oliver Johnson.
Enoch Fitz Randolph.
Abraham J. Van Derver.
Samuel Disbrow.
Thomas Hance.
1831-33. Simeon Munday.
1831-35. Ichabod Potter.
1832. Aseb Brokaw.
Jacob Van Winkle.
Peter P. Maesserell.
John Perrine, Jr.
1832-34. William B. Manning.
1833. Peter P. Rnoyon.
Thomas Potts.
Peter Dunian.
D. Bowne.
Stephen Hull.
Jonathan Booraem.
Albert Cornell.
Henry Lillcocks.
Merrill Mundy.
Henry N. Low.
John W. Day.
John Hutchinson.
Sennel I. Emly.
1834. A. W. Brown.
James Harriott.
Samuel C. Johnes.
Richard Salsbury.
Samuel Gordon, Jr.
C. M. Campbell.
William B. Manning.
John S. Cock.
James Harriott.
William Rowland.
Jared I. Dunn.
John S. Vandyke.
Joseph McChesney.
Richard Marsh.
Joseph Ford.
Merrill Mundy.
Isaac Story.
Nathaniel Labuir.
Beverly R. Crawl.
Cornelius Shuddell.

1835. Aaron Hassett.
Jared I. Dunn.
Thunay Buffmay.
Elisha N. Blew.
John S. Vandyk.
Joseph McChesney.
Henry Stults.
Samuel Gulick.
Abraham S. Van Deuren.
1836. Lewis Allward.
Samuel Disbrow.
E. F. Randolph.
Daniel Ormston.
Ichabod Potter.
Price B. Bills.
James M. Wam.
1837. Peter P. Measerell.
Simeon Mundy
Job Silver.
Thomas Blake.
Jacob Harbert.
John Perrine, Jr.
Charles Frasier.
John B. Mount.
1838. Jonathan Booraem.
W. B. Gaddes.
Albert Cornell.
Thomas Potts.
Edgar Freeman.
Peter P. Runyon.
John Burlew.
Peter Duncan.
Henry Lillcocks.
John Dey.
Benjamin M. Price.
George G. Nevius.
1839. John D. See.
Jacob Van Wickle.
Joel Dunham.
A. D. Titsworth.
1840. Joseph Ford.
Garrett G. Voorhees.
John C. Morria.
Richard Marsh.
John La Tourette.
Isaac Story.
Beverly R. Crawl.
James Harriot.
1841. Richard McDowell.
Peter I. Day.
James S. Combs.
Thomas S. McDowell.
George W. Price.
Charles Abrahams.
1842. Peter P. Maeserell.
Jacob Harbert.
Simeon Mundy.
John Perrine, Jr.
1843. Jonathan Booraem.
Elias I. Thompson.
D. Fitz Randolph.
John Burlew.
Thomas Potts.
Edgar Freeman.
Peter P. Runyon.
Abraham Boie.
George G. Nevius.
Haly Flak.
Isaac De Voe.
Courtney Hall.
Peter Duman.
Benjamin Scott.
Joseph McChesney.
Merrill Mundy.
Matthew Brown.
F. Stults.
James McKelvey.
1843. Alanson Newton.
Freeman Huffman, Sr.
Ichabod Potter.
P. P. Vanderhoeft.
James Harriott.
James Applegate.
James N. Wam.
Joseph Vanderbilt.
Andrew Todd.
1844. Cornelius D. Van Houten.
John S. Cruser.
Bethuel Ward.
Enoch Fitz Randolph.
Asber Martin.
John R. Bergan.
S. G. Deeth.
1845. Peter P. Measerell.
Nathan Ayres.
Peter I. Dey.
Peter Duncan.
Garret G. Voorhees.
John Perrine.
A. D. Titsworth.
D. Fitz Randolph.
1846. George F. Webb.
Thomas L. McDowell.
Samuel E. Stelle.
1847. Elijah Brown.
1848. George G. Hull.
1851. Silas P. Leonard.
George McDowell.
William I. Bastedo.
Solomon Andrews.
Peter Duncan.
Jacob Martin.
Richard McDowell.
1852. David Bloomfield.
C. C. Morgan.
Charles Jackson.
William Schanck.
1853. William M. Drake.
John H. Hooker.
1854. Timothy Wood.
William H. Lamberson.
John F. Hunter.
E. S. Conover.
1855. Peter P. Runyon.
Martin Nevius.
William Brown.
Samuel Wilson.
Thomas Huffman.
Samuel C. Ensigo.
Joseph Floeping.
John Perrine.
Andrew I. Disbrow.
Isaac Van Nostrand.
John H. Hooker.
1856. Isaac D. Ward.
William I. Bastedo.
Thomas Appelgate.
John Dye.
Henry C. Drost.
John D. Swias.
James Higgins.
John D. Service.
Adrian Vermeule.
1857. Silas P. Leonard.
Jacob Martin.
1858. William W. Clarke.
John De Graw, Jr.
- 1858-59. Oliver Cox.
1859. W. A. Appleby.
Ebenezer S. Conover.
James Wood.
Winant W. Lamberson.
Alanson Newton.
William Schenck.
- 1859-61. Charles Sham.
Martin Nevius.
Peter P. Runyon.
Thomas Huffman.
Leonard L. F. Appleby.
Edward Paxton.
C. C. Morgan.
Silvanus Cummings.
Abraham N. Conover.
William W. Clarke.
Andrew I. Disbrow.
Thomas B. Liddell.
James H. Webb.
Isaac Van Nostrand.
1861. Isaac D. Ward.
F. Shults.
Hampton Cutter.
James Higgins.
Ambrose Dodds.
Jacob Wyckoff.
William H. Wakeley.
Richard McDowell.
1862. Robert R. Vandenbergh.
Andrew Agnew.
David Voorhees.
1863. William Swain.
Jolat Harrington.
Edward Brinley.
1864. John Disbrow.
Winant W. Lamberson.
William B. Stewart.
John D. See.
Alanson Newton.
Nathan Vars.
1865. William W. Clarke.
Peter P. Runyon.
Martin Nevius.
Haley Fisk.
Merrill Mundy.
William A. Wakeley.
Thomas Pearce.
Jacob Wyckoff.
Silvanus Cummings.
Augustus Blackford.
Gershom P. Dunn.
John Tomlinson.
Edward Paxton.
Alfred Stults.
1866. James Higgins.
Andrew J. Disbrow.
Richard McDonald.
Hampton Cutter.
Ambrose Dodds.
William H. Hadkins.
Richard McDowell.
John W. Sneath.
Charles Shann.
Jacob Martin.
1867. Newman A. Wood.
William Thomas.
Charles H. Perrine.
Robert R. Vandenburgh.
Charles Shann.
J. V. Henry.
William W. Clarke.
David T. Jeffries.
Andrew Agnew.
1868. James T. Devendorf.
1869. Winant W. Lamberson.
William B. Stewart.
Elihu Cook.
John Disbrow.
Abraham Everitt.
1870. Thomas Pearce.
Peter P. Runyon.
Martin Nevius.
Haly Fisk.
1870. William H. Bergan.
Charles A. Perrie.
Bernard Rodeby.
Isaac Soffeld.
Edward Paxton.
G. R. Dunn.
C. C. Morgan.
Jacob Wyckoff.
Newman A. Wood.
Thomas H. Morris.
Harry F. Worthington.
Charles W. Livermore.
1871. Hampton Cutter.
William Clarke.
James Higgins.
L. L. F. Appleby.
Enoch R. Hardy.
William A. Laoc.
Henry Gordon.
James H. Wheeler.
Josephs Shann.
C. F. Newton.
1872. John V. Henry.
Ambrose Dodds.
Stoddard W. Stont.
Robert R. Vandenbergh.
William Thomal.
1873. Silvanus Cummings.
Andrew Agnew.
Oliver A. Kibbe.
Isaac S. Harned.
Nelson Webster.
James L. Ferris.
1874. Lewis E. Hayward.
John Disbrow.
Richard McDowell.
Michael Hayes.
George W. Packard.
Gilbert W. Mount.
1875. Martin Nevius.
Robert P. Mason.
Charles P. Ford.
William Hatfield.
William H. Bergan.
Jacob Wyckoff.
C. C. Morgan.
Jeremiah Dally.
Andrew J. Farouette.
Ezra W. Arnold.
Stepheo Martin.
Isaac Soper.
Thomas H. Morris.
Philip Ruitthlen.
James Wood.
1876. William A. Lane.
William Thomal.
Charles F. Newton.
James Higgins.
Theodore A. Wood.
F. Stults.
Charles L. Stout.
Isaac Anderson.
Enoch R. Hurdy.
William F. Fisher.
L. W. Johnson.
1877. Samuel J. Giles.
Ambrose Dodd.
B. B. Leupp.
Robert R. Vandenburgh.
Joshua Liddell, Jr.
Nathan Vars.
1878. William E. Condon.
Andrew Agnew.
John F. Hunter.
James L. Terris.
1879. Thomas L. Cloke.
Winant W. Lamberson.

1879. Andrew J. Diabrow.
Cornelius Bergan.
Michael Hayea.
1880. Thomas H. Morris.
Jeremiah Dally.
W. H. Bergan.
John A. Walling.
Leonard T. Coles.
John A. Vigus.
Isaac D. Ward.
Ezra W. Arnold.
Charles P. Ford.
Jacob Wycoff.
Samuel G. Garretson.
Robert P. Mason.

1880. Samuel Luckey.
William H. Hoffman.
Archibald I. Coddington.
Thomas Pearce.
Thomas Flavell.
1881. Theodore A. Wood.
Charles F. Newton.
S. Cummings.
Frederick Stults.
Isaac Anderson.
William Palmer.
James Higgins.
Daniel S. Dunham.
Henry D. B. Lefarta.
Charles L. Stout.

CHAPTER LXXIII.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Situation in 1861.—When the civil war broke out in 1861 no one dreamed of the magnitude to which it would extend. The President of the United States, on the 15th of April, issued a proclamation calling for seventy-five thousand militia out of the existing organization of the States, to serve for three months unless sooner discharged. The quota of this call for New Jersey was three thousand one hundred and twenty men, or four regiments of seven hundred and eighty men each, to be detached from the four general military divisions of the State. The War Department also required that, in addition to the regiments called for, the reserve militia in the several States should be organized as rapidly as possible.

Governor Olden received the requisition of the War Department on the 17th of April, and immediately issued a proclamation directing all individuals or organizations willing to respond to the call to report themselves within twenty days. On the same day he notified the War Department that the call for troops would be attended to as rapidly as possible, and issued orders to the major-generals of the several military divisions of the State to detail each one regiment of ten companies, and also to organize immediately the reserve militia in the respective brigades. The major-generals, in detailing the regiments required, were directed to accept the services of volunteers; but if the requisite number did not offer, they were required to draft from the reserve militia to make up the deficiency. No such necessity, however, was anticipated, and the result fully justified the confidence of the authorities. The people everywhere responded with enthusiastic alacrity to the call for troops. The existing military organizations at once opened recruiting-stations; public meetings were held in every town and city; churches and ministers engaged with enthusiasm in the work; committees were appointed to encourage and superintend enlistments. While everywhere the popular heart beat responsive to the spirit in which the call of the nation's head had been made, in New Jersey the feeling was active and intense. Within a few days over one hundred companies of volunteers, equal to ten thousand men, had offered their services under the Governor's proclamation, and the military departments were so swarming with men and companies offering and pressing their services that many who could not be taken were obliged to wait till a second call was made by the government or go into regiments of other States to have their ambition to enter the public service gratified.

New Jersey's quota under the first call was filled in a few days. The first regimental offer was made by the First Regiment of the Hunterdon Brigade on the day following the Governor's proclamation; on the same day Capt. J. R. Cunningham tendered the services of the Camden Zouaves, and these were rapidly followed by similar offers from all parts of the State. The four regiments accepted were formed into a brigade known as the New Jersey Brigade, and placed under the command of Brig.-Gen. Theodore Runyon, of Newark. The First Regiment of this brigade was raised in Newark and vicinity, and the Second in Jersey City. It contained no organized company from Middlesex County.

In the Second Brigade of the New Jersey troops mustered under the call of the President issued July 24, 1861, there were nearly five full companies, viz.: Company H of the First Cavalry, and Companies C, E, F, and G of the First Regiment of Infantry (three years' men). Companies A and B of the First Cavalry also had some men in them from this county. Companies A and B of the Ninth Regiment, Companies C, D, E, I, and K of the Fourteenth Regiment were also from the county of Middlesex. These were associated with Union County troops in their regimental organizations, the histories of which will be found in that portion of this volume, and need not be repeated here. In other organizations the Middlesex County men were most largely represented in the Twenty-eighth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, serving for nine months.

Twenty-eighth Regiment.—The Twenty-eighth Regiment was organized under the provision of an act of Congress approved July 22, 1861, and was mustered into the United States service for nine months on Sept. 22, 1862. A draft had been ordered for this date to fill a requisition made upon the Governor for ten thousand four hundred and seventy-eight men, to serve for nine months unless sooner discharged. Such was the enthusiasm throughout the State to raise the required quota by voluntary enlistments, and thus prevent the draft, that by the time for the latter the quota for the State was entirely filled. To this creditable result Middlesex County contributed nearly a full regiment, the Twenty-eighth, the balance, Company E, being raised in Ocean County, Company G principally in Gloucester County, Company H in Camden County, and a few of Company A in Monmouth County. We have condensed the following brief sketch of the regiment:

Company A was recruited from the counties of Middlesex and Monmouth: Captain, B. F. Lloyd; First Lieutenant, J. R. Appleby; Second Lieutenant, Wesley Stoney. Capt. Lloyd was taken sick while the regiment lay near Washington, and died soon after in hospital. Lieut. Appleby then took command of the company, but did not hold the position, being discharged soon after the battle of Fredericksburg. Lieut. Stoney saw service with the three months' men, and was a brave and efficient officer; was promoted to the captaincy after the death of Capt. Lloyd and the discharge of Appleby. J. Dobson and H. D. B. Lefferts were appointed first and second lieutenants after the promotion of Stoney.

Company B was recruited in Middlesex County: Captain, H. S. Disbrow; First Lieutenant, J. H. Gulick; Second Lieutenant, Alexander Laird. Capt. Disbrow was a gallant officer, with rare aptitude for command, and always shared with his men the hardships to which they were exposed. He led his company with conspicuous bravery at Fredericksburg, and after the dismissal of Lieut.-Col. Roberts was for a time in command of the regiment. Lieut. Gulick had seen service with the Ellsworth Zouaves, and was among the bravest of the brave. Generous to a fault, and ever ready for duty, he was universally esteemed in the regiment.

Company C was raised in Middlesex: Captain, Joseph C. Letson; First Lieutenant, William W. Stelle; Second Lieutenant, S. K. Conover. Capt. Letson was an accomplished officer, and led his men gallantly at Fredericksburg in the position of acting major, being wounded in the early part of the day by a rifle-ball through the arm, but still holding his position until the close of the engagement. When his company broke camp to move on Chancellorsville he was at home on furlough, but at once hurried forward and joined his command before the battle, being again severely wounded. Lieut. Stelle, a genuine Christian soldier, fought heroically at Chancellorsville, and was at all times found prepared for duty, however arduous or perilous. Lieut. Conover, also a brave and faithful officer, was seriously wounded at Chancellorsville, and did not return to the regiment.

Company D was recruited in Middlesex County: Captain, William H. Dunham; First Lieutenant, Augustus Hatfield; Second Lieutenant, William J. Cook. Lieut. Hatfield displayed throughout true soldierly qualities, and was engaged in all the actions in which his company took part. He for a time filled the post of quartermaster with zeal and fidelity.

Company F was raised in Middlesex County: Captain, Isaac Inslee, Jr.; First Lieutenant, Benjamin A. Robbins; Second Lieutenant, J. W. Westerfield. Capt. Inslee was a man of ardent patriotism, and entered with his whole soul upon the soldier's life. He studied closely the welfare of his men, and was universally respected. Always at his post, proud of his command, and solicitous to promote its efficiency, no officer in the regiment has a better record, either as a disciplinarian or as a fighter. Lieut. Robbins, who was promoted to the adjutancy, was a capable officer, and discharged promptly every duty imposed upon him. Lieut. Westerfield being compelled on account of sickness to leave the service some two months after the regiment entered the field, Private S. Marsh was appointed second lieutenant from the ranks.

Company I was raised in Middlesex County: Captain, Joseph L. Crowell; First Lieutenant, James O. Willett; Second Lieutenant, James Fothergill. Captain Crowell led his company at Fredericksburg, and was slightly wounded. Sergt. John H. Tyrill of this company fought with great bravery at Fredericksburg, losing a foot; he was afterwards made lieutenant, but never returned to the field.

Company K was raised in Middlesex County: Captain, George Storer; First Lieutenant, James Brinshaw; Second Lieutenant, Thomas Conk. Sergt. J. T. Bolton of this company displayed great gallantry at Fredericksburg, was made a lieutenant, and did much to promote the efficiency of the company.

The Twenty-eighth was mustered into the service at Freehold on the 22d of September, 1862. Its field-officers were as follows: Colonel, Moses N. Wisewell; Lieutenant-Colonel, E. A. L. Roberts; Major, S. K. Wilson; Adjutant, William A. Gulick; Chaplain, C. J. Page; Surgeon, William D. Newell; Assistant Surgeon, Benjamin N. Baker.

Col. Wisewell, who took charge of the regiment at its organization, was a man of fine intellectual capacity, and soon acquired a marked hold on the confidence of his men, which he retained until November following, when, obtruding upon his command in a public address certain offensive avowals in reference to the war and the gubernatorial contest then in progress in New Jersey, he became obnoxious to a large portion of his regiment. His courage, however, was undoubted, and at the battle of Fredericksburg he held his regiment with great gallantry, falling severely wounded and being carried from the field, to which he was unable to return until June, 1863.

Lieut.-Col. Roberts came from New York, and commanded the regiment from the 14th of December, 1862, until the 2d of January ensuing, when he was discharged for tendering his resignation in the face of the enemy. Lieut.-Col. John A. Wildrick, who had been a captain in the Second Regiment, then assumed command and by his sound judgment and wise exercise of authority soon made the regiment one of the most effective in the brigade to which it belonged. He led the command with great bravery in the battle of Chancellorsville, where he was taken prisoner, but being exchanged, returned to the field shortly after, and was discharged with the regiment.

Maj. Wilson commanded the regiment for a short time in January, 1863, and also in the following May, and was discharged with it upon the expiration of its term of service.

Surgeon Newell during the whole term of service performed the duties of his position with admirable efficiency and skill, and was ably seconded in all his efforts to promote the comfort of the men by his assistant, Dr. Baker.

Adj. Gulick acquitted himself with great credit in the battle of Fredericksburg, and was throughout capable and faithful, exercising a controlling influence in the regiment. Resigning his position, he was succeeded, in March, 1863, by Adj. B. A. Robbins, who also proved a capable officer.

The chaplain of the regiment, who at the time of entering the service was pastor of a Baptist Church in Piscataway, was at all times prompt, earnest, and efficient, enjoying the fullest confidence of the men, and proving at once a guide and friend to all who needed counsel and assistance.

The regiment, nine hundred and forty strong, left Freehold on the 4th of October, 1862, and reaching Washington on the night of the 5th, encamped on Capitol Hill, being furnished a few days afterwards with Springfield muskets. On the 13th it marched into Virginia, and was attached to Gen. Abercrombie's command. On the 1st of December it again broke camp, and crossing into Maryland, marched to Liverpool Point, on the Lower Potomac, whence on the 5th it crossed to Aquia Creek, and in the midst of a driving snow-storm went into camp until the 8th, when it proceeded to Falmouth. Here it was attached to the First Brigade (Gen. Kimball's), Third Division (Gen. French's), Second Army Corps.

"During the whole time that the Twenty-eighth was connected with the Army of the Potomac it held a position on the immediate front, within a short distance of the Rappahannock, and was consequently at all times exposed to attack by 'raiding parties' of the enemy. Extraordinary vigilance and activity were thus constantly required, as every alarm, whether trifling or otherwise, summoned the men into line, there to remain for hours, and sometimes for a day and a night at a time, exposed to all the inclemency of midwinter, as well as to many privations which regiments in the rear never experienced."

CHAPTER LXXIV.

RECORD OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY MEN IN THE CIVIL WAR.

FIRST REGIMENT.

NON-COMMISSIONED STAFF.

Provost, William S., sergt. Co. G, May 18, 1861; sergt.-maj. Sept. 21, 1861; pro. to 2d Lieut. Co. K, 11th Regt., July 15, 1862; pro. to 1st Lieut. Co. B, May 4, 1863; disch. Oct. 9, 1863, dis.

COMPANY A.

Dunham, Samuel H., 1st sergt. May 16, 1861; disch. at Gen. Hosp., Fairfax Sem., Va., July 9, 1862, dis.
Crossan, Cornelius, recruit, Aug. 13, 1861; disch. at Camp Banks, Va., Jan. 22, 1863, dis.

COMPANY B.

Kelly, Edward, private, April 25, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. A, 1st Batt.; must. out July 20, 1865.
O'Brien, Michael, private, April 25, 1861; must. out July 23, 1864.
Wickoff, Peter, private, April 25, 1861; killed in action at Manassas, Va., Aug. 27, 1862.
Williamson, William H., private, April 25, 1861; taken prisoner at Wilderness, May 6, 1864; died of scurvy at Andersonville, Ga., Nov. 26, 1864; buried at Nat. Cem., Andersonville.
Whitlock, George W. H., private, June 15, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

COMPANY C.

Roberts, Edward F., sergt., May 22, 1861; 1st sergt. June 8, 1861; 1st Lieut. July 2, 1862; pro. capt. Co. H, Nov. 4, 1862; must. out June 23, 1864.
Phelan, Thomas C., sergt., May 22, 1861; 1st sergt. Aug. 4, 1862; 2d Lieut. Oct. 7, 1862; resigned Feb. 12, 1863.
Smith, J. Kearney, corp., May 22, 1861; sergt. June 7, 1861; pro. adjt. 27th Regt. Oct. 9, 1862; pro. capt. Co. K, Nov. 11, 1862; res. Dec. 22, 1862; lvt. maj. U. S. Vols. March 13, 1865.
Stumpf, Philip, corp., May 22, 1861; sergt. Sept. 26, 1861; 1st sergt. Jan. 10, 1863; must. out June 23, 1864.
Benton, William H., 1st sergt., May 22, 1861; disch. at Camp Sem., Va., Sept. 19, 1861, dis.
Faller, John, corp., May 22, 1861; killed in action at Gaines' Farm, Va., June 27, 1862.
Hallman, Henry, corp., May 22, 1861; sergt. Aug. 6, 1862; killed in action at Wilderness, Va., May 5, 1864.
Maguire, Patrick, corp., Jan. 16, 1862; sergt. July 7, 1862; disch. at U. S. Army Hosp., Phila., by order War Dept., Oct. 11, 1864.
Carrigan, Thomas, private, May 22, 1861; corp. July 2, 1862; paroled prisoner; disch. May 10, 1865.
Cody, Martin, private, May 22, 1861; deserted at camp near Belle Plain, Va., Dec. 10, 1862.
Conover, Thomas, private, May 22, 1861; corp. April 2, 1862; killed in action at Spottsylvania C. H., Va., May 12, 1864.
Cox, James, private, May 22, 1861; killed in action at Crampton's Pass, Md., Sept. 14, 1862.
Cheesman, George, private, May 22, 1861; deserted July 27, 1861, at Camp Princeton, Va.
Dilling, Henry, private, May 22, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Nov. 15, 1863; disch. therefrom April 27, 1864.
Distrow, William H. H., private, May 22, 1862; deserted July 27, 1861, at Camp Princeton, Va.
Foster, John, recruit, Oct. 13, 1861; deserted April 17, 1862; returned to duty; sentenced by G. C. M. to make good time lost; served in Co. A, 1st Batt.; must. out June 29, 1865.
Guinot, Jean F., private, May 22, 1861; deserted Jan. 20, 1863, at camp near White Oak Church, Va.
Hamilton, William, private, May 22, 1861; died at field hosp., May 6, 1864, of wounds received in action at Wilderness, Va.
Hamilton, Archy, private, May 22, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
Lott, Thomas, private, May 22, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
Mullin, Patrick, private, May 22, 1861; deserted Sept. 20, 1862, near Williamsport, Md.
Miller, Henry, private, May 22, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
Noe, Adam, private, May 22, 1861; deserted July 9, 1863, at Emmitsburg, Md.
O'Neil, John, private, May 22, 1861; died of typhoid fever, etc., at hospital near Mechanicsville, Va., June 15, 1862.
Perry, John J., corp., May 22, 1861; killed in action at Gaines' Farm, Va., June 27, 1862.
Reiley, Michael, private, May 22, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Sept. 1, 1863; returned to company Jan. 28, 1864; corp. Dec. 8, 1862; must. out June 23, 1864.
Roberts, Charles H., corp., May 22, 1861; died at Master St. Hosp., Philadelphia, Sept. 20, 1862, of wounds received in action at Gaines' Farm, Va.
Stafford, Joseph, private, May 22, 1861; died at U. S. Army Hosp., Baltimore, Md., May 23, 1864, of wounds received in action at Spottsylvania, Va.

Stafford, Thomas, private, May 22, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Sharbock, William, private, May 22, 1861; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Oct. 22, 1862, dis.
 Tspan, David B., private, May 22, 1861; killed in action at Salem Heights, Va., May 3, 1862.
 Welsh, Dennis, private, May 22, 1861; deserted at camp near Belle Plain, Va., Dec. 10, 1862.
 Winchester, Perley F., corp., May 22, 1861; missing in action at Salem Heights, Va., May 3, 1861; supposed dead.
 Wittenburg, Gustav, private, May 22, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

COMPANY E.

Ailt, Joseph, private, May 23, 1861; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Newark, N. J., Oct. 7, 1862, dis.
 Casney, James H., private, May 23, 1861; deserted April 18, 1863; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. A, 1st Batt.
 Rosser, Warren, recruit, Aug. 28, 1862; trans. to navy April 18, 1864.

COMPANY F.

Elkin, Isaac L. F., 1st sergt., May 25, 1861; 2d lieutenant, vice Voorhees, resigned, Sept. 21, 1861; pro. to 1st lieutenant, Co. H, Oct. 7, 1862; trans. to Co. D, March 14, 1863; pro. to adjt. Sept. 20, 1863; disch. as a paroled prisoner March 12, 1865.
 Blue, Albert L., sergt., May 25, 1861; 1st sergt. Sept. 21, 1861; 2d lieutenant, Oct. 7, 1862; pro. 1st lieutenant, Co. I, Dec. 25, 1862; must. out June 23, 1864.
 DeHart, James W., sergt., May 25, 1861; 1st sergt. Nov. 1, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Smith, George, sergt., May 25, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Taylor, George W., sergt., May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, June 26, 1862, dis.
 Croken, John H., 1st corp., May 18, 1861; 1st sergt. Dec. 8, 1862; deserted March 1, 1863, while on furlough.
 McElhaneey, Thomas, corp., May 25, 1861; sergt. Aug. 1, 1863; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out June 29, 1865.
 Garrigan, Miles, sergt., May 18, 1861; sergt. Nov. 1, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., May 3, 1863.
 Hughes, William S., private, May 25, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out June 29, 1865.
 Voorhees, Richard B., corp., May 25, 1861; private April 18, 1863; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Moffett, Benjamin L., corp., May 25, 1861; sergt. Sept. 1, 1862; 2d lieutenant, March 10, 1863; killed in action at Wilderness, Va., May 8, 1864.
 Souville, Lloyd A., corp., May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Washington, D. C., Dec. 13, 1862, dis.
 Page, Enoch, corp., May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Sept. 20, 1862, dis.
 Crokeo, James A., musician, June 17, 1861; disch. at Trenton, N. J., July 30, 1864.
 Blake, Price P., wagoner, May 18, 1861; killed in action at Spottsylvania, Va., May 9, 1864; buried at Nat. Cem., Fredericksburg, Va.
 Barry, Richard, private, June 10, 1861; corp. Nov. 1, 1862; died at Fredericksburg, May 6, 1864, of wounds received in action there.
 Britton, Edward M., private, May 18, 1861; corp. July 1, 1863; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Burns, James, private, May 18, 1861; died at U. S. A. Hosp., West Philadelphia, Aug. 7, 1862, of wounds received in action at Gaines' Farm, Va.
 Burke, Peter, private, May 18, 1861; disch. Nov. 4, 1862, to join regular army.
 Boyce, Ambrose, private, June 5, 1861; died July 1, 1862, of wounds received in action at Gaines' Farm, Va.
 Breeze, William H., private, May 18, 1861; deserted July 31, 1861, at Camp Princeton, Va.
 Cain, Felix V., private, June 10, 1861; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Baltimore, Md., Nov. 6, 1862, dis.
 Currie, Thomas, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Portsmouth Grove, R. I., March 5, 1863, dis.
 Cook, Samuel, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Portsmouth Grove, R. I., Jan. 9, 1863, dis.
 Christian, Henry P., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Annapolis, Md., Feb. 16, 1863, dis.
 Carroll, Thomas, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at White Oak Church, Va., Jan. 3, 1863, dis.
 Cherry, John B., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Camp Olden, Trenton, N. J., June 29, 1861, dis.

Churchward, Abraham, private, May 18, 1861; deserted June 10, 1861, at Camp Olden, Trenton.
 Dunn, George A., private, May 18, 1861; taken prisoner at Wilderness, Va., May 6, 1864; died at Andersonville, Ga., Oct. 8, 1864; buried there in Nat. Cem.
 Dunn, Patrick, private, June 5, 1861; trans. to Co. F, 4th Regt., June 4, 1864; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; died at Winchester, Va., Sept. 20, 1864, of wounds received in action there; buried there.
 Dobson, Alexander, private, May 18, 1861; killed in action at Wilderness, Va., May 6, 1864.
 Dobson, Henry, private, May 18, 1861; deserted July 18, 1863, on march to Gettysburg, Pa.
 Dinton, James, recruit, Sept. 25, 1861; corp. Nov. 1, 1862; 1st sergt. April 3, 1863; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; corp. 2d lieutenant, Co. F, 33d Regt., Dec. 1, 1864; not mustered; pro. 1st lieutenant, Co. A, 1st Batt., Feb. 2, 1865; served in Co. C, 1st Batt.
 Engster, John J., private, June 5, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Jan. 16, 1863, dis.
 Finnegan, Edward, private, June 10, 1861; corp. March 1, 1863; sergt. July 1, 1863; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Ferguson, Philip, private, May 18, 1861; deserted July 18, 1863, on march to Gettysburg, Pa.
 Ferguson, Daniel, private, May 18, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. C, 1st Batt.; must. out June 29, 1865.
 Ferry, James, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Camp Banks, Va., Jan. 12, 1863, dis.
 Faak, Charles, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Fleming, Christopher, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Camp Seminary, Va., Feb. 3, 1862, dis.
 Gaisbauer, Charles, private, May 18, 1861; deserted Oct. 25, 1862, at West Philadelphia, Pa.
 Gack, Jacob, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Portsmouth Grove, R. I., Dec. 27, 1862, dis.
 Guernsey, Silas, private, May 18, 1861; re-enl. Feb. 11, 1864; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out June 29, 1865.
 Haggerty, Bernard, private, May 18, 1861; corp. Sept. 1, 1862; sergt. Nov. 1, 1862; private, Feb. 25, 1864; sergt. March 1, 1864; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Hooker, George W., private, May 18, 1861; sergt. March 1, 1863; died at U. S. A. Hosp., Fredericksburg, Va., May 14, 1864, of wounds received in action at Wilderness, Va.
 Heery, Walter M., private, May 18, 1861; corp. Nov. 1, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Nov. 15, 1863; disch. therefrom May 31, 1864.
 Hazard, John N., private, May 18, 1861; corp. Sept. 1, 1862; deserted July 16, 1863; returned to duty Feb. 10, 1864; must. out Dec. 10, 1864.
 Hickey, Thomas, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Hoagland, Wyckoff V., private, May 18, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. C, 1st Batt.; must. out June 29, 1865.
 Hutchinson, John H., private, May 18, 1861; corp. May 25, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Jackson, Charles C., recruit, Sept. 24, 1863; trans. to Co. K; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out June 29, 1865.
 Kemp, Thomas, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Kinney, Daniel, private, May 18, 1861; corp. March 1, 1863; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Klein, John H., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Camp Seminary, Va., Feb. 7, 1862, dis.
 Lester, John H., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., West Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 24, 1863, on account of wounds received in action; leg amputated.
 Lowry, James, private, May 18, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. A, 1st Batt.; must. out June 23, 1864.
 McGrath, Morris, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Newark, Jan. 20, 1863, dis.
 McDonald, Martin, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 McGovern, Peter, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Alexandria, Va., Jan. 15, 1863, dis.
 Meyers, Julius, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Miller, John, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Martin, John, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.
 Morris, John, private, May 18, 1861; killed in action at Gaines' Farm, Va., June 27, 1862.
 McSpaden, James, private, Aug. 13, 1861; disch. at Camp Seminary, Va., March 4, 1862, dis.
 O'Connor, John, private, June 5, 1861; trans. to Mississippi Gun-boat Flotilla Feb. 22, 1862.

O'Neil, John, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Osman, George H., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Camp Seminary, Va., Oct. 18, 1861, dis.

Plum, Benajah M., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Fortress Monroe, Va., Sept. 18, 1862, dis.

Pixton, Henry A., private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Page, John D., private, May 18, 1861; disch. U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Fairfax Seminary, Va., Sept. 13, 1862, dis.

Prall, David B. S., private, June 18, 1861; died at Richmond, Va., July 5, 1862, of wounds received in action at Gaines' Farm; prisoner of war.

Perdan, Charles A., private, May 18, 1861; deserted May 26, 1861, at Camp Olden, Trenton, N. J.

Ryno, Joseph, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., Oct. 11, 1862, dis.; sergt. May 25, 1861.

Reed, Stephen M., private, May 18, 1861; re-enl. Feb. 11, 1864; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out July 6, 1865.

Reames, Patrick H., private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Rhodes, Edward, recruit, May 19, 1864; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out June 23, 1865.

Riker, Joseph L., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Pa., June 2, 1862, dis.

Royer, Moses H., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Camp Seminary, Va., Nov. 4, 1861, dis.

Swan, George W., private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 11, 1862, dis.

Stout, William A., private, May 18, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 26, 1863; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out June 23, 1865.

Smith, Edward W., private, May 18, 1861; corp. Oct. 20, 1863; must. out June 23, 1864.

Soden, James D., private, May 18, 1861; dishonorably disch. Aug. 9, 1863, at Warrenton, Va.; deserted at Camp Princeton, July 28, 1861; returned to duty July 18, 1863.

Smith, James, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at Camp Olden, June 18, 1861, dis.

Ten Broeck, Van Rensselaer, private, Aug. 13, 1861; corp. Nov. 1, 1862; deserted June 28, 1863; returned to duty; disch. by order War Dept., May 17, 1865.

Van Tillburgh, William, private, May 18, 1861; deserted April 28, 1863, at White Oak Church, Va.

Voorhees, George W., private, May 18, 1861; disch. Dec. 11, 1862, to join regular army.

Welsh, Michael, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Welsh, Patrick, private, May 18, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Newark, May 14, 1863, dis.

Welsh, Thomas, private, May 18, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Wilson, George, private, June 5, 1861; died at U. S. A. Hosp., Washington, D. C., of wounds received in action at Cold Harbor, Va.; buried at Alexandria.

COMPANY G.

Gilman, Howard M., 1st sergt., May 28, 1861; sergt.-maj. July 20, 1862; 2d lieutenant vice Wyckoff, pro. Aug. 16, 1862; 1st lieutenant Co. E, Nov. 27, 1862, vice Taylor res.; must. out June 23, 1864.

Way, Alexander M., capt., May 28, 1861; pro. maj. July 21, 1863; brev. lieutenant-col. and col. March 13, 1865.

Meerole, Nicholas W., sergt., May 23, 1861; disch. at Trenton Oct. 6, 1862, to accept a com. as 1st lieutenant Co. G, 133d Regt. N. J. State Vols.

Van Liew, Augustus D., corp., May 28, 1861; sergt. Sept. 1, 1862; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; disch. at hosp., Newark, by order War Dept., Aug. 9, 1865.

Halestead, Isaac S., private, May 23, 1861; deserted April 28, 1863, at White Oak Church, Va.; corp. May 28, 1861; private April 11, 1862.

Dansbury, William F., corp., May 23, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., New York City, Dec. 1, 1862, dis.

Buzzee, Alexander, private, May 23, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Buzzee, George H., musician, May 23, 1861; taken prisoner at the Wilderness, Va., May 5, 1864; died at Florence, S. C., Dec. 16, 1864.

Abrahams, Austin, recruit, Aug. 15, 1861; served in 4th Regt.; must. out Aug. 26, 1864.

Buckley, John, private, May 23, 1861; taken prisoner at Wilderness, Va., May 6, 1864; died at Andersonville, Ga., June 27, 1864.

Bogart, Charles C., private, May 23, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps March 25, 1865; disch. therefrom Oct. 25, 1865.

Clayton, William H., private, May 23, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 16, 1862; re-enl. Feb. 26, 1864; disch. March 28, 1864, dis.

Davis, William L., recruit, Aug. 15, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 5, 1863, dis.

Delahanty, John, recruit, Aug. 15, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1863; served in Co. B, 1st Batt.; must. out June 23, 1865.

De Hart, Jacob S., private, May 23, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Lawrence, John, recruit, Aug. 15, 1861; corp. Jan. 1, 1863; disch. at Strasburg, Va., Aug. 14, 1864; served in Co. D, 4th Regt.

Lewis, John T., recruit, Aug. 15, 1861; trans. to Co. G, 4th Regt.; must. out Aug. 20, 1864.

Lewis, William H., private, May 23, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Long, Edward B., private, May 23, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 29, 1862, dis.

Minturn, Edward, Jr., private, May 23, 1861; disch. at New Brunswick, N. J., Oct. 29, 1862, to accept a promotion.

Minturn, Benjamin G., private, May 23, 1861; disch. at Belle Plain, Va., Dec. 18, 1862, to accept com. as 1st lieutenant Co. C, 92d Regt. N. J. State Vols.

Meerole, William, private, May 23, 1861; killed in action at Gaines' Farm, Va., June 27, 1862.

Phillips, Theodore F., sergt., May 23, 1861; killed in action at Wilderness, Va., May 6, 1864; buried at Fredericksburg, Va.

De Hart, James H., private, May 23, 1861; corp. Oct. 25, 1862; disch. to join the Signal Corps U. S. A.

Price, George W., Jr., private, May 23, 1861; corp. April 23, 1863; must. out June 23, 1864.

Peacock, John, private, May 23, 1861; disch. at Trenton, Nov. 2, 1864; paroled prisoner.

Rausch, Peter, private, May 23, 1861; died of typhoid fever at Regt. Hosp., at Harrison's Landing, Va., July 31, 1862.

Seibert, George, private, May 23, 1861; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 15, 1863, disability.

Skillman, David, recruit, Aug. 15, 1861; must. out Aug. 19, 1864.

Smith, Osceola, private, May 23, 1861; disch. at Fairfax Seminary, Va., Sept. 6, 1861, disability.

Vanderbilt, Cornelius, private, May 23, 1861; must. out June 23, 1864.

Van Dyne, Isaac, private, May 23, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, July 1, 1863.

Van Fleet, Abraham, private, May 23, 1861; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., March 16, 1863, disability.

Van Liew, John H., 5th, May 28, 1861; corp. Dec. 8, 1862; must. out June 23, 1864.

NINTH REGIMENT.

Gulick, William A., sergt.-maj., Sept. 23, 1861; disch. at Newberne, N. C., for disability April 25, 1862.

COMPANY A.

Grover, Charles, 1st sergt., Sept. 17, 1861; 2d lieutenant vice Muller, must. out; res. Oct. 30, 1864.

Stillwell, Symmes H., sergt., Sept. 17, 1861; must. out Dec. 8, 1864.

Applegate, Arunah D., sergt., Sept. 17, 1861; 1st sergt. Jan. 18, 1864; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; 2d lieutenant vice Grover, res.; res. May 13, 1865.

Mouot, John G., corp. Sept. 17, 1861; must. out Sept. 23, 1864.

Clayton, David C., private, Sept. 17, 1861; corp. April 24, 1862; sergt. Sept. 6, 1864; must. out Dec. 8, 1864.

Meeroll, Charles, corp., Sept. 17, 1861; must. out Dec. 7, 1864.

Wood, Reuben V. P., corp., Sept. 17, 1862; sergt. Sept. 18, 1863; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; 1st sergt. Jan. 1, 1865; com. 2d lieutenant May 22, 1865; not must.; must. out July 12, 1865.

Applegate, John, private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Nov. 25, 1863; disch. at New York City by telegraphic instruction War Dept., May 4, 1865.

Arlow, Robert, private, Sept. 17, 1862; must. out Oct. 15, 1864.

Hoagland, Cornelius H., private, Sept. 17, 1861; corp. July 1, 1863; re-enl. Nov. 25, 1863; sergt. Nov. 1, 1864; must. out July 12, 1864.

Clayton, William, private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Nov. 25, 1863; missing in action at Drury's Bluff, Va., May 16, 1864; died at Florence, S. C., Nov. 18, 1864.

Cook, James, private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Carman, Luke K., private, Sept. 5, 1864; must. out June 14, 1865.

Dugan, Thomas, private, Sept. 17, 1861; died of typhoid fever at Newberne, N. C., April 30, 1865.

Fisher, Henry C., recruit, Feb. 29, 1864; corp. Dec. 8, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Garry, John, private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; disch. by order War Dept., May 4, 1865.

¹ History of First Regiment (three years' men) included in Second Brigade. See Union County in this work.

Harris, William, private, Sept. 17, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Sept. 1, 1863; disch. therefrom Nov. 10, 1865.

Ives, Milton J., private, Sept. 17, 1861; must. out Dec. 7, 1864.

Kelley, John E., recruit, Feb. 22, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Mesrobian, B. Isaac, private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

McGinty, Michael, private, Sept. 17, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Sept. 1, 1863; disch. therefrom March 18, 1864.

Bohnam, Lucius C., corp., Sept. 17, 1861; sergt. June 15, 1863; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; 2d Lieut. Co. H Sept. 10, 1864; 1st Lieut. March 16, 1865; capt. vice Applegate, promoted; must. out July 12, 1865.

Rolfe, George N., private, Sept. 17, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps; disch. therefrom Sept. 21, 1864.

Roxberry, Joseph, private, Sept. 17, 1861; must. out Dec. 7, 1864.

Stults, Simeon, private, Sept. 17, 1861; must. out Sept. 22, 1864.

Scully, John, private, Sept. 17, 1861; died at field hosp., July 9, 1864, of wounds received in action at Petersburg, Va.

Snediker, Howard, private, Sept. 17, 1861; must. out Dec. 7, 1864.

Stout, William K., private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; disch. at hospital, Newark, May 3, 1865.

Stults, Satter S., private, June 5, 1862; died at Charleston, prisoner of war, October, 1864.

Silvers, William H., recruit, Feb. 29, 1864; died at field hospital near Petersburg, Va., Aug. 1, 1864.

Vaubise, Andrew M., private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Vanderveer, David G., private, March 1, 1864; trans. to S. R. S. March 24, 1864.

Witcraft, Albert, private, Sept. 17, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

COMPANY B.

Blackeny, Moses C., corp., Sept. 18, 1861; sergt. May 28, 1863; re-enl. January, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Bennett, John, corp., Sept. 18, 1861; sergt. June 11, 1862; re-enl. Nov. 26, 1863; 2d Lieut. March 16, 1865; 1st Lieut. vice Sheppard, pro. April 10, 1865; must. out July 12, 1865.

De Hart, Theodore, corp., Sept. 18, 1861; sergt. Oct. 16, 1863; must. out Dec. 7, 1864.

Hoyes, Eugene M., sergt., Sept. 18, 1861; drowned at foot of Barclay Street, New York City, Oct. 24, 1861, while on furlough.

Vanderhoef, Robert B., private, Sept. 18, 1861; must. out Dec. 8, 1864.

Lawrence, John, private, Oct. 6, 1861; disch. at Beaufort, N. C., Oct. 18, 1862, dis.

Currie, Edward, corp., Sept. 28, 1861; deserted Sept. 5, 1863, at New Brunswick, N. J., while on a furlough.

Acker, Francis, recruit, Feb. 26, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Butterworth, Jonathan, private, Sept. 18, 1861; disch. at Newberne, N. C., May 30, 1863, dis.

Buckley, Thomas, private, Sept. 26, 1861; disch. at Morehead City, N. C., Nov. 17, 1862, dis.

Boudinet, William B., private, Sept. 26, 1861; disch. at Camp Olden, Trenton, Nov. 2, 1861, dis.

Bloodgood, Phineas F., private, Sept. 26, 1861; disch. at Morehead City, N. C., Oct. 23, 1862; wounded accidentally.

Boorman, Edgar J., private, Oct. 12, 1861; disch. at Camp Olden, Trenton, N. J., Nov. 2, 1861; dis.

Breeze, Henry, private, Oct. 4, 1861; disch. at Morehead City, N. C., Nov. 17, 1863, dis.

Corolan, Patrick, recruit, Oct. 6, 1864.

Cosler, John W., private, Sept. 26, 1861; disch. at Newberne, N. C., May 30, 1863, dis.

Clerkin, John, private, Sept. 18, 1861; must. out Dec. 7, 1864.

Church, George W., private, Oct. 8, 1861; re-enl. Nov. 26, 1863; disch. at New York May 4, 1865, by order War Dept.

Coburn, Charles A., private, Sept. 18, 1861; deserted April, 1863; returned to duty July 27, 1864; must. out Dec. 8, 1864.

Cahill, Francis, private, Sept. 18, 1861.

Crawford, James, private, Sept. 18, 1861.

Pierson, John L., corp., Sept. 18, 1861; disch. at Helena Island, S. C., March 28, 1863, dis.

Collins, William, private, Sept. 26, 1861; deserted Oct. 1, 1861, at Camp Olden, Trenton, N. J.

Dye, Walter J., private, Sept. 18, 1861; deserted Oct. 2, 1861, at Camp Olden, Trenton, N. J.

Dye, Isaac S., private, Sept. 18, 1861; trans. to Co. C, 4th Regt., Aug. 21, 1861.

Dauberry, Henry M., private, Sept. 26, 1861; disch. at Newberne, N. C., May 30, 1863, dis.

Danberry, William, private, Sept. 18, 1861; disch. at Annapolis, Md., Jan. 22, 1863; paroled prisoner.

Dock, Isaac, wagoner, Oct. 2, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Deady, John, private, Sept. 18, 1861; disch. at Trenton, N. J.; paroled prisoner.

Disbrow, Ferdinand, private, Oct. 16, 1861; died at Hosp. Roanoke, N. C., of wounds received in action at Roanoke Island, N. C.

Dye, Walter, private, Sept. 2, 1861; disch. at Newport News, Va., Nov. 20, 1863, dis.

Fowler, Joseph W., private, Sept. 26, 1861; disch. at Newberne, N. C., Nov. 17, 1862, dis.

Gould, Richard N., private, Sept. 18, 1861.

Gray, David V. D., Sept. 18, 1861; disch. at Norfolk, on detached service Sept. 22, 1864.

Hall, Reuben, private, Feb. 27, 1862; re-enl.

Harrison, George W., private, Aug. 15, 1862.

Hughes, Theodore V., private, Sept. 18, 1861.

Houghton, Michael, Sept. 18, 1861; trans. to Co. C, 4th Regt.

Hagerty, Daniel, private, Sept. 18, 1861; must. out Dec. 8, 1864.

Hopkins, Simon F., private, Sept. 29, 1864.

Johnson, William, private, Dec. 3, 1861; re-enl. June 18, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Labone, Wallace W., private, Sept. 20, 1861; disch. at Morehead City, N. C., Nov. 17, 1862, of wounds received in action at Roanoke Island.

Lally, Patrick, private, Sept. 27, 1861; disch. at Newberne, N. C., March 1, 1863, dis.

Lawless, Peter, private, Sept. 24, 1861.

Moore, William H., Sept. 20, 1861.

Moore, Thomas B., private, Aug. 29, 1861; missing in action at Drury's Bluff, Va., May 16, 1864.

Murphy, James, private, Sept. 5, 1862.

Morris, William, private, Oct. 8, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 20, 1863; must. out July 12, 1865.

Meyers, John, private, Sept. 18, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps; disch. Sept. 21, 1864.

Munslow, Isaac P. H., private, Oct. 1, 1861; deserted at Camp Olden, Trenton, Nov. 2, 1861.

McClay, James, private, Sept. 18, 1861; disch. at Trenton, N. J., Dec. 31, 1864.

McAndrew, Allen, recruit, Jan. 12, 1864.

Montaloe, Frank, recruit, Feb. 11, 1864.

Nevis, Benjamin F., recruit, Jan. 5, 1862.

Prall, James, musician, Oct. 2, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Pierman, Garret V., recruit, Feb. 27, 1864.

Reynolds, James, private, Sept. 26, 1861; disch. at Morehead City, N. C., May 7, 1863, dis.

Silcox, Bergen, private, Sept. 24, 1861.

Shardlow, William, private, Sept. 18, 1861.

Skullman, Joskin, private, Sept. 18, 1861; deserted Jan. 8, 1862; returned to duty Aug. 1, 1864; must. out July 12, 1865.

Sherry, Peter, private, Sept. 18, 1861; disch. at Trenton, N. J., May 10, 1865.

Sheehan, John, private, Sept. 18, 1861.

Smith, George, recruit, Sept. 2, 1862.

Tutenberg, Henry M., private, Sept. 18, 1861.

Van Deventer, John, private, Sept. 18, 1861; trans. to Co. C, 4th Regt.

Voorhees, John C., private, Oct. 8, 1861; disch. at Newberne, N. C., June 23, 1862, dis.

Voorhees, John H., private, Oct. 5, 1864.

(History of Ninth Regiment in Union County, this work.)

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT.

COMPANY C.

Bonnell, William, recruit, Sept. 13, 1864; must. out June 18, 1865.

Culver, William, recruit, Feb. 9, 1864; trans. to Co. H (see Co. H).

Cheesman, Augustus, recruit, Sept. 9, 1864; trans. to Co. K (see Co. K).

Christian, Henry P., recruit, Sept. 5, 1864; disch. at draft rendezvous, Trenton, N. J., Oct. 2, 1864; rejected by medical board.

Dunham, Samuel H., recruit, Sept. 12, 1864; must. out June 15, 1865.

Timmins, William H., recruit, Sept. 12, 1864; trans. to Co. K (see Co. K).

Young, Peter R., recruit, Aug. 11, 1864; trans. to Co. I (see Co. I).

COMPANY D.

- Conover, James W., capt., Aug. 15, 1862; died at Frederick City, Md., Aug. 4, 1864, of wounds received at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
- Bookstover, Henry D., 1st lieut. Co. K, Aug. 25, 1862; capt., vice Conover, died; disch. May 22, 1865, disability.
- Cosine, Henry J., 1st lieut., Aug. 15, 1862; pro. capt. Co. A, Nov. 21, 1863; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
- Craig, William H., 2d lieut., Aug. 15, 1862; 1st lieut., vice Cosine, promoted Nov. 21, 1863; capt. Aug. 9, 1864; not mustered; disch. Nov. 8, 1864, on account of wounds received at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
- Fletcher, James, 1st sergt., Co. I, Aug. 11, 1862; 1st lieut., vice Craig, disch. Nov. 9, 1864; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Ridda, James B., 1st sergt., Aug. 13, 1862; 2d lieut., vice Craig, pro.; com. 1st lieut. Aug. 9, 1864; not must.; disch. Oct. 17, 1864, dis.
- Laue, Gilbert, sergt., July 28, 1862; 1st sergt. Aug. 31, 1864; com. 2d lieut. Co. E, June 26, 1865; not must.; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Reed, John T., sergt., July 28, 1862; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 3, 1865.
- Winder, Jacob S., corp., July 28, 1862; sergt. July 10, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Borden, Richard, corp., Aug. 18, 1862; sergt. Dec. 7, 1863; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 15, 1865.
- Conk, Jackson, corp., July 28, 1862; sergt. Aug. 31, 1864; amst. out June 18, 1865.
- Emmons, John B., private, Aug. 13, 1862; corp. July 10, 1863; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Newark, May 3, 1865.
- Brown, Joseph, private, July 20, 1862; corp. March 1, 1864; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Duncan, Robert T., corp., Aug. 11, 1862; disch. at Trenton, N. J., by order War Dept. May 3, 1865.
- Joleas, Charles S., corp., Aug. 7, 1862; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Newark, N. J., May 3, 1865.
- Lacore, William, corp., July 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Hampton, Grandon, corp., July 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Stillwagon, William, private, July 28, 1862; corp. Aug. 31, 1864; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Newark, N. J., May 3, 1865.
- Matthews, John H., private, Aug. 26, 1862; corp. Aug. 31, 1864; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Harvey, Cornelius, musician, July 26, 1862; pro. to principal musician May 1, 1863.
- Anderson, William A., private, July 29, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Applegate, Asher, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Allen, John, private, Feb. 10, 1865; trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt.; must. out July 11, 1865.
- Addison, William, private, July 28, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea at Brandy Station, Va., Jan. 9, 1864.
- Armstrong, Jacob J., private, July 30, 1862; died near Petersburg, Va., Dec. 30, 1864, of wounds received in action near that city.
- Anderson, Henry, recruit, March 10, 1864; deserted March 20, 1864, at draft rendezvous, Trenton, N. J.
- Beunett, Joseph L., private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Bond, William R., private, July 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Brewer, Isaac, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Brown, William L., private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Brower, Charles A., private, July 28, 1862; disch. June 1, 1865, wounds received in action at Cold Harbor; leg amputated.
- Bowden, Charles J., recruit, Feb. 13, 1865; trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt.; must. out July 11, 1865.
- Brown, Nelson P., private, Aug. 20, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Jan. 1, 1865; disch. therefrom June 29, 1865.
- Brown, Matthias, recruit, March 3, 1864; trans. to Co. E, trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt.; must. out July 11, 1865.
- Barker, Robert, private, July 26, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea at Philadelphia, Pa., April 19, 1865.
- Bills, William H., private, Aug. 13, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
- Brown, Peter, recruit, Feb. 25, 1864; died at Richmond, Va., July 9, 1864, of wounds received in action; prisoner of war.
- Clayton, Edward, private, July 29, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Clayton, William, private, Aug. 7, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Clayton, William H., private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Clayton, John V., private, July 29, 1862; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Newark, Jan. 28, 1864, dis.
- Clayton, Thomas, private, Aug. 12, 1862; disch. at Newark, Aug. 19, 1865, dis.
- Caffery, Charles S., private, Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at Newark, Jan. 28, 1864, dis.
- Coudit, Charles, recruit, Sept. 20, 1864; trans. to Co. C disch. at Newark by order War Dept., May 3, 1865.
- Cook, Abram N., private, Aug. 12, 1862; disch. at Newark by order War Dept., May 3, 1865.
- Cook, Andrew J., private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Cook, Samuel, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Curtis, Charles H., corp., Aug. 13, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Dec. 19, 1864; disch. therefrom June 20, 1865; corp. Oct. 1, 1863.
- Cottrell, Daniel G., recruit, April 4, 1865; trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt., June 18, 1865; trans. to Co. K.
- Church, William, 1st sergt., July 28, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
- Camp, George H., private, July 28, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea at Brandy Station, Va., Feb. 9, 1864.
- Dow, Clinton, private, July 30, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Duncan, Joseph P., private, Aug. 11, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Dimond, William, Aug. 13, 1862; deserted Feb. 7, 1863, at Monocacy, Md.
- Enmons, Charles W., private, July 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Estell, Andrew J., private, Aug. 13, 1862; died of typhoid fever at Frederick City, Md., Dec. 30, 1862.
- Estell, James, private, Aug. 13, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864; buried there in Nat. Cem.
- Ford, David, private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Gaskin, Benjamin W., private, July 24, 1862; disch. at Newark Dec. 13, 1864, dis.
- Girard, Frederick, private, July 24, 1862; disch. Nov. 4, 1862, to join regular army.
- Gravatt, John, private, Aug. 12, 1862; disch. at Newark Sept. 30, 1863, dia.
- Gorman, William, private, Aug. 12, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
- Hagerman, Nicholas, corp., July 28, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Jan. 15, 1864; disch. therefrom June 26, 1865.
- Hall, Joseph, recruit, Feb. 1, 1865; trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt.
- Holmes, Edward, private, Aug. 11, 1862; disch. at U. S. Army Hosp., Baltimore, Md., Sept. 26, 1863, dis.
- Hawkins, James, recruit, Feb. 10, 1864; died at Field Hospital, Winchester, Va., of wounds received in action at Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864.
- Havens, Edward, private, Aug. 12, 1862; died of typhoid fever at Frederick City, Md., Dec. 20, 1862; buried at Antietam, Md.
- Imlay (or Emley), Thomas, private, Aug. 12, 1862; trans. as a deserter to Co. L, 1st Cav. Regt., Aug. 29, 1863.
- Imlay, John, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Janison, Isaac, private, Aug. 13, 1862.
- Jones, James, recruit, Feb. 11, 1865; trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt.
- Lawyer, Joseph J., private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Lewis, Joseph O., private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Lewis, William H., private, Aug. 5, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea at Freehold, N. J., Dec. 7, 1863.
- Longstreet, Abraham, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Matthews, Charles T., private, July 30, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Matthews, James H., private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- McDermott, Charles V., private, Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 15, 1865.
- Matthews, Charles J., private, July 28, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps March 15, 1864; disch. therefrom June 18, 1865.
- Minton, James F., private, Aug. 8, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Minton, William H., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Moore, William S., private, Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 3, 1865.
- Morton, David W., private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Morton, Nicholas P., private, Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at hosp., West Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 11, 1864, dis.
- Martin, Levi, private, Aug. 12, 1862; died of pneumonia at South Amboy, Dec. 11, 1863.
- Patterson, Caleb, private, July 24, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Parker, Jonathan, recruit, Feb. 13, 1865; trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt.
- Pettit, Richard B., private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Pullen, Charles, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Pullen, William H. H., private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Reed, Joseph, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Reynolds, John T., private, Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at U. S. Army Gen. Hosp., Newark, May 4, 1865.
- Reynolds, William P., private, Aug. 13, 1862; corp. July 10, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
- Riddle, Hyers, private, Aug. 13, 1862; trans. to U. S. navy April 10, 1864.

Ruoyon, Robert H., private, Aug. 11, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea at Washington, D. C., Sept. 24, 1863.
 Sherman, Gordon, private, July 24, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Sherman, Benajah, recruit, Aug. 24, 1863; trans. to Co. D, 2d Regt.
 Sherman, James W., private, Aug. 13, 1862; trans. to U. S. navy.
 Shore's, William A. N., private, Aug. 12, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864; buried at Anacostan.
 Soden, Daniel P., private, Aug. 11, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Stimax, James, private, July 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Strickland, Alexander, private, July 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Strickland, Joseph, sergt., July 28, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea Dec. 3, 1863.
 Sutton, Charles, private, July 24, 1862; trans. to Co. E Oct. 11, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Sullivan, Daniel, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Trux, John, private, Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 3, 1865.
 Van Dusen, Jeremiah, private, Aug. 12, 1862; died at Philadelphia, Pa., of wounds accidentally received at Winchester, Va., Oct. 31, 1864.
 Wagoner, Reuben H., private, Aug. 2, 1862; disch. at U. S. Army Hosp., Newark, May 3, 1865.
 Vau Kirk, Henry, corp., July 24, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea at Washington, D. C., Sept. 25, 1863.
 Yard, Alexander, private, Aug. 12, 1862; trans. as a deserter to Co. L, 1st Cav., Aug. 29, 1863.
 Yetman, Tunis, private, July 23, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps April 17, 1864; disch. therefrom Sept. 9, 1864.

COMPANY E.

Bayard, Cornelius, private, Aug. 12, 1862; died of pneumonia at Monocacy, Md., April 12, 1863.
 Bodwell, James L., capt., Aug. 25, 1862; disch. Dec. 30, 1864, by order of War Dept.
 Bloth, William, corp., Aug. 12, 1862; sergt. April 1, 1865; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Dunham, John B., private, Aug. 9, 1862; died of chronic diarrhoea at Newark, N. J., Jan. 18, 1864.
 Doll, Joseph, private, Aug. 13, 1862; corp. Feb. 2, 1863; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 3, 1865.
 Noe, Elmer, private, Aug. 4, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Potter, David J., private, Aug. 1, 1862; deserted April 28, 1863, at Monrovia, Md.
 Struby, Lewis B., corp., Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at Trenton, N. J., May 3, 1865.
 Turner, William F., private, July 25, 1862; trans. to navy April 19, 1864; disch. June 14, 1865.
 Yetenau, Hubbard R., musician, Aug. 20, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

COMPANY H.

Wanser, Jarvis, 1st sergt., Aug. 11, 1862; pro. to 2d lieut. Co. F, May 7, 1864; 1st lieut. vice Bailey, pro. Aug. 9, 1864; pro. capt. Co. B, Dec. 1, 1864; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Everingham, Alexander L., sergt., Aug. 5, 1862; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 3, 1865.
 Hutchinson, John, sergt., Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Provost, William D., sergt., Aug. 15, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Ingraham, William I., sergt., Aug. 5, 1862; 1st sergt. May 18, 1864; com. 2d lieut. June 26, 1865; not must.; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Feirgrieve, George B., corp., July 28, 1862; disch. at hosp., Newark, N. J., May 3, 1865, by order War Dept.
 Provost, David, sergt., Aug. 12, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
 Van Dorn, John II., corp., Aug. 14, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Carman, Alfred, corp., Aug. 13, 1862; killed in action at Locust Grove, Va., Nov. 27, 1863.
 Lott, Henry, private, Aug. 11, 1862; deserted Sept. 18, 1862; returned to duty Feb. 5, 1863; disch. at Trenton, May 3, 1865.
 Higgins, James P., corp., Aug. 16, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Van Hise, George W., corp., Aug. 18, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Jan. 1, 1865; disch. therefrom July 21, 1865.
 Bradley, Roderick, musician, Aug. 13, 1862; pro. to prin. musician May 1, 1863.
 McDonnell, John, musician, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

Anderson, Henry A., private, Aug. 4, 1862; drowned near Frederick City, Md., July 3, 1863.
 Applegate, Thomas F., private, Aug. 14, 1862; killed in action at Cedar Creek, Va., Oct. 19, 1864.
 Anderson, Joseph, private, Aug. 4, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
 Arbutnot, Charles, private, Oct. 20, 1864; trans. to Co. H, 2d Regt.
 Brewer, William, private, Aug. 2, 1862; died at rebel prison at Richmond, Va., March 22, 1864.
 Boorman, Cornelius, private, Aug. 11, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
 Burton, Thomas A., private, Aug. 14, 1862; died in rebel prison, Richmond, Va., April 1, 1864.
 Cunningham, William, private, July 29, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Carhart, George W., private, Aug. 9, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Camp, Gilbert M., private, Aug. 18, 1862; disch. at Trenton, N. J., May 3, 1865, order War Dept.
 Davidson, James, corp., Aug. 18, 1862; disch. at hosp. at Newark, May 26, 1865, dis.
 Erwin, Joseph W., corp., Aug. 13, 1862; pro. hosp. steward Jan. 31, 1865.
 Emhoff, Frederick, private, July 28, 1862; deserted Aug. 29, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 Emmons, James H., private, Aug. 14, 1862; corp. June 1, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Garigan, Thomas, private, July 31, 1862; deserted Aug. 6, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 Griggs, Van Winkle, private, Aug. 15, 1862; died at rebel prison, Danville, Va., Dec. 16, 1864.
 Grover, Samuel, private, Aug. 13, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps March 15, 1864; disch. therefrom June 26, 1865.
 Hendricks, William, corp., Aug. 4, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
 Hagle, Frederick, private, Aug. 16, 1862; disch. at Trenton, N. J., May 3, 1865.
 Hoagland, William, private, Aug. 15, 1864; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.
 Jolly, Joseph, private, Aug. 7, 1862; died at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Alexandria, Va., Dec. 4, 1863, of wounds received at Locust Grove, Va., Nov. 27, 1863.
 Kensel, Kasimer, private, July 28, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Linder, Frederick, private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Leggett, John W., corp., Aug. 14, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Feb. 1, 1865; disch. therefrom July 24, 1865.
 Little, James, private, Aug. 9, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Lott, William F., private, Aug. 15, 1862; sergt. Nov. 1, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Logan, George, private, Aug. 16, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 McLaughlin, Patrick, private, July 25, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps June 16, 1864; disch. therefrom July 13, 1865.
 McIn, Thomas, private, Aug. 20, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Mount, David, private, Aug. 9, 1862; disch. at hosp., Newark, N. J., May 18, 1865, dis.; corp. Dec. 1, 1863.
 Miller, Peter, private, Aug. 4, 1862; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept. May 3, 1865.
 McDermott, Luke, private, Aug. 11, 1862; deserted Feb. 18, 1863, at Monocacy, Md.
 Newton, Thomas, private, Aug. 11, 1862; deserted Sept. 17, 1862, at Monocacy, Md.
 Perrine, William, private, Aug. 18, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Quinn, Michael II., private, Aug. 18, 1862; disch. at Brandy Station, Va., Jan. 24, 1864, dis.
 Ryan, Thomas P., sergt., July 22, 1862; disch. at Frederick City, Md., May 15, 1865, dis.
 Rue, Peter, private, Aug. 4, 1862; killed in action at Locust Grove, Va., Nov. 27, 1863.
 Rue, Alfred S., corp., Aug. 11, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 8, 1865, dis.
 Richards, Elias, private, Aug. 9, 1862; deserted Aug. 18, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 Silvers, Elwood K., private, Aug. 16, 1862; killed in action at Opequan, Va., Sept. 19, 1864.
 Smith, Thomas, private, Aug. 18, 1862; died of typhoid fever at Brandy Station, Va., April 2, 1864.
 Sickles, Tilton, private, Aug. 11, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Sept. 30, 1863; disch. therefrom Jan. 22, 1864.

Sperling, Daniel D., private, Aug. 11, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Sickles, Solomon, private, Aug. 18, 1862; disch. at hosp., Bristol, Pa., June 6, 1865, dis.
 Suediker, James B., private, July 25, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Suediker, Daniel P., corp., Aug. 12, 1862; disch. at hosp., Newark, May 4, 1865, by order War Dept.
 Sherman, Charles, private, Aug. 12, 1862; disch. at Bristol, Pa., May 3, 1865.
 Schults, John, private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Sodan, William H., private, Aug. 11, 1862; died June 11, 1864, at Gen. Hosp., Washington, D. C., of wounds received at Cold Harbor, Va.
 Silvers, John, corp., Aug. 12, 1862, trans. to Vet. Res. Corps; disch. therefrom July 27, 1865.
 Stewart, John J., recruit, Oct. 20, 1864; trans. to Co. H, 2d Regt.
 Thomas, Charles, private, Aug. 9, 1862; deserted Jan. 18, 1863, at Monocacy, Md.
 Van Hise, Thomas, private, Aug. 15, 1862; killed in action at Loenest Grove, Va., Nov. 27, 1863.
 Van Pelt, Jacob, private, Aug. 18, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Van Dusen, Robert A., corp., Aug. 14, 1862; pro. to hosp. steward Jan. 31, 1865; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Van Dusen, Elwood R., private, Aug. 14, 1862; corp. June 1, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Williams, James R., private, Aug. 12, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Oct. 17, 1864; disch. therefrom July 6, 1865.
 Walters, William, private, Aug. 13, 1862; disch. at hosp., Newark, N. J., Dec. 19, 1863, dis.
 Whitlock, John, private, Aug. 16, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

COMPANY I.

Nolan, Wilson, corp., Aug. 12, 1862; private Sept. 12, 1862; deserted April 28, 1863; returned to duty Feb. 8, 1865; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Davis, Henry M., corp., June 26, 1862; deserted Aug. 30, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 Wilson, Cornelius V., musician, July 24, 1862; deserted June 1, 1863; returned to duty Aug. 31, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Weldon, Charles M., private, Aug. 11, 1862; disch. at Alexandria, Va., Nov. 7, 1864, dis.
 Browning, William A., private, July 31, 1862; deserted May 1, 1864, at Washington, D. C.
 Bruce, Garret, private, Aug. 9, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Nov. 15, 1863; disch. therefrom July 1, 1865.
 Bruce, Joseph, private, Aug. 9, 1862; died at Camp Parola, Annapolis, Aug. 26, 1864, of wounds received in action at Monocacy; leg amputated.
 Bradford, George H., private, July 26, 1862; trans. to navy April 19, 1864.
 Garrison, Almerain, private, July 24, 1862; must. out June 27, 1865.
 Hoagland, Ralph, private, Aug. 8, 1862; trans. as a deserter to Co. H, 1st Cavalry, Aug. 28, 1863.
 Johnson, Theodore, private, Aug. 9, 1862; deserted Sept. 2, 1862; returned to duty Sept. 29, 1863; disch. May 4, 1865, by order of War Dept.
 Payton, William, private, July 30, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Perduin, Abraham V., private, Aug. 11, 1862; killed in action at Locust Grove, Va., Nov. 27, 1863.
 Rively, George W., private, Aug. 9, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps March 16, 1864; disch. therefrom July 7, 1865.
 Rogers, Jefferson H., private, Aug. 22, 1862; killed in action at Locust Grove, Va., Nov. 27, 1863.
 States, Samuel B., private, Aug. 12, 1862; killed in action near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.
 Snook, George S., private, Aug. 15, 1862; corp. Sept. 14, 1862; sergt. July 9, 1864; 2d lieut. vice Fisher, disch. Jan. 21, 1865; must. out June 27, 1865.
 Stonaker, Charles S., private, Aug. 14, 1862; disch. at Trenton by order War Dept., May 3, 1865.
 Smith, Henry, private, Aug. 11, 1862; died at hosp., Washington, D. C., June 17, 1864, of wounds received in action at Cold Harbor.
 Stroble, John, private, Aug. 11, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Voorhees, Wyckoff, private, July 24, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Jan. 1, 1865; disch. therefrom Aug. 7, 1865.
 Ward, John, private, Aug. 31, 1862; deserted Sept. 2, 1862; returned to duty April 17, 1863; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Wright, John, private, July 30, 1862; corp. Jan. 28, 1865; must. out June 18, 1865.

Wilson, Jacob, private, Aug. 6, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy Bridge, Md., July 9, 1864.
 Young, Peter R., private, Aug. 14, 1862; disch. at hosp., Newark, N. J., Dec. 11, 1863, dis.

COMPANY K.

Janeway, Jacob J., capt., Aug. 23, 1862; pro. to maj. Sept. 19, 1864; lieut.-col. vice Hall, res. Dec. 13, 1864; brev. col. April 2, 1865.
 Manning, John L., sergt., Aug. 6, 1862; 1st sergt. Nov. 12, 1862; 1st lieut. Co. I, Oct. 8, 1864; capt. vice Jaewway, pro. Dec. 13, 1864; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Fisher, John G., 1st sergt., Aug. 11, 1862; pro. sergt.-maj. Nov. 10, 1862; pro. 2d lieut. Co. I, Jan. 11, 1864; com. 1st lieut. Co. E, June 20, 1864; not must.; disch. Aug. 11, 1864, on account of wounds received in action.
 Danberry, Edgar, sergt., Aug. 6, 1862; private June 30, 1864; disch. by order War Department May 3, 1865.
 Hoagland, James V., sergt., July 22, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps March 15, 1865; disch. therefrom July 12, 1865.
 Hoagland, John V., corp., July 12, 1862; deserted June 4, 1863, at Mount Airy, Md.
 Holden, Horatio, sergt., Aug. 11, 1862; trans. to U. S. Signal Corps Feb. 1, 1864; disch. therefrom June 19, 1865.
 Keats, Naum, sergt., Aug. 11, 1864; com. 2d lieut. Co. B, June 26, 1865; not must.; must. out June, 1865.
 Meyers, Isaac W., corp., Aug. 11, 1862; died of scurvy at Raleigh, N. C.; prisoner of war.
 Stont, George H., corp., Aug. 11, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Washington, D. C., Oct. 20, 1864, disability.
 Ryno, David, corp., July 25, 1862; died of consumption at Monocacy, Md., March 21, 1863.
 Terrill, John N., corp., Aug. 11, 1862; must. out June, 1865.
 Siddles, Abram G., corp., Aug. 6, 1862; deserted March 10, 1863, at Mt. Airy, Md.
 Gardiner, William G., musician, Aug. 4, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Buckalew, Jacob, private, Aug. 14, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Buckalew, Frederick, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Boice, Uriah, private, Aug. 18, 1862; trans. to Co. K, 2d Regt.
 Britt, George, private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Bennett, Hugh M., private, Aug. 4, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps June 15, 1864; discharged therefrom July 8, 1865.
 Beihl, John, private, July 31, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps; disch. therefrom July 8, 1865.
 Carver, Daniel, private, Aug. 15, 1862; died of fever at Monocacy, Md., Dec. 7, 1862.
 Culver, Jonathan, private, Aug. 14, 1862; disch. at the U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Newark, Aug. 12, 1864; disability.
 Culver, William, recruit, Feb. 9, 1864; died at U. S. A. Hosp., Washington, D. C., June 26, 1864, of wounds received in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Dixon, George T., private, July 31, 1862; deserted April 12, 1864, at Newark, N. J.
 Disbrow, James T., private, Aug. 14, 1862; died of diarrhoea at Andersonville, Ga., April 3, 1864.
 Daly, Henry, recruit, June 1, 1863; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
 Fresse, George, private, Aug. 15, 1862; disch. at Annapolis Junction, Md., May 4, 1865.
 Geipel, Adam, corp., July 29, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Garrigue, Jacob W., private, Aug. 13, 1862; corp. March 22, 1863; sergt. March 2, 1864; 1st sergt. Nov. 20, 1864; com. 2d lieut. Co. B, June 26, 1865; not must.; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Galligan, David, private, July 29, 1862; killed in action at Locust Grove, Va., Nov. 27, 1863.
 Grogan, William, substitute, Aug. 30, 1864; trans. to Co. E, 7th Regt.
 Hendricks, Isaac, private, Aug. 15, 1862; disch. at Trenton, June 28, 1865.
 Hatfield, William H., private, Aug. 18, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.
 Hardy, Jacob, private, Aug. 12, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, June 15, 1864; disch. therefrom July 5, 1865.
 Hagaman, John M., private, Aug. 11, 1862; died of diarrhoea at Andersonville, Ga., July 28, 1864; buried there.
 Hoagland, Henry L., private, July 22, 1862; trans. to Co. A, Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Nov. 15, 1862, to join regular army.
 Hystwit, Thomas, recruit, Feb. 22, 1864; trans. to Co. K, 2d Regt.
 Irving, Edward B., recruit, Feb. 15, 1864; trans. to Co. K, 2d Regt.
 Lyuch, Peter, private, July 31, 1862; disch. at Frederick City, Md., May 3, 1865, order War Dept.

Lake, Henry S., recruit, March 11, 1864; disch. at Newark, N. J., June 18, 1865, wounds received in action before Petersburg, Va.

Marsh, Vincent R., private, Aug. 15, 1862; corp. June 28, 1863; sergt. July 9, 1864; pro. 2d Lieut. Co. F, Oct. 11, 1864; pro. 1st Lieut. Dec. 1, 1864; capt. vice Patterson, pro. Jan. 30, 1865; must. out June 18, 1865.

Messers, Joseph, private, Aug. 4, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Newark, N. J., Dec. 27, 1862; disability.

Outcalt, William E., private, Aug. 15, 1862; disch. at Trenton, by order War Dept., May 3, 1865.

Patterson, Thomas A., corp., July 22, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

Riley, James, private, July 26, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

Sylvester, John, private, Aug. 20, 1862; disch. at Newark, Aug. 3, 1864, disability.

Schenck, William H., corp., Aug. 11, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Jan. 19, 1864; disch. therefrom July 14, 1865.

Sperling, Ephraim D., private, Aug. 18, 1862; corp. July 9, 1864; sergt. Nov. 20, 1864; must. out June 18, 1865.

Smith, George, private, Aug. 13, 1862; deserted Sept. 1, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.

Schurm, Nicholas, private, Aug. 12, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

Stout, Luke, private, Aug. 5, 1862; died of fever at Monocacy, Md., March 31, 1863; buried at Antietam, Md.

Schenck, Aaron P., private, Aug. 1, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864; buried there.

Ten Broeck, Van Kenseleser, private, Aug. 5, 1862; died of consumption at hosp., Newark, N. J., Dec. 24, 1863.

Ten Eick, Cornelius, private, Aug. 11, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Annapolis, Md., May 4, 1865.

Ten Eick, John, sergt., Aug. 11, 1862; killed in action at Monocacy, Md., July 9, 1864.

Thomas, Henry C., private, Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

Tunison, Cornelius W., Jr., private, Aug. 13, 1862; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Jan. 15, 1864; disch. therefrom June 29, 1865.

Taylor, Benjamin F., private, Aug. 18, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

Van Deventer, Charles, private, Aug. 8, 1862; deserted Nov. 14, 1862, at Monocacy, Md.

Voorhees, Stephen, private, Aug. 14, 1862; corp. Feb. 10, 1864; killed in action at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.

Van Duyn, William, private, Aug. 8, 1862; died of disease at New Brunswick, N. J., June 12, 1863.

Wessel, James, private, Aug. 12, 1862; killed in action at Cold Harbor, June 1, 1864.

Wilmot, George, corp., Aug. 13, 1862; must. out June 18, 1865.

Walters, John, private, Aug. 13, 1862; deserted Sept. 1, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.

NOTE.—See history of Fourteenth Regiment in Union County, page 151 of this work.

TWENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

Wisewell, Moses, col., Sept. 15, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Roberts, Edward A. L., lieut.-col., Sept. 15, 1862; cashiered Jan. 12, 1863.

Wildrick, John A., capt., Co. B, 2d Regt., Jan. 21, 1862; lieut.-col. vice Roberts, cashiered, Feb. 11, 1863; must. out July 6, 1863.

Wilson, Samuel K., Jr., maj., Sept. 15, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Gulick, William A., adjt., Sept. 15, 1862; res. Dec. 3, 1862.

Robins, Benjamin A., 1st lieut., Co. F, Sept. 15, 1862; adjt. vice Gulick, resigned, March 19, 1863.

Berdine, William, q.m., Sept. 15, 1862; dismissed Feb. 26, 1863.

Martin, Moses, private, Co. I, Sept. 15, 1862; q.m. vice Berdine, dismissed, March 11, 1863; must. out July 6, 1863.

Newell, William D., surg., Sept. 15, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Baker, Benjamin N., asst. surg., Oct. 2, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Berg, Joseph F., Jr., asst. surg., Sept. 29, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Pago, Christian J., chaplain, Sept. 15, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Non-Commissioned Staff.

Giles, John H., private, Co. F; pro. to sergt.-maj. Sept. 22, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Ford, Charles F., private, Co. K; pro. to q.m.-sergt. Sept. 22, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Furness, William T., private, Co. K; pro. to com.-sergt. Sept. 22, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Murphy, Arthur C., private, Co. I; pro. to hosp. steward Sept. 22, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

COMPANY A.

Dobson, John, 1st sergt., Aug. 25, 1862; 2d Lieut. Feb. 11, 1863; 1st Lieut. vice Appleby, discharged, March 11, 1863; must. out July 6, 1863.

Lefferts, Henry D. B., sergt., Aug. 25, 1862; 2d Lieut. vice Dobson, promoted, March 11, 1863; must. out July 6, 1863.

Barcalow, John L., sergt., Aug. 22, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Vandevander, Christopher, corp., Aug. 23, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Dobsons, George, private, Aug. 28, 1862; corp. May 6, 1863; must. out July 6, 1863.

Floyd, Charles F., musician, Aug. 27, 1862; disch. at Trenton, N. J., March 26, 1863, dia.

Cozzens, William H., corp., Aug. 27, 1862; sergt. March 1, 1863; must. out July 6, 1863.

Appleby, William M., corp., Aug. 25, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Applegate, William, private, Aug. 28, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Washington, D. C., Feb. 22, 1863, dia.

Bucklew, Frederick C., corp., Aug. 26, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Bush, George P., private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regiment July 6, 1863.

Beaunett, Isaac S., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regiment July 6, 1863.

Bowae, Edmond C., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Bloodgood, William B., private, Sept. 1, 1862; disch. at Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 5, 1863, dia.

Craven, John F., private, Sept. 1, 1862; died of sunstroke at camp near Falmouth, Va., May 18, 1863.

Culver, Augustus, private, Aug. 25, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Compton, James, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Culver, Jonathan, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Cole, George N., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Craven, James L., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Conoly, John, private, Sept. 1, 1862; corp. March 1, 1863; must. out July 6, 1863.

Dolan, Patrick, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Emmons, Gordon, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

French, William, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Gaston, Forman, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Headman, John, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Hawkins, Cornelius H., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Imly, William B., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Letts, Isaac, private, Aug. 28, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Newark, April 23, 1863, dia.

Letts, William, private, Aug. 28, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 16, 1863, dia.

Lisk, Theodore, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

McGee, John L., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

McKee, Thomas, private, Sept. 1, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862.

Pope, John W., private, Aug. 27, 1862; died of typhoid fever at hosp. 3d Div., 2d Corps, March 12, 1863.

Perdun, Farmer, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Pearshall, Nelson, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Perdun, Charles A., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Roller, Abraham, private, Aug. 27, 1862; deserted at Washington, D. C., Jan. 14, 1863.

Richards, Andrew, private, Sept. 1, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Portsmouth, R. I., March 19, 1863, dia.

Reynolds, Archibald, private, Sept. 1, 1862; disch. at Baltimore March 8, 1863, dia.

Snoden, Forman S., private, Aug. 25, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Straley, Jacob, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Smith, Jacob S., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Smith, George, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Service, Theodore, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Smith, Charles, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Smith, Horatio E., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Vandevender, Theodore, private, Aug. 25, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Geo. Hosp., Washington, D. C., Jan. 22, 1863, dis.
 Ward, Israel, private, Aug. 25, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Wheeler, Samuel, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Yates, Samuel, private, Aug. 28, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Newark, N. J., March 3, 1863, dis.

COMPANY B.

Chamberlain, Alfred, sergt., Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Davison, John J., Jr., 1st sergt., Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Standford, Jacob T., sergt., Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Budd, Charles G., sergt., Sept. 10, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Brown, Alfred, sergt., Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Barnes, William E., corp., Aug. 26, 1862; disch. at camp near Falmouth, Va., Dec. 24, 1862, dis.
 Dutcher, George W., corp., Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Herron, William R., corp., Aug. 26, 1862; died at Washington, D. C., of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.
 Ferris, Charles E., corp., Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Rus, Edwin, corp., Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Shann, Peter, corp., Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Gullick, Spencer, corp., Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Henson, Patrick, must. Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Anson, William, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Applegate, Thomas, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Applegate, Jacob S., private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bennett, Martin, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bennett, Isaac, private, Sept. 1, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Phila., Pa., Feb. 5, 1863, disability.
 Bergen, George D., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Brady, Alexander, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Colby, Allen F. G., private, Aug. 28, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Washington, D. C., of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862; leg amputated.
 Crawford, George W., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Conover, Edwin, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Deac, Aaron, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Davison, William V. P., corp., Aug. 29, 1862; died of diarrhoea at Washington, D. C., Feb. 17, 1863.
 Davison, George, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1862.
 Dey, Alfred W., corp., Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Davidson, David A., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Everingham, Charles, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Erwin, William E., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Fisher, Henry C., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 French, Cornelius V. N., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Fate, Peter, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Fine, John, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Foroun, Selah G., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Griggs, Reuben, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Graft, John, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Grant, Brazilla, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Gavitt, Ellison P., private, Aug. 26, 1862; died at Washington, D. C., of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862.
 Glenny, Daniel F., private, Sept. 5, 1862; disch. at Fort Schuyler Harbor, N. Y., March 31, 1862, on account of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862; arm amputated.
 Hart, Noah L., private, Sept. 1, 1862; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., Feb. 25, 1863; disability.
 Hammel, John F., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hart, George S., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hulse, Samuel, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hulse, Thomas L., private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hoffman, Solon, private, Sept. 9, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Haggerty, Henry C., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Johnson, David, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Jamison, Joseph J., private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Johnson, John N., private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Jolly, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; died at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 14, 1862, of wounds received in action there.
 Legitt, Anthony A., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Lake, William C., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Labaw, George F., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Linder, John, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Larkin, Francis E., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McDougall, Orlando, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McDougall, Robert, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Moran, Patrick, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Mount, William G., private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Morse, Garret S., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Merryott, Samuel, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Merryott, Peter B., private, Aug. 29, 1862; disch. at the U. S. A. Geo. Hosp., Washington, D. C., Jan. 5, 1863, disability.
 McIlvain, William, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Millette, William P., private, Sept. 1, 1862; disch. at army hosp., Washington, D. C., Feb. 17, 1863, on account of wounds received at Fredericksburg.
 Monaghan, James, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Newton, William, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Perrine, Charles H., private, Aug. 26, 1862; disch. at hosp., West Phila., Feb. 4, 1863, disability.
 Peason, Henry H., musician, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Pullen, George E., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Runphy, Carl, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Rhodes, William D., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Rodgers, William H., private, Aug. 26, 1862; died of typhoid fever near Fredericksburg, Va., March 12, 1863.
 Rue, Matthias A., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Reamer, Parker B., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Snediker, James, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Snediker, John, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Suediker, Forman, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Sedam, John L., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Silvers, Isaac, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Silvers, Henry, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Soden, Joseph, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at camp near Falmouth, Va., April 10, 1863, disability.

Sparlin, Nelson, private, Aug. 29, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Hosp., Washington, D. C., March 13, 1863, on account of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg, Va.

Stultz, Lewis D., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Slover, Stephen, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863. Thompson, John, private, Aug. 26, 1862; died near Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 25, 1862, of wounds received in action there.

Taylor, Eugene Z., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Vau Lieu, Edwin F., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Vantilburg, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Van Arsdale, Peter P., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Wince, John A., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

COMPANY C.

Calder, Henry C., 1st sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out July 6, 1865.

Sofield, Daniel W., sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out July 6, 1865.

Hillyer, Isaac, sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Brokaw, Isaac C., sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Brantingham, Henry, sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.

Conway, Robert S., sergt., Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Leston, Joseph C., Jr., capt., Sept. 3, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Stelle, William H., 1st lieutenant, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Conover, Samuel K., 2d lieutenant, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Guthrie, Gustav, corp., Sept. 6, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Clawson, John V., Jr., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Dayton, Isaac S., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Munday, Thomas J., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Hummer, Adam, Jr., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Stelle, George D., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Coulter, William, private, Aug. 30, 1862; corp. April 15, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Drake, Henry C., musician, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.

Giles, Joel, musician, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Hummer, Adam, Sr., wagoner, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Field, Jeremiah R., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862.

Adams, Wesley, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Baker, Samuel, private, Aug. 30, 1862; died of typhoid fever at Newark, March 23, 1863.

Bauchman, Benjamin H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Blackford, Jeremiah F., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Boice, Cyrus, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Boice, George D., private, Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.

Brundage, Warren, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Car, Andre, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at camp in field April 1, 1863, dia.

Clawson, Jonathan F. R., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Compton, Israel, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Conger, Charles, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at camp in field April 1, 1863, dia.

Cooper, Joseph, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Corsoff, Rudolph, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Crook, Munson, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Dayton, Simon R., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Dudling, Benjamin, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Davis, Jeremiah, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Philadelphia, Pa., Gen. Hosp., April 4, 1863, dia.

Davis, William B., private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Newark, N. J., March 31, 1863, dia.

Drake, Calvin, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at U. S. A. Gen. Hosp., Newark, N. J., March 2, 1863, dia.

Dunham, Daniel V., private, Sept. 4, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Dunham, George A., private, Sept. 4, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Dunham, Samuel S., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Duclasp, James, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Drum, Jeremiah, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Dutlinger, Kasper, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

End, Felix, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Fisher, Charles, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Freemac, James B., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Garretson, Ralph, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Giles, George F., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Giles, John V., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Giles, George, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Washington, D. C., March 12, 1863, dia.

Gleason, Michael, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Green, Clarence D., private, Sept. 4, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862.

Harris, Lewis, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Henderson, William W., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Lake, Philip, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Lake, George, private, Sept. 2, 1862; disch. at Washington, D. C., Jan. 15, 1863, dia.

Laue, Aaron H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; died of diarrhoea, Washington, D. C., Dec. 27, 1863.

King, Lewis, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Martin, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Matchet, Amos, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Merrell, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Falmouth, Va., Jan. 1, 1863, dia.

Langstaff, Joel F., private, Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.

Merrell, William C., private, Aug. 30, 1862; died at hosp., Washington, D. C., Jan. 1, 1863, of wounds received in action.

McCray, Martin, private, Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.

Mundy, Phineas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Pennington, Nathan C., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Richards, Jacob, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Raudolph, Joel D. F., private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Newark, N. J., April 8, 1863, dia.

Robinson, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Ryno, Lewis, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Ryno, Augustus, private, Aug. 30, 1862; died of injuries at Washington, D. C., Jan. 22, 1863.

Runyon, Peter F., private, Sept. 3, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.

Sitney, George H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Smith, David S., private, Aug. 30, 1862; died of typhoid fever at Washington, D. C., Jan. 13, 1863.

Soper, Mahlon, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Stelle, Isaac R., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Stelle, John N., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Straven, William, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Taylor, Gilbert B., private, Sept. 15, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Ten Broeck, John, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Tingley, Charles D., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Titsworth, Calvin D., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Toupet, Charles W., private, Aug. 30, 1862; died at Washington, D. C., Jan. 1, 1863, of wounds received in action.
 Van Nest, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Van Nest, William, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Wendover, William A., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Woodiog, Benjamin, private, Sept. 3, 1862; disch. at hosp., Newark, N. J., March 4, 1863, dis.

COMPANY D.

Dunham, William H., capt., Sept. 4, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.
 Hatfield, Augustus, 1st lieut., Sept. 4, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Cook, William J., 2d lieut., dismissed Feb. 26, 1863.
 Voorhees, John H., 1st sergt., Aug. 27, 1862; 2d lieut. vice Cook, dismissed, Feb. 27, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Randolph, Alexander F., corp., Aug. 27, 1862; sergt. Dec. 13, 1862; 1st sergt. March 1, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Cause, Andrew, Jr., sergt., Sept. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Denton, Charles, sergt., Sept. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bauer, Morris, sergt., Sept. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Duno, Isaac E., sergt., Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Martin, Alexander, corp., Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bergen, Adrian W., corp., Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Ten Broeck, Gabriel H., corp., Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Alcutt, Howard J., corp., Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Oakley, David V., corp., Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Cathart, Merrit G., corp., Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hall, Reuben, musician, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Dauberry, Mark, musician, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Agnew, Robert E., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Applegate, Oscar, corp., Aug. 27, 1862; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., Feb. 23, 1863, dis.
 Baird, David S., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Baker, Nicholas, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Ballou, Francis, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Barton, William, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bass, Phineas, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Beggs, Joseph, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bergen, John, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Boice, Theodore, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bowman, Isaac L., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bradley, William H., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Brannagan, Thomas, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Buzzeo, John, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Capes, Renhen, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Carolina, John, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Carrigan, Eugene, private, Aug. 29, 1862; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., Feb. 19, 1863, wounds received at Fredericksburg.

Castner, James J., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Cavilier, Isaac, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Churchward, Geo. W., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Coddington, Martin S., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Combs, Benjamin P., private, Aug. 29, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.
 Cummings, George W., private, Aug. 29, 1862; died at hosp., Washington, D. C., Jan. 14, 1863, of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg.
 Davidson, Enoa A., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Ferote, Simeon, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Ferote, William, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Finch, James H., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Foster, Francis, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 French, John, private, Sept. 2, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862.
 Ferguson, Edward, private, Aug. 29, 1862; deserted Dec. 1, 1862, at Washington, D. C.
 Gamble, William, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Gerhardt, Frederick G., private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., April 2, 1863, dis.
 Grace, Hubert, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Grogan, William, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Haggerty, James, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hargrove, James, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Haviland, Joseph T., private, Aug. 26, 1862; disch. at Falmouth, Va., Feb. 15, 1863, disability.
 Hedrickson, George W., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hickey, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Holman, George, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1862.
 Holcomb, Theophilus M., private, Aug. 28, 1862; died of fever at New Brunswick, N. J., April 1, 1863.
 Jeffries, Joseph C., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Jeffries, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Jones, John J., private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Kenna, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Lally, Martin, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Lovett, Richard, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McLaughlin, Michael, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Meyers, John, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Miller, Adam, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Marsh, William, private, Sept. 2, 1862; killed in action at Chancellorsville, May 3, 1863.
 McDavitt, Francis, private, Aug. 30, 1862; deserted Oct. 12, 1862, at Washington, D. C.
 Mooney, William, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Morria, Michael, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Oakley, Blanchard, private, Aug. 26, 1862; disch. at Washington, D. C., Feb. 12, 1863, disability.
 Oliver, Francis, private, Aug. 29, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.
 Peyton, John, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Quinn, Henry, private, Aug. 29, 1862; died at Washington, D. C., Jan. 11, 1863, of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg.
 Reed, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Chancellorsville, May 3, 1863.
 Romage, George, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Ross, George W., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Sanderson, Walter E., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Staud, James, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Shellady, George W., wagoner, Sept. 8, 1862; disch. at Falmouth, Va., March 3, 1863, disability.
 Skirm, James, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Smith, Henry G., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Stryker, David S., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Suydam, Peter W., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Tallman, George H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Taylor, Joseph, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Thompson, Walter, private, Aug. 29, 1862; deserted Sept. 19, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 Trout, Garret, private, Aug. 27, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Van Arsdale, James C., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Van Natta, Aaron, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Van Nortwick, Henry W., private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Van Syckel, Jacob, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Watson, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Wilson, Cornelius B., private, Aug. 26, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.
 Wright, Lewis, private, Aug. 31, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

COMPANY F.

Insole, Isaac, Jr., capt., Sept. 15, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.
 Robins, Benjamin A., 1st lieut., Sept. 15, 1862; pro. adjt. March 19, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Westerfield, John W., 2d lieut., Sept. 15, 1862; resigned Oct. 31, 1862.
 Marsh, Seymour, private, Aug. 30, 1862; 2d lieut. vice Westerfield, resigned, Feb. 11, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Barton, John, sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; 1st sergt. May 1, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Coats, Charles, sergt., Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McClarence, John S., sergt., Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Harriott, David H., sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Stroud, William F., sergt., Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Martin, Augustus, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Grace, Thomas, corp., Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Giles, David S., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Munn, John, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bloodgood, William H. H., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Payne, Jeremiah F., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Baldwin, William R., corp., Sept. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Baldwin, Alfred, corp., Sept. 3, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bogart, John H., musician, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bessler, John, musician, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bartou, Augustus, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bedam, Charles, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bergen, Charles W., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Blair, David, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bloomfield, Edwin A., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bones, John, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bowman, Henry, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Brobbel, Ulrich, private, Aug. 30, 1862; died at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 14, 1862, of wounds received the previous day in action.
 Burns, Christopher, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Cahill, Dennis, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Challhepp, John, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Claus, James, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Clayton, Asher M., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Collins, Arthur, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Connolly, Edward, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Conners, Patrick, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Coddington, William K., 1st sergt., Sept. 2, 1862; disch. at Washington, D. C., April 17, 1863, on account of wounds received in action at Fredericksburg, Va.
 Cook, Henry, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Cushing, Patrick, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Cutter, Joseph, private, Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862.
 Debold, Peter, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 DeWitt, John C., private, Aug. 30, 1862; died of measles near Falmouth, Va., Jan. 15, 1863.
 Doty, William, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1862.
 Dunning, George C., private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Dunnigan, John, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Foley, Dennis, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Fouratt, George E., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Freeman, John J., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Furlong, William, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Frazee, Henry, private, Sept. 2, 1862; disch. at hosp., Phila., Pa., Feb. 9, 1863, dia.
 Gardner, Francis, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Garretson, Albert G., private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Giles, John H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; pro. to sergt.-maj. Sept. 22, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Gilman, Charles D., sergt., Aug. 30, 1862; died of typhoid fever near Falmouth, Va., Jan. 24, 1863.
 Grace, Thomas K., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Haggerty, William, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hauxhurst, Richard F., private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hone, Frederick, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Jackson, John T., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Jaques, Mortimore, private, Sept. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Johnson, James H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Keller, Christopher, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Kervin, John, private, Aug. 26, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McElhany, William, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McClay, John, private, Aug. 28, 1862; deserted Sept. 25, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 McGrail, Patrick, private, Aug. 28, 1862; died at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 15, 1862, of wounds received in action there on the 13th.
 Manning, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Point Lookout, Md., April 10, 1863, disability.
 Mott, Samuel, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at hospital, New York Harbor, Feb. 14, 1863, wounds received in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.
 Moffett, George B., private, Aug. 3, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Morris, George B., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Mulligan, William F., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Munn, David C., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Oliver, Thomas A., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Patterson, William H., private, Aug. 30, 1862.
 Payne, Bethune D., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Presler, Edward, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Roxbury, Andrew J., private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Ruddy, Robert, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Toms, Crowell M., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Temple, Alfred S., private, Aug. 28, 1862; deserted Sept. 25, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 Tucker, Patrick, private, Aug. 28, 1862; deserted Sept. 25, 1862, at Freehold, N. J.
 Valentine, Mulford D., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Webber, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Welsh, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Wright, George A., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Welsh, David G., wagoner, Sept. 2, 1862; died at Washington, D. C., of wounds received at Fredericksburg, Va.
 Young, Henry, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Young, Henry S., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Young, Theodors, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

COMPANY K.

Storer, George, capt., Sept. 20, 1862; must. out July 6, 1863.
 Brenahan, James, 1st lieutenant, Sept. 20, 1862; dismissed by order War Dept. May 15, 1863.
 Conk, Thomas, 2d lieutenant, Sept. 20, 1862; disch. Jan. 2, 1863.
 Bolton, John T., 1st sergeant, Aug. 30, 1862; 2d lieutenant. vice Conk, disch., March 1, 1863.
 Stilwell, Aaron, sergeant, Aug. 30, 1862; 1st sergeant. March 1, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Fowler, Charles S., sergeant, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Thorn, William, Jr., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; sergeant. March 1, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Thomas, David, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; sergeant. March 1, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Van Dusen, David, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Thorn, Andrew C., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hindnet, William, corp., Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Fowler, John C., corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hulsehart, Peter, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Barber, Peter, corp., Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Drake, Isaac, corp., March 1, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Thorn, Timothy S., corp., March 1, 1863; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Buzzee, Aaron, musician, Aug. 29, 1862.
 Laforge, John, wagoner, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Applegate, Noah, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Arose, Elisha, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Arose, Abraham, private, Aug. 30, 1862; died of typhoid fever near Falmouth, Va., March 14, 1863.
 Bloodgood, Peter, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bloodgood, Michael, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bogart, Abraham, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bolton, Thomas O., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Bray, George W., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Brock, William, private, Aug. 30, 1862; deserted Feb. 20, 1863, at Philadelphia, Pa.
 Compton, Henry, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

Culver, George, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Dayton, John D., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Dewan, Michael, private, Aug. 30, 1862; deserted Jan. 14, 1863.
 Diabrow, Cortlandt, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Dunn, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; missing in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862; supposed dead.
 Durham, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; died at U. S. A. Hosp. at Washington, D. C., of wounds recd. in action at Fredericksburg.
 Ford, Charles P., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Furman, William H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Furness, William T., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Githens, Joseph M., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Gordon, Embly S., private, Sept. 22, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hagar, Abraham C., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hogar, David, private, Sept. 22, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hansell, Cornelius, private, Aug. 30, 1862; deserted Jan. 14, 1863, at hosp., New York Harbor.
 Hanzey, Charles, private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hoagland, John H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hulsehart, Cornelius, Jr., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Hunt, Robert, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Jackson, Robert, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 King, Robert, private, Aug. 28, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Keough, Thomas, private, Aug. 30, 1862; deserted Sept. 23, 1862, at Camp Vredenburg, Freehold, N. J.
 Lester, Francis W., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Letts, George V., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Martin, James, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McGraw, Isaac, private, Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action at Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862.
 McGrath, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 McNally, James, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Miller, Charles, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Mollenfels, William, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 O'Brien, William, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Prink, Jacob, private, Sept. 1, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Rightmire, William H., private, Sept. 2, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Rogers, Henry A., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Seward, George H., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Seward, John A., Jr., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Shaffer, Philip, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Smith, Charles, private, Aug. 30, 1862; missing in action at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862.
 Soden, James, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Stephens, Miller, private, Aug. 29, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Stolt, John, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Van Nest, Jacob M., private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.
 Voorhees, Peter P., private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., Feb. 17, 1863, dis.
 Roberts, Jonathan R., private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. for disability in camp, Virginia, Nov. 10, 1862.
 Robert, Isaac, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. for disability near Washington, D. C., Jan. 3, 1863.
 Passell, John V., musician, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Portsmouth Grove, R. I., March 8, 1863, dis.

Heenan, Martin, private, Aug. 30, 1862; disch. at Baltimore, Md., March 3, 1863, dis.
 White, Lewis A., sergt., Sept. 1, 1862; disch. at Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., June 6, 1863, dis.
 Warner, Benjamin, private, Aug. 30, 1862; must. out with regt. July 6, 1863.

FIRST REGIMENT OF CAVALRY.

COMPANY A.

Smith, John, private, March 11, 1864; trans. to Co. M.
 Clifford, James, private.

COMPANY B.

Page, Charles W., sergt., Aug. 5, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 1, 1864; killed by accident Nov. 3, 1864.
 Pomeroy, Christopher F., private, Aug. 7, 1861; disch. at Washington, D. C., May 29, 1862, dis.
 Van Derveer, Arnold H., private, Aug. 31, 1861; sergt. May 5, 1862; re-enl. Feb. 1, 1864; sergt. May 20, 1864; must. out July 24, 1865.
 Wilson, William H., private, Aug. 26, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 1, 1864; sergt. Jan. 15, 1864; 2d lieutenant. Co. G Jan. 30, 1865.

COMPANY H.

Stewart, Alexander, 1st sergt., Aug. 22, 1861; 2d lieutenant. Co. E May 4, 1862; res. Dec. 22, 1862; paroled prisoner.
 Marks, Charles W., private, Oct. 4, 1862; in hosp. at Washington May 31, 1865.
 Lawrence, James, Jr., sergt., Aug. 21, 1861; disch. nt Convalescent Camp, Alexandria, Va., April 14, 1863.
 Bailey, Cornelius.
 Cause, Robert B., corp., Aug. 27, 1861; sergt. June 15, 1862; pro. sergt.-maj. Feb. 4, 1863; pro. 2d lieutenant. Co. G Aug. 12, 1863; 1st lieutenant. Co. E March 29, 1864; capt. vice Robins, pro. Nov. 1, 1864; must. out July 24, 1865.
 Senker, Henry, private, Aug. 21, 1861; corp. Aug. 22, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps Aug. 1, 1863; disch. therefrom Jan. 30, 1864.
 Suydam, Peter H., saddler, Sept. 7, 1861; pro. saddler sergt., 3d Batt., Feb. 19, 1862.
 Shulthise, Jacob.
 Alston, William.
 Andrews, Edward.
 Anderson, Garret T.
 Applegate, George.
 Auld, James M.
 Bobo, James.
 Bush, John.
 Colpitt, John.
 Christ, Leonard.
 Corridao, James.
 Cochran, John.
 Cone, Daniel.
 Ectil, John.
 Foster, John.
 Foller, Michael.
 Gray, D. Eugene.
 Glenn, William.
 Hunt, Jonathan.
 Hart, David.
 Hinckley, Charles.
 Hinckle, Theodore.
 Hudson, William.
 Hardy, Pyatt.
 Jackson, William.
 Kelly, Walter.
 Kohler, John.
 Labar, Henry B.
 Letts, George.
 Letts, John.
 Messroll, Jonathan.
 McClellan, James.
 McLaughlin, James.
 Norman, Benjamin.
 Oaks, John.
 Oliver, John.
 Plann, John.
 Porter, William.
 Pardunn, Charles A.
 Rappleyea, William.
 Reeder, George.
 Suydam, Stephen.
 Snyder, John.
 Snyder, Stephen.
 Stevens, William.
 Telus, Charles.
 Van Note, Peter.
 Van Heise, Anthony.
 Van Derveer, Arnold.
 Voorhees, Christopher.

tract was said to contain six miles square, and by a provision of the charter was not to comprise more than sixty families unless by special order of the town.

The extreme length of this township east and west is about ten miles, breadth north and south nearly nine miles. It is bounded by Rahway and Westfield, Union Co., on the north, and on the south by Raritan River, east by the Kill Van Kull or Staten Island Sound, and west by Raritan township.

Woodbridge was one of the townships the creation of which was contemplated in an agreement entered into by Daniel Pierce and his associates with Philip Carteret, John Ogden, and Luke Watson, Dec. 11, 1666. This agreement was confirmed by a deed dated Dec. 3, 1667, and on the same day Pierce was commissioned as deputy surveyor to run the boundary lines and lay out the lands to the different associates.

This township was named after Rev. John Woodbridge, of Newbury, Mass. By reference to the history of the Elizabethtown Purchase in Union County the reader will find a copy of the original deed obtained from the Indians on the 28th of October, 1664, which includes this township. John Bailey, Daniel Denton, and Luke Watson, under permission from Governor Nicolls, obtained from Mattano, Manamowao, and Cowescomen, Indians, for "20 fathom of trayden cloth, 2 cotes, 2 Gunnes, 2 Kettles, 10 barres of Lead, 20 handfull of Powder, 400 fathom of white Wampom or two hundred fathom of Black wampum," the whole valued at £36 14s. The survey is bounded on the south "by a river commonly called the Raritan River, and on the east by the River which parts Staten Island and the Maine, and to run Northward up After Cull Baye till we come to the first river which sets Westward out of the Bay aforesaid, and to runn Westward into the Country twice the length as it is Broad from the North to the South of the aforesaid bounds." This was the whole extent of the Elizabethtown Purchase. That part of it which was subsequently formed into the township of Woodbridge was sold by Carteret, Ogden, and Watson to Daniel Pierce and his associates. Woodbridge included ten thousand acres for the town and twenty thousand for the adjoining plantations. This section of the new purchase appears to have been highly estimated by settlers. "Nature had furnished the country with all sorts of wild beasts and fowl, which gave them their food and much of their clothing. Fat venison, turkeys, geese, heath-hens, cranes, swans, ducks, pigeons, and the like. The streams abounded with fish, etc. Here you need not trouble the shambles for meat, nor bakers and brewers for beer and bread, nor run to a linen-draper for a supply, every one making their own linen and a great part of their woollen cloth for their ordinary wearing. Here one may lodge in the fields and woods, travel from one end of the country to another with as much security as if he were locked within his own chamber,

CHAPTER LXXV.

WOODBIDGE.¹

General Description.—Woodbridge is one of the oldest townships in the county of Middlesex, and was chartered as such June 1, 1669. The original and if one chance to meet with an Indian town they shall give him the best entertainment they have, and upon his desire direct him on his way."¹

¹ The histories of this township, Piscataway, Raritan, and City of Perth Amboy, have been compiled from data furnished by C. A. Leveridge, of Cranford, N. J.

SYNOPSIS OF WOODBRIDGE CHARTER, JUNE 1, 1669.

ART. 1. Specifies the metes and bounds which are particularly described, and the tract is said to be bounded on the east by Arthur Cull Sound, north by Elizabethtown, west by New Piscataway, and south by the Raritan.

ART. 2. Stipulates that the corporation shall consist of at least sixty families, and as many more as shall be thought proper; directs how the land shall be divided, surveyed, etc., each patentee to pay a half-penny per acre annually to the proprietors.

ART. 3. The freeholders to have power to choose their own magistrates, to be assistants to the president or judge of the court, and for ordering all public affairs within the township, to nominate their justices and military officers, to be approved of and commissioned by the Governor.

ART. 4. The majority of the freeholders and freemen to choose their own minister or ministers, towards whose support each inhabitant shall contribute according to his estate; 200 acres of land to be laid out for the use of the minister, and 100 acres for the maintenance of a free school, "which said land shall not be abducted, but shall remain from one incumbent to another forever." The said lands, as well as those for building a church or school-house and for a churchyard and a market-place, to be exempted from the quit-rent; any inhabitant "of a different judgment in matters of Religion" might maintain any other minister without molestation.

ART. 5. Authorizes "a Court of Judicature" to consist of a president (who should be a justice of the peace) and at least two magistrates, a clerk, etc., having jurisdiction over all cases involving the sum of £5 sterling and under; and also for the trial of all criminals and causes of misdemeanor, inflicting fines and punishments such as "stocking, whipping (not exceeding twenty stripes), pillorying, ducking, branding, and the like." No freeholder to be arrested and detained for debt until judgment and execution, unless it could be made to appear that he was about defrauding his creditors by leaving the country, etc.; all fines to be disposed of for charitable or public uses.

ART. 6. Guarantees liberty of conscience according to the terms of the concessions.

ART. 7. The inhabitants to have the privilege of a free trade, unburdened by any excise or tax, save such as may be imposed by the Governor and General Assembly for defraying public charges.

ART. 8. The inhabitants to join with those of other towns in repelling invasion or attacks of Indians, but not to make war unless by consent of the Governor, Council, and Assembly.

ART. 9. The freeholders to choose two deputies to the General Assembly.

ART. 10. The freeholders to submit themselves to the laws and government of the province, to swear allegiance to the proprietaries, and to have full liberty to remove and dispose of their lands.

ART. 11. Provides for the general ordering of affairs for the good of the township by a majority of the freeholders.²

The document concludes with a proviso that as Amboy was to be reserved (not included in Woodbridge) by the Lords Proprietors, "in lieu of the seventh part mentioned in the concessions," it was understood and agreed that the nine hundred acres of upland was to be on and about Amboy Point, as then surveyed by the surveyor-general, and for the hundred acres of meadow (one thousand acres being the quantity reserved). It was to be laid out in the most convenient place nearest thereto.

It was signed by Philip Carteret, Governor; James Bollen, Nicolas Varlett, Samuel Edsall, Robert Vauquellens, William Pardon, and Robert Bond, and confirmed under date of 7th September, 1672, by Lord Berkley and Sir George Carteret themselves.

At this time (1672) Woodbridge contained thirty thousand acres, and one hundred and twenty families.

Natural Features.—The surface of the township presents a variety of topographical features. The soil in the northeasterly and southwesterly parts is of a clay loam, and it is a fine farming region, mostly in a high state of cultivation. In the extreme southerly part and ranging easterly are the clay beds, which are of great commercial interest and value. The Woodbridge fire-clay beds belong to one of the most important members of the plastic clay formations. On account of the value of much of its material and the important uses to which it is put this clay has been excavated at many points and widely explored for additional workings. There are, in consequence of these openings and explorations, the best facilities for studying its geological relations, structure, and character. It has been named from its development and the many pits where it has been opened and worked in this township.

SANDY CLAY, INCLUDING LEAF BED.—In the clay reports of this township mention is made of this bed, that it is easily traced by its contact with the fire-clay and by the leaf-prints or impressions so numerous in it. This fossil-clay bed, as it may properly be called, has many distinguishing features, and careful explorations will in time no doubt result in the discovery of fossil remains. It is difficult to determine accurately the thickness of this leaf-bearing sand-bed. Lignite and pyrite are also common in this bed.

PIPE-CLAY has been represented in the columnar section given in the report as ten feet thick, but, like the sand bed underneath, its thickness varies in different localities. In Watson's bank there is eight feet of pipe-clay. Generally there is a thin and sandy stratum interposed between two layers of pipe-clay, as if the middle of the bed had received a larger percentage of sand. There have been found a few shells and casts of shells, and one particular species, viz., Cucullea antrorsa. They were found in Valentine Brothers' bank, on the Raritan River. Additional localities and specimens of this shell, as well as of other species, are anticipated as the results of further diligent search for such fossil remains.

LAMINATED CLAY AND SAND.—This member of the clay series is well developed in many of the banks about Woodbridge, and also in those along the Raritan. This bed crops out at Florida Grove, in the north bank of the Raritan, and is also seen in the south bank, also near Kearney's dock. It furnishes nearly all the clay which is dug in this district for the manufacture of red or common brick, and the extent of these beds is quite equal to the largest demands.

MICACEOUS SAND BEDS.—In this section twenty feet has been assigned as the thickness of this bed. Micaceous sand and sandy clay, dark-colored to black, make up the mass of this bed, not uniformly mixed, but more or less in layers of varying thickness, but the sand predominates over the clay and gives character to it, distinguishing it from the more clayey beds under it. Mica also appears more abundant here than in some of the lower strata of this formation. It occurs in the form of very minute flakes or scales. No organic remains other than those of plants occur in it.

¹ Denton's "Brief Description."

² Dally's Hist. Woodbridge.

FELDSPAR AND KAOLIN BEDS.—The columnar section represents these as distinct beds. They are, however, so intimately connected that for the purposes of description these layers and the thin sandy clay stratum which is found generally accompanying them are here included under one head, one subdivision, as it were, of this formation.

The names feldspar and kaolin as used everywhere in this clay district to designate these strata and their materials are applied incorrectly. The feldspar is more properly a kaolin, although not answering fully to all the characters implied in that well-known term. It is a mixture of a rich clay with white quartzose sand and fragments of quartz, nearly all of which are slightly rounded. The upper layer of sandy clay is not seen everywhere accompanying the feldspar and kaolin. It is quite often wanting.

This township is rich in these clays, which are in constant demand for making earthenware for the common purposes of daily life. The source from whence these clays was derived is not plainly apparent as yet. They join on their northwestern edge the red sandstone and shell formation from Woodbridge almost to Trenton.

The surface is nearly level, and contains fourteen thousand five hundred and fifty acres, and is well watered by streams running throughout the township, and the Kill von Kull on the southeasterly boundary of the township, being facilities for conveying the rich clays and the produce of the agriculturists to different parts of the country, finding ready markets.

CLAY MINERS AND MANUFACTURERS.—The following are those who are at the present engaged extensively in this business:

Woodbridge "Fire-Brick Works" (established 1845), Messrs. William M. Berry & Co., manufacturers of fire-brick of all shapes and sizes, and dealers in fire-clays, sand, kaolin, and fire mortar.

Messrs. M. D. Valentine & Brother, manufacturers of fire-brick, glazed drain-pipe, and sand tile.

The Salamander Works, established 1825, incorporated 1871. This company are engaged in the manufacture of fire-brick, furnace blocks, slabs, etc., of all shapes, bakers' ovens, tile and circles, greenhouse tile and heat-pipe, sewer- and drain-pipe; also dealers in clay, sand, and kaolin.

C. W. Boynton, manufacturer and wholesale dealer in vitrified sewer-pipe and farm drain-tile.

Hampton Cutter & Son, established in 1850, miners of ball stoneware, kaolin, fire- and alum-clays; also moulding- and fire-sand.

Woodbridge Clay-Mining and Refining Company is just on the line of this township and Perth Amboy; S. G. Phillips, president.

Birkett & Paterson, dealers in ball-clay No. 1, fire-brick clay, sager clay, stoneware clay, pipe-clay, etc.

Peter B. Melick, miner of superior clays.

Messrs. Warren Drummond, David A. Flood, and Joel Melick, Jr., are clay merchants in the township.

The New Jersey Railroad runs through the northwest corner; the Perth Amboy and Woodbridge Railroad traverses it centrally, connecting Rahway and the town of Woodbridge with its hamlets, making it convenient for those doing business in the near cities. The branch of the New Jersey Central Railroad runs through the easterly portion of the township, and has a depot called Sewaren. The township is drained on the north by a branch of the Rahway River, on the east by Achter Kull or Staten Island Sound, and on the south by the Raritan River. Taken all in all, Woodbridge is not only the most ancient but also one of the most prosperous townships in Middlesex County.

Census Report.—Males, 1760; females, 1876; total, 3136. Number of children in township from five years to eighteen years of age is 1203: males, 511; females, 692.

Early Settlements.—The following is the list of freeholders who settled at an early date in this township, with, as far as is known, the number of acres allotted to each: Obadiah Ayres, 171 acres; Ephraim Andrews (1673), 98; Thomas Angar, or Alger, 167; John Adams, 97; Samuel Baker, 170; Joshua Bradley, 171; John Bishop, 470; John Bishop, Jr., 77; Matthew Bunn (he is recorded as a "mariner"), 165; Thomas Bloomfield, 326; Thomas Bloomfield, Jr., 92; John Bloomfield, 90; John Conger, 170; John Cromwill, 173; William Compton (whose daughter was the first child born in Woodbridge), 174; Robert Dennis, 448; John Dennis, 107; Samuel Dennis, 94; John Dilly (1676), 213; Hugh Dunn, 92; Jonathan Dunham (1672), 213; John French, "mason," 15; Rehoboth Gannitt, 448; Daniel Gracie, 164; Samuel Hale, 167; Jonathan Haynes (1673), 97; Elisha Ilsley, 172; Henry Jaques, Henry Jaques, Jr., 368; Stephen Kent, 249; Stephen Kent, Jr., 104; Henry Lessenby, 88; George Little, 100; Hugh March, 320; David Makany, 168; Sammel Moore, 356; Matthew Moore, 177; Benjamin Parker, "joiner," 105; Elisha Parker (1675), 182; John Pike, 308; John Pike, Jr., 91; Daniel Pierce, 456; Joshua Pierce, 30; Daniel Robbins, 173; Robert Rogers, 91; John Smith, "wheelwright," 512; Sammel Smith (1676), 103; John Smith, "Scotchman," 176; Isaac Tappen, 172; Abraham Tappen, 95½; John Taylor, "blacksmith," 92; Israel Thorne (1676), 96; Robert Vauquellens, or La Prairie, 175; John Watkins, 92; Nathan Webster, 93; John Whitaker, 91; Richard Wath, 172.

These are believed to have been the first who came, but there are a number of names with and without acres with no date appended: Thomas Adams, John Allen, "minister," 97 acres; John Averill, William Bingley, 186; Jonathan Bishop, Capt. Philip Carteret, 313; James Clarkson, John and Neal Connerly, 1680; Jonathan Dennis, Hopewell Hull, John Itley, 97; John Martin, Sr., 255; Thomas Pike, John Treuman, 97; Lords Proprietors, 1000; for the ministry, 200; maintenance of schools, 100.

"The majority of the first settlers came from New England, and most of them were descendants of the Puritans. The inhabitants of Woodbridge pursued the even tenor of their way amid the quietness and sobriety of a secluded agricultural people, undisturbed by the turmoil of the world around, and but little affected by the strife of parties with which the province was so early afflicted. Secure in the possession of their lands,—for the existence at any time of any difference of moment between them and the proprietaries has not been discovered,—they were alike loyal to the Dutch and English Governors to proprietary interests or royal prerogatives, whichever had the ascendancy; and it is somewhat ludicrous to observe with what ease plain 'Samuel Dennis, Justice,' under the English rule, became 'Samuel Dennis, Schepen,' when the Hollanders temporarily gained the supremacy, and the town with equal facility was transferred from the province of New Jersey to the 'schoutship of Achter Kull in the New Netherlands.'"

Woodbridge had its ten thousand acres for the town and twenty thousand for the adjoining plantations, several of these being improved, and that section of the province appears to have been highly estimated by settlers. A court-house and prison were there, although we may presume them to have been of humble character, and the possession of a charter gave to the town a peculiar consideration in the province. Its population then was about six hundred.

Obadiah Ayres held in the township 171 acres, 1672. He married Hannah, daughter of John Pike; she died May 31, 1689. It is recorded that Capt. John Pike left in his will to Mr. Ayres the sum of one shilling. Mr. Ayres was a native of Newbury, Mass.

The Andross or Andrews family came at a very early date from New Haven, Conn. The name of the ancestor was Joakim, sometimes spelled Yokam. He died in 1675, and his widow Amy sold, June 22, 1675, to Thomas Moore "the house, Orchard, Home Lott, Pasture for Calves, and all that might be claimed by the concessions—a first Lot-right—except 20 acres sold by her husband to Peter Moss, and one peare-tree and some Gousberry bushes reserved for her use."

Samuel Bacor (Baker) owned one hundred and seventy acres in the first surveys, 1669; at one time he bought the lands of Daniel Denton. The family of Baker emigrated from England and settled on Long Island, and Thomas, father of Samuel, first settled in Connecticut Farms, Union Co., and there died.

John Bishop was by trade a carpenter. He came from Newbury, Mass., October, 1647. It is recorded that he owned four hundred and seventy acres. He married Rebecca, widow of Scullard, daughter of Richard Keut, by whom he had eight children, who came with him on his arrival at Woodbridge. He became one of the Associates, and held several prominent offices in the town, but is not mentioned in the records in a way to throw any light upon his character. But we learn that in March, 1696, a Mr. Webster, a Quaker, claiming that it was contrary to his conscience to pay anything towards the maintenance of a minister (Rev. Mr. Samuel Shephard), who had been the means of building up the congregation and the spiritual affairs of the town, Capt. John Bishop agreed to pay for him as long as he shall live, showing that Capt. Bishop was considerate for the spiritual interests of the town and his pastor's comfort. His sons, John, Jonathan, and Noah, became freeholders and prominent citizens, and the latter left several children. There are no births, deaths, or marriages recorded relating to the others.

Of the Bloomfields, the first mentioned are Thomas and his son Thomas. They became freeholders in 1670. Thomas Bloomfield bought, Aug. 25, 1675, for £12, the property of Abraham Shotwell, and resold it a fortnight later for £14, to Governor Carteret. He was a carpenter by trade. Capt. John Bloomfield, his grandson, was in Col. Dayton's Third Continental Regiment, 1776.

John Conger became one of the first Associates, 1670. His allotment was one hundred and seventy acres. The name is now well known throughout the county. They first came from Long Island.

The Compton family were among the first who came to Woodbridge, when it was a vast forest, William, the ancestor, being the first white man to cut down the timber. He claimed one hundred and seventy-four acres. His daughter Mary was the first white child born in this township, November, 1688; she married Caleb Campbell, Jan. 1, 1695–96, and died Feb. 15, 1735, aged sixty-seven years. Her gravestone is still standing. The name is still found in the county. The family have become numerous.

Robert Dennis. This family were from Yarmouth, Mass. On the 3d of December, 1674, being "by the providence of God disabled from managing and carrying on his outward occasions," he gave to his children,—Jonathan, Joseph, and Elizabeth,—all his property (the real estate to the sons, and to the daughter "two cows, five yearlings, with all his movables in the house"), on condition that they should allow himself and wife (Mary) a comfortable maintenance "for meat and drink, washing, lodging and apparel" during their lives. He held many offices in the township, and was highly respected. His name, owing probably to infirmities of body, ceases to be mentioned after 1675. For several years he was appointed on the committee for assessing the town rates, an indication that he enjoyed a full share of the confidence of his townsmen. John and Samuel Dennis were probably his brothers.

John French came at an early date, and worked at his trade, that of mason and builder. He had a brother David, who settled in Union township (Connecticut Farms). Many of this branch of the family settled eventually in Somerset County (see Plainfield township).

The Gannitt family came from France, and with other Huguenots settled upon Staten Island, and in this county in 1668. There is in the records of the town mention made of four hundred and forty-eight acres as Rehoboth Gannitt's in the year 1670.

Daniel Gracie settled in 1667, and held office for many years. The family are not numerous. The names of Garritse and Gaseric are mentioned, but no record is now found; they may have been the same family as Gracie, as at this early date many of the names in the records differ widely in their orthography.

Samuel Hale came from Newbury, Mass. He was one of the early Associates, and had one hundred and sixty-seven acres. He was surveyor of lands, and held official relation in the Assembly and in framing the charter of the township. The family have removed to different parts of the State.

Jonathan Haynes, also from Newbury, Mass. (1673), owned ninety-seven acres. The name is spelled in many ways, but they are all the same family, as Hinds, Heynes, Haines, the last of which is common. Jonathan was a son of John Haynes, who died at Southold, L. I., March, 1652-53. He may have been a cooper, and carried on his trade. His brothers settled in or about Elizabethtown at the same time he came here.

Henry Jacques, Sr., was a carpenter by trade. As such he built in 1661 a gallery, and made for it "three payre of stayres, and whatever else is requisite to compleate the said gallery," and also laid a floor all over the meeting-house in Newbury.¹

He married in Newbury (October, 1648) Anna Knight, by whom he had several children, one of whom only (Henry, Jr.), it is thought, came with him to Woodbridge. The father, it is probable, returned to Newbury. He died in February, 1687. The son Henry was born in July, 1649. He married Hannah —, and had two sons, John and Jonathan, who appear to have survived him. The former left children. His name is connected with others in a deed 3d December, 1667, for settling two townships, including the "Towne now called Woodbridge."

Stephen Kent was also one of the first settlers. His name is signed to the deed of conveyance, 3d December, 1667, for the formation of two townships. He had a choice of two hundred and forty-nine acres, and his son, Stephen Kent, Jr., one hundred and four acres.

George Littell, or Littel, as it is sometimes spelled, emigrated from London about 1635, came to this township from Newbury at an early date, and made choice of one hundred acres; from this stock the family has increased and spread into many of the townships, particularly into New Providence, Union Co.

Hugh March, or Marsh, was a builder. He does not appear to have filled any prominent position in the young community, and subsequently returned to Newbury, where in 1676 he commenced keeping an "ordinary" (inn), and continued to do so for several years. He died in 1693. His son, George March, was admitted a freeholder of Woodbridge in August, 1669, but he also returned to Newbury, married, and left descendants. It has been generally thought that the March family were descendants of Hugh March, the orthography of the name having become changed in the course of time. But such is not the fact; the two families were of different origin. In 1653 his wife with two other good women of Newbury were "prosecuted for wearing a silk hood and scarfe," but was discharged on proof that her husband was worth two hundred pounds. The family is quite extensive now in this country.

David Makany (Makernie), 1670, had some lands near Amboy, and "bordering upon this Township (one hundred and sixty-eight acres)." He is recorded as freeholder in 1683. Rev. Francis Mackernie, a Presbyterian clergyman, was arrested in 1708 by Lord Cornbury for preaching without a license. His case excited much interest at the time, though nothing more can be learned than that a lawyer by name of Jamison defended him, and also that Governor Hunter, who was selected as chief justice of New Jersey in 1710, signalized himself by defending the clergyman.²

Samuel Moore (Moores) was the first town clerk in the township, and for twenty years, 1668 to 1688, his name is so recorded. He and his brother Matthew made New Jersey their permanent abode from the time of their arrival, and left several children, whose descendants "remain to this day." Samuel's first wife was Hannah Plumer; she died in December, 1654, about eighteen months after marriage, and he took for his second wife (September, 1656) Mary Ilsley, who accompanied him to Woodbridge. The births of two children by her are recorded. It is probable that he was married a third time (December, 1678) to Ann Jacques. He died May 27, 1688.

Matthew Moore married Sara Savory March, 1662. They brought two children with them to the province, and others are mentioned. He was a brother of

¹ Coffin's Newbury, Mass.

² Field's Provincial Courts, pp. 72, 91, 94.

Samuel, and had allotted to him one hundred and seventy-seven acres. He died in March, 1691.

Benjamin Parker, a freeholder in 1670, owned one hundred and five acres. We cannot say that Elisha Parker, of Woodbridge, was a relative, but they came about the same time, and in 1675 Elisha owned one hundred and eighty-two acres in Woodbridge where he first settled, as it is recorded, "The first grant of Land to Elisha Parker, senior, yeoman of Woodbridge, was for one hundred and eighty-two acres on the highway leading to Piscataway under date of April 19, 1675," and it is presumed that shortly afterwards he removed to Woodbridge from Staten Island, where he had previously resided. Elisha Parker was in 1694 appointed high sheriff of the county of Middlesex; in November, 1707, he represented the county in the Provincial Assembly, of which body he continued a member for two years, and in 1711 was appointed a member of Gov. Hunter's Council. His residence is said to have been the house which until a few years back was the parsonage of the Presbyterian Church in Woodbridge. He died June 30, 1717, esteemed by his contemporaries as "a good father, a kind master, and a sincere Christian." Mr. Parker appears to have been three times married, and to have had several children.

Richard, the ancestor of the Connerly family in this township, was Scotch or of Scotch descent, and came about 1680. He settled in this township near the "Blazing Star Ferry" on the Kill von Kull. The family are not numerous, but are recorded as respectable, and Richard was a joiner. He probably kept the ferry near which he lived. Richard, the second, was a public officer, and his son, James Connerly, was in Capt. Struthers' troop, Sheldon's regiment, light dragoons, Continental army, in 1778; Thomas Connerly, Third Battalion, First Establishment, Capt. Flanagan's Regiment, and the First Regiment of the Third Battalion of Second Establishment; John and Neil Connerly were in Capt. Morgan's Company, Second Regiment Middlesex; and John, a cousin of John and Neil, in First Regiment of Monmouth, and was wounded at battle of Monmouth, 1780. Richard Connerly had five children. Richard Bishop Connerly lived at Woodbridge and died there.

John Pike was one of the earliest settlers, with his son John; they owned nearly four hundred acres of land. He came from Newbury, Mass., where he had settled in 1635, and after securing his allotment here he returned in 1671 for the purpose of disposing of his property in Massachusetts belonging to himself and son. He had previously been elected president of Woodbridge, and in that year (1671) was chosen to be one of Governor Carteret's council. After 1675, when he was appointed "captain" of the militia, he was uniformly distinguished by that title.

His lands are described as lying "west of Strawberry Hill," alias the sheep common, were granted to him at a meeting of the Associates, Dec. 9, 1667, and confirmed to him by the Governor in February following. On the 30th June, 1685, he married Elizabeth Fitz Randolph, of Piscataway, and died in January, 1688-89, leaving some seven children,—John, Thomas, Joseph, Hannah, Ruth, Samuel, and several who died young. Capt. Pike died with his "fair fame" impaired through calumnious assaults, the effect of which the General Assembly, by two solemn acts at two different times, subsequently endeavored to counteract.

Daniel Pierce is recorded as "blacksmith," and owning four hundred and fifty-six acres, and his son Joshua thirty acres. They were the first to move in the enterprise of establishing the town, although they do not appear to have exerted any special influence in the management of its affairs. The father, on his arrival in America, first settled at Watertown, Mass., whence about 1637 he removed to Newbury, where in 1652 he purchased considerable property of a nephew named John Spencer,¹ and his interests there induced him to return to Massachusetts soon after the settlement of Woodbridge, and he died in Ipswich, Dec. 26, 1677, leaving one son, Daniel, who was a resident of the same town.

Joshua, the son, born May 15, 1642, had died in Woodbridge about the latter part of 1670, and a month subsequent to his death the birth of a son Joshua is recorded. There is a previous record of the birth of a daughter on March 18, 1668, on "the fifth of the week about break of day."

Daniel Robbins came in 1668, and located his lands of one hundred and seventy-three acres in Woodbridge, where he resided for many years; his family are quite numerous in the State.

The Rogers family were early settlers here; they owned nearly one hundred acres in 1670. It is supposed they came direct from Newbury, Mass. Robert Rodgers' descendants are still to be found in the county.

John Smith is named as "wheelwright," to distinguish him from a John Smith, a "Scotchman," another of the settlers. He was honored immediately after the organization of the town with the post of constable; was then promoted to be a deputy to the Assembly, an assistant judge, etc. The town-meetings were at first held at his house, he acting as moderator, and from various other offices conferred upon him, he appears to have been an esteemed citizen. There is no mention made in the records of his family. The Smiths who subsequently became numerous in this vicinity were probably descendants of Richard Smith, whose name is mentioned not long after the settlement was made, but what connection there was between him and John (if any) is not known. John Smith held five hundred and twelve acres, and Samuel Smith (1676) had one hundred and three acres recorded.

¹ See Coffin's History of Newbury.

Robert Vauquellen, or La Prarire, was owner of one hundred and seventy-five acres (1668). He was a native of Caen, in France. He was a surveyor-general 8th March, 1669-70. He is called "Robert La'-Prie" in some of the records. He was acting secretary for the members of the Assembly, Nov. 5, 1675. The deeds of his plantation, as it is called, were not given him until 1681.¹ He came over with his wife at the time of Governor Carteret, in the ship "Philip," landing July 29, 1665, at New York, and was a great acquisition to this young colony. As a matter of curiosity I find that his name is spelled in twenty-two different ways: Vauquellin, Vanquellin, Vauquellin, Van Quellin (making him a Hollander), Van Quellion, Voclin (as pronounced), Voclan, Vorklain; then come the La Prairie, Lapairy, Laprarij, Laparary, Laprerie, La Prie, La Priere, La Prary, Liprary, Delapary, Deleprierre, Delapais, and Delapierre.

Robert McLellan bought a plantation in Woodbridge, and resided there until June, 1689, having for an inmate of his house the Rev. Mr. Riddell. They sailed to Europe together. He took his son with him, and after remaining in Scotland for some years returned and took possession of his lands. It is thought that he had left two of his children here before he sailed, but no account is given of the fact, only he had three children and took one son with him to Scotland. No mention is made of his son's return.

Adam Hood, or Hude, as the name was spelled by himself, came as a passenger in the ship "Henry and Francis." Where he first went does not appear, but in June, 1686, we find him among the others brought before the Court of Common Right, at the instance of Capt. Hutton, and in 1695 he resided on Staten Island. During that year he purchased his land in Woodbridge, and removing here built a farm-house for his own residence, which, in an altered condition, is yet standing about a mile north of the church, on the road to Rahway. He is called in the records "Weaver," but in 1718 he was appointed one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas for Middlesex, soon becoming the presiding judge, and still acted in that capacity as late as 1733, the records of the court exhibiting a marked regularity in his attendance upon its sittings. At one time he was also master in chancery and a member of the Provincial Assembly. He seems to have enjoyed in a great degree the confidence of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Hude's death occurred on the 17th of June, 1746, in his eighty-fifth year, having for many years been a communicant in the Presbyterian Church.

The following are names of other settlers of the township from its earliest date to the year 1840:

Thomas Acken.	Benjamin Alford.
Thomas Adams.	Rev. John Allen.
John Adams.	David Alston.
Arthur Adlington.	John Alstone.

Joseph Alwood.	Rev. John Brook.
Ephraim Andrews.	Henry Brotherton.
Jedediah Andrews.	Andrew Brown.
Milton Arrowsmith.	Benjamin Brown.
Archibald Auger (or Eager).	George Brown.
Rev. D. Austin.	Col. Benjamin Brown.
John Everel (or Averil).	Carlisle Brown.
Daniel Ayers.	James Brown.
Ellis Ayers.	John Brown.
Ellis F. Ayers.	Philip Brown.
James Ayers.	Samuel Brown.
Joanna Ayers.	Thomas Brown.
John Ayers.	Warren Brown.
Samuel Ayers.	William Brown.
Obadiah Ayers.	James Bunn.
Samuel Bacon.	Seriah Bunn.
Capt. Baker.	Matthew Bunn.
John Baker.	Nathao Bunn.
Cornelius Baker.	David Bunn.
Rev. T. L. Barrister.	Rev. P. H. Burghardt.
E. Barber.	Robert Burwell.
John Barclay.	Samuel Butler.
Robert Barclay.	Mehitable Butler.
H. Barkaloo.	Caleb Dagald.
Capt. Barnett.	David Dugald.
Elizeus Barron.	John Campbell.
Ellis Barron.	Henry Campbell.
John Barron.	Richard Carmon.
Joseph Barron.	Thomas Chalkley.
Samuel Barron.	John Chaplin.
Thomas Barron.	David Chinabell.
John Barrow.	Jonathan Chinsbell.
Rev. William B. Barton.	William Clake.
John Bayley.	Abel Clarkson.
John Beatty.	James Clarkson.
Rev. A. Beach.	Robert Clarkson.
John Beacher.	Jeremiah Clarkson.
William Bedman.	John Clerk (or Clark, Clarke).
Andrew Bell.	Benjamin Clerk.
William H. Benton.	— Coddington.
John Berry.	Thomas Collier.
William Berry.	John Conway.
William H. Berry.	Daniel Compton.
William Bingley.	Francis Compton.
Alston Bishop.	John Compton.
John Bishop.	William Compton.
Noah Bishop.	Gershon Conger.
Jonathan Bishop.	William Coager.
Benony Blacklick.	John Conger.
Francis Bloodgood.	Isaac Cathcal.
James Bloodgood.	William Cox.
William Bloodgood.	John Crandel.
Ezekiel Bloomfield.	Benjamin Cromwell.
Benjamin Bloomfield.	John Cromwell.
Hopewell Bloomfield.	Col. Samuel Crow.
John Bloomfield.	David Crow.
James Bloomfield.	David Crowell.
Joseph Bloomfield.	Joseph Crowell.
Jonathan Bloomfield.	James Crowell.
Moses Bloomfield.	Edward Crowell.
Thomas Bloomfield.	Ralph M. Crowell.
William Bloomfield.	Robert Cuts.
Timothy Bloomfield.	Capt. Cutter.
James Bollen.	Samuel Cutter.
Robert Bond.	Richard Cutter.
James Bonny.	Kelsey Cutter.
Joseph Bonny.	Campyon Cutter.
Nicholas Bonham.	William Cutter.
Capt. Brown.	Joseph Cutter.
William Bowman.	John Cutter.
Josluia Bradley.	Stephen Cutter.
George Bradshaw.	Ford Cutter.
John Breatnall.	Samuel R. Cutter.
I. M. Brewster.	Hampton Cutter.
Timothy Brewster.	Jeremiah Dally.
George Brewster.	Samuel Dally.
Daniel Britton.	Daniel Dace.

¹ Bill in Chancery, p. 53, for the bounds of respective grants.

- Thomas Davis.
 James De Camp.
 Morris De Camp.
 David Demerest.
 John Dennis.
 Jonathan Dennis.
 Robert Dennis.
 Samuel Dennis.
 Elias Dey.
 Peter Desigey.
 Israel Disowaway.
 John Dilly.
 Richard Dole.
 Hugh Donn (Dunn).
 Joseph Douham.
 John Drake.
 William Drake.
 Reuben Drake.
 George Drake.
 Josiah Dunham.
 Isaac Dunham.
 Edmund Dunham.
 David Dunham.
 Benjamin Dunham.
 Azariah Dunham.
 Thomas Edgar.
 James Edgar.
 William Edgar.
 Alexander Edgar.
 Clarkson Edgar.
 David Edgar, Sr.
 James Eddy.
 Samuel Edsall.
 William Ellison.
 H. Elwell.
 William Elston.
 Peter Elatone.
 Thomas Elston.
 George Eubanks.
 Reuben Evans.
 Crowell Evans.
 David Evans.
 John Everitt.
 William E. Fink.
 Nathaniel Fitz Randolph.
 Capt. Asher Fitz Randolph.
 Hartalorn Fitz Randolph.
 Jacob Fitz Randolph.
 Edward Fitz Randolph.
 Joseph Fitz Randolph.
 Esiah Fitz Randolph.
 Ezekiel Fitz Randolph.
 Malachi Fitz Randolph.
 David Fitz Randolph.
 Michael Fitz Randolph.
 James Fitz Randolph.
 Barzilla Fitz Randolph.
 Stella Fitz Randolph.
 Phineas Fitz Randolph.
 Thomas Fitz Randolph.
 Zedekiah Fitz Randolph.
 Essex Fitz Randolph.
 Isaac Fitz Randolph.
 Reuben Fitz Randolph.
 Edward Fitz Randolph (2d).
 Samuel Fitz Randolph.
 Robert Fitz Randolph.
 William Fleming.
 Isaac Flood.
 John Flood.
 Charles Fold.
 C. A. Forbes.
 Benjamin Force.
 Jeremiah C. Force.
 Samuel Force.
 Ebenezer Ford.
 Samuel Ford.
- John Ford.
 Jacob Ford.
 William Ford.
 Matthew Fors.
 Ebenezer Forster (Foster).
 David Frazee.
 Jonathan Frazee.
 Shortwell Frazee.
 Hiram Frazee.
 Morris Frazee.
 Joseph Freeman.
 Henry Freeman.
 Dr. E. B. Freeman.
 Jedediah Freeman.
 Dr. S. E. Freeman.
 Israel Freeman.
 Samuel Freeman.
 Alexander Freeman.
 Dr. Matthew Freeman.
 Isaac Freeman.
 Lorrain Freeman.
 Melancthon Freeman.
 Jonathan Freeman.
 John Freeman.
 David Freeman.
 Capt. Matthew Freeman.
 Smith Freeman.
 Josiah Freeman.
 John Fullerton.
 Col. John French Fullerton.
 Charles Fullerton.
 — Barnea.
 Gach (or Gage). There were
 Thomas Gage.
 Thomas Gage.
 Ellis Gage.
 James Gage.
 Philip Gage.
 P. W. Gallaudet.
 John Geddis.
 Rev. J. Giles.
 Robert Gilchrist.
 Rev. Gillispie.
 The Gillmans Family.
 Amos Goodman.
 — Goodwin.
 Daniel Grassie (Gressey, or Gre-sie).
 Joseph Gray.
 Benjamin Griffith.
 John Griffith.
 Edward Griffith.
 Dr. J. Griffith.
 Samuel Groome.
 Robert Grove.
 Thomas Hadden.
 The Haines Family.
 Samuel Hale.
 Abner Hampton.
 George C. Hance.
 Rev. C. Hauce.
 William Hanham.
 Jonathan Harned.
 Nathan Harned.
 William Harned.
 Dr. S. P. Harned.
 David Harriot.
 John Harriot.
 Samuel Harriot.
 George Harriot.
 Ephraim Harriot.
 Benjamin Harris Harpendine.
 Peter Harpendine.
 Col. J. Hart.
 Joseph Haviland.
 James Haydock.
 John Haydock.
 Major Hayes.
- John Heard.
 Samuel Heard.
 James Heard.
 William Heard.
 Daniel Hendricks.
 William Herrod.
 Gershom Higgin.
 George Hollister.
 Sarah Holland.
 John Holt.
 H. W. Holton.
 Col. Holmes.
 Rev. Homans.
 Samuel Hopkins.
 Adam Hude.
 Robert Hude.
 James Hude.
 Capt. H. Hudson.
 F. Hoffmaster.
 Hopewell Hall.
 Benjamin Hull.
 Solomon Hunt.
 Marmaduke Hunt.
 Rev. H. W. Hunt.
 Dr. E. M. Hunt.
 Rev. G. A. Hunt.
 William Hutchinson.
 The Family of Isleys.
 Jonathan Insee.
 Experience Insee.
 John Insee.
 Samuel Insee.
 Capt. Isaac Insee.
 Charles Jackson.
 Thomas Jackson.
 Henry Jaques.
 Samuel Jaques.
 John Jaques.
 Rev. P. L. James Jaques.
 Col. Moses Jaques.
 Samuel Jaquish.
 James Jeffry.
 Benjamin Jeffry.
 George Jeffry.
 Isaac Jeffry.
 Rev. H. V. Jones.
 William Jones.
 Capt. Jonea.
 George Keith.
 James Kelly.
 John Kelly.
 Benajah Kelly.
 Stephen Kent.
 William Kent.
 David Kent.
 John Kent.
 Rev. — Kiggs.
 The Kinsey Family.
 Capt. Lacy.
 Robert Lacky.
 The Lainge (or Laing) Family.
 John Langstaff.
 John Lasslett.
 John Lawrence.
 Robert Lee Leonard.
 Capt. N. Leonard.
 Henry Lesene.
 John Leshier.
 Thomas Lewis.
 George Little.
 The Lochart Family.
 Michael Loug.
 John Loefbarnow (spelt now Lufbery).
 Thomas Lonel.
 James Luckhurst.
 Martin Lupardus.
- The Lyon Family.
 David Makany.
 Jeremiah Manning.
 Benjamin Manning.
 James Manning.
 John Manning.
 Hugh March.
 George March.
 The Marsh Family.
 John Oliver Martin.
 Merrick Martin.
 Ephraim Martin.
 The Nawbey Family.
 The Meeker Family.
 Jacob Mely.
 Leonard Melick.
 The Moore Family.
 The Moores Family.
 John Moorty.
 Samuel Moffet.
 John Mores.
 Samuel Mores.
 Edward Mundy.
 James Mundy.
 Ezra Mundy.
 Henry Mundy.
 Henry Napp.
 Alanson Newton.
 Samuel Nevill.
 John Nevill.
 Walter Noake.
 Daniel Noe.
 James Noe.
 Peter Noe.
 John Noe.
 Ogden Family.
 The Connerly Family.
 James Osborne.
 Capt. Palmer.
 Peter Pain, or Payne.
 Capt. John Pain, or Payne.
 William Pain, or Payne.
 The Pangborn Family.
 Benjamin Parcost (Parkhurst).
 Rene Pardeus.
 William Pardon.
 The Parker Family.
 The Pike Family.
 James Paton.
 David E. Paton.
 John Pierce (Pares or Pearce, all the same name).
 The Perkins Family.
 Capt. William Piatt.
 P. B. Pope.
 The Potter Family.
 Elijah Pound.
 Richard Powell.
 The Read Family.
 The Rennolda Family (Reynolde).
 Col. Ricketts.
 Joshua Rickhow Rife.
 O. Rife.
 Hannah Right (or the Wright)
 Family.
 John Robeson.
 Daniel Roberts.
 William Robinson.
 Daniel Robins.
 John Rolf, or Rolph.
 Samuel Rolph.
 Joseph Rolph.
 Moses Rolph.
 Henry Rolph.
 Robert Rogers.
 The Ross Family.

Thomas Rudyard.
Capt. Ryerson.
John Scudder.
The Sears (or Sayree) Family.
Daniel Shaw.
The Shotwell Family.
The Skinner Family.
Henry Smalley.
The Smith Family.
Peter Sonmans.
Peter Sonmans, Jr.
Richard Soper.
John Stewart.
The Stillwell Family.
William Stone.
The Sutton Family.
Thomas Swan.
Tappen (or Toppen) Family.
William Taylor.
John Taylor.
Daniel Terrill.
William P. Terrill.
Thompson Family.
Thomson Family.
The Thorn Family.
Israel Thornell.
Lewis Thornell.

Benjamin Thornell.
The Thorp Family.
Samuel Tingley.
Penelope Titus.
John Trewman.
The Tucker Family.
J. M. Tufts.
Stephen Tuttle.
The Vail Family.
Claude Valott.
C. Vandenhoven.
Jacques Venet.
Nicholas Ver Lett.
Daniel Voorhees.
Robert Vognillen.
The Wade Family.
The Walker Family.
John Warlock.
The Webster Family.
John Witcher, or Whitaker.
John White.
Thomas Wiatt.
Robert Willis.
The Wolf Family.
C. Wyckoff.
John Zeller.

These with a few other names not now known were the first who came to this township, which within a few years comprised parts of Rahway and Raritan townships.

CHAPTER LXXVI.

WOODBRIDGE—(Continued.)

Civil History.—In 1695 constables were appointed to collect the tax, an arrangement which continued until 1700. The salary of a rate-gatherer was twenty-seven shillings in 1684, fifteen shillings in 1693, and thirty shillings in 1697. There were other officers appointed, and styled the meat-packers, allowers of the town debts, fence-viewers, lot-layers, rangers, etc. Grand jurors were first appointed in town-meeting April 4, 1671; Thomas Bloomfield, Sr., and John Martin were selected for that year. No other appointments appear to have been made until 1676, when John Ilsley and Abraham Toppon (Tappin) were chosen. In 1680, John Pike (Sr.) and Matthew Moore filled the grand jurors' chairs, after which no further mention of the grand jury occurs.

We presume that Ezekiel Bloomfield was keeper of the pound for many years, for we read of animals being impounded very often; but up to 1700, Ezekiel, who was elected to that distinguished position in 1692, is the only man whose name is used in connection with the office.

Overseers of the poor were first chosen in 1682; Samuel Moore and Samuel Dennis were elected at that time, and no successors were appointed for many years. Sheriffs' fees were not granted until 1686. Jailors' fees were also allowed: "turning the key in and out," eight shillings; affixing the seal of the province to documents, five shillings.

April 18, 1686, Samuel Moore and Samuel Dennis were appointed to petition the new proprietors to confirm the town charter, which met with a favorable response, but the confirmation was not given.

In the meeting of October 1st, three men—Samuel Moore, John Bloomfield, and Jonathan Bishop—were appointed to meet with a committee from Elizabeth-town to consult concerning the best route for a highway between that place and Woodbridge, their decision to be laid before the next Assembly for final disposition. This road was eventually opened, whether in consequence of these or subsequent negotiations we cannot tell.

Deputy Governor Laurie sent a message to Woodbridge, which was read in the town-meeting of June 30, 1684, in which he requested the gift for the proprietors of five hundred acres of land, to be included within the bounds of Amboy. This was unanimously and decidedly refused by the freeholders. In January, 1686, John Bishop "ingaged to make a sufficient Bridge over the Brook called the Mill Brook, in the country Highway leading to Elizabeth-town." This is the stream in Lower Rahway (or Leesville) which is now spanned by a bridge as in those days, and probably at the same place. In the same month and year "Obadiah Hayers" is appointed one of the constables. This is only a peculiar way of spelling the name of "Ayres," or "Ayers," which appears in the records in 1695 as "Ayres." There can be no doubt of the identity of the persons.

June 29, 1688, John Dennis was appointed to superintend the making of a bridge near his house, over the brook which runs across the road on the west of Alexander Edgar's residence. Dennis lived on the east side of the highway, about where Edmund Ayres now lives.

It appears that the death of the rate-gatherer, Israel Thornell, for the year 1688, caused considerable trouble; some of the taxes had been gathered, but he left his accounts in so unsettled a condition that evidence and personal oaths were required to settle the question of payment in many cases. "Not that Thornell was dishonest; but being stricken down suddenly, he had no time to adjust his business with the town." John Ilsley acceptably filled out the unexpired term of Mr. Thornell.

On the 2d of February, 1693, it is recorded that John Bloomfield and Jonathan Bishop should each receive 12s. for "going up to the Indians this last spring." "It is likely," says Mr. Dalley, "that they went to the north to treat with the savage tribes and secure their friendship. At this time the Indians were in alliance with the French, and were disturbing the frontier. The war between England and France was raging, and the emissaries of the latter were plotting the destruction of the English colonies. All means were employed to propitiate the red men, and the Jersey settlers generally were secure from their fury." Governor Hamilton, in October of this year, called for men and money to forward to New York for the defense of that province from the allied forces.¹ The deputies agreed to send fifteen men to Albany to protect that point. The Governor was indignant. He wanted thirty men at least. They said they had five more, making twenty, who might go. The Governor told them it "seemed very strange that they should bargain as if they were buying or selling a horse or a cow when their own safety & credit lyes at stake." But the deputies would only send twenty men, arguing that they were too poor to pay the expenses of a larger number. They were poor, however, but their generosity was not remarkable.

In the autumn of 1694 the bridge over the Papiack was pushed forward to completion under the supervision of Matthew Moore.

It appears that John Crandell, a blacksmith, was granted two acres of upland on the 18th of July, 1698, provided he would settle in Woodbridge and follow his trade. This he agreed to do, and he set up a shop accordingly.

Wolves must have become very troublesome to the inhabitants, as a price was agreed upon March 13, 1697, of 25s. for every one that was slaughtered before the 1st of January. And September, 1698, "Many Wolves have been brought into the village, in too great numbers for the condition of their finances, as it was agreed to reduce the price for each one slain to 12s.," being a reduction of 13s.

In the meeting of the town, 1703, "A new pound was among the things determined upon," the "old stuff" condemned to be sold to help pay for the improved structure. Pounds, it will be observed, received a large share of the public attention. Animals were not allowed to walk around the village with impunity.

March 30, 1705, the first Town Committee was appointed for one year. They were Capt. John Bishop, Capt. Elisha Parker, John Usly, Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, John Pike, Joseph Rolph, and Thomas Pike.

At the same meeting permission was given to Elisha Parker to build a "Good Grist-Mill" on the Papiack Creek, with a grant of a piece of land about forty feet square. It was to be built as near the bridge as possible. "This may have been the mill which once stood on the stream just back of Jaques Venet's residence. It has long ago disappeared." John Pike and Richard Cutter, July 14, 1709, were permitted by the town-meeting to build a grist-mill "on the North side of the Ditch, at the south side of the Cornfield Landing, and to have so Much Land adjoining to the said Ditch and the main creek as shall be for the convenience of said Mill, So it Doth not Prejudice the said Landing." In 1710 the mill was finished, and these two men entered in equal partnership.

On the 6th of May, 1713, three sheepmasters were appointed to protect the flocks from wolves and dogs, and to prevent the destruction by the sheep of the growing corn and the grass in the pasture lands.

March 1, 1714, the sum of £15 was appropriated, partly for the purchase of a "town book" and partly for the relief of the poor. This book was bought, and is known as the "Freeholders' Book." It was rebound in October, 1868, by order of the Town Committee, and is therefore in a good state of preservation.

May 8, 1717, was a day appointed for drawing of lots, being the fourth division of the public lands, and special pains were taken to have the disposition of plots as fair and equal as possible. We find that Caleb Campbell was permitted to draw a lot in consideration of the fact that his wife was the first Christian child born in Woodbridge. Robert Gilchrist was moderator for the day. John Parker was elected to draw the lots. It was agreed that each freeholder should pay down to Daniel Britton, the town treasurer, six shillings and sixpence for expenses immediately on drawing his lot. The plots had all been marked out and numbered beforehand. The modus operandi is fully explained by this resolution, to wit: "It was voated & agreed yt ye fireholders should prosede to Draw their sd fourth Division Lots (& accordingly they Did): They being Numbered on Little pices of Paper & Putt Into a bagg & Drawn by John Parker, according [to] ye fore going voatt: ye sd Lots being Drawn, In ye Names of ye original freeholders." Eight acres of good land were to be represented by each slip of paper. Caleb Campbell, who had been so fortunate as to marry the first born native of Woodbridge, drew Lot No. 35, and which proved to be a plot on the road to Piscataway. The following names and numbers were drawn: Daniel Pierce, No. 19; Joshua Pierce, 42; John Martin, Sr., 18; Hopewell Hull, 22; Hugh Dun, 20; Charles Gilman, 8; Matthew Moore, 45; John Smith, Scotchman, 1; Matthew Bunn, 14; John Hleslee, 53; Abraham Tappen, 61; Isaac Tappen, 59; Robert Dennes, 33; John Dennes, 49; Thomas Bloomfield, Sr., 47; John Bloomfield, 2; Henry Jaques, Jr., 12; Stephen Kent, 10; S. Kent, Jr., 63; Daniel Gresey (or Gracie), 50; Richard Worth, 29; John Pike, Jr., —; Jonathan Haines, 6; John Witcher, 57; George Little, 36; Elisha Hleslee, 23; Obadiah Ayres, 56; Nathan Webster, 13; George March, 51; Thomas Alger, 67; Robert Rogers, 62; William Compton, 25; John Watkins, 65; Thomas Bloomfield, 3; Samuel Moore, 7; John Smith, 28; Samuel Smith, 27; Elisha Parker, 58; Henry Jaques, 54; Hugh March, 5; Samuel Hale, 21; Henry Lesenbe, 39; John Adams, 32; Benjamin Parkes, 9; Jedediah Andrews, 26; Ephraim Andrews, 4; John Dilly, 69; Daniel Robins, 44; John Cromwell, 24; John Conger, 15; Samuel Bacon, 48; Mr. Le Prairie, 31; John Trueman, 60; Jonathan Dunham, 38; David McKenney, 52; Joshua Bradley, 34; Philip Cartwright [Carteret], 40; John Allen, 66; Jonathan

¹ The Governor and Council, p. 159.

Bishop, 41; Thomas Adams, 64; John Everit, 46; James Clarkson, 43; Thomas Pike, 30; Caleb Campbell, 35; John Bishop, Sr., 68; John Bishop, Jr., 17; John Tailor, 37.

Rev. Mr. Dalley in his history says, "It was nearly fifty years since the first of these original freeholders had come to Woodbridge. Some of them had died, others moved away. Some had sold their rights, as had John Dilly, whose claim was owned by Robert Gilchrist. The children of others had inherited their fathers' rights, as had the younger Samuel Moore. Of the men who drew in their own rights as original freeholders, five certainly were present on this occasion, viz.: John Bloomfield, John Bishop, Jr., Samuel Smith, Thomas Pike, and Stephen Kent, Jr. Possibly a few others were there, but it is doubtful. These five were all old men, and not many years after their familiar faces were missed from their accustomed haunts in the village, and others occupied the homesteads they had built.

The minutes recorded in the second town book embrace the period from 1717 to 1799. One meeting a year for the election of officers is all we find, except in a few instances. A large part of the volume is taken up with the designation of the ear-marks put upon cattle to indicate the ownership of them. This peculiar record extends from 1720 to 1809, and is a good means of showing the number of well-to-do families in Woodbridge. Here is an entry made in the year 1766:

"May ye 2d Azel Roe ye minister made entreye of his ear mark which is a Swallow fork in ye left ear and two halfe pennye under ye Right."

We have many of these ancient records in this county, which are nearly filled with the markings of cattle, and signed by the town clerk's signature. It is not known if a fee was paid for recording, as no mention is made of the fact. Generally a rough sketch of head of animal with ear drawn erect, and showing the markings described. A "swallow fork" is simply made by the cutting a piece out of either the right or left ear in shape of an acute triangle, the acute triangle extending inward. A "half-penny" is a piece cut out about the size indicated by the term.

The question has been asked whether slaves were brought from Europe by the early settlers, but the question has never been answered with any known authority. It seems that in 1680 there were negroes in bondage in the province. In 1810, Woodbridge had two hundred and thirty slaves. The following, bearing date June 3, 1717, is written in Liber B, folio 100:

"Know all men by these presents yt I, Shoball Smith, of Woodbridge in ye county of Middx in ye province New East Jersey, for and in consideration of ye sum of fifty pound Current Silver Money of ye sd province to me In hand paid by Samuel Smith of ye same place yeoman of ye town and province aforesd—do bargain sell allinent and deliver one Negro woman named Pebe to sd Samll Smith for him his heirs and assigns," etc.

Building a Bridge.—Woodbridge, June 11, 1757, proposals being made for building a good stone bridge across the great brook adjoining to Thomas Lewis (now Jacques Venet's property), in order to encourage it the following persons agree to give the several helps towards it as is annexed to their names, on condition that said bridge is actually built directly, viz.:

James Parker (subscription illegible).

Alexander Edger, five loads of stone.

Thomas Gach, Esq., six loads of stone and load of wood.

John Bloomfield, three loads of stone.

Jonathan Insee, five loads of stone and load of wood.

James Pike, four loads of stone.

John Conway, 14 shillings.

Benjamin Bloomfield, 10 shillings.

Gershom Conger, 10 shillings.

Edward Barber, two days' work and 10 bushels of shells.

James Osborne, four days' work.

Thomas Lewis, twenty shillings.

Arthur Adlington, five shillings.

Thomas Hadden, two loads of oyster shells.

Joseph Bloomfield, five loads of stone.

William Thorne, ten shillings.

Mary Jackson, seven shillings.

Daniel Noe (if sent for), one load of oyster shells.

Ananias Lewis, four shillings.

Joseph Shotwell, Jr., seven shillings.

Daniel Shotwell, seven shillings.

Jonathan Kinsey, one load of shells.

David Evens, two loads of shells.

William Frazee, five shillings.

John Thaxter, two days' work.

James Crowell, three shillings and sixpence.

James Walker, seven shillings.

Nathaniel Fitz Randolph (uncle), two days' work.

Seriah Bunn, seven shillings.

Nathaniel Heard.

John Heard.

William Kent, cash 14 shillings.

Isaac Tappan.

Joseph Cutter.

William Cutter, three loads of stone.

Richard Cutter, 3 loads of stone.

Daniel Ayres.

Nathaniel Pike, 2 days' work.

William Pike.

Richard Wright, 10 shillings.

William Smith.

Shobal Smith.

Robert Stone, four loads of stone.

Samuel Barnes (or Barron).

William Stone.

David Harriot, 4 load of stone and one of wood.

George Harriot.

Benjamin Alford, 3 days' work.

David Perkins.

James Jones, three loads of stone.

"SALAMANDER WORKS,"
WOODBRIDGE, MIDDLESEX CO., N. J.

Office and Depot, foot of Bethune Street, New York.
Wm. Portion, President.

SALAMANDER WORKS.

This extensive clay manufacturing interest was established in the year 1825, and incorporated in 1871. The clay lands are situated west of the town of Woodbridge, on the road to New Brunswick, this being their main clay bank. Mr. Michel Lefoulon was for many years the senior partner, and up to the time of his death, in 1842, carried on extensively the largest clay manufactory in this State, employing a large number of men. In 1878 a report of the clay interests of this State was first published, giving quite an extensive account of this firm,—“The Salamander Works;” and from this account we glean the following interesting facts, although since that year they have extended their works, and increased their facilities for the manufacture of fire-brick, glazed sewer- and water-pipes, bakers' ovens, chimney tops, stove linings, cylinder brick, grate cheeks, dentists' and jewelers' enameling, annealing, and case-hardening furnaces and retorts, refiners' crucibles, etc.

The clay bank goes westward and northward into the hill, which is here one hundred feet above mean high-tide level. The elevation of the workable clay bed [top] is about eighty feet. This bank has a long working face, and exhibits considerable variation in the vertical sections taken at different points. The following distance, in 1875, of the northeast bank strata showed

1. Red shale drift.....	8 feet.
2. Yellow sand and gravel.....	6 “
3. Clay and sand.....	6 “
4. Black pipe-clay.....	2 “
5. Sandy clay.....	3 “
6. Light blue and red clays.....	6 “
7. Alum clay.....	4 inches.
8. Fire-clay, No. 1.....	3 feet.
9. Fire-clay, No. 2.....	2 “
10. Red or spotted clay.....	3 “
Red sandy clay at the bottom.

The red shale drift as here shown in the cut face of the bank contains many large boulders of indurated shale and trap rock. Some thin layers of very sandy white clay are seen in it; these are short and unconnected. No other evidences of stratification are to be seen. The bed of sand and gravel under it is very irregular, sometimes thinning out entirely and leaving nothing between the dark-colored clay and the red shale drift. Generally this sand is very beautifully laminated, the thin pebbly sheets separating the thicker sand layers; some of this sand is uniform in grain, and has enough loam with it to be used in moulding. Towards the bottom there is more gravel and the pebbles are larger. The clay and sand show stratification in irregular, alternate layers or laminae. Scattered throughout this bed there is much lignite and some pyrite. The lignite occurs very generally in certain horizons or layers, and in some of these it makes up the bulk of the mass. No leaf impressions have been found at this bank. The pyrite and lignite and the excess of sand in this layer make it practically worthless, and the black clay is slightly gritty but very tough. It is used in the mixture for drain- and sewer-pipe. An analysis of a specimen of this clay gave the following results:

Alumina.....	22.20
Silicic acid and sand.....	61.25
Water.....	8.00
Potash.....	2.44
Soda.....
Lime.....
Magnesia.....	0.94
Sesquioxide of iron.....	5.30
Lignite.....	0.50
Total.....	100.43

From the percentage of alumina and water here given, it follows that there is comparatively a large percentage of quartz sand. The amounts of potash and iron, also, are large, and indicate a clay of low degree of refractoriness.

A boring made several years ago in the bottom of a pit is reported to have gone twenty-seven feet below this clay all in quartz sand.

The fire-sand pit is a few rods south of the Woodbridge and Metochen road, and south of William H. Berry's clay pits. The bearing or top dirt on the sand is red shale drift, and is from five to ten feet thick. In it there are some large boulders of gneiss, trap rock, indurated shale, etc., etc. The top of the sand is sixty to sixty-four feet above high-water level, and it is said to be eight feet thick. This elevation agrees with the horizon of the fire-sand bed. The sand of this locality is white and consists almost exclusively of quartz. This short but interesting account of these clays is at the present time (1882) much more extended, and the manufactory has been enlarged within a few years, buildings to accommodate all the material having been erected. A capital of over $150,000 has been invested, giving constant employment to one hundred and twenty-five persons. They have reached a bottom of sandy silica clay and a pure alumina, which have become invaluable in the Salamander Works.

The present officers are William Poillon, president; Cornelius Poillon, Jr., secretary; and Henry C. Ingraham, superintendent. The main brick building is two stories high, one hundred and fifty by two hundred feet, and contains eight fire-kilns, which are heated night and day. There are brick buildings and sheds for storing the clays and finished materials ready for market; also one large brick building capable of holding twenty teams, which are used at the pits and for loading the cars.

Some years ago, or in 1875, The Independent Hour, a weekly newspaper published in Woodbridge, endeavored to give a general history of the different manufacturing concerns engaged in the kaolin and clay business. Owing to the great trouble and lack of positive information necessary to their past history, they were compelled to omit the Salamander Works, but learned that they were established in 1825, and that the interest in the same was owned by two French gentlemen, Michel Lefoulon and Henry De Casse; that, in fact, all of the originators were Frenchmen, and that a large manufacturing business was carried on. The present management has been in existence since 1867.

The following epitaph appears on the monument of Michel Lefoulon, located in the cemetery of Trinity Episcopal Church, Woodbridge, N. J.:

“ERECTED TO THE MEMORY OF

MICHEL LEFOULON

BY HIS WIDOW, MARY LEFOULON, AS A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT AND AFFECTION.

“Michel Lefoulon was a native of France, and had located himself in business in this place, and was the senior partner of the Salamander Works, where, by the suavity of his manners, his generous disposition and integrity of character, he gained the confidence and esteem of the community, by whom his death was most deeply deplored, which happened at sea, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health, on the 24th of September, 1842, in the 41st yr of his age.”

Jonathan Harned.
 Dr. Moses Bloomfield.
 Francis Compton.
 Jacob Fitz Randolph.
 Joseph Harilan.
 Joseph Thorne.
 Samuel Jacques.
 Rev. Wm. Nathaniel Whitaker.
 Henry Freeman, 3 shillings and sixpence.
 Isaac Freeman, 5 loads of stone.
 Alexander Freeman.
 John Freeman.
 Esseek Fitz Randolph, 5 shillings.
 John Barron (Barnes), 10 bushels of shells and 4 days' work.

Isaac Fitz Randolph.
 Reuben Fitz Randolph.
 Thomas Thorp.
 Henry Martin.
 James Smith.
 David Dunham.
 James Brown.
 George Brown.
 Thomas Brown.
 John Brown.
 William Smith.
 John Moore, 3 shillings and sixpence.
 Joseph Moore, 8 shillings and eight pence.
 James Kelley, one load of stone if he can.
 William Walker, 4 loads of stone.
 Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, blacksmith, 40 Bushels of lime.

Samuel Foud (Ford), 2 loads of stone.
 John Kent, 1 shilling and 9 pence.
 Samuel Moore, shoemaker, 2 shillings and 11 pence.
 John Geddis.
 Andrew Brown, 3 days' work.
 Robert Fitz Randolph.
 Jacob Fitz Randolph.
 Henry Freeman, Jr.
 John Kelley, Jr., 10 shillings.

The above appeared in one of the Perth Amboy journals,¹ entitled "A Relic of the Past."

It was found by a gentleman of Philadelphia among the papers of one of the old Woodbridge families, the Fitz Randolphs, and appears to contain not only the names of those who did subscribe towards building the bridge, but also those in the neighborhood whom the promoters hoped would do so.

At the January meeting (3d), 1671, at Woodbridge, the following officers of the township court were elected:

President, John Pike, Sr.; Assistants, John Smith, John Bishop, Sr., John Martin, and Samuel Moore; Marshal, Samuel Hale; Jurymen, Jonathan Dunham, T. Bloomfield, Sr., Abraham Tappen, Isaac Tappen, John Bloomfield, Obadiah Ayers, John Adams, Samuel Dennis, Benjamin Parkis (Parkhurst), Thomas Auger, Ephraim Andrews, and John Smith, "Scotchman."

CHAPTER LXXVII.

WOODBRIDGE.—(Continued.)

Civil List.—The following list of deputies, whose names will be recognized as those borne at the present time by residents in this vicinity, and they were coupled with honorable distinction in the first years of its settlement:

DEPUTIES TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Robert Dennis, 1668-69, 1671-72.	Ezekiel Bloomfield, 1686-87.
Samuel Moore, 1668-69, 1671.	Thomas Thorp, 1692-93.
John Smith, 1669, 1671-72.	John Pike, 1692-93, 1696-98, 1700.
Samuel Dennis, 1675, 1679, 1682, 1687-88, 1697-99.	Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, 1693-94
Thomas Bloomfield, 1675.	John Worth, 1699.
Matthew Bunn, 1676.	Thomas Pike, 1699.
Ephraim Andrews, 1676, 1685-87, 1692.	Elisha Parker, 1700-1.
John Hiley, 1679, 1682-86, 1692-94, 1696.	Adam Hude, 1700-1.
Samuel Moore, 1672-83, 1687-88.	Jonathan Dunham, 1701.
John Bishop, 1684-85.	Jonathan Bishop, 1701.
	Elisha Parker, 1702.
	John Compton, 1702.

OFFICERS OF TOWNSHIP COURT.

President.—John Pike, 1669, 1671, 1674, 1681, 1685; Samuel Moore, 1672; John Bishop, 1688, 1693, 1700.
Assistants.—John Smith, 1671-72; John Bishop, Sr., 1669-75, 1681; John Martin, 1671; Samuel Moore, 1671, 1675, 1683, 1699-1700; John Pike, 1672; Thomas Bloomfield, Sr., 1674-75; Stephen Kent, Sr., 1669-70, 1674-75; Samuel Dennis, 1674; Ephraim Andrews, 1679, 1681, 1693; John Hiley, 1679, 1681, 1688, 1693; Samuel Bacon, 1682; Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, 1688, 1692-93; Samuel Hale, 1687, 1692-93; Samuel Dennis, 1683, 1693.
Marshals or Sergeants.—Samuel Hale, 1672; Joshua Bradley, 1681; Thomas Collier, 1681; Daniel Robbins, 1692; John Bloomfield, 1693; Isaac Toppin, 1695; Abraham Toppin, 1696-97; William Stone, 1697.
Clerks of the Court.—Jonathan Dunham, 1672, 1675; Samuel Moore, 1676, 1681, 1687; Thomas Pike, 1692-93; Samuel Dennis, 1688, 1692.

"The affairs of the township² were managed, as in New England, generally at town-meetings, called at first by personal notice to every freeholder by the constable or some person specially authorized, and afterward by a written notice placed on the meeting-house door.

"There were committees or townsmen appointed to look after the interests of the community on ordinary occasions, but they do not appear to have been chosen at first at any regular times. The other officers of the township, however, were always elected annually (Jan. 1, 1687-88, was Sunday, but the usual meeting was held, but no business transacted save the election of deputies to the Assembly), and the administration of the public affairs generally conformed to the mode prescribed by the General Assembly or to the established customs of the other settlements. In several of their local regulations they set a good example to their neighbors, and in some they might be followed even by the legislators of the present day. As an indication of the spirit which animated the community the following document is given from the township records:

¹ Middlesex County Democrat, March, 1871.

² Whitehead's East Jersey Hist.

"CORPORATION OF WOODBRIDGE, April ye 17th, 1695.

"The engagement of all freeholders by igrisnall rites of all free men which have been are or shall be so admitted into this town and Corporation,

"Viz.: As a good and useful member of this entire body is government and guidance I will be subject to all the lawful and Regular Motions thereof, And to ye utmost of my skill and ability I will move and act with it so as may most directly tend to its peace and prosperity. Its nakedness I will cover its secrets I will not discover, but its weakness I will support and finally in word and deed according to ability and its occasions att all times, I will endeavor to prevent euill and to promote ye good and just interest of this body and each member thereof on peniety of correction or expulsion as default may require. In testimony hereof wee under written have subscribed our names."

There are only thirty-four signatures appended to this document, from which it is presumed not to have been generally agreed to.

In this year it was found necessary to make it obligatory upon all to attend the town-meeting, and in January, 1699, the fine for non-attendance was fixed at nine pence for every omission, and upon refusal to pay "every delinquent to be turned out the Meeting-house until complies," which in some communities would not have been considered a very grave punishment.

TOWN CLERKS.

Joshua Pierce, 1668.	Alanson Newton, 1839-1
Samuel Moore, 1669-88.	Henry M. Ayers, 1840-41.
Samuel Dennis, 1688-92.	Dennis Mawbey, 1842-45.
Thomas Pike, 1692-93, 1695, 1711.	Thomas H. Morris, 1846-47.
Moses Rolph, 1711-31.	Joseph H. Brewster, 1848-49, 1855-56.
Edward Crowl, 1732-56.	Samuel E. Ensign, 1850-52.
Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, 1757-69.	Alexander R. Coddington, 1853-54.
Daniel Moores, 1769-73.	Stewart Crowell, 1857.
Robert Fitz Randolph, 1774-83.	Samuel R. Cutter, 1858-60.
David Frazee, 1783-84.	Theodore H. Larrison, 1861-63.
Charles Jackson, 1784.	Lafayette Reed, 1864-96.
James Paton, 1788-94.	Thomas I. Dally, 1867-68.
Robert Ross, Jr., 1794-95.	William Edgar, 1869, 1871.
Ichabod Potter, 1795, 1800.	Charles S. Demerest, 1870.
Azel Freeman, 1801.	Charles W. Anness, 1872.
Elias Thompson, 1802-06.	George W. Dally, 1873-75.
John Brewster, 1807-11.	Ephraim Cutter, 1876.
Asher Ayers, 1812-15.	Thomas H. Morris, Jr., 1877.
David P. Melick, 1816.	George W. Chinch, 1878.
James M. Brewster, 1821-30.	Albion R. Berry, 1879-80.
Augustus Coddington, 1831-36.	John Lockwood, 1881.
Alanson Newton, 1837.
William E. Fink, 1838.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

John Pike, 1670, 1712.	Ichabod Potter, 1845.
John Bishop, 1670, 1732.	George F. Webb, 1846.
Adam Hude, 1718.	Isaac C. Thonal, 1846.
James Parker, 1764.	Eliaknah Vanderhoven, 1847.
Thomas Gach, 1757.	Edgar Freeman, 1847-48.
Jeremiah Manning, 1769-95.	James McKelvey, 1850.
John Moores, 1669.	Henry Hampton, 1850.
Nathaniel Heard, 1669.	Silas P. Leanoor, 1851, 1857.
Moses Rolph, 1712-14.	Charles Jackson, Jr., 1852.
Asher Martin, 1845.	David Bloomfield, 1852.
Alanson Newton, 1845, 1850, 1859, 1864-67.	Samuel E. Ensign, 1855.
Cornelius Van Houten, 1845.	William Brown, 1855.
Nathan Ayres, 1845, 1850.	Solomon H. Marsh, 1856.
	Thomas H. Morris, Sr., 1857.

Alexander Ayres, 1857.	Newman A. Wood, 1867.
John De Grow, Jr., 1858.	Thomas H. Morris, Sr., 1870, 1875, 1880.
Nouth Mundy, 1858.	Chas. F. Newton, 1871, 1876, 1880.
Augustus Blackford, 1860, 1865.	Edward J. Thompson, 1874.
David M. Demerest, 1867.	Jeremiah Dally, 1875, 1880.
Hampton Cutter, 1861, 1866, 1871, 1876.	Joshua Liddle, Jr., 1877.
Henry Freeman, 1867.	Budley S. Anness, 1881.

TOWN COMMITTEE.

Capt. John Bishop, 1705.	Timothy Ross, 1837-40.
Capt. Elisha Parker, 1705.	Ezra Ayres, 1838-41, 1846-49.
John Hsley, 1705.	Robert C. Vail, 1838-41.
Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, 1705.	Jeremiah C. Force, 1838-40, 1846-49.
John Pike, 1705.	Joel Clarkson, 1841.
Joseph Rolph, 1705.	William F. Manning, Jr., 1841, 1857-58.
Thomas Pike, 1705.	Abijah O. Houghten, 1842.
Richard Wright, 1799.	Henry Acken, 1842-43, 1861-64.
William Edgar, 1799.	Alauson Newton, 1842-45.
Ralph Marsh, 1799.	Warren Brown, 1842.
Phineous Carman, 1799.	William H. Berry, 1842-45, 1874-78, 1880.
William F. Manning, 1799-1811, 1815-16, 1821-23.	Charles J. Toms, 1843-44.
Benjamin A. Brown, 1800-1.	Tompson Crowell, 1843-44, 1851.
John Heard, 1800-2.	William Tappen, 1844-45, 1850-52, 1854-55, 1861-66.
Henry Mundy, 1800.	John F. Badgley, 1845.
Henry Freeman, Jr., 1800-1, 1803, 1811.	John E. Barron, 1846-47.
Capt. Nathaniel Leonard, 1801-3.	William Edgar, 1846.
Jonathan Freeman, 1802, 1804-10.	Timothy I. Bloomfield, 1846-47.
James Edgar, 1802-3.	Francis Van Winkle, 1847-49.
Ezekiel Ayres, 1803.	James Bloodgood, 1848-49.
William Baadlus, 1804-5.	Luther I. Tappen, 1848-49, 1859.
Jonathan Harned, 1804-5.	Moses Jaques, M.D., 1850.
Joseph Crowell, 1804-16.	Christopher Marston, 1850.
Lewis Kelly, 1806.	William P. Edgar, 1850, 1853, 1861-64.
William Platt, 1806.	Jotham Coddington, 1850-52, 1865, 1871.
Isaac Laing, 1806, 1808-9, 1811, 1816.	Nathan Ayres, 1851-52, 1856.
Ezra Force, 1807-10.	David Harriott, 1851-53.
Nathan Marsh, 1810.	Hampton Cutter, 1852, 1856-57, 1861-71.
Edward Moore, 1811.	Peter Melick, 1852, 1855.
John Brewster, 1812-14.	Benjamin B. Miller, 1853-56.
Thomas Edgar 3d, 1812-15.	Edson Haydock, 1853.
James Paton, 1812.	John M. Jackson, 1854.
Henry Freeman, Esq. (3d), 1813, 1829-32.	Joel B. Laing, 1854-55.
Adam Lee, 1813-16.	John F. Lufberry, 1854-55.
Jarvis Brewster, 1814.	Silas P. Leonard, 1856.
Samuel Edgar, 1815, 1821-24, 1827.	Ellis Freeman, 1856.
Henry Potter, 1816.	John Woodruff, 1857-58.
Nathan Thorp, 1821.	Charles T. Insee, 1857.
Moses Martin, 1821.	Isaac C. Thonal, 1857.
Jeremiah Campbell, 1821-24.	Moses M. Craig, 1858-59.
Robert Lee, 1821, 1823-31.	Samuel Ayers, 1858-60.
Aaron Brockaw, 1822-24.	Isaac S. Payne, 1858.
Washington Ford, 1824-25.	William F. Brown, 1859.
Jothan B. Marsh, 1825.	Henry W. Holton, 1859-60.
Ralph M. Crowell, 1825-28, 1830-41.	Christopher M. Crowell, 1860.
John F. Payne, 1825-29.	J. Mattison Melick, 1860.
Moses R. Martin, 1826-27.	John J. Clarkson, 1860.
Frazee Ayres, 1826.	Nathan Robins, 1861-64.
Simon Mundy, 1828-37.	Nathan E. Mead, 1865, 1875-76.
James M. Brewster, 1828-29.	Joseph A. Martin, 1865.
Nathan Stansbury, 1830-31.	Jerome B. Ross, 1866-69.
John M. Tufts, 1832-33.	Walter Brewster, 1866.
Harmannus Barkaloo, Jr., 1832-34.	Jeremiah Dally, 1867-68.
Augustus Coddington, 1833-34.	David-P. Carpenter, 1867-68.
Samuel Cutter, Sr., 1834-35.	Charles A. Campbell, 1869-70.
Thompson Edgar, 1835-37, 1845.	Bernard Dunigan, 1869.
Rene Pardessus, 1835-36.
Henry Force, 1836.
Randolph Steward, 1837.

² Not obtained from 1705-99.

³ The years prior they voted vice voce, and in the year 1839 they voted by ballot.

¹ First time voted or elected by ballot.

Warren Brown, 1870, 1873-74.
Albert D. Brown, 1870-72.
Thomas B. Marsh, 1870.
William H. Brown, 1871.
Samuel A. Meeker, 1871.
C. W. Boynton, 1872.
L. M. Perkins, 1872.
James Valentine, 1872.
Joel Melick, Jr., 1872-74, 1877.
Charles H. Weidner, 1873.
William E. Fink, Sr., 1873-80.
Charles F. Newton, 1873.

Daniel D. Wiley, 1874.
William Van Sicklin, 1875.
Josiah C. Cutter, 1875-76.
Isaac Insole, Jr., 1876-77.
Andrew R. Smith, 1877.
Jephtha Ronyon, 1877.
Charles B. Smith, 1878-80.
Edward Martin, 1878-81.
William H. Turner, 1878.
William Edgar, 1879.
William H. Demerest, 1881.

ASSESSORS, OR RATE-MAKERS.

John Smith, 1672.
Robert Dennis, 1672, 1674-75.
Samuel Moore, 1672, 1674-75, 1679-80, 1682, 1684-87.
Jonathan Dunham, 1674, 1694.
John Bishop, Sr., 1675, 1679-80, 1682, 1686-87, 1693.
Capt. Pike, 1679-82.
Capt. Bishop, 1681, 1683, 1688, 1691.
John Dennis, 1681.
J. Pike, 1683-83, 1691.
Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, 1683, 1688-89.
Samuel Dennis, 1684-85, 1687-88, 1691, 1693, 1696, 1698.
Israel Thornell, 1685.
Ezekiel Bloomfield, 1686.
J. Pike, Jr., 1689.
John Rolf, 1689.
Thomas Pike, 1691, 1693, 1695-96, 1697, 1700.
E. Andrews, 1694.
Jonathan Bishop, 1694.
Benjamin Cromwell, 1695-98.
Elisha Parker, 1700.

TAX COLLECTORS, OR RATE-GATHERERS.

John Bishop, Sr., 1670-71.
Samuel Moore, 1675-79, 1683.
Isaac Thornell, 1680, 1685, 1687.
Isaac Tappen, 1680.
John Pike, Jr., 1681.
Samuel Hale, 1684.
Ezekiel Bloomfield, 1685-86, 1689, 1693-94.
John In-ley, 1687.
Daniel Robbins, 1688.
Samuel Dennis, 1691.
Henry Marsh, Esq., 1799.
Abraham Tappan, 1799.
Henry Marsh, 1800-3.
Phineas Manning, 1800-2.
Isabel Thornell, 1803-4.
Lewis Kelly, 1804-11.
Nathan Bloomfield, 1805-16.
Richard Marsh, 1812-16.
John Harriott, 1821-25.
Joseph Crowell, 1821-24, 1826, 1828.
Aaron Brokaw, 1825, 1827, 1829-30, 1841.
Gage Insole, 1826.
Lewis Campbell, 1827-31.
Stewart Crowell, 1831-34.
William Coddington, 1832.
Nathan Ayres, 1833-34.
Samuel W. Ford, 1835-36.
Jotham Coddington, 1835-36.

OVERSEERS OF THE HIGHWAYS TO 1700.

Robert Dennis, 1699-70.
Thomas Bloomfield, Sr., 1699-70.
Joshua Pearce, 1699.
Samuel Moore, 1699-70.

Clarkson Edgar, 1799, 1800.
William F. Maoning, 1801-11.
Capt. John Brewster, 1812-14.
Richard Cutter, 1815-16.
Thomas Edgar, 1821.
James Coddington, 1822-29.
James M. Brewster, 1830-34.
Stewart Crowell, 1835-36, 1842, 1851-52.
Gage Insole, 1837.
Simeon Mundy, 1838.
Col. Lewis Leslie, 1839.
Timothy J. Bloomfield, 1840-41.
Augustus Coddington, 1842.
Jotham Coddington, 1844-45, 1854-59, 1861-64, 1866, 1870, 1872-76.
Charles Laforce, 1846-47.
John Clarkson, 1846-49.
Alexander A. Edgar, 1850, 1878-80.
William Ross, 1853.
Luther J. Tappan, 1860, 1867-69.
Robert B. Crowell, 1865.
James M. Brown, 1871.
Lewis D. Kelly, 1877.
Charles P. Smith, 1881.

William F. Manning, Jr., 1837-40, 1848.
Thomas Fitz Randolph, 1837-38.
James Covenhoven, 1839.
Allison Newton, 1840.
William E. Fink, 1841.
William B. Thompson, 1842-44.
George B. Stella, 1842-45.
Crowell Martlo, 1845.
Reuben Harned, 1846-47.
Nathan Bunn, 1846-47.
Charles C. Hoff, 1848-49.
Charles E. Bloomfield, 1849, 1851.
Charles I. Toms, 1850, 1852.
John C. Coddington, 1850.
William Cutter, 1851-53, 1855.
George M. Gage, 1853.
Joel Clarkson, 1854-56.
Thomas Van Sicklin, 1854.
Charles M. Dally, 1855.
Alexander R. Coddington, 1856-57.
Peter B. Sharp, 1857-59.
Jeremiah Dally, 1859.
Albert D. Brown, 1860.
Alexander A. Edgar, 1861-62.
George G. Hancock, 1863-68.
Charles C. Dally, 1869, 1877-81.
Elijah Hewitt, 1870.
Charles S. Demerest, 1871-72.
James E. Berry, 1873-76.

Daniel Robbins, 1680, 1690.
Isaac Thornell, 1682, 1684.
Ezekiel Bloomfield, 1682, 1689.
Isaac Tappen, 1682, 1692.
Marmaduke Potter, 1682.
Capt. Bishop, 1684-96.
Samuel Smith, 1684, 1688.
Eph. Andrews, 1684, 1689-90.
John Dennis, 1688, 1696.
Matthew Moore, 1688.
Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, 1690, 1698.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

James Paton, 1799, 1800.
Phineas Manning, 1799, 1800.
James Edgar, 1801-4.
Henry Marsh, 1801-3.
Lewis Kelly, 1804.
Christopher Marsh, 1805-10.
Henry Freeman, 1811-15.
William T. Manning, 1805-16, 1846-47, 1849, 1851, 1853-54.
Joseph Crowell, 1816.
Samuel Edgar, 1821-24.
Robert Lee, 1822-23, 1825-31.
John M. Tufts, 1832-33.
William Coddington, 1834-35.
Henry Force, 1836.
James M. Brewster, 1837-39.
Simeon Mundy, 1821.
Gage Insole, 1824-27, 1830-34, 1838-40.
Rolph M. Crowell, 1828, 1846-49, 1853-55.
Jonathan B. Marsh, 1829.
Thompson Edgar, 1835-37, 1842-45.
Jackson Freeman, 1840-41.
Simeon W. Phillips, 1841, 1855-56, 1861-62.

Joseph Bloomfield, 1692.
Garren Lockhart, 1694, 1696, 1698.
Thomas Pike, 1694.
M. Moore, 1696.
Noah Bishop, 1698.
John Compton, 1698, 1700.
Jonathan Bishop, 1700.
Isaac Tappen, 1700.
William Ellison, 1700.
John Hsley, Jr., 1700.

Warren Brown, 1842-45, 1850, 1852.
Edward J. Jaques, 1848.
George W. Brown, 1850, 1852.
Samuel Barron, 1851.
John H. Lufberry, 1856-59.
John H. Campbell, 1857, 1863-65, 1867.
Charles M. Dally, 1858, 1868.
Henry W. Holton, 1859-60.
Lebbens Ayres, 1860.
Henry Jeken, 1861-64.
La Fayette Reed, 1865.
Joseph Shann, 1866-67.
Robert Coddington, 1866.
David P. Carpenter, 1868.
George P. Hancock, 1869-70.
Richard Ryan, 1869.
Isaac Insole, 1870-72.
Daniel C. Turner, 1871-72, 1877.
Ellis B. Freeman, M.D., 1873-76.
Charles A. Campbell, 1874-74.
Charles W. Anness, 1875.
Randolph Coddington, 1876-77.
Hampton Cutter, 1878-79.
William Edgar, 1878-81.
James P. Prall, 1881.

CHAPTER LXXVIII.

WOODBIDGE.—(Continued.)

Town Schools.—The following is the patent of George III., incorporating the trustees of the free school of Woodbridge:

CHARTER.—"George the Third by the Grace of God Great Britain France and Ireland King defender of the faith &c. To all to whom these presents shall come Greeting. Whereas in and by a charter bearing date the first day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and sixty-nine, Granted by Philip Carteret then Governor of the Province of New Jersey under the Right Honorable John Lord Berkeley Baron of Stratton and Sir George Carteret Knight and Baronet the then proprietors of the Province of New Jersey to the Town and Freeholders of Woodbridge among other things it is therein directed that one hundred acres of land in the said Town should be laid out for the maintenance of a free school. And whereas the Freeholders of the town of Woodbridge by their humble petition presented to our trusty and well beloved William Franklin Esq Captain General Governor and commander in chief in and over our province of New Jersey have set forth that in pursuance of the charter granted as aforesaid by the said Philip Carteret Esq one hundred acres of land hath been laid out for the use of a free school and the rents thereof received by such persons as the Freeholders of the said Town at their yearly meetings have from time to time appointed with intention to make a capital for the building a School house or houses and the maintenance of proper and able teachers! But that from the want of a proper charter of incorporation the said Freeholders find themselves unable and without authority properly to settle the accounts with such persons as have from time to time been appointed to receive the rents and issues of the said one hundred acres of land or to prosecute such persons as from time to time have committed waste and trespass on the same or to build a School house or to make provision for the maintenance of Proper masters and Teachers and to make and ordain proper laws and instructions for the good governing of the said Schools and have therefore prayed our Letters Patent under our Great seal of our said province of New Jersey to incorporate the said freeholders of the Town of Woodbridge with such Powers immunities privileges and jurisdictions as may be thought requisite and necessary for the more effectual promoting and the better ordering and Governing the said school or schools in the said Town of Woodbridge. Know ye therefore the We willing and desirous to encourage our dutiful and loyal subjects the freeholders of the said Town of Woodbridge in their good intentions of our special grace certain knowledge and mere motion have named constituted and appointed and by these presents do name constitute and appoint John Moores and Nathaniel Esqrs Moses Bloomfield, Benjamin Thornhill, Ebenezer Foster, Joseph Shotwell, and Robert Clarkson, the present Trustees of the free school in the said Town of Woodbridge which said Trustees and their successors now are and at all times hereafter shall be one body politic and corporate and shall and may have perpetual succession in deed fact and name to be known and distinguished in all deeds, grants bargains sales evidences writings muniments or otherwise whatsoever by the name of 'The Trustees of the Free Schools of the Town of Woodbridge' and that they and their successors by the same name of the Trustees of the Free Schools of the Town of Woodbridge be and forever hereafter shall be persons capable and able in the law to purchase take acquire hold receive enjoy have and possess any manors, messuages, houses, buildings, lands, rents Tenements possessions and other hereditaments and real Estate whatsoever within our said province of New Jersey in fee simple or for term of life or lives or years, or in any other manner whatsoever to the Value of five hundred pounds sterling by the year in the clear and also goods and chattels and all other things of what nature and kind soever not exceeding the sum of ten thousands pounds sterling in the gross and also by name aforesaid shall and may grant bargain demise assign sell and convey or otherwise dispose of all or any of the manors, Messuages, houses, buildings lands, tenements, rent possessions and other hereditaments, and real Estate and all their Goods and Chattels and other things aforesaid in such manner and form as to them shall seem meet and also that they and their successors by the same name of the trustees of the free schools of the Town of Woodbridge be and forever hereafter shall be persons capable and able in Law to sue and be sued implead and be impleaded appear answer and be answered unto defend and be defended in any of our Courts of Judicature either in Law or Equity in our said province of New Jersey or elsewhere before us our heirs and Successors and before all and every the Judges Justices officers and Ministers of us our heirs and successors in all manner of actions Suits complaints pleas matters and demands whatsoever and of what nature or kind soever and also that they and their successors by the name aforesaid shall and may demand receive and take of and from the persons heretofore appointed by the freeholders of the Town of Woodbridge all such sum and sums of Money by them received and arising and issuing out of the one hundred acres of land aforesaid and upon non payment thereof by the name aforesaid to sue for and recover the same for the use of the schools aforesaid. And also that they the said Trustees of the free Schools of the Town of Woodbridge aforesaid and their successors shall and may make and forever hereafter use one common seal with such device and devices as to them shall seem proper for the sealing all and singular Deeds, Grants, conveyances contracts and all and singular other instruments affairs and business any way touching concerning and relating to the said free schools and also that they the said Trustees of the free schools of the Town of Woodbridge and the majority of them shall and may from time to time make constitute ordain and confirm by such name or names as to them shall seem Good and likewise to revoke discharge change and alter as well all and singular Governors, Masters, Teachers or other officers which shall be by them or the majority of them thought fit and needful to be made or used for the government of the said free schools and also to make ordain and establish all such orders laws directions instructions and forms fit and necessary for and concerning the government of the said schools and the same at all times hereafter to execute abrogate revoke or change as they or the Majority of them shall think fittest for the benefit and advantage of the said schools and we have given and granted and by these presents do give and grant for us our heirs and successors to the free holders of the Town of Woodbridge full power and authority to assemble and meet together on the first Tuesday in March annually at the usual and accustomed place for holding the town meetings or at such other place as they shall think proper and then and there by plurality of Voices to appoint such and so many persons as they or the Major part of them shall think proper to inspect the accounts orders minutes and transactions of the said Trustee or their successors. And in case of the death refusal or disability of either or any of the said Trustees or they or any of them ceasing to be freeholders of the said Town of Woodbridge or resigning the trust in them reposed then and in such case we for us our heirs and successors will grant and ordain that other fit person or persons Freeholders of the said Town of Woodbridge be by the said Freeholders of the said Township of Woodbridge or the majority of them nominated elected and chosen in the place and stead of him or them so dying refusing or otherwise disabled as aforesaid. And further we have given and granted and by these presents do give and grant to the said Freeholders of our said Town of Woodbridge full power and authority to assemble and meet together once in three years but not often on the first Tuesday in March at the usual and accustomed place for holding of the Town Meetings or at such other place as the Majority of them shall from time to time appoint and then and there by plurality of voices alter change or continue all or any of the said trustees now appointed or that shall hereafter be appointed elected or chosen by virtue of these presents to have and to hold all and singular the privileges advantages liberties and all other the premises to them the said Trustees of the free schools of this Town of Woodbridge and their successors forever yielding rendering and paying therefor yearly and every year forever hereafter unto us our heirs and successors at Perth Amboy in the county of Middlesex unto our receiver General of the said province on the Twenty-fifth of March one barley-corn if the same be legally demanded. And lastly our will and pleasure is that these our Letters patent shall be of full force and efficacy to all intents and purposes whatever as above mentioned expressed and declared and that the same or the enrollment thereof shall in all courts of law and equity forever hereafter be construed and taken most favorably and beneficially for the Trustees of the free schools of our Town of Woodbridge according to our royal intention herein before declared notwithstanding that any unit or units of ad quod damnum hath or have not issued or is or are not returned before the making these presents. And notwithstanding the not reciting misreciting or not rightly or certainly reciting the said rights privileges powers, authorities or any other the premises in and by these presents granted or meant mentioned or intended to be granted or any part or parcel thereof. In testimony whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made patent and the Great Seal of our said Province of New Jersey to be hereto affixed. Witness our trusty and well beloved William Franklin Esq our Captain General and Governor in chief in and over our Province of New Jersey and Territories, thereon depending in America Chancellor and Vice Admiral in the Same etc. At the City of Burlington the twenty-fourth day of June in the sixth year of our reign Anno Domini 1769.

¹ His first name was John, but in records not mentioned.

Great
Seal of the Province

"Brought to the office to be recorded June 13th 1803 and recorded the 14th following.

"Examined and agrees with the original Liber A. V. Deeds folio 136.
"JOHN BEATTY, Secretary,
"Secretary of State's Office."

In the year 1701 "a division of the common lands was publicly discussed and the school lands were ordered to be laid out," and the committee to do it,—“be empowered to lay out the same in such place or places as they in their discretion shall judge best, most convenient and beneficial for the town in general.”

In the year 1715, George Brown, Benjamin Dunham, William Ilslee, and John Jaquish were directed “to resurvey the school lands as well as the parsonage lands in addition to their other duties.”

A school was regarded by the settlers as indispensable, was named in the charter, and provision was made for it in the settlement of the town. The school land (by order of the town Oct. 10, 1682) consisted of one hundred acres, twelve were to be marsh and the remaining eighty-eight to be upland.

Although the allotment of a portion of the common lands for the benefit of schools is evidence of the interest in education felt by the first settlers, yet there was no action on the part of the town to effect the establishment of a school until March, 1689, when James Fullerton was, by a resolution in town-meeting, "to be entertained as schoolmaster."

In February, 1694, however, there was no school, and John Brown, of Amboy, or any other person that might be suitable for that employ, was to be "discoursed with" by a committee appointed for that purpose. The following month Mr. Brown was engaged at a salary of twenty-four pounds sterling to keep a free school for the next year. Against this proceeding a protest was entered by John Conger, to which due weight will in all time to come be given when it is stated that on a subsequent page of the same record the gentleman saves himself the trouble of writing his name by substituting therefor "his mark."

There may have been some cause for Mr. Conger's objection, for we find that in November of the same year the town was in treaty with John Backer (Baker) to teach six months on trial, he to keep "ye school this winter time until nine o'clock at night," says the record. He was in the discharge of the duties of the office in June following, but thereafter no mention is made of the schoolmaster for several years; but in December, 1701, a piece of land, "about ten rods," was allowed for a school-house, "provided it did not prejudice the highway." This is presumed to have been the renowned edifice on what is known as Strawberry Hill.

Thereafter nothing appears on the records respecting the school until March, 1735, when measures were taken to make the school lands more productive by the appointment of a special committee to lease and manage them; and such continued to be the mode of administration down to the present century. The first statement made of the amount of the funds which had accumulated for the use of schools appears in March, 1761, when the sum of £321 11s. 11½d. is reported to be in the hands of the committee; and from its rapid increase it is probable more attention was bestowed upon amassing the means than upon disseminating the blessings of education. In March, 1764, the fund was £434 7s. 9d.; in March, 1765, £465 5s. 3d.; in March, 1766, £533 8s. 2d.

At this time a vote was taken "whether or not it was best to take part of the money that was arisen from ye use and Profits of the School Lands and make use of it for ye Schooling of Poor People's children, and the Votes passed in the negative." In September, 1769, the fund had increased to £740; in September, 1770, to £794; in September, 1771, to £850; in March, 1773, to £900; in March, 1774, to £985 4s. 10d.; in March, 1775, to £1063 14s. 11d.; and in November, 1775, to £1062 12s. 6d.¹

The inhabitants appear to have learned something from experience, and after 1789 the interest of the school fund, in connection with the amount of tax assessed upon dogs, was appropriated for the schooling of poor children.

Woodbridge Academy.—In 1793 subscriptions were obtained for money to build the far-famed Woodbridge Academy. It was built by Jonathan Freeman, at a total cost of £342 2s. 4d. The site is now occupied by the down-town district school-house, which was erected in the fall of 1851. "The old academy was sold, and removed to a lot immediately adjoining Mr. George Lasslett's residence, where it stands to this day."

A school-house is mentioned upon Strawberry Hill, and during the Revolutionary war, when the country was overrun by the British soldiers, large herds of cattle were kept by them in the commons around this school-house.

"March ye 12th, 1776. At a regular town-meeting of the inhabitants of Woodbridge the following was passed:

"That Samnel Jaquish, Benjamin Thornal, Moses Bloomfield, Nathaniel Heard, Robert Clarkson, and Joseph Shotwell be continued as trustees to the Scol Land & Money for three year Insuing. The Report made by thee aforsd trustees is that thee Total, Principal, Interest, &c., of Schoool Land Money amounts to £1162 15s. 6d.

"June 1, 1669. Among other specific doings of the township it was so recorded in their charter that the school lands should always be free from paying the Lord's rent of a half-penny per acre, or any other rate or taxes whatsoever forever."

The Elm Tree Institute (formerly known as the Elm Tree Inn) was opened as a high school by Prof. James Stryker in the year 1822, and for many years the school was supported by the inhabitants, and many from a distance sending their children. After Prof. Stryker relinquished it Mr. Marshall took it in charge, but in a short time it was sold, and Mr. George Clinch purchased the property, and immediately raised the building and made it more desirable for the purposes of a school. He afterwards sold it to Thomas H. Morris, Esq., and it was then changed to the name of Elm Tree Institute.

The following interesting statistics by districts for this township gives the number of schools and amounts of expenses:

Name.	No. District.	Appropriated.	Total amount received for schools.
Locust Grove.....	19	$300.00	$300.00
Washington.....	20	300.00	300.00
Rahway Neck.....	21	300.00	500.00
Blazing Staff.....	22	300.00	300.00
Uniontown.....	23	300.00	400.00
Woodbridge.....	24	2101.10	5641.10
Fairfield Union.....	26	727.38	727.38
		$4328.48	$9231.48

The number of teachers is: male, three; female, eleven.

¹ Town Record.

The school-houses in this township are generally kept in a neat way, and have a sufficient amount of grounds surrounding them for the children's playgrounds.

The number of children in the township between five and eighteen years of age is twelve hundred and three. Number enrolled on the school list, seven hundred and ninety-nine.

Among the early teachers was Master William Creamer, who taught a school for a number of years at Uniontown (1817-19). He had a son John, who lived in that neighborhood. He is well remembered by the older inhabitants as a "learned man and well fitted for teaching." From "Record of Marriages," etc., is the following:

School District No. 24 was formed by the consolidation of Districts Nos. 24 and 25 for the purpose of a graded school. The present fine school edifice, with tower, clock, and fine-toned bell, was built at a cost of about twenty-five thousand dollars, the mason-work being done by William B. Van Voast, of New Brunswick, and the carpenter-work by Messrs. Manning & Randolph, of Plainfield, C. Graham & Son, of Elizabeth, N. J., architects. Many improvements since it was completed have been made in finishing of rooms and in furniture, so that the present value of the building is thirty-five thousand dollars. The building was dedicated to free school Jan. 20, 1877.

Trustees in 1876-77, William H. Berry, Charles A. Campbell, and Howard Valentine; 1882, Joseph H. J. Martin, Howard Valentine, and Charles W. Drummond.

Teachers, 1876-77, Mr. Henry Anderson, Miss Helen R. Williams, Miss Kate A. Moore, Miss Laura E. Miller, Miss Helen A. Ensign, and Miss Ida A. Ayres; 1881-82, Mr. Edward L. Anderson, Miss Mattie J. Thomas, Miss Helen A. Ensign, Miss May A. Moore, Miss Sarah McEwen, Miss Edith Scott, Miss Carrie I. Dally, Miss Clara Acker.

Number of scholars on the roll, 347; average attendance, 181.

The situation of the almshouse (poor-house) of Woodbridge is upon the free school lands, which were surveyed in the year 1701.

Barron Library.—Thomas Barron, a native of Woodbridge, and for many years a resident of New York, left by his will fifty thousand dollars for the establishment of a free public reading-room and library in Woodbridge. By his will Dr. Ellis B. Freeman, Rev. George C. Lucas, former pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, and Dr. John C. Barron, of the city of New York, were the trustees appointed. The ground on which the Barron Library stands, on the corner of Rahway Avenue and Freeman Street, was donated by Dr. Barron, it being a part of the original Barron homestead. The architect of building is J. Cleveland Cady, of New York, and the contractor and builder John E. Sidman. The original contract for building, including the laying out of grounds and beautifying them, $17,998.53, and five hundred dollars of which sum was donated by Dr. Barron in the embellishment of the vestibule, and all this exclusive of amounts spent for books, etc.

The library was dedicated and opened to the public on Sept. 11, 1877. In the month of April, 1877, Anthony Schisler, Esq., was elected librarian, and at the same time made secretary of the board of trustees, Dr. John C. Barron at the same time having resigned the secretaryship. The present board of trustees, viz.: Rev. George C. Lucas, chairman; Dr. John C. Barron, treasurer, and Hon. Albert D. Brown. Anthony Schisler is librarian and secretary.

It contains about three thousand volumes of books very carefully selected, covering most points in English literature, to which additions are being made constantly. The reading-room is furnished with daily and weekly papers, together with the illustrated papers.

CHAPTER LXXIX.

WOODBIDGE.—(Continued.)

Presbyterian Church.—The history of this church dates back to the year 1669. The settlers who came, many from the towns of Branford, New Haven, Guilford, Milford, and Hartford, Conn., were accustomed to a government in which their civil and religious duties were closely commingled, and naturally gave their early attention to the establishment of ministers in all their communities. The people of Woodbridge were not exceptions, although great difficulty seems to have been experienced in giving permanency to the residence among them of those called to the town.

The first record made is an account of a committee who were appointed to go to Newark, N. J., and secure, if possible, the services of a minister, June 8, 1669, "as messengers from the town to declare to Mr. Pierson junior that the inhabitants were all willing and desirous that he would be pleased to come up to them and help them in the work of the ministry;" and anticipating an acceptance, Robert Dennis was appointed to entertain him with "meat, drink, and lodgings;" and when on the west side of the creek, called in the records Papiack Creek, similar accommodations were to be afforded by John Smith, the constable.

The application to Rev. Mr. Pierson was, however, not favorably considered by him. The advanced age of his father, who was the pastor of the Newark congregation, rendered the services of an assistant necessary, and measures were in progress to secure the son in that capacity. The application from Woodbridge probably brought the matter to a conclusion, as the ensuing month Mr. Pierson was regularly employed as an assistant minister. This was a great disappointment to the Woodbridge people. A Mr. Peck, of Elizabethtown, was in July, 1670, to be applied to, or to secure a Mr. Samuel Treat "to preach six or seven months." Mr. Treat sent a letter on the 6th of November, which was laid before the town-meeting, and twenty-one pounds sterling was voted that gentleman "for six months' preaching." But no authentic account is given of his ever having permanently settled in Woodbridge. No further proceedings were had on the subject until July 2, 1674, when the town resolved to agree with Mr. Benjamin Salsbury to serve as minister for the space of — months on trial. The agreement was entered into, but on the 27th of October the connection was summarily broken.

A committee was appointed to agree with carpenters for erecting "a meeting-house 30 feet square and 15, 16, or 17 feet between joints;" and on 30th of November a table, room, and other necessities were directed to be provided for the comfortable entertainment of a minister when he should come on trial in the spring ensuing. At this time Samuel Dennis was selected to go North to procure a clergyman, and to defray his expenses three thousand pipe-staves were furnished by Robert Dennis, John Bloomfield, and John Pike, Jr. In May following (1675) negotiations were resumed with "Mr. Jeremiah Peck," the same, it is supposed, who declined their overtures in 1670. Again was the proposition unsuccessful, and another year passed away with the vacancy unsupplied and apparently without further efforts on the part of the inhabitants. In April, 1676, an application was directed to Revs. Richard Ball (or Hall), Sr. and Jr., residing in New England, but they declined, and January, 1677, a definite call was made to Rev. Ezekiel Fogg, he being assured for his encouragement the privileges of freeholder and fifty pounds a year, "to be paid in meat, peas, pork, and (not above one-fourth part in) Indian corn and beef at country prices." The record contains no entries until June, 1679; we have no information of Rev. Mr. Fogg's acceptance, or of his ever being a supply. Though discouraged, the settlers were not in despair; disappointed in every quarter of America, they next turned their attention towards England, and addressed letters to Dr. Bums and Mr. Richard Baxter in July, 1679, desiring them to be instrumental in obtaining a minister for them, and "Captain Bound, an early trader between the two continents, was requested to deliver the letters, and to aid, if necessary, in securing him a passage to America." These exertions appear to have been successful, for in September, 1680, Mr. John Allen commenced preaching among them. Fifty pounds was granted to him, and in November following voluntary subscriptions were directed to be taken for his permanent support.

The meeting-house which it was resolved to build in October, 1674, was by the 27th of May, 1675, raised, and the frame approved by the town, although not thirty feet square as originally contemplated, and a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements, to have it shingled and clapboarded and a floor laid. But the want of a minister seems to have prevented the observance of dispatch in the complete execution of these plans, and it was not until December, 1680, or January, 1681, after Mr. Allen's arrival, that the house was actually floored. In October following it was directed to be plastered, "all but the south side, over the clapboards." In June, 1682, the process of completion was continued "by lathing and daubing the building substantially within as high as the plate beams;" and the "daubing" appears to have been made the employment of all in the town having suitable tools. Nails and hinges for two doors, yet wanting, were also provided, and a lock for a third. These for the time finished the additions to the edifice.

On the 1st January, 1681, the following entry appears on the records: "We, the freeholders and inhabitants of Woodbridge, having sent to England to have an honest, able, godly minister to come over us, to preach the word of God sincerely and faithfully, and Mr. John Alin (Allen), by the providence of God, being for that End Come amongst us, and we having had Sum Experience of his good Abilities, are willing, and doe hereby make choise of him to be our minister, and desire to put ourselfs under his ministry According to the Rules of the gospel."

The satisfaction thus expressed was further manifested by admitting Mr. Allen on the 13th February as a freeholder, and by granting him a house-lot of ten acres, and in September, 1682, a request was directed to be presented to the Governor and Council to induct him formally as their minister, in order that all the immunities of the station might devolve upon him. From this time until January, 1686, we find no allusion to Mr. Allen or the meeting-house. But at the annual gathering of the freeholders in that month a committee was appointed to negotiate with Mr. Archibald Riddell to preach for them, which argues a dissolution of the connection between the town and Mr. Allen, although the name of that gentleman appears in the records subsequently as still a resident. Mr. Riddell probably officiated until he left the country, in 1689.

"He set sail with a son ten years of age in June, 1689, but was doomed to further trials and disappointments before arriving at the end of his voyage. Favorable weather attended him, but on the 2d of August, when off the coast of England, the vessel was captured by a French man-of-war, and the passengers sent to the common jail of Rochefort, whence they were subsequently marched to Toulon, chained two and two by their arms, and at first each ten pair tied to a rope, but this being found an impediment to their traveling was abandoned after the second day. Mr. Riddell was chained to his son. They were six weeks on their journey before they arrived at Toulon, and after a short time were taken back to Rochefort and to Denain, and for over two years kept prisoners in a vault of an old castle. At last they were exchanged for two Romish priests, and allowed to return to Scotland."¹

A committee was appointed "to write for a minister," and in March, 1694, a messenger was dispatched to New England to obtain one in the person of Ephraim Andrews, who consented to go "provided the town doe furnish him with money sufficient for his journey and a horse to ride on." Ten pounds were raised for the purpose.

These measures, however, do not appear to have been successful, and not until October, 1695, do we find the town supplied. Mr. Samuel Shepard then appears as their minister, at a salary of £50, and in May following thirty acres of land and a house was granted to him, provided he should return from New England, whither he was about to go, possibly for his family, and permanently settle among them, conditions which he complied with. The spiritual affairs of the town seem to have prospered under Mr. Shepard's care, if we may judge from the improvements made in the temporalities, the meeting-house galleries, which in May, 1686, were directed to be constructed, and were finished in 1697. £60 were allowed the minister instead of £50, he having been "at the charge of his diet the year past;" and in July, 1698, the walls of the meeting-house were to be white-washed, and a new pulpit built "forthwith."

In March, 1696, it is recorded that William Webster "pretending that it was contrary to his conscience to pay anything towards ye maintenance of a minister," Capt. John Bishop agreed to pay for him as long as he shall live. Kind Capt. Bishop was far more considerate of the spiritual interests of Mr. Webster than of the temporal interests of Mr. Shepard, for we find the following year that the successful pleading of Webster led others to try a similar procedure, and the town found it necessary to ordain that those refusing to pay Mr. Shepard's rate should have a distraining warrant issued against them. This may have checked the evil, but in February, 1670, it was found necessary to change the mode of raising Mr. Shepard's salary, making it depend upon voluntary subscriptions, it having been previously provided for in the common rate levied for the general purposes of the town. At this time, too, a committee was appointed to settle all differences with their "dissenting neighbors, the Quakers," in reference to their refusal to contribute towards the support of "the publique ministry." More than five years had elapsed since Mr. Shepard had entered upon his ministerial functions in Woodbridge, and on April 10, 1701, a committee were directed to confer with him upon the propriety of his being "ordained" as the minister of the town. What necessity existed for this I do not know, but apparently to the surprise and regret of the people difficulties arose in consequence, which, increased by the pertinacity with which female influence and prejudices will be sometimes exercised, resulted in Mr. Shepard's separation from the congregation.

The committee appointed to confer with their pastor reported on the 24th June "that his wife is so adverse to his settling here, that tho' he is otherwise willing to be ordained, he cannot admit of ordination to settle as a minister in this town; and it being moved to him that his wife upon second thought might be persuaded, Mr. Shepard replied, there is no hope of my wife's compliance with my settling here, and therefore I would advise you to look out for another." Unwilling to relinquish the benefits of his ministry, another committee were authorized to negotiate farther with him, but a month later (July 23d) they too reported that "his wife is utterly adverse to his settling here, and he concludes shee will so remaine if we should still wait longer for a change of her mind, and therefore adviseth us to have no farther dependance on him." Whereupon the necessary steps were taken to dissolve the connection and obtain another, but for many years there is no indication on the records of their being supplied. How long Mr. Shepard remained an inhabitant is not known, but in January, 1702, he was requested to preach for the town until another minister should be obtained. He died in the year 1722 or 1723.

In 1707 the Rev. Nathaniel Wade was ordained and installed the pastor of the congregation, and the following entries in the records of the church in Mr. Wade's own writing are before me:

"January 29th, 1707-8, was gathered the church of Christ in Woodbridge by Nath. Wade, pastor. Present there were as Messengers two from ye church of Newark and one from the church of Elizabeth-town: Theophilus Pierson, Jonahs Wood, Benjamin Price. The foundation of ye church was laid first upon three persons who had been communicants in other churches, viz: Sam'l Hail, John Pike, and Noah Bishop."

The names of the members of the church are as follows:

Samuel Hail (assistant), John Pike (assistant), Noah Bishop (assistant), Stephen Tuttle, John Foard, admitted Jan. 29, 1707-8.

Thomas Pike, John Ayres, Richard Skinner (assistant), Joseph Gray, admitted Feb. 28, 1707-8.

Lidea Bishop, Francis Skinner, admitted June 6, 1708.

Matthew Fors, admitted June 20, 1708.

Joseph Thorp, Daniel Britton, Richard Cutler, Sarah Pike, Elizabeth Britton, Sarah Fors, Elizabeth Gray, Lidea Pangborn, admitt^d Aug. 15, 1708.

Sarah Holland, John Ilsley, John Jaques, John Skinner, Nathaniel Pike, Mary Groves, Ann Skinner,

G. W. BOYNTON'S DRAIN PIPE AND TILE WORKS,
WOODBIDGE, N. J.

Elizabeth Hsley, Mary Cutter, Mark Pike, Mary Stilwell, Susannah Jaques, Desire Walker, Mehitable Butler, Hannah Freeman, Mary Wade, Ester Blumfield, John Caplin, admitted Aug. 20, 1708.

Benjamin Jones, John Robinson, Elizabeth Thorp, Nathaniel Dunham, Daniel Dane, Mary Curtis, Phebe Ayres, admitted Oct. 31, 1708.

Mary Ayres, Sarah Conger, admitted Dec. 26, 1708.

William Sharp, Mary Sharp, admitted Jan. 2, 1708-9.

Moses Ralph, Hope Blumfield, admitted Feb. 27, 1708-9.

John Conger, Thomas Collier, Mary Conger, Anna Thorp, Edward Wilkinson, Mary Ralph, Samuel Butler, admitted May 12, 1709.

John Dille, Elizabeth Foard, Hannah Crowell, Joanna Pangborn, Ruth Dille, Susannah Shipley, admitted June 26, 1709.

Peenelipoe Titus, admitted Sept. 4, 1709.

Rebeckah Phylip, Obediah Ayres, admitted Nov. 6, 1709.

Peter Pain, Joanna Ayres, Hannah Right, admitted Jan. 1, 1709-10.

Benjamin Thorp, John Scuder, admitted June 25, 1710.

Hannah Collier, Rebeckah Mills, admitted Sept. 10, 1710.

Joanna Jones, admitted Oct. 3, 1710.

The records of the church state that Mr. Wade administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper the first in the parish, but Whitehead, in his "East Jersey History," thinks this a mistake, and that other errors are also contained in the history.

In 1711, for some cause not now known, Mr. Wade became disliked by a number of the people. They seceded and formed an Episcopal congregation, the Rev. Mr. Vaughan, of Elizabethtown, visiting them at regular periods. Previous to this Mr. Vaughan says, in one of his letters, the people "born in New England and Scotland had been bred in both places in the greatest prejudice and opposition to the Established Church of England."

The first notice of a settled clergyman thereafter appears in 1714, when "Mr. John Pierson, clerk," is mentioned as having been called from Connecticut; but as the salary seemed no longer to have been raised by a general rate upon the inhabitants, there is not the same frequency of allusion to the minister as in the earlier years of the settlement. In 1722 and 1723, Mr. Pierson is mentioned in the town records in connection with the parsonage grounds as "our present minister," although for eleven or twelve years there had been a congregation formed within the town, worshipping in their own edifice according to the forms of the Church of England,—a significant indication of what was "the religion of the States."

Mr. Pierson was the son of the Rev. Abraham Pierson, Jr., whom the town had called in 1669, and the grandson of the Rev. Abraham Pierson, the first minister of Newark. He continued in Woodbridge until 1752. In 1739 his salary was assured to him by mutual agreement among sixty individuals. He was one of the first trustees of the College of New Jersey, and died at Hanover, N. J., in 1770, in the eighty-first year of his age, and in the fifty-seventh year of his ministry.¹

He was dismissed from Woodbridge at his own request, and it is recorded of him "that he was justly reputed and esteemed a worthy and able minister, sound in the faith and of exemplary conversation and conduct. He well supported the dignity of his office, and had but few equals in his day in theological knowledge. It was in his time and by his influence that the congregation obtained a royal charter.

Mr. Nathaniel Whitaker, a licentiate of the Presbytery of New York, followed Mr. Pierson as a supply, and was subsequently called to the pastorate, which he accepted Dec. 10, 1755, and was immediately ordained and installed. Mr. Whitaker continued to officiate until 1759 or 1760, when he resigned his charge.

Mr. Azel Roe was then selected as their preacher, and after being among them for a year or two was, in the autumn of 1763, ordained and installed pastor of the congregation. Some time during Mr. Whitaker's administration a portion of the inhabitants residing in the southern part of the township formed a separate congregation, subsequently known as the Second Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, and eventually as the Presbyterian Church at Metuchen. Mr. Roe officiated alternately in the two congregations very acceptably, and continued among them during the Revolution.

In 1790 the old congregation were no longer satisfied to share the labors of their pastor with another, and after considerable opposition effected a separation from the Metuchen society, and thereafter until 1815, when he closed his long and faithful career in his eighty-second year. Mr. Roe continued to "go in and out" among them, respected and beloved, having been pastor of the flock for about fifty-four years.

In April, 1803, a movement was made towards the erection of a new place of worship, and so vigorously was the work prosecuted, it was finished and consecrated in December of the same year. It yet stands, in all respects a convenient and suitable edifice.

The Rev. Henry Mills was called in 1816 to succeed Mr. Roe, and remained in charge of the congregation until 1821. The next year the Rev. William B. Barton was installed, and for thirty years was their faithful minister. During his administration the number of members reached two hundred and forty-two (in 1843), and at the time of his death, April 7, 1852, there were one hundred and sixty in communion with the church. The number of church-members at the different periods was as follows:

¹ Newark Daily Advertiser, Sept. 11, 1848.

Year.	No.	Year.	No.
1787.....	82	1841.....	194
1830.....	160	1843.....	242
1831.....	157	1845.....	233
1832.....	170	1847.....	213
1833.....	181	1850.....	200
1834.....	184	1852.....	160
1835.....	211	1853.....	163
1837.....	196	1863.....	179
1838.....	206	1875.....	125
1839.....	198	1882.....	158
1840.....	201

The next minister was the Rev. William M. Martin, who accepted the pastorate in 1852, and resigned it in 1863. The Rev. George C. Lucas began to minister here in the year of Mr. Martin's departure, and continued his connection with the church until the autumn of 1873, when he resigned.

Rev. Joseph M. McNulty was invited to this church in 1874; he accepted in the month of July of that year, and is the present pastor, 1882.

CHAPTER LXXX.

WOODBIDGE.—(Continued.)

Trinity Church.—In 1711 a number of persons seceded from the First Church of Woodbridge for the purpose of forming a congregation to be called "Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church." An invitation was sent to Rev. Mr. Vaughan, of Elizabeth Town, to visit them at regular periods, of which the following is a copy:

"Sir the unhappy difference between Mr. Wade and the people of Woodbridge is grown to that height that we cannot joyn with him in the worship of God as Xtians out to do, it is the desire of some people here that if you think it may be for the Glory of God and so damage to other churches that you would be pleased to afford us your help sometimes on the sabbath days, according as you shall think convenient: we do it not with any intent to augment the difference among us but rather hope that with the blessing of God it may be a means for our better joyning together in setting up the true worship of our Lord Jesus Christ here amongst a poor deluded people. This is the desire of your humble servants.

"Rich. Smith, John Ashton, Benj. Dunham, Amos Goodwin, Gershom Higgins, Hen'y Rolph, John Bishop, Will'm Bingle, George Eubanks, Robert Wright."

It appears that the invitation was accepted, as the record says "a house was placed at the disposal of Mr. Vaughn as a place of worship by Benjamin Dunham, and for four or five years monthly services were regularly held. A convenient frame building was also put up and inclosed, but a stop was put to further proceeding and to the growth of the parish by the death of Mr. Dunham on the 31st December, 1715, in the thirty-fifth year of his age, (his grave is in the rear of the church), and the transfer of Mr. Vaughan's services to Amboy and Piscataway."

The ground upon which this edifice was erected is represented to have been a portion of the two hundred acres providently set apart by the proprietors for parsonage lands, but the Rev. Mr. Halliday, who occasionally officiated after the withdrawal of Mr.

Vaughan, states in 1717 that the church was still without either floor or glass, and although divine service was sometimes performed in it afterwards it never was finished, and eventually went to ruin.

Subsequently the visits of clergymen of the Established Church became less frequent, and finally ceased entirely, so that the Rev. Mr. Chandler, of Elizabeth Town, on commencing missionary labors there in 1752, wrote to the secretary of the society in England "they had not been visited by any of our clergy for upwards of twenty years." Some few of the congregation had during this period attended public worship at Amboy, but many connected themselves with other denominations. "Appearances now are much in favor of the church there," says Mr. Chandler, "and I have seldom had less than two hundred hearers." He continued his visits monthly, the number of families professedly Episcopalians being then about fifteen, and his audiences generally numbering two hundred.

In November, 1752, he wrote that the Presbyterians had dismissed their minister, who had been with them for more than thirty years (the Rev. Mr. Pierson), in consequence of his being somewhat dull and too feeble an antagonist of the church, at the growth of which they were much disturbed.

Thus situated was the congregation for several years, excepting that the other engagements of Mr. Chandler did not long admit of his visiting Woodbridge oftener than once in six weeks, on intervening Sundays James Parker officiating as lay-reader to the general satisfaction of the congregation.

In 1754 they erected a church. In 1760 the small-pox carried off many useful and reputable persons in the parish, much to the regret of their zealous missionary. More than half of those who had the disease in the natural way died. Mr. Chandler himself took it in 1757, and did not entirely recover from its effects for three years.

In 1764 Woodbridge was placed in charge of the missionary at Amboy, the Rev. Mr. McKean visiting it once every three weeks, and continued thereafter connected with that parish until the Revolution put a stop to all religious services in the town according to the forms of the English Established Church. Mr. Bingley reading the services, while the Rev. Mr. Preston was the missionary, and absent at Amboy. The congregation then, as for some years before, numbered about fourteen families, although the auditories were large.

The charter of the congregation was granted Dec. 6, 1769, Samuel Jaques and Samuel Tingley being named therein as wardens, and David Alston, Thomas Haddon, Joseph Donham,² and Ebenezer Foster, vestrymen.

In February, 1770, Mr. Preston wrote that his regular induction into the parish as rector was thought advisable in order that he might properly present a claim for a due portion of the glebe set apart by the proprietaries; but as affairs then stood he deemed it best to let the matter remain in abeyance "till people," he adds, "are grown a little cooler, so as to be able to distinguish that a trial of a matter of right is not an attack upon their principles, which I am afraid would hardly be the case at present." The question was again agitated in 1774, and the worthy missionary, averse to entering into a lawsuit, prevailed upon the vestry to propose a compromise; but possession being thought then, as now, "nine points in the law," no terms would be made by the Presbyterian congregation; and a project was on foot to raise a fund to meet the expense of prosecuting the claim in the courts, when the confusion and distractions of the war ensued and effectually stayed the proceedings. If the author has been rightly informed, no portion of the lands set apart for the support of the ministry has been enjoyed by the Episcopal congregation excepting the lot upon which the church edifice is erected.

¹ Pastor of First Church.

² Donham may be Dunham.

After the Revolution, Woodbridge was only visited occasionally by missionaries of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and as a natural consequence both the temporal and spiritual interests of the congregation suffered. In 1810 such was the dilapidated condition of the church that the convention of the diocese appointed a committee to its repair, which was done in the course of the year, through the agency of Mr. Daniel Terrill, of Elizabethtown. From that time till 1830 the Rev. James Chapman, of Perth Amboy, officiated from time to time; and during 1818 and 1819 the Rev. F. H. Cuming also gave the parish a portion of his services. From 1830 to 1840 the Rev. William Douglas had charge of it in connection with St. James', Piscataway, and from 1840 to 1841 the Rev. Frederick Ogilby. From 1841 to 1842 the Rev. Hamble J. Leacock ministered in the parish, and from 1843 to 1857 the Rev. James Chapman has performed missionary. From 1858 to 1862 Rev. E. A. Hoffman ministered here. Rev. Mr. Chapman died in 1857. In 1862 Rev. P. L. Jacques became pastor. In 1869 Rev. R. C. McIlvaine succeeded. In 1872 Rev. J. A. Penniman followed. In October of the same year Rev. T. Lewis Banister assumed the pastorate.

In 1836 the church was whitewashed on the outside and repaired. Trees were planted in the yard to beautify in 1839, and a new stove was procured, and in the summer and fall of 1842 the building was "thoroughly repaired," new seats added, and a vestry-room built. The burning of this old church on Sabbath, March 7, 1858, was followed by a vigorous effort to rebuild. The old timbers were drawn out of the ruins and sold, contributions were solicited from all quarters, and funds were soon raised, and the corner-stone of their new church was laid July 7, 1860, and the following spring, May 20, 1861, the church was duly consecrated by the Right Rev. W. H. Odenheimer, bishop of the diocese of New Jersey. It is a substantial brick edifice, capable of accommodating the present congregation. On the day of consecration a beautiful paten was presented to the church, thus inscribed:

"The Gift of Christ Church, Elizabeth, N. J., to Trinity Church, Woodbridge, N. J.,
Whit-Sun-Monday, 1861."

In 1869, it being one hundred years from the date of the church charter, a centennial service was held, on which occasion an elegant cup was given, bearing the following inscription:

"In memoriam.
Rev. C. Hance to Trinity Church, Woodbridge, N. J.,
December, 6, 1869."

An old cup is still in possession of the parish authorities on which is engraved:

"The Gift of Mary Dennis, Widow, to Trinity Church in Woodbridge, December ye 25th, 1760."

The following wardens from 1810 to 1862: Daniel Terrill, David Bunn, William P. Terrill, John Langstaff, James Jaques, Henry Mundy, Edward Mundy, Henry Campbell, Alanson Newton, Jotham Coddington, Nath. Bunn, Elias Marsh, George A. Hollister, William Taylor, Rene Pardepus, Charles B. Reed, Lorrain Freeman. The following have been vestrymen: Barry Strangman, William P. Terrill, Elias Marsh, John Jaques, James Smith, Alston Bishop, Edward Munday, William Hanham, James Parker, Thomas Barron, Frederick Huffmaster, George Bradshaw, Daniel Terrill, Elias Marsh, James E. Parker, Capt. Forbes, William Herrod, William P. Terrill, Barry Strangman, William Taylor, Abel Clarkson, James M. Brewster, John Brentnall, Nathan Harned, Dr. Matthias Freeman, John Barron, Samuel Barron, Robert Lee, James Clarkson, William Taylor, Joseph Barron, James Parker, Andrew Bell, George A. Hollister, John Zellar, William E. Fink, Rene Pardepus, Alanson Newton, James Jones, John M. Tufts, W. H. Benton, Jotham Randolph, Dennis Mawbey, Frederick Smith, Charles B. Reed, W. W. Mawbey, James Luckhurst, John Manning, J. H. Campbell, Henry Mawbey, Melancthon Freeman, Charles Young, David E. Paton, William Harriot, Josiah Dunham, James Bunn, Daniel Terrill, Orry Rifle, H. Barkaloo, H. Ellwell, Henry Campbell, Robert Lee, Joseph Marsh, C. A. Forbes, Edward Munday, George Jones, Joseph Marsh, Thomas Marsh, Isaac Jones, Frederick Smith, Capt. C. A. Forbes, P. B. Pope, Jotham Coddington, William Bedman, George Lasslett, George Hollister, Henry W. Holton, Milton Arrowsmith, William H. Benton, James Bloodgood, George C. Hance, Samuel A. Mecker, Daniel Shaw.

After the Rev. Mr. Banister resigned the pastorate for some months the church was supplied, when Rev. Julian E. Ingle became the rector in 1876, and remained for nearly three years, and in 1879 Rev. Frank Hallque supplied the parish for one year. The present rector is Rev. Howard E. Thompson, who came October, 1880. The following is the list of officers of Trinity Church at the present time: George C. Hance, senior warden; Jotham Coddington, the junior warden; John B. Osbourn, James V. Freeman, Jonas Coddington, Milton Arowsmith, Edward S. Savage, and Henry A. Hind. Communicants, one hundred; sittings, two hundred.

THE EPISCOPAL MISSION.—Connected with Trinity parish is the Episcopal mission at Ford's Corners, the Rev. Howard E. Thompson officiating there nearly every Sabbath, as many of the neighborhood are interested in this mission. There is an existing endowment fund of five thousand dollars, and with the generous support by the members of Trinity parish this church has bright prospects of its future growth.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The organization of this church dates prior to 1820, which was called the Elizabethtown Circuit, and connected with Rahway. They formed a class of some thirteen members, holding their meetings in private houses, but in 1831 Mr. Gage Inslee gave them some land on Main Street, upon which was built their first house; near them had been situated the Quaker meeting-house and their burial-ground.

From account given by Rev. Joseph W. Dally he says: "At a meeting held at Rahway July 15, 1784, the Friends determined to sell the meeting-house at Woodbridge. An unknown person offered to buy it, but the negotiations were broken off, for a while at least. The old building has long since been demolished, and the ancient burying-ground is now the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church." For a number of years the Methodist society worshipped in their "plain frame structure," and many were added to their numbers. In the year 1869-70, at a meeting of the official board, the society decided that a new church be built upon the same location, which was completed in the fall of 1870, "an elegant brick Methodist Church with a graceful spire," at a cost of $23,000; sittings, 500; communicants, 170. They have also built a substantial parsonage on the same lot west of the church.

The following are the pastors who have served, with the dates: David Bartine, Thomas Sovereign, 1831-32; Rev. William Granville, 1832; Rev. Isaac N. Felch, 1833-34; James Cunningham, 1835; Isaac Cross, 1836; William Hanley, 1838; Wesley Robertson, 1839-40; Mulford Day, 1843-44; Edmund Hance, 1845-46; William A. Wilmer, 1847; Henry Trumbower, 1848-49; Abraham Owen, 1850-51; James H. Dandy, 1852-53; David Graves, 1854-55; Rodney Winans, 1856; John W. Barret, 1857-58; Ralph S. Arndt, 1859; Henry A. Butts, 1860-61; Edward W. Adams, 1862-63; Albert H. Brown, 1864-65; John S. Coit, 1866; Jacob P. Dailey, 1867-68; E. M. Griffith, 1870-71; R. Johns, 1872-73; R. B. Lockwood, 1874-75; S. B. Rooney, 1879; George F. Dickerson, 1881.

The First Congregational Church.—In the year

1874 a meeting was held at the house of Mr. John White to consider the expediency of organizing a Congregational Church, when it was decided the 30th day of September, 1874, and the following gentlemen were elected trustees: Edward J. Thompson, J. Mattison Melick, Charles A. Campbell, John White, Matthias Vanderveer, George F. Fink, and William W. Selleck.

A certificate of incorporation was recorded by the trustees Nov. 16, 1874. The first church services were held in Masonic Hall, Sunday, Oct. 11, 1874. During a few months of its existence the church was without a regular pastor, when, on March 23, 1875, the Rev. S. Lee Hillyer accepted a call, and June 3, 1875, he was installed. A site was selected and the plan of a church adopted. The corner-stone was laid Sept. 9, 1875. The building is of brick, standing on high ground on the corner of Barron and Grove, one of the beautiful avenues of Woodbridge. It will accommodate nearly three hundred and fifty. The Rev. Albert H. Shaw became pastor in the fall of 1877, and remained until the spring of 1880, when the present pastor, Rev. Charles Noble, came. Membership, 115. The following official members: Deacons, 1873-82, James P. Edgar, Lewis D. Kelly, Daniel Voorhees; 1882, Edward J. Thompson.

St. James the Minor Roman Catholic Church.—For many years services were held in a hall supplied by the parish priest from Perth Amboy and New Brunswick. Father Quinn was the builder and main mover in the enterprise in 1867. The parish is well supported by a large number of communicants, who are engaged in the clay-works. Father Connerly and many others have been appointed here. Rev. Father Bettoni, from Hoboken, is the present pastor. There are about seven hundred adults and children connected with the church.

CHAPTER LXXXI.

WOODBIDGE.—(Continued.)

Quakers.—It is a well-known fact that the Friends were much more numerous in this part of the State, and especially in this township, than they are now.

"The first meeting in this section of which we have any account was held Aug. 3, 1686." The old book in which this record is made is a curiosity. It is bound like the Woodbridge town book, in thick sheepskin, and is written in the quaint chirography of the time. The orthography is also unmistakably ancient, but remarkably legible. "With this old book in our hands we seem to be en rapport with the men and events of auld lang syne."

The first entry, "Friends at Amboy agreed to have a monthly meeting there and that upon the second 4th day of each month, and the first to begin the second 4th day of the 9th month, 1686."

The Monthly Meetings continued at Amboy for three years, when they were changed to Woodbridge, the 17th day of August, 1689, and it was voted that the meetings should be on the third 5th day in every month at Benjamin Griffith's in Woodbridge, and that friends in the ministry coming to visit us should be taken care of. The meeting-house was completed Sept. 19, 1713, when their first session was held.

Two letters, signed "G. F." (supposed to have been "Grace Fitz Randolph," wife of Nathaniel), which are full of good counsel, were read in the meeting Dec. 15, 1704, at meeting-house, Woodbridge:

"DEAR FRIENDS,—Be faithful in ye service of God and mind ye Lord's business, be diligent and bring ye power of ye Lord over all those that have gaisaid it; and all you that be faithful go to visit them all that have been convinced from house to house, that if possible you may not leave a hoofs in Egypt, and so every one go seek ye lost sheep and bring him home on your back to ye Fold, and there will be more joy of that one sheep than of the Ninety-nine in the Fold."

From the second letter the following extract is made:

"And Friends all take heed of sleeping, selfishness, and dullness in Meetings for it is an ill-savory thing to see one sit nodding in a meeting, & so to loose ye sense of ye Lord & shamefacedness; and it grieveth ye up-right and watchful, that wait upon ye Lord, to see such things and ye Priest's people and others that come into your Meetings, to see you that come together to worship God and wait upon him to have fellowship in His Spirit, for you to sit nodding is a shame & unseemly thing."

An act having been passed by the Legislature "for the Ease and Benefit of the People call'd Quakers," the April meeting (21st), 1705, made out a certificate, to be used in case of necessity, which, under the provisions of the law, secured to the holder thereof exemption from military duty.

About this time there is spoken of building "ye meeting house and burial place."

The following extract will give the reader an idea of the strictness which was enjoined upon Friends in "ye olden time." They are not considered good Quakers

"If any men or women friends young or old keep not themselves and children to plainness of apparel as becomes our ancient Christian profession. If any men wear long lapped sleeves, coats folded on the sides, superfluous Buttons, broad Ribbands about their Hats or Gaudy flower'd or striped stuffs, or any sort of Perriwigs unless necessitated, & if any are necessitated then that it be as near ye colour as may be to their own, & in respects resembling as much as may be a sufficient natural head of hair without the vain custom of being long behind or mounting on the forehead. Also if any woman yt profess the truth wear or suffer their children to wear their Gowns not plain or open at the breast with gawdy stomachers, needless rolls at the sleeves, or lise their mantles or Bonnets with Gaudy colours, or cut their hair & leave it out on ye brow or dress their heads high, or to wear Hoods with long lappes, or Pinnars plaited or gathered on ye brow or double hem'd or pinched, or wear long scarfs open before, or have their Gowns pinn'd upon heaps or plaits like the vain fashions of the world, or if any are found to wear or follow any other vain and needless fashion & dresses for as it hurts their growth so it also hurtens the life in such as are careful & faithful it being not agreeable to that shamefacedness, plainness, and Modesty which people professing godliness with good works ought to be found in as the Holy Scriptures testify. That, therefore, friends be careful as much as may be not to buy or sell any striped or flowered stuffs, and that all Taylors concern'd be advised not to make any gaudy or superfluous apparel."

"If there be any superfluous furniture in houses as double curtains and Valants great Fringes, &c., that they be laid aside."

"If any accustom themselves or children to call the week, dayes, and months the names given them by the heathen in honor of their Gods it being contrary to scripture and our antient testimony."

"If any accustom themselves or children to speak the corrupt and unscriptural Language of you to a single person."

On the 21st of January, 1706, Nathaniel Fitz Randolph informed the Friends that a plot of land of half an acre could be obtained for six pounds from John Allen. The deed for the land for the meeting-house and burial-ground is recorded in full, and the bounds are thus given:

"On the north by a highway, on ye west by land now in the possession of Benjamin Dunham, on ye south and east by land of the said John Allen," and is dated "the fourteenth day of the second month," 1707.

In 1709 the new building was commenced, twenty feet by thirty feet, and twelve feet high between "ye cell and plate," and not until the 16th of February, 1713, was the meeting-house completed that they were able to hold their first meeting.

"John Allen was requested to keep an eye on the burying-ground, to take care that no creature be turned in there."

"On the 20th November, 1714, after two months' consideration, it was ordered that a stable should be built to accommodate those coming to meeting with horses, to be twenty-five feet in length, sixteen feet in breadth, and six feet between sill and plate. It was to have a shingled roof, the sides and ends to be covered with boards. An agreement was accordingly made with John Vail to put up the building."

On Aug. 16, 1718, Henry Brotherton became janitor of the meeting-house.

"In September, 1719, John Vail was ordered to take down the glass (windows) in the meeting-house and alter it, and put up the shutters on ye fore side."

The Woodbridge Quakers had a very small circulating library, the Friends borrowing the volumes of the Monthly Meeting. The most popular book, if we may judge by the number of times it was called for, was entitled "New England Judged." Besides this there were "George Fox's Journal," "Robert Barclay's Apology," "The History of the Christian People called Quakers," "Forced Maintenance," by Thomas Chalkley, and other works.

A Weekly Meeting was begun Oct. 16, 1725, at John Laing's, to accommodate the Friends who dwelt about him that were unable to attend the services in the meeting-house on account of the distance. John Laing lived at or near Plainfield, and it was certainly a long distance for him to ride every "First day."

At the Monthly Meeting held in Woodbridge on the 18th of February, 1751, we find it stated that some Friends "having been concerned in setting up gravestones in our burying-ground, John Vail and Joseph Shotwell are desired to treat with them and to desire them to have them removed." On the 21st of April a report was rendered that some had taken the stones down but had laid them on the graves. Others had not done even that, the stones remaining in their original positions. On the 18th of the next month, however, it was reported that all the stones were taken down.

In 1751, in May, their first Quarterly Meeting was held in Woodbridge village at the "meeting-house." Heretofore this important body had met in Shrewsbury. John Shotwell and Edward Fitz Randolph were the representatives from Woodbridge Monthly Meeting.¹

Robert Willis was one of the most active ministers of the sect in this part of the country. He often made journeys to other places, to the edification of those among whom he sojourned. On the 17th of April, 1760, he informs the Woodbridge Friends that "he has been under an Engagement of minde for sum time to Vissit the meetings of friends in the Southern Provinces." His proposed trip was approved, and a commendatory certificate was given to him. Sarah Shotwell was also known as a speaker and a pattern of humility and faithfulness. After her death a memorial was written by a committee, John Webster and Abner Hampton, which was adopted in the June Monthly Meeting.

The senior John Vail (there were three Johns) had some eminence several years before as an instructive teacher of the truth. Likewise was William Morris at one time an honored and useful minister, who "went about doing good."

That the society began to wane in Woodbridge and grow in other towns is made a matter that the Friends in Rahway and Plainfield in 1766 take cognizance of: "As Friends Feel a spring of Love in themselves, they cheerfully Give up to Go and partake with their Brethren at Woodbridge;" and on the 19th of April, 1769, the Monthly Meeting held its last session in Woodbridge.

The "slackness and Indifferency" of the Woodbridge members were freely discussed in the November meetings at Rahway.

During the Revolutionary war, 1776, the meeting-house was occupied by soldiers. Joseph Shotwell, Benjamin Shotwell, Abraham Shotwell, John Haydock, John and Hugh Webster are appointed to inquire in what manner they have taken possession thereof, and whether they obstruct Friends from meeting quietly therein. "And they report they took possession of it without leave from any Friends; they at times continue there yet, but don't much interrupt Friends in time of Meetings." (And at this time they must have held their meetings, yet the record goes on to say that in 1769 they held their last meetings.) The following are a few of the names of the Quakers who resided in Woodbridge and vicinity: William Bloodgood, 1700; Charles Brook, 1788; John Atkinson, 1727; Samuel Alling, 1728; Thomas Burling, 1770; Henry Brotherton, 1710; Cowperthwait Copeland, 1750; Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, 1712; Samuel and Joseph Fitz Randolph, 1720; John Griffith, 1709; Thomas Gach, 1721; Jonathan Harned, Joseph Hampton, Solomon Hunt, 1729; Mootry Kinsey, 1764; John Laing, 1741; Joseph Marsh, 1750; George, Samnel, David, Benjamin, Hugh, and George Pound, Jr.; William, Isaac, Titus, John, Jacob, Joseph, Abraham, Samuel, Daniel, and Joseph D. Shotwell; Shobel Smith; Samuel, Isaac, Benjamin, Abraham, Webster, Jacob, and William Thorn; John, Stephen, Isaac, Ephraim, Clarkson, David, and Edward Vail; Morris, Smith, Isaac, and William Webster; Jeremiah and James Wilson. The old meeting-house has long since been demolished, and in or about the year 1784 the lots, including the Friends' burying-ground, came in possession of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Burial-Grounds.—No doubt in the early history of this township there were many private or farm burial-plots, but they have been so sadly neglected (real estate frequently changing ownership, and many of these places being plowed over) that at the present day there is no trace or remembrance of scarcely any of them.

PRESBYTERIAN BURIAL-GROUND.—It is said to be one of the oldest burying-grounds in this State, and contains not only the remains of the earliest settlers but many of those who were noted worthies in the Revolutionary war.

The following record: "Samuel Hale and Adam Hude were appointed on the 29th of September, 1703, to Repair the meeting-house and Hang the Gates of the Burying-Place," and in 1705 a sum of money was levied for repairing the graveyard fence. It is supposed that many were buried here long before the church was built in 1675. Here are the graves of such ancient worthies as the warlike Capt. Matthew Moore, who died, aged sixty-six, Feb. 24, 1732. The family of Pikes are here sleeping their last sleep. Capt. John Pike has no stone to mark his grave, but his son, Judge John Pike, died August, 1714, aged seventy-five years. Edward Crowell, born 1680, aged and living seventy-six years. He was twenty-five years the Woodbridge town clerk. Joseph Gilmans, born 1678, died 1733; Maj. Richard Cutter, born 1682, died 1756; Jonathan Inslee, who was born in 1686, and was buried in December, 1744. Here lie James, Benjamin, and Ichabod Smith, born in the previous century, and resting near each other. Sarah, the wife of Samuel Parker, and daughter of William Ford, lies buried here, her death being recorded as having occurred in October, 1768. Capt. Daniel Britton, a prominent man in the township in his day, died in 1733, and his children lie asleep around him. At the rear of the church, almost within its afternoon shadow, is placed to rest the great Woodbridge judge, Adam Hude, in his eighty-fifth year. He died on the 27th of June, 1746. Near him reposes his worthy companion, over whose grave are written these words : "Here Lyes ye Body of Mrs. Marion Hude, wife of Adam Hude, Esq., For ye space of 46 years dearly beloved in Life and lamented in death. She lived a Patern of Piety, Patience, meekness, and affability, and after she had served her generation in ye love and fear of God, in ye 71st year of her Age, fell asleep in Jesus Nov. ye 30, 1732." Also Henry Freeman, born in 1670, and dying in his ninety-fourth year. All around us as we stand on the consecrated ground are the unpretending memorials of Revolutionary men and women. Here is the sepulchre of Gen. Nathaniel Heard, who died aged sixty-two, Oct. 28, 1792; Capt. Nathaniel Fitz Randolph, the brave and dashing chieftain; Capt. David Edgar, the spirited cavalryman; Lieut. James Paton, the courageous Scotch patriot; Maj. Reuben Potter, the faithful friend of liberty; and a host of others here take their "rest profound." Col. Samuel Crow, Col. Benjamin Brown, Capt. Ellis Barron, Capt. Abraham Tappen, Gen. Clarkson Edgar, and Capt. Matthias Sayers, of Revolutionary fame, are surrounded by many of the "rank and file," and they wait in the quiet graveyard for the grand reveille, when the army of the Lord shall shine in the clouds of heaven, and the dead in Christ shall awake to swell its numbers and shake the gates of Death with their martial tread.

¹ Rev. Mr. Dally's Hist.

How suggestive of other days is the mere mention of the names of those who have "gone down the valley." Judge Jeremiah Manning, Dr. John G. Wall, Justice Henry Freeman, Timothy Brewster, William Jones, Robert Coddington, Samuel Jaques, Robert Lacky, Thomas Haddon, William Brown, John Alston, David Harriot, all of these and many more are gathered within the hallowed precincts of this cemetery. Mr. Dally says in his history it is probable that there are two thousand graves, and in Dr. H. R. Stiles' volume of inscriptions there are nearly twelve hundred, and doubtless as many more are without stones.

EPISCOPAL BURYING-GROUND.—In this burial-place, which dates back to about the year 1714, are a number of graves without headstones, and probably some of them may have been the graves of the Rolphs, Jennings, Olden, Glover, Bishops, Hull, Hodgson, Mollesons, Higgins, Wetherel, Walker, Burrow, Wright, and many others, and as they were the first who espoused the cause and were the helpers in building Trinity Church, Woodbridge, it may possibly be that they are buried here. A few of the earliest dates are :

John Alston (son of David and Mary), died April 1, 1772, aged twenty-nine years.

Joseph Barron, born Oct. 13, 1796; died July 17, 1838.

Mary Bunn, died Dec. 30, 1750, aged thirty-seven years.

Benjamin Dunham, died Dec. 31, 1715, in his thirty-fifth year.

Capt. Samuel Henshaw's wife, Catherine, died Oct. 17, 1768, in her twenty-fifth year.

Samuel Jaques, died May 1, 1780, aged seventy-two years.

Nathaniel Pike, died Sept. 29, 1766, in his forty-second year.

QUAKER BURIAL-GROUND (now Methodist burial-ground).—The deed for the land for the meeting-house and burying-ground is recorded in full, and the bounds are thus given: "On the North by a highway on y^e West by land now in the possession of Benjamin Dunham & on y^e South and East by Land of the said John Allen. Deed dated 14th day, 2d month, 1707, Agreed that Lands design'd for Burying-Place be fenced with Posts & Rails, & John Louf borrow & Joseph Fitz Randolph were desired to endeavour to git somebody to do it. Sept. 20, 1729, this recommends the oversight of the burying-ground to Daniel Shotwell, and Desires that friends or such others as may have leave to bury there be careful in the future to Dig and Leigh the Corps as near to each other as may be with conveniency." In 1751 complaint is made that "Some friends have sett up Grave Stones, and John Vail and Joseph Shotwell are to treat with them for their removal." The burial-ground in 1784, with their meeting-house, was sold to the Methodist Episcopal Church.¹ In this old Quaker burying-ground are sleeping their last sleep the first of this sect in East New Jersey. It is now part of the Methodist Episcopal Church property, and used for cemetery.

Towns and Hamlets.—A portion of the city of Rahway is situated in what was formerly the northerly part of this township. The hamlets of Uniontown, Ford's Corners, Houghtonville, East Woodbridge, and Edgar, with their pretty and substantial homes and school-houses, bear the impress of that contentment which is nowhere so generally prevalent as in the agricultural and rural districts. The city of Perth Amboy lies in the southeast corner of the township, and Staten Island just over the Sound on the east.

THE TOWN OF WOODBRIDGE.—This ancient town has within a few years largely increased in population and general importance. It contains many of the principal summer residences of New York families, and has a population of nearly twenty-five hundred. There are five churches,—Episcopal, Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, and Catholic, which is more especially for the benefit of the miners and laborers employed in the extensive clay pits and potteries in the township. There are eight public schools, with an annual State appropriation of over five thousand dollars, which with the revenue from taxation, etc., gives a total of near six hundred dollars for each district per annum. There are nearly four hundred buildings in the town, a number of stores, including the post-office. The Amboy and Woodbridge Railroad station is nearly in the centre of the town. The Dime Savings-Bank is opposite the Methodist Church. There are brick and clay yards situated on Berry Street. The town has a neat appearance, with many wide avenues and streets. This town is a desirable location for home residences.

¹ See Quakers of Woodbridge.

LEESVILLE, or LEESTOWN, now within a short time called Leestown, is a hamlet near the city of Rahway, settled at a very early date by a family of Lees. It contains many of the early homesteads as they were built a century ago, and many of them still in possession of these same families.

Printing-Press in Woodbridge.—The following is an interesting account of James Parker, the first printer of Woodbridge, who was born here in 1714. His father, Samuel Parker, born June 1, 1674, was the son of Elisha Parker, who removed to Woodbridge from Staten Island about the year 1675. James Parker was apprenticed to William Bradford, the first printer in New York, in 1725. In 1751, Mr. Parker established his press in this town,—the first in this State. It is supposed that the office was located on the lot north of Dr. Samuel P. Harned's residence. In cultivating land near this spot there has been found metal types at different times. There was printed upon this Woodbridge press the legislative proceedings and many public documents. In 1753 he published the New American Magazine, and this was the first periodical published in the State. Each number contained forty pages octavo, and was filled with a variety of entertaining and instructive matter. It was issued monthly until March, 1760, edited by Samuel Nevill, of Perth Amboy, who wrote under the nom de plume of "Sylvanus Americanus."

In 1761 the elder Parker printed on his Woodbridge press the second volume of "Nevill's Laws of New Jersey," and in 1764 he printed a "Conductor Generalis," intended as a guide to justices of the peace. "He was a correct and neat printer, understanding his business perfectly."

The Woodbridge printing-office was burned to the ground by a band of Tories during the Revolution.¹

HISTORIC INCIDENTS.

In April, 1697, an ordinance was adopted against the running at large, unless sufficiently fettered, of all fages more than a year old.

Question. What were fages?

The first saw-mill in the township was erected by Jonathan Bishop on Rahawack River in 1682.

The first school that is spoken of was in 1689, when James Fullerton was "to be entertained as schoolmaster."²

In 1671 some apprehensions were entertained respecting the Indians, and a rate was levied to provide for an expedition against them, ten pounds of powder and twenty pounds of lead being the total quantity of war material required, but there is no account given of the prosecution of the enterprise, or of any actual danger incurred.

In September, 1675, in accordance with an order of the Governor and Council, it was resolved to fortify the prison forthwith by stockades of a half or whole tree, of "nine feet long at least," in the expectation of an attack from the natives, with the view of providing a place of safety for the women and children, but it was never occupied.

In April, 1690, a ranger of the woods was appointed to join similar persons from other neighboring towns, "in order," using the words of the record, "to prevent a danger" (before it comes to our bones) "threatened by the French and Indians." He was to be paid twenty shillings per week, and Mr. Lyon was subsequently paid £1 5s. "for his charges with the Indians." This year the duty could not have been long performed.

These are the only occurrences on record intimating the existence of any apprehended difficulty with the natives.³

The proprietaries in their concessions having directed that in "laying out lands for cities, towns, villages, or other hamlets the said lands should be divided into seven parts, one-seventh part whereof to be by lot laid out," for then it was provided, on granting the charter to Woodbridge, June 10, 1669, "That Ambo Point be reserved towards the thousand acres of upland and meadow that is reserved to be disposed of by the Lord Proprietors in lieu of the seventh part mentioned in the concessions," and that "the nine hundred acres of upland are to be in and about Ambo Point, as it is now surveyed by the surveyor-general, and the hundred acres of meadow is to be laid out by the said surveyor in the most convenient place nearest adjacent to the said Ambo Point." This reservation of "Ambo Point" at this early period for the immediate advantage of the Lord Proprietors is no slight proof of the sound discrimination and judgment of the Governor of State, Carteret.

Elisha Parker, son of Elisha Parker, purchased from his father, Sept. 7, 1680, seven acres in Woodbridge, part of his "home lot, lying on the west side of the highway that goeth from the prison to the meeting-house."

From a newspaper printed in New York (Mercury, 1760), "It says that Governor Thomas Boone, who was appointed to succeed Governor Bernard, reached Amboy by land from New York on Thursday, July 3, 1760." He had been detained some time in the latter city. "The Governor was escorted on his way through the County of Essex by a troop of horse commanded by Capt. Terrill, of Elizabethtown, and through the County of Middlesex by a troop under the command of Capt. Parker, of Woodbridge. On his approach to Amboy he was met by the mayor and officers of the corporation, and conducted by them into the city."

In the year 1732, William Eier "bein dead," this gentleman's house and lands, near the middle of the town of Woodbridge, were advertised for sale.

On the 2d of April, 1776, Capt. Bloomfield's company of the Third Regiment of Jersey troops arrived, crossing the Raritan from South Amboy in the afternoon; but the barracks being already occupied by Col. Heard's militia, they were obliged to proceed to Woodbridge, and thence the next day to Elizabethtown. On the 10th the company returned, and from that time to the 28th, when they again marched to Elizabethtown, they were engaged in throwing up intrenchments under the direction of Maj. F. Barbour, of the First Battalion.

The Virginia Gazette of Aug. 10, 1776, contains the following extract from a letter written by an officer in the Second Battalion of Philadelphia, dated Amboy, July 22d:

"We arrived here on Saturday morning from Woodbridge with our battalion, except Captain Wilcox's company, who are stationed at Smith farm on Woodbridge Neck. We are now in full view of the enemy, only separated by the Sound; our men are in high spirits and longing for an opportunity to have a skirraish."

"Yesterday Col. Atlee's battalion came in and marched along the beach; they made a good appearance, and I think alarmed the enemy not a little. We could distinctly see a number of officers observing with spy-glasses, and their men drawn up in line appeared greatly surprised." We have in all about fifteen hundred men. It is supposed the enemy have about one thousand men opposite us."

"The New American Magazine" was the first periodical of any kind printed in New Jersey, and only the second monthly magazine on the continent. Each number contained about forty pages octavo. January, 1758, James Parker, editor, a monthly periodical, published at Woodbridge, called the "New American Magazine." A history of America and a traveler's diary were published in connection with each number, paged separately, in order to form distinct volumes at the end of each year. The appellation "New" was to distinguish it from its only predecessor at Philadelphia, which, however, it superseded, the publication being immediately relinquished on the appearance of this new competitor.

And to Mr. Parker the credit of establishing the press in New Jersey at Woodbridge, and from time to time printed the proceedings of the Legislature and other official documents.

In January, 1753, he commenced a partnership with William Wey-

¹ So say Robert Coddington and others.

² E. J. Hist.

³ Records of the Township.

James W. Brown

man, which continued until January, 1759, he residing most of the time in Woodbridge, attending to the interests of the press there.

The ancient elm in Woodbridge, N. J., fronting the Elm-Tree Tavern, from its decayed state has been cut down. The trunk was hollow, and measured thirty-two feet in circumference, capable of accommodating fifteen men standing upright within. One limb measured fifteen feet in circumference. About half a barrel of honey, of exquisite quality and flavor, was found in the tree. This was in 1837.

The first grist-mill was erected in 1670-71, by Jonathan Ducham, under an agreement with the town, in which he engaged to furnish "two good stones of at least five feet over. He was admitted a freeholder, and certain grants of land were made to him in consideration of his erecting the mill, his toll to be one-sixteenth." In 1705 another mill was erected by Elisha Parker; in 1709, another by John Pike and Richard Cutter, and in 1710 one by Richard Soper.¹

Previous to 1707 great regularity seems to have been observed in recording the proceedings of the town, but subsequently they received less attention, and there are evident omissions. From 1714 to 1718 there was also, judging from the records, some irregularity in holding the usual meetings for the dispatch of business, but thereafter, although there was less attention given to minor matters (such as were probably confided to the discretion of committees, with powers rendering the action of the town upon them unnecessary), the meetings were held regularly. There is only one instance in the records of any disorganization proceedings in the town, that was in March, 1764, when it is said, after the enumeration of sundry officers elected, "But ye meeting got into confusion, and so broke up."² Until from 1775 to 1783, during which period they appear to have ceased, and also from 1784 to 1788.

It is difficult at the present day to realize the fact that wolves should have given the inhabitants so much trouble as they seem to have done. There were town bounties established from time to time, varying from ten to twenty-five shillings for each head, and there are frequent entries of the names of claimants; among them that of John Hley appears most frequently. He is mentioned twice in 1693, four times in 1695, twice in 1696 and in 1697, twice in 1698, and three times subsequently.

In February, 1671, there were "two wolf Pits" constructed by Ephraim Andros and Thomas Anger and their respective companies.

In February, 1703, John Clarke (or Cleak and perhaps Clark), "for his encouragement in fitting up a fulling-mill," received a grant for twenty acres on the southerly branch of the Rahawack.

Under date of July, 1712, John Pike and John Bishop, Justices, certify that John Robinson when a child had one of his ears partly bitten off "by a jade," that they had known him from childhood, and that he had never been guilty of any crime to merit such punishment. They give him the certificate, "to prevent any scandal that he may be liable unto by strangers in any place where the providence of God shall cast him."

As almost all pasturage was in common in these early periods of the history of the province, great necessity existed for the due identification of cattle by their respective owners, and these marks were consequently duly recorded in the "town book," their number calling for the exercise of some ingenuity in devising the requisite variety. Thus we have for Elisha Parker's mark "a cross of the near ear and a slit on the under side of the same"; for Richard Potter's, "three holes in the left ear"; for Oladiah Ayers', "two half pennies on the under side of the off or right ear"; and for Samuel Moore's, "a half penny on the under side of the right or off ear, and a slit across the upper side of the near or left ear."

At the period of the Revolution the position of Woodbridge among the other towns of the colony was far more important than at present, exceeding greatly in influence many which now are far ahead in the great race of progress. The "Sons of Liberty" of Woodbridge and Piscataway took the lead in 1765-66 in several of the prominent measures of the day, and it was through their interference mainly that William Cox, of Philadelphia, was led to decline the office of stamp distributor for New Jersey; a deputation from them to that gentleman, while instructed to treat him with great deference and respect, bearing to him a communication to the effect that a week's delay in resigning the office would render a visit from them in a body necessary, and produce results mutually disagreeable.

The town was then on the great thoroughfare between New York and Philadelphia, and the road which was traveled over by the wories of that day retains for miles the characteristics it then possessed; so that when the octogenarian points along it and describes the passage through the place of Washington on his way to New York to be inaugurated President, or details other events occurring on the route, it is comparatively easy to conjure up the scenery and the actors. The main features of the country, too, are unchanged; the pleasing undulations of the surface, diversified with wood and meadow, exhibiting the good judgment of the early settlers in selecting the site for an agricultural community. "The forms which the earth wore and the hues with which the air was beautified in ancient days are still the same" in general appearance, however changed may be the denizens of the place.

It is manifest, however, that it is still within the domain of Time and subject to the modifications which he is forever working. Many objects that were wont to meet the eye of the traveler have disappeared, not the least among them being the famous elm-tree, upon which the author's boyish eyes were wont to gaze in admiration, and which was noted the country round, both for its size and for its pointing out the village tavern, and there was no one thoughtful enough to perpetuate its memory either by pencil or description. Perhaps the woodman, beneath whose axe it fell, felt less its loss than he who a thousand miles off read its obituary in a stray paragraph of a newspaper. Another link of the chain connecting the present with the past was severed. The man's hold upon the days of his childhood was less secure.

In 1810 the population of this township was 4247; white males, 1980; females, 1903; all other free persons, 134; and slaves, 230.

Poor Rates.—No regular assessment for the support of the poor seems to have been made prior to October, 1705, when £30 was to be raised for that purpose. In 1707 £28, in 1711 and 1712 £30 each, and in 1714 £15 were the amounts appropriated, but the last-named sum was not raised until 1718. Subsequently a rate was established almost yearly, varying from £30 to £60, till 1751, and therefore till the Revolution from £70 to £100, and in some years going as high as £200, as in 1764 and 1765, and in 1775 to £220, but this was to cover the expense also of copying the old town book, it being "in a Dangerous Situation" by reason of its being "Old and Mutch to Peases;" but this probably was never done as the old book still exists, although the lapse of time has tended to increase the number of its pieces materially. After the Revolution the appropriation was £100 to £300, but towards the close of the century £400 were raised for their benefit. It was a custom for a time for the poor to be supported in private families, and in 1770 the announcement is made that "the poor are to be sold at public vendue." And during these years the poor who were put to the lowest bidders agreed to their maintenance, being at all expense for clothing, medical attendance, funeral charges in case of death, etc., bonds being given to indemnify the township and to deliver up the paupers at the close of the year well clad.³

Copper-Mines.—It appears that at an early date "mining operations were carried" on in different parts of this township. Many places can be pointed out where deep declivities have been made and abandoned. How much and what was obtained remains a blank to the present time. Before the war of 1812 a mine was worked near what is now known as Menlo Park, and again it was worked in 1827, and now at the present time Mr. Edison and others are at work in exploring this copper-mine, and it is said may be successfully worked. It is just on the line between the townships of Raritan and Woodbridge.

¹ Whitehead, E. H., Perth Amboy.

² Records.

³ East Jersey History.

Paquet Creek.—In 1804, Timothy Brewster built a bridge and mill-dam here. He had his grist-mill and saw-mill. It was pulled down a few years ago.

Interesting Facts.—Gen. George Washington came to Woodbridge the 22d of April, 1789, and put up at the Cross and Key Tavern, and was escorted to the hotel by the Woodbridge Cavalry, Capt. Ichabod Potter commanding. He was on his way to New York to be inaugurated President of the United States.

When Gen. Lafayette visited this town, on Sept. 24, 1824, one of the special features of his reception was the presence of sixteen little girls dressed in white, each bearing on her bosom a letter made of marigolds, which together formed the words, "Welcome Lafayette." The following are the names: Margert, daughter of Maj. William and Phebe Edgar; Harriett, Eliza J., and Henrietta, daughters of Capt. John and Margaret Prior; Mary, daughter of Gage and Mary Inslee; Deborah and Lucretia, daughters of Abram and Deborah Lee; Adaline and Louisa, daughters of Dr. Matthias and Mary Freeman; Julia Ann, daughter of Col. Henry and Margaret Osborn; Sarah and Rebecca, daughters of James and Anna Coddington; Eliza, daughter of Henry and Catherine Howell; Eliza Ann, daughter of Nathan and Hannah Stansbury; Elizabeth, daughter of Prof. James and Cornelia Stryker; and Charlotte, daughter of Josiah and Matilda Ayres.¹

Post-Offices.—Under Dr. Franklin's superintendence, in January, 1764, James Parker, comptroller, then residing at Woodbridge, under a heading, "For the benefit of Trade and Commerce," gave notice that a post-rider with the mail would leave New York that day at one o'clock for Philadelphia, and until further orders would leave each city every alternate day, "if weather permits." Letters to pass from city to city in less than twenty-four hours.

The following rates of postage were established in 1765:

Letters between London and any American port, in British packet-boats, 1 shilling.

Letters by sea from one port to another in any of the British dominions, in such packets, 4 pence.

Letters by land to or from any chief post-office in America from or to any other part thereof not over 60 miles, 4 pence.

Over 60 miles and not exceeding 100 miles, 6 pence.

Over 100 miles and not exceeding 200 miles, 8 pence.

Any farther distance not exceeding 100 miles, 2 pence additional.

And all farther distance 2 pence additional.

Double, treble, and ounce letters paying in proportion.

What the rates were previously is not known. In December, 1753, Parker, the editor of the Post-Boy, complained that he had to pay "twenty cents" for the postage of a communication from New Jersey that could not have filled a sheet, from which we may judge the rates must have been much higher.

The charge for newspapers sent from Europe by the then post was: Postage on "the German papers at 4 shillings and 6 pence per year; the English papers at 7 shillings and 6 pence per year," and prompt payment each quarter.

The following have been the postmasters in Woodbridge to date:

John Manning, appointed July 31, 1792.

Philip Brown, appointed July 1, 1795.

John Voorhees, appointed April 1, 1800.

Thomas Jackson, appointed July 1, 1800.

James Jackson, appointed Oct. 27, 1804.

Alex. Ayres, appointed Nov. 27, 1817.

Phineas B. Freeman, appointed Feb. 3, 1818.

Henry Potter, appointed April 23, 1821.

James M. Brewster, appointed April 15, 1824.

David E. Paton, appointed Nov. 2, 1825.

John Stryker, appointed April 10, 1826.

Harninius Barkalow, Jr., appointed Jan. 9, 1828.

John E. Barron, appointed Oct. 14, 1828.

Rene Pardessus, appointed Jan. 4, 1840.

John E. Barron, appointed July 1, 1841.

Isaac Smith, appointed Dec. 2, 1843.

Alexander A. Edgar, appointed July 16, 1847.

Joseph H. Brewster, appointed March 19, 1850.

Jeremiah Ten Eyck, appointed April 2, 1851.

Alexander A. Edgar, appointed June 3, 1853.

Samuel E. Freeman, appointed June 8, 1861.

Marcus A. Brown, appointed Feb. 21, 1871.

Daniel W. Brown, appointed April 26, 1878, the present postmaster.

Americus Lodge, No. 83, F. and A. M.—This Masonic lodge (Blue Lodge) was incorporated Feb. 18, 1867. The names of charter members: William T. Ames, W. M., 1867; Isaac Inslee, J. S. W., 1867; William B. Reed, J. W., 1867; Charles C. Dalley, Robert J. Wylie, Charles M. Dally, Daniel W. Brown. The present official members: Isaac Inslee, J. W. M., 1882; Isaac N. Harned, S. W., 1882; George Brewster, Jr., J. W., 1882; Robert J. Wylie, S. D., 1882; B. W. Drummond, J. D., 1882; Daniel W. Brown, secretary, 1882; William T. Ames, treasurer, 1882. They hold regular meetings in the Masonic Hall.

"The Independent Hour."—In the old school building, which was removed to its present location nearly opposite the old historic "Pike Tavern," has been fitted up the publishing office of this well-conducted weekly township newspaper, The Independent Hour, first established and paper issued by the former editor, Mr. Alfred W. John, April 13, 1876, and who conducted it for nearly three years. The present editor, Peter K. Edgar, Esq., purchased the paper in 1879, and every Thursday issues a neat eight-page newspaper containing interesting township news.

¹ We are indebted to Mr. Jeremiah Dally for these two historical facts.

Parsons & Co. N.Y.

Hampton Cutter

J. C. Cutler

W. H. CUTTER.

Woodbridge Railroads.—The facility for reaching this town. There was laid a branch road from Perth Amboy to Rahway, connecting with the Pennsylvania line, and the depot here was built in 1873, bringing Woodbridge and the neighboring towns within a few minutes' ride. There is also a station, called the "Spa Spring," and the "Edgar."

The Long Branch Road have a station called "Seawaren," about one mile and a half from the village of Woodbridge.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JAMES M. BROWN.

George Brown, the progenitor of the family in Woodbridge, came from Scotland, and is the one named as one of the trustees of the first Presbyterian Church organized in Woodbridge. His son Thomas died Oct. 28, 1781. John, son of Thomas, born Nov. 1, 1752, died on the homestead in February, 1828. Thomas C., son of John, was born Dec. 23, 1787, and died March 12, 1845. His wife, Abigail Moores, was also of Scotch extraction.

James M., son of Thomas C. and Abigail Brown, was born on the ancestral homestead in Woodbridge Aug. 5, 1819, and was third child in a family of six children. He completed his education in the school at Woodbridge in 1836. Choosing a business life, he served for four years as clerk in the general store of W. & P. Brown, of Rahway, afterwards in the store of his brother, John T., in New York, for two years, when his health failing he regained it after service on board a coasting vessel for seven years, commanded by Capt. David Tappan. In the spring of 1845, upon the death of his father, he returned and assisted in the management of the farm. He married, Oct. 23, 1846, Phebe J., daughter of Crowell and Fanny L. Hadden, of Brooklyn, N. Y., formerly of Woodbridge, who bore him two children,—Lewis, died at the age of seven; and Thomas C., resides at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been zealous members of the Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, the former since 1842. Mrs. Brown was a lady of rare intelligence and culture, was well versed in both vocal and instrumental music, and died Dec. 6, 1880, aged fifty-three years.

Mr. Brown has been a member of the board of trustees of the Presbyterian Church since 1853, and a deacon in the church for the same length of time. He cast his first vote for President for Harrison in 1840, and has voted on the Whig and Republican tickets at every Presidential election since. Mr. Brown is president of the Rondout and Kingston Gaslight Company, of Rondout, N. Y., and manufactures gas by a new process, which is made cheaper than the old one, and now becoming very popular, using only naphtha and anthracite coal in its manufacture.

THE CUTTER FAMILY.

HAMPTON CUTTER, who was a farmer and clay merchant, was born Dec. 25, 1811, in Woodbridge township, Middlesex Co., N. J., and was the fifth child of the late William C. and Sarah (Herriott) Cutter, of that section. The Cutter family are of Scotch and English extraction. One Richard Cutter, with his mother, brother, and sisters, arrived in Massachusetts about 1640, and settled in and about Cambridge. A grandson of Richard Cutter, himself bearing the same name, and known as Maj. Richard Cutter, was the first of the name to leave New England and settle in a distant locality. He married Mary, daughter of John Pike, Aug. 20, 1706. This John Pike was one of the first and most active settlers of Woodbridge. Maj. Cutter died in 1756, leaving a numerous progeny, and from his fourth child and eldest son, Deacon William Cutter, who died in 1780, Hampton Cutter was the third in descent, being his great-grandson. He assisted his father in farming operations until 1836, when he married, and then continued in agricultural pursuits on his own account. In 1845 he commenced to dig kaolin, having discovered a large deposit of this valuable material on his farm. It is used with clay in the manufacture of fire-brick. Several years after he reached a strata of fine blue clay, which also largely enters into the composition of fire-brick, and for many years was engaged very extensively in supplying this valuable article to manufacturers, not only of his immediate neighborhood, but in Portland, Boston, Albany, Cleveland, etc. During the later years of his life he associated his sons, Josiah C. and William Henry, with him under the preceding firm-name. For many years he was called upon to serve the public in various local offices.

From 1860 to 1875 he served as justice of the peace, declining to officiate longer, and twice he served on the board of chosen freeholders of Middlesex County. From 1868 for fourteen years he was a director in the National Bank of Rahway. For fifty years he was a member, and for twenty-six years was one of the trustees, of the old Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, seven of which he was the honored president of the board. He was married Jan. 26, 1836, to Mary R., daughter of Josiah Crane, of Cranford, N. J., his family consisting of four children, two sons and two daughters. He died Feb. 19, 1882.

JOSIAH C. CUTTER, eldest son of Hampton and Mary R. (Crane) Cutter, was born in Woodbridge, N. J., Nov. 11, 1836, where he was educated and always resided. Through boyhood and manhood he was widely and most favorably known to the entire community, as he was energetic and very ambitious, and always interested in the public welfare of the place and church with which he was connected. He was a man of retiring disposition and close business application. For several years he had been a member of the Town Committee and held several other public offices. He was treasurer and secretary of the Woodbridge Dime

Savings-Bank from its organization in the winter of 1871 until his death. Politically he was a Democrat. In early manhood he became a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, and continued a devout Christian through his life. He was in feeble health for some time, and died Sept. 18, 1877. In his death the church and community lost one of its worthy and highly esteemed citizens.

W. H. CUTTER, son of Hampton Cutter, and successor to the firm of Hampton Cutter & Sons in the clay-mining business, was born June 22, 1840. His youth was spent in the private and public schools of Woodbridge, where he received a fair education. At the age of eighteen or nineteen he joined his father and brother, Josiah C., the latter of whom died Sept. 18, 1877, in the clay-mining business, to which he succeeded by will upon the death of the father, he having received the property in the same manner from his father, William Cutter. Through each succeeding generation this business has been a representative business interest of that locality.¹

In politics Mr. Cutter is a Democrat, though he takes no active part, frequently declining positions tendered him. He was married June 14, 1871, to Sarah R., daughter of Samuel Barron, of Woodbridge. Samuel Barron died March 4, 1870. His children are Hampton and Laura L. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cutter are members of the Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, he having served three years as trustee of the same. Mr. Cutter devotes his time chiefly to the clay-mining interests.

WILLIAM H. BERRY.

William H. Berry, manufacturer in Woodbridge, is a native of New England, having been born in Litchfield, Me., Sept. 18, 1805. His grandfather, Nathaniel Berry, served throughout the Revolutionary war with bravery and distinction, and shortly after 1777 was attached to Gen. Washington's life-guard with others distinguished for their courage, hardihood, and trustworthiness. He died at Pittston, Me., Aug. 20, 1850, in the ninety-fourth year of his age, and was buried with civic and military honors by a large concourse of his fellow-citizens, who continued to cherish the remembrance of his virtues and services. At the time of his death he was the last of Washington's life-guard. His son, John Berry, was a farmer, and married Elizabeth Robinson, a native also of Maine. When well advanced in life John Berry removed from Litchfield to Gardiner, Me., and there their son, subject of this sketch, William H., received his education in the public schools. Upon leaving school, at the age of nineteen, he entered upon a maritime career, and followed the sea for six years, beginning as a common sailor and finishing as first officer. For two years following he was in business with his brother in Jersey City, baling and shipping hay. In 1832 he settled in Woodbridge, and continued the same business and the coal business until 1845; and he was the first to introduce anthracite to that community, bringing from Rondout, N. Y., via Hudson River. So slowly did this coal come into general favor that only forty tons of it were sold during the first two years. In 1845 he embarked in his present business, the manufacture of fire-brick, and with his characteristic energy soon rendered this one of the leading interests of the community. This business he has so increased that with his full complement of hands he can produce one million fire-bricks per annum, and with a trifling additional cost twice that number. His works being located on the creek, he has both water and rail transportation for marketing, and the reputation of his works is wide-spread. Mr. Berry is public-spirited, takes an active interest in local matters, and has acted as township committeeman and chairman of the board. He obtained from the Legislature in 1871 a charter for a Dime Savings-Bank, and has been president of its board of directors since. He served as trustee of the public schools for eleven years, and in 1877 was engaged in building a school-house, costing nearly thirty thousand dollars, an ornament to the village; and he was the first to introduce into Woodbridge scales of heavy draught. He was an ardent supporter of the Union cause, giving time and money, during the late Rebellion, and fitted up a portion of his factory buildings, where soldiers of the vicinity were exercised in the army drill. His son, William C. Berry, on the breaking out of the Rebellion organized a company of the young men of the village, and in August, 1861, a part of the command joined Company H, Fifth New Jersey Volunteers, he himself being commissioned as first lieutenant. On the 5th of May, 1862, while leading his men in the battle of Williamsburg, he fell a martyr to his country's cause. His body was recovered and now rests in the Alpine Cemetery, between Woodbridge and Perth Amboy.

Mr. Berry married in May, 1835, Margaret Coddington, of Woodbridge, whose grandfather, Robert Coddington, was one of a party of three who, during the Revolutionary war, captured off Perth Amboy a British vessel laden with stores. It was in the winter season when the attack was made, and the ice was thick enough along the shore to sustain a heavy burden. The stores were subsequently drawn on the ice to Perth Amboy, together with one of the British cannon, which was used for many years afterwards in celebrating American independence. In 1874 the Town Committee presented the gun to the New Jersey Museum of Revolutionary Relics at Morristown. Mr. Berry is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Woodbridge, of which he has served as trustee for nearly forty years, and as president of the board for about thirty years. For over a quarter of a century he has acted as class-leader, and for several years has been superintendent of the Sunday-school.

¹ See Prof. Cook's report for statistics.

Wm. H. Berry

Wm H. Berry

Samuel Dally

SAMUEL DALLY.

Samuel Dally, son of Charles Dally and Nancy Gamberton, was born in Mutton Hollow, Woodbridge township, N. J., Jan. 26, 1810. As far as can be ascertained, his ancestry on his father's side was English; his mother was of French extraction. The first and most remote ancestor bearing the family name was one Sarah Dally, widow, living in Bethlehem, Hunterdon Co., N. J., Aug. 28, 1765. At this time she was quite advanced in years. Her husband's name is not known. She had a son Charles, who had emigrated to Augusta County, Va. He married Elizabeth Tilton, by whom he had one son, Samuel, born in 1732. When Samuel was old enough to learn a trade he came to Woodbridge, N. J., and became a weaver. He married Mary Jones, by whom he was the father of four children, to wit: Sarah, May, Mercy, and Jeremiah. The last named learned the weaver's trade with his father, and worked on a small farm which he owned. Jeremiah married Elizabeth Gage, by whom he became the father of Charles, who is mentioned above as the father of the subject of this sketch.

At the age of sixteen Samuel Dally was indentured to David Guyon, of Rahway township, as an apprentice to learn the blacksmith's trade. After working about two years in Rahway he was attacked with malarial fever, and became so enfeebled by it that his father stipulated with Mr. Guyon and secured his release from his indenture. After this he remained at home, working with his father at the weaver's trade, till he was married, Jan. 2, 1831, to Miss Deborah Barnes Harned, youngest child of Jonathan and Elizabeth Harned, of Woodbridge township. Tradition says he was a wild boy, but getting married tamed him. Industry took the place of idleness, and earnest business was substituted for profitless vacancy. His advantages to acquire an education were small at best, and lessened by his own indisposition to study and by his love of fun. For past folly he now strove to make amends as far as possible and fit himself for useful stations in life. He stipulated for a farm, and by assiduous labor in farming through the summer and by peddling oysters in the winters through the west of New York and Pennsylvania, exposed to many hardships and privations, he succeeded in six years in paying for the farm.

In 1840 he commenced the butcher business, and prosecuted it successfully for eight years.

In 1846 his father died, and by his will made Samuel executor. In the division of the estate Charles M. received the homestead, and was thus constituted the natural successor of his father in the clay business. But his tastes being foreign to the prosecution of the business, which his father had to some degree developed (he being the first clay merchant of Woodbridge township), Charles proposed to sell the homestead to Samuel, and his proposition was accepted.

In 1848 Samuel quit the butcher business and commenced to quarry clay. In this branch of business he continued for sixteen years and amassed a comfortable fortune. In 1849 a great sorrow came to him in the loss of the wife of his youth. Seven children were made motherless and he solitary in this crushing bereavement. In November, 1849, he married Mrs. Catharine M. Stone, by whom he had four children.

The confusion and demoralization produced among the laborers by the recruiting officers offering large bounty for enlistment in army led him to quit the clay business in 1864. Since then he has not been in business.

It was a common saying in the community that whatever he put his hand to prospered. So it seemed from the beginning to the end of his business career. But no mere smile of the fickle goddess fortune secured for him this prosperity, success came according to the inflexible laws of human limitations and surroundings. In the elements of his character and the method of his working may be found an easy solution of all his prosperity. In early life he resolved to be a sober man, and such was the power of his will that to resolve was the invariable antecedent to the fulfillment of his resolution. He resolved to be prompt and to do without delay the duties of the hour. Hence he was saved all the time usually wasted in indecision and procrastination. His promptness in paying his bills led men to believe, long before he had a fortune, that he must be rich.

He resolved always to honor God, and never in the family nor in business did he compromise Christian principles. His good health and good judgment, joined with these resolutions, have made him a man of mark in the county in which he lives. At the age of seventy-two he is still strong and vigorous,—an example to young men of the fruits of sober industry and uncompromising piety.

THE BARRON FAMILY.

THOMAS BARRON, second son of Joseph and Fanny Brown Barron, was born in Woodbridge, June 10, 1790. He received only a common school education, and at the age of fourteen became a clerk in his father's store, where he developed a prodigious aptitude for business. He was soon commissioned by his father to buy and sell in New York, where in 1814 he took up his abode; for a short time was a partner of J. C. Marsh & Co., and then of Laing & Randolph, one of the leading houses in the West India trade. After making two trips to the West Indies in 1817, he dissolved his business relations with Laing & Randolph, and formed a partnership with J. I. Coddington, and the same fall embarked in business in New Orleans. The house of Thomas Barron, during the twenty years of its existence, was one of the best known in the South, and had representatives in Liverpool, London, and New York. In New Orleans he was a director of the Louisiana Branch of the United States Bank.

Having amassed a competency he withdrew from active business life, and thereafter devoted his time to unostentatious philanthropy, to study, and his favorite sport of fishing. History and geography were favorite fields of research, but during the last decade of his life these were largely supplanted by astronomy. He read Herschel, Humboldt, and other important works, and few men were better read, and few men were better able to arrange and utilize their mental acquisitions. For many years he was a member of the New York Historical Society, a fellow of the American Geographical Society, of the American Museum of Natural History, corresponding secretary of the New Jersey Historical Society, and for thirty years he kept a diary in which he noted the important events of the times. He loved his country, and took an active interest in the preservation of the Union, by making large contributions for sanitary purposes and the equipment and comfort of the soldiers, and after the war he aided largely the Military Post Library Association. He died Aug. 31, 1875, and in his will made munificent bequests to the New York Historical Society, New Jersey Historical Society, New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, Juvenile Asylum, Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, American Female Guardian Society, and Home for the Friendless, and, greatest of all, the Barron Library.

JOHN BARRON was the third son of Joseph and Fanny (Brown) Barron, and born at Woodbridge, on the family homestead, Oct. 18, 1792. His education was mainly obtained in his native place, being completed by attendance upon lectures in New York while passing two years in that city (during 1809 and 1811), learning the trade of cabinet-making. Upon his return to Woodbridge he built a large manufactory and prepared to conduct his trade on an extensive scale. His adventure was in advance of the times, and, unable to dispose of his wares near home, he sought a market for them in New Orleans, having some knowledge of this city from his brother Thomas, who had been a resident there for several years. Going South by sea, he was fairly successful in his sales, and these being completed, he returned to the North by the circuitous stage and post route then existing.

The limited demand in his immediate neighborhood for cabinet-ware and his own failing health induced him to abandon his manufacturing. He purchased a farm on the then outskirts of Woodbridge, and in agricultural pursuits he passed the remainder of his days. Until 1858 the farm remained

John C. Fawcett

EXCELSIOR FIRE-BRICK AND CLAY RETORT WORKS.

HENRY MAUER, PRINTER AMBOY, N. J.

HENRY MAURER'S

EXCELSIOR FIRE-BRICK AND CLAY RETORT WORKS.

Joseph Forbes, of Perth Amboy, in 1850 started a brick-manufactory, and continued until the year 1862, when he sold out to Mr. E. W. Crossett, of Long Island, who remained a few years, and then sold to Horten & Mabe, of Peekskill, N. Y., when Mr. Caleb Hughes commenced making Portland cement and ground lime, and erected a Hoffman kiln, the largest in this section of country. He afterwards sold out the works in 1872-73 to Charles Anness & Son, of Perth Amboy, but soon afterwards the present manager and owner, Henry Maurer, of New York City, purchased the property.

There are about seventy-five acres belonging to the works, and a mile of water front on Woodbridge Creek and Staten Island Sound; and eleven acres of clay-banks, situated in the village of Woodbridge, consisting of ware and other fire and retort clays.

The factory and clay lands are supposed to be worth $100,000. The brick-kiln building is 75 by 240 feet, two stories high; the brick-retort building is 80 by 175 feet; the central building, with drying-pans, is also 80 by 175 feet; the machine-shop, engine-room, and pit-shed is 90 by 300 feet; and the clay-sheds are 30 by 300 feet.

The following is an account of the clay interests and the manufacture of hollow bricks prior to 1875. Hollow bricks had been introduced for house building in Europe. They are light, strong enough to hold up all the weight that can be loaded upon them, and they make a drier wall. Dry bricks are not good conductors of heat, and the air inclosed in the hollows increases this non-conducting property. Houses built of such brick keep out the summer's heat and the winter's cold better than those built of solid brick. They were not much used in this country until 1878. Henry Maurer, of Perth Amboy, has been engaged in their manufacture since that time, and this branch of his business is steadily increasing.

Roofing tiles have been long in use, and now fill an important place in ornamental architecture, and their strong colors and manageable forms make them an effective addition to the resources of the architect. The New Jersey buildings on the Centennial grounds at Philadelphia in 1876 were covered with tiles made by Mr. Maurer.

Draining tiles are prepared from the same clay that is used for common brick, of which great quantities are made from the brick clays of this district.

Mr. Maurer has every facility for increasing his works, and at the present time is erecting a number of buildings to accommodate his employees. This property is situated in Perth Amboy, at nearly equal distance from the depots of that place and Woodbridge. There have been a number of analyses made out of seven of the richest and purest clays. The sum of the averages for silica, alumina, and water is as follows, upon the basis of 100:

Silica.....	45.20
Alumina.....	40.42
Water.....	14.38

Mr. Maurer, the proprietor of the Excelsior Fire-Brick and Clay Retort Works, and also manufacturer of every variety of hollow brick for fire-proof buildings, has his principal office and depot at 418, 420, and 422 East Twenty-third Street, New York.

Henry Maurer

as when he cultivated it, but since then, in common with other outlying portions of Woodbridge, it has undergone an entire change. Barron Avenue divides it, the Congregational Church stands upon land that formed a portion of it, and a large section purchased by the Hon. Charles A. Campbell has been covered with handsome buildings.

In politics, as in everything else, John Barron was a man of decided opinions. An old-line Whig, he spoke out his views with no uncertain voice, and in warmly-contested elections his influence was always an important factor in the success of the Whig ticket in Middlesex. In the Polk-Clay campaign he was especially active, his energy having a very considerable influence upon the vote in his section of the State. Being much depressed by the loss of his wife in 1851, his feeble health grew feebler day by day till his death, which occurred Oct. 16, 1853.

JOHN C. BARRON, M.D., New York, son of John and Mary (Conner) Barron, was born in Woodbridge, Nov. 2, 1837. After receiving preliminary education at a select school in his native town he entered Burlington College at Burlington, N. J., the institution being at that time under the rectorship of the Right Rev. George W. Doane, D.D., bishop of the diocese of New Jersey. In 1858 he passed hence to Yale College, studying in the scientific department, and at the same time attending lectures in the eminent private school of Drs. Jewett, Hooker & Knight. In 1860 he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, graduating thence in 1861. In April of that year, immediately upon receiving his degree, he entered the United States volunteer army as an assistant surgeon, being passed by the "Board of Army Examiners" sitting at Albany, and was assigned to the Mechanics' Rifles. This position was declined on account of being tendered the assistant surgery of Sixty-ninth New York Regiment, then in the field. This regiment was among the foremost to offer their services to the general government early in 1861.

Dr. Barron immediately upon his appointment, with a detachment of the regiment, proceeded to Washington and was sworn into the service of the United States, going at once to active work with the regiment, then the advance-guard in Virginia, and, as stated in the publications of the day, "showing his devotion to the cause by donating one thousand dollars for medical supplies, etc., to the hospital department." The Sixty-ninth saw much service, being at Blackburn's Ford, and at the first Bull Run battle, at the latter losing in killed and wounded nearly two hundred men. He held his commission until the following August. In June, 1863, he re-entered the army, being assigned assistant surgeon of the Seventh New York Regiment, N.G.S.N.Y., and serving with the reserves called out in 1863 to repel the advance of Lee. In July, 1869, he was promoted to the surgery. In June, 1871, he resigned from the regiment, and was appointed surgeon-general of the First Division, N.G.S.N.Y., with the rank of colonel, on the staff of Maj.-Gen. Alexander Shaler. He was married, June 23, 1869, to Harriet M., daughter of Rev. Albert Williams, of San Francisco, Cal. After spending a year in Europe, including an extended tour of the Eastern countries and a trip of seven hundred miles up the river Nile, he returned and settled in New York City, where he now resides.

HENRY MAURER.

Henry Maurer, born in Southern Germany, March 19, 1830, came to New York when eighteen years of age, having spent five years previously in Paris, France, learning the trade of cabinet-making. Upon his arrival in New York he entered the employ of one Kreischer, a relative, as journeyman in the manufacture of fire-brick, receiving small wages, where he remained some eight years, when he became a partner under the firm-name of B. Kreischer & Nephew. This continued until 1863, when he sold his interest to the senior member of the firm, and began the same business with one Weber, under the firm-name of Maurer & Weber, with whom he remained twelve years, when he disposed of his interest to his partner and came to Perth Amboy and purchased the fire-brick works of Joseph Forbes, the present site of his manufactory, known as the Excelsior Fire-Brick and Clay Retort Works. The original manufactory was a meagre concern, having but two kilns and one small engine. Mr. Maurer has spent some $50,000 in getting his works to their present capacity and condition, which are equal to any of the kind in this portion of the State. The business comprises the manufactory of fire-brick, gas retorts, furnace blocks and tiles, hollow brick for fire-proof buildings, and French roofing tile. He is constantly increasing his facilities and capacity, and in 1881 used five thousand tons of fire-clay in the manufacture of five hundred and twenty thousand hollow brick and one million seven hundred and fifty thousand fire-brick, gas retorts, tiles, etc. The capacity was increased one-third in 1882.

Mr. Maurer employs about one hundred men, uses none but the best machinery known in the trade, and has also invented valuable machines which he employs. His business has increased so rapidly that the Central Railroad of New Jersey Company have promised to extend their road to the works, an event which is likely to soon take place.

Mr. Maurer is owner of some of the best fire-clay mines in New Jersey, located in Woodbridge, N. J. Has furnished hollow brick for the Vanderbilt buildings, D. O. Mills, R. L. Stewart, White's building on Broadway, and many of the best-known citizens of New York. At the Centennial the building of the State of New Jersey was covered with his roofing tile.

Mr. Maurer married in 1856 Mrs. Dr. Weber, of

New York. They have eight children. They reside at 219 Second Avenue, and his office and depot are located at 418 to 422 East Twenty-third Street, New York.

CHAPTER LXXXII.

PISCATAWAY.

This township was incorporated in 1798. It is about eight miles long and six miles wide, and is bounded north by Plainfield township, Union County, east by Raritan township, south by Raritan River, and westerly by North Plainfield township, Somerset County. A small portion of this township was taken off in the formation of Raritan township in 1843, and of Plainfield township in 1847.

Natural Features.—The surface is nearly a level, north and westerly bordering on the Green Brook, and extending as a belt to the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The soil is a sandy loam, covering over the whole extent until the outcropping of the red shale near the village of New Market, when a ridge of high land runs quite across it east and west, dividing it into nearly equal parts, from which the land slopes in a gentle declivity north and south. This township is free from much of the glacial drift rock, and only in the extreme southerly part is much gravel or pebbles to be seen, and these are so intermixed with the red shale that it is a benefit more than a detriment in the keeping of the soil in a loose, easy way of cultivation, while in other parts of the township we find a stiff clay soil. The land is fertile, and agriculture is in a high state of progressive improvement.

Most of the streams of this township flow towards and empty into the Raritan River. The Green Brook, on the borders of the township, is the largest, fed by springs from the mountains. The New Brooklyn Pond, which stream passes through the village of New Market, and the Ambrose Brook are water-courses, fed in the northeasterly part of the township by smaller streams from other townships.

Early Records.—The early records of this township date back to the 25th of June, 1675. They are a miscellaneous collection, consisting of land grants, organization of the township, surveys, deeds, the first town officers, marks of sheep and cattle, laying out of highways, and building of "cart" bridges, as they were called at this early date. Here may also be found a list of early settlers and prices paid for the killing of wild animals. This old record locates many of the first farms, and gives the names of the first justices of the peace, who were the subscribing witnesses to the certificates. We give a few items of considerable interest of ye olden time.

The first land was granted to Jodiah Higgins, Jan. 1, 1682,

"by the Towne of Piscataway and was layed out to ye said Higgins the 24th of ye monthe by John Longstaff, Benjamin Hull and Godfrey Mannin, and was bounded as followeth.

Beginning N. pole marked on four sides by ye said by ye side of ye slow or swamps nar Mr Smallys house from thence downed the swamps 20 rod to a stake marked on four Sides from thence runinge East sixteen rod to a small bush marked on four sides and from thence runinge Northly West twenty Rod to ye highway to a place marked on four Sides from thence running south west sixteen Rod to ye stake where they first begun in all two acres—June 25th 1683 Registered

"LIEUT EDWARD SLATHER

"Towne Clarke."

"Timothy Chandler his mark for cattel and hogges ass a cross on the off Ear And a Slit on the under side of Noarse can entered this 21st of February 1683

"ISAAC SMALLEY Towne Clarke."

"John Crushroune ass marke for Cattoll, swine and horress As a half penny on the outside off Near Earce Entered this twenty fiftie of June 1688

"ISAAC SMALLEY Towne Clarke."

"Thomas Fitzrandell Junior his mark for catel Horress and hogges a half Penny on the uper sides of ech ear

"The 27th Agust 1712

JOHN MOLLESON Clerke."

Robert Mackllon enters a Deed to Isaac smalley dated 10th daye of August, 1688. Also recorded deed of hopewull hull to Edmond Dunham dated 13 days of Jonewory, 1689. Witnesses: Edward Slater, Nicho Roynoll, Isaac Smalley, Towne Clerke. Also recorded 1690, LaSlore (his mark) alias remissial to Thomas Grub, blacksmith. Also recorded 1687, Bonia hull to Comamon Hull. Deed given by exchange of other lands, no consideration in money mentioned. Also Issaac Tappin sells to one hull in 1690 a tract of lands, and witnessed by Hendricks, Doriell, and Isbout.

In the year 1698, Jaques Pollion, of Richmond, Staten Island, comes to this township and sells Hendricks Garrison, yeoman, a large tract of land now situated on the old York road and bordering upon the Raritan River, consideration, £112. Witnesses, Thomas Shotwell, John Stillwell, and Elias Duxbury.

The name of John Royce is here found as justice of peace in the year 1706. He was a large owner of lands, not only in Middlesex County but in and near Sommerville, Somerset Co., and from him the small hamlet now known as Roycefields took its name, a station on the New Jersey Central Railroad.

The following gift from father to son is interesting; we only give a part of the contents devised in the deed:

"To all Christina People to whom these Pressants shall come,

"Know ye That I, Joseph Fitz randolph, Senior of Piscataway, for and in Consideration of the Love, good will, and affection which I have and do bear towards my well beloved son, Jonathan Fitz-randolph, of Piscataway, New Jersey,—Have given, granted, and by these Presents doe freely, fully, clearly, and Absolutely give and grant to the said Jonathan Fitz-randolph, his heirs and Assigns forever, Lands that he had bought of John Laing, Deed bearing date November ye 28, 1703, will att Large appeare which sd Land begynth at a White oake tree, etc.

"JOSEPH FITZ-RANDOLPH (his mark).

"In Presence of BEN HULL, HENRY SCARDON."

"Memorandum ye Andrew Smalley has quit this Mark & takin his fathers in ye Room of this as it is entered this 20 day of April, 1762.

"RENEE BUNYON, CLK."

This old volume of two hundred years ago has pages filled with records of the marking of cattle, and at the side of each a rough drawing of the head of the creature showing the markings. At that early day, there being few fences for inclosures, horses, cattle, and swine were let loose to feed upon thousands of acres in the township. Each owner's name and mark was recorded so as to prevent any dispute that might arise in selecting his stock from his neighbors. The ears were slit, clipped, or bored as the drawings show. We find an order upon the town clerk as follows:

"Came to the Plantation of the Subscriber about the first of November a black calf, one white spot on the Belly, no certificates, mark supposed to be coming two years old, but small for that age, the town clerke will please to mark it.

"ISAC BROWN."

On account of damage done by dogs to sheep and cattle, they were accordingly registered by town clerk.

The following is recorded in the book "for the poor of y^e town," showing the prices on Nov. 15, 1759:

2 Waggon's Load of Wood.....	£0	6s.	0d.
1 Bushel of Rie.....	0	3	6
14 lbs. of Flower.....	0	2	6
One-half Gallon of Mollasses.....	0	2	0
1½ lbs. of Butter.....	0	1	4

"Nov. 13, 1759, Rec^d from Reune Runyon, Esq., the fine of Wm. Classon, son of Conl. & his wife for profane Swearing the sum of £1 6s. 0d

"March 24, 1760. There received of Joseph Michol for his Excises for y^e year 1759 y^e sum of £2 12s. 4d.

[The above is Tax of Tavern-keeper.]

"Feb. 29, 1760, for ½ lb. Tea.....	£0	5s.	0d.
" " " ½ Gall. Rum.....	0	3	0
" " " ¼ " and 1 lb. of Candles	3	9

Name of the Town.—Piscataqua is an Indian name of one of the tribes in the State of Maine, and also a river called the Piscataqua River, on the boundary line of Maine and New Hampshire. It is recorded that Hugh Dunn, Hopewell Hull, John Martin, Charles Gilman, Robert Dennis, John Smith, John Gilman, and Benjamin Hull, who came from Piscataqua, New England, were granted, Dec. 18, 1666, and May 30, 1668, the right as Associates, and they conferred upon the township the name of the place whence they came, it being known as Piscataqua for some time after the settlement, but now commonly known as Piscataway.

Early Settlements.—The earliest authentic history of this township is gathered from the public records, which state¹ "that the large tract on the east side of Raritan River, which comprises the towns of Piscataway, Elizabethtown, and Woodbridge, was purchased of the Indians in 1664. The purchasers were John Bailey, Daniel Denton, Luke Watson, and others, who obtained a patent in 1664 from Governor Nicolls, who acted under the Duke of York." The names of the first settlers on record are the Gilmans (Gilman) in 1665; the Blackshaws, Blackwells, Drakes, Hands, and Hendricks in 1677; the Dotys (Doughtys) and Wolfs in 1678; the Smalleys, Hulls, and Trotters in 1679; the Hansworths, Martins, and Higgins in 1680; the Dunhams, Laflowes (Laforge), and Fitz Randolphs in 1681; the Suttons, Brindleys, Bounds (Bownd), and Fords in 1682; the Grubs and Adames in 1683; the Pregmores in 1684; the Davises and Slaughters in 1685; the Chandlers and Smiths in 1689. These names are first mentioned in the contracts and assignments of lands in this township.

The following is a list of the freeholders in this township, and of those who took up land in the year 1683, and the names of Thickton, Babcock, Boicecep, Fourath, and Wright. There are also a few names of those who came for a short time but did not locate in the township:

Hugh Dunn.	William Olden.
Vincent rugion.	Mr John Royce.
Thomas Blackshaw.	Timothy Carle.
Benjamin Sandford.	John Mulseu.
Jediah higgins.	Matthew Giles.
Joseph Mash.	edward slater.
Charles Gilman.	Nicolas Munday Junior.
Isaac Smalley.	Daniel and John McDonald.
Tho. William Clawson.	John Drake.
hope-well hull.	Thomas Oswood.
Joseph Fitzrandolfe.	The Widow Robinson, for Robin-
John Mullison.	son and Charles.
Beniaman hull.	Jabez hendral.
Thomas Fitzrandolfe.	Joseph Worth.
Thomas Sutton.	William Olden.
John langstaff.	Joseph Marten.
edmond doonham.	Samuel Blackford.
Pootenel for Mr Melick.	Nicolas Moudy Junior.
Andrew woden.	Benjamin Gustish.
Lassore, alias: remphale.	Samuel Hull.
Mr John Jvairs.	Vincent Ruguon junior.
george drake.	John newbold.
John Ponn.	Samuel Mailer.
Cornelius Longfield.	John Mash.
Jeffery maring.	Thomas Holland.
thomas higgus.	Benjamin narten.
Dr Henry Greenland.	Benjamin Griffith.
Rehobah gannet.	Thomas Sansworth.
beniamon fitzrandolfe.	Mr Samuel Walker.
Widow Jones.	Mr. Melot alias Se Horhind.
Samuel Doty.	Peter Groon.
mathu giles.	Andrew Woodward.
Hendrick (1687) Garretson.	Joseph Mannin.
John Smalley senior.	Thomas Lawrence.
Alexander Adams.	David Koriei, 1682.
Richard Swellan.	Judah Sutfan.
John Marten.	Andrew Davis.
Daniel Mac Daniel.	Thomas Shotwell.
John Hopkins.	John Sutfan.
John Smalley.	Cabel Cambell.
Beniamen Clarke.	John Stillwell.
John Homer.	Richard Sutfan.
Looks dunham.	Benjamin Koriei, 1663.
Thomas grobe.	Elias Duxbury.
The Widow Dunn.	Mr. John Simius.
John fitzrandolfe.	James Manin.
Thomas gorden.	Abraham Coriell, 1702.
John drake.	John Homers and Homer for Brush.
Daniel handrack.	John & William Lange.
hezidi bonhao.	Joseph Maning, Jr., 1700.
Daniel Hendricks for his cousin	Francis Drake.
Daniel.	John Geddes, 1702.
William Sutton.	Richard Swettin.
Walter Robinson.	Joseph Mannin.
Jediah Higgs.	Doct. Henry Stewart, 1702.
william right.	Benjamin Clarke.
William Claeson.	Daniel Blackford.
Edward Dunham.	Nicholas Buries, 1703.
Richard Smith.	Joseph Worth.
John (Orjesere).	John Chambers.
Winofride Rouce.	Samuel dunn, 1704.
Nicolas munday.	John Smalley, 1703.

¹ Early Records.

John Corpee, 1704.
 Jacob Fyatt, 1706.
 Thomas Pussall, 1706.
 Antum Chausoe
 Joseph dun, 1707.
 Samuel blackford, 1707.
 thomas South, 1707.
 William Hudson, 1709.
 Edmund Harrison, 1709.
 thomas Wiggins, 1709.
 Carnet Catherlin, 1709.
 Moses dote (Duty), 1710.
 Benjamin primrose, 1710.
 Daniel fittk, 1710.
 Edmon Dunham, 1712.
 Thomas Brodernich, 1713.
 Samuel Peter, 1713.
 Joseph and Jac. Sutton, 1713.
 Androm Miller, 1714.
 William Dory, 1714.
 Benjamin Both, 1715.
 Douglas Combolt, 1715.
 Peter Bibout, 1716.
 John Woulg, 1716.
 matthew giles, 1718.
 Martin Wanderhout, 1718.
 Lorraine Ruth, 1719.
 Dolph Hardenbrook, 1719.
 Alexander Thomson.
 Moses Collins, 1720.
 Elyahua Smally, 1720.
 Daniel Konnd, 1720.
 Thomas Roys, 1721.
 Aron boram.
 Samuel Chandler, 1723.
 Henry Skibbow.
 Robert Allen, 1723.
 Henry Broner, 1724.
 Josiah Davis, 1725.
 Joseph Ross, 1726.
 Henry Swack.
 John Vanhorn.
 Joseph Moor, 1727.
 Daniel Coper, 1728.
 Richard Harper, 1728.
 Abraham Berline, 1729.
 Thomas Davis, 1729.
 Henry Lowell, 1730.
 William Harris, 1731.
 Edward Antill.
 Renne Runyon, 1736.
 Thomas Webster, 1737.
 David Correll.
 Elisha South, 1731.
 Doct Stillwell, 1739.
 John Stelle, 1739.
 Isaac Stelle, 1741.
 John Gilman, 1741.
 John Hollon, 1742.
 Azariah Dunham, 1743.
 Bowly Arnold, 1742.
 Thomas Fitz Molleson.
 Jonathan Daulham.
 Nehemiah Dunham, 1743.

Fitz Randolph Drake, 1748.
 John Royce, 1709.
 John Parker, 1709.
 R. S. Hooper.
 Gideon Marlott.
 Tristram Manning, 1733.
 Benajah Dunham.
 Benjamin Gross.
 Peter Runyon, 1733.
 David Conger, 1744.
 John Kent, 1744.
 Elijah Whitehead, 1744.
 Elijah Pound.
 Cadeb Buldoin, 1747.
 Moses Burgess, 1748.
 Christians Lupardus, 1750.
 Henry Brass, 1750.
 William French, 1750.
 Isaac Dye, 1750.
 Ebenezer Danwls.
 George Gramos, 1751.
 John Laforge, 1751.
 Thomas Davis, 1751.
 Richard Wuldering, 1752.
 Hendrick Vroom, 1751.
 Thomas Thicks, 1752.
 John Miller, 1753.
 Samuel Jones, 1756.
 Jacob Titsworth, 1756.
 Joseph Mitchell, 1756.
 David Correll, 1758.
 Henry Sharp, 1758.
 Isaac Faurot, 1757.
 Benjamin Foster, 1759.
 Kozi Daulham.
 Benjamin Blackford, 1762.
 Jeremiah Jeffry, 1762.
 Samuel Sharp, 1762.
 John and David Pound, 1764.
 Thomas Goodfellow, 1764.
 Benjamin Pound, 1764.
 David Jameson.
 Stephen Buaoel.
 William Mercer, 1766.
 Samuel Dayton, 1767.
 Robert Willson, 1768.
 Aaron Bishop, 1768.
 William Thorn, 1768.
 Cornelius Boies, 1768.
 John Folks.
 Samuel Soper, 1772.
 Enoch Stewart, 1774.
 William Terrill, 1775.
 Joseph Thorn, 1775.
 Joseph Chaywood, 1776.
 Abraham Freeman, 1776.
 Richard Merrill, 1778.
 John Probasko.
 John Vaukiik.
 Richard Field.
 Bershebe Luberteantele, 1780.
 Peter Marsalis, 1789.
 John Dayton.
 James Coddington, 1789.

from England with Roger Williams, and settled at Newport, R. I. From that place he removed to Flushing, L. I., whence John Field passed into New Jersey at an early day, and located on a tract of one thousand and fifty-five acres, lying between Bound Brook and New Brunswick, along the Raritan River, in Piscataway township. From that time the family have been prominently identified with the growth and development of that section of country. In 1774 Michael Field was one of the delegates to the convention at New Brunswick to consult regarding the points of difference between Great Britain and the colonies. Several of the direct ancestors of the Fields of Fieldsville were in active service during the Revolutionary war, one being a lieutenant in the First Regiment of Middlesex County, and another losing his life at the battle of Monmouth. The representatives of the family have always been plain, solid, substantial people, connected religiously with the Presbyterian Church, and liberal supporters of the various evangelical and philanthropic enterprises of the day. Michael Field left a legacy to the Bound Brook Presbyterian Church for establishing a free school in that place over eighty years ago. The Massachusetts branch of the family has contributed many able men to the country, and their influence is felt in the counsels of the nation to-day.

The names of Hopewell and Benjamin Hull are mentioned in the year 1682. They were quite prominent residents here, holding township offices, and owners of a large tract of land. The name is not known in this township at the present day.

Mention is also made of John and George Drake very early, and there are still descendants to be found, though many of this name have removed into other portions of the country. Their progenitor is supposed to have been Sir Francis Drake, who came to America in 1577, accompanied by Ralph Crane; they landed in or near Massachusetts Bay.

Henry Garrison, or Garretson, was of Dutch stock. The first of this family in America emigrated from Holland in 1658, in the ship "The Gilded Beaver." In the records of this township we find a conveyance of property, and we copy the following from the original deed: "This indenture, made y^e twelfth day of April, one thousand six hundred and ninety and eight [1698], Between Hendrick Garrison, of Raritan, in ye county of Middlesex, in West Jersey, Yeoman, and Elizabeth his wife . . . and Jaques Poillion [James Poillon], of Staten Island and county of Richmond in the Province of New York, being a Tract given by the then proprietors, 4 day of May, Anno Domi 1688, containing one hundred and twelve acres [112], and bounded by Raritan River, and South East by Rehobath Gannet, North West by Richard Smith, and North East by lands not yet surveyed, and South West again by y^e River, consideration Money [£140] one hundred and forty pounds current money of this province."

We find that many of the original purchasers of land are still represented by their descendants, and many of the settlements named after the early families, as Fieldville, in the southeasterly part of the township, the first settlement of the Fields, representing a number of farms and well-built homesteads upon the old road leading to Raritan Landing from New Market. The family annals in this country reach back to 1638, when the original ancestor came Hendrick Garretson is also made mention of in the county records of Staten Island at Richmond at an earlier date than when he came over and purchased the farm of Jaques Poillion upon the Raritan River. The families of Garretson in this township must have descended from this Henry or Hendrick Garretson. The names of Jacob, Henry, John, George, Peter, and Daniel are common names in the family of Garretsons now, as they were two hundred years ago.

The first of the Mannings named in the record is Jefery Maninng in 1683; Tristram Manning, 1733; Joseph Manning was a town officer in 1712-16; Nathaniel Manning, 1734; John Manning, 1738; Benjamin Manning, 1774; William B. Manning, 1811, 1814, 1825; William Manning, 1767; Nathaniel Manning again in 1756; Jeremiah Manning, 1814; Phineas Manning, 1787; Samuel and Samuel R. Manning, 1869-71; Alexander Manning, 1874, representing many official positions in the township. The first mention made is in 1673 of a Capt. John Manning, who had a daughter Mary (Manningham), who married a Robert Blackwell, April 20, 1670, who was one of the early settlers of this East Jersey, though his name is not found in any town documents now extant. In a "deed on record in New York, Robert Blackwell is spoken of as late of Elizabethtown, in New Jersey, Merchant." The Blackwells are still represented by the name in this township,—Mr. S. R. Blackford, whose residence is near where the Half-Moon Tavern stood on the main road to Stelton. The Gilman family owned property near where the bridge of the Raritan Landing crossed the river. It is said the building was destroyed June 19, 1835, by a tornado which swept through this part of the township.

Rehobath Gannet was the first of that name, 1686. The name has disappeared from the records.

The Doty (Doughty) family removed to Berkshire Hills, near Passaic Valley, in 1720, with exception of Maj.-Gen. Solomon Doughty, who was born Sept. 26, 1772; was the grandson of Samuel Doty, who settled in this township, 1682.

John Smalley (Smaly) is named as freeholder and owner of large herds of "Horsess, Hogges, and Cattle, mark recorded 1691, halfpenny with under rite eare Swallow Tale." All these ancient records are so many links in the family history. The Smalleys were early settlers here. It is more than probable that Jonathan and Elisha Smalley were sons of the original John. The family is well represented throughout the township. The names of Ambrose, Elisha, Daniel, Henry, and William are prominent in the family. The name of Smalley is mentioned as among the first (1720) members in the organization of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church in this township. They came with other families from Newport, R. I., very early, about 1668.

John Marten sold to James Bollen, Sept. 30, 1673, property, or, in one of the records, exchanged with Bollen and afterwards resold, Nov. 6, 1674, to Henry

Lyon, who afterwards sold it, May 1, 1675, "together with the cow-yard orchard," for £30. John Martain was one of the founders of Piscataway. He had a son, Henry Martain, also James Marten. They came from Dover, N. H. The family is still well represented in this township. The following is a quaint old-time record: "1726, May the 3 Day, James Martin came to Bord at my House. 1727, August the 19, Leafn my house and wee never made no agreement how much a Week. I promist him to be Low In price, will take vp with 4s pr. Weeke, which account makes 67 weeks and 4 Dayes makes £13 0s. 0d. Since I concluded to Take 3s. 6d., £11 16s. 6d."¹

Dunham, Daniel, David, Look (properly Luke), Edmund, Nehemiah, Jeremiah, these are the first names of this early family. They came from Piscataqua or Dover, in New Hampshire, where they landed from sloop or ship "James," 1630 or 1632. They came in 1668, and are mentioned with others as subscribers to an agreement that a new book be regarded as a lawful record of surveys and conveyances.² The Rev. Edmund Dunham was the first clergyman of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church, 1703. He died March, 1734, in his seventy-third year.³ This family name is well represented throughout the township.

John Fitz Randolph (originally spelled Randolfe), with his son John, is first mentioned in 1683 as a freeholder.

They came early, and were owners of a large tract of land, some thousand of acres, and the secretary's son, John Fitz Randolfe, was among the first at Randolphville (Newton), in the centre of the township, where ten or twelve farms are now owned by this family. Thomas and John (3d) were among the first who became members of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church, 1722, and David Fitz Randolph held many official relations to this township in helping arrange for the different highways. Malachi Fitz Randolph, 1765, "was town clerke." David was in 1749 chosen freeholder, and Joseph held the same position from 1767 to 1781. Capt. Samuel is mentioned in 1780 as a town officer and officer of militia (see Military Record). The family is extensive throughout this and neighboring townships, and they have held many responsible positions in the county and State. The name of Daniel Handrack is mentioned among the freeholders in 1699, and the name is also recorded as owner of personal property as well as real estate. He was a yeoman, stood well in the community, was called upon frequently as witness to deeds and covenants in relation to the transferring of property. We do not know whether the names of Handrach and Handron are the same, but the latter name is also mentioned.

William Lutton was a freeholder in 1686. The family came originally from Oyster Bay, L. I. Am-

¹ Ledger, p. 20.

² Town Book.

³ See account of Seventh-Day Church.

brose Letten (as the name was then spelled) was associated with Denton, Baylies, and Watson in the purchase of land from the Indians, and William must have been his son. The name is not known in this township, but in Somerset County there are many epitaphs in the burial-ground of the Lutton family.

William Wright became a freeholder, 1699, and owned a herd of "y^e cattle, horse, and hogge," recorded in the township book. The family is not numerous in this section of the county.

Timothy Carle (Carll) must have been a relative of Jacob Carle, who was a freeholder, and the family were prominent during the Revolutionary war.

Edward Slater was a freeholder in this township, 1683, and owned a large number of acres. He held many prominent positions in township and State, and was the first clerk of the courts of the county.

Benjamin Gustish and Samuel Maller owned lands in the township in 1688.

Vincent Rugnion (Rognion, Ronyon, Rugione, Runyon). This family came from France; they were Huguenots. The ancestor is first mentioned in 1663, and probably owned land which he bought of Francis Barber, Thomas Moore's original house-lot, south of George Pack, March 20, 1672. He removed to Piscataway in 1677, and had "allotted to him, March of the same year, on the Raritan River, 154½ acres." He died in November, 1713, his wife, Martha, surviving him.

He had a son Vincent (2),¹ who occupied the same lands, 1683, and had also a large quantity of cattle; he learned also the trade of a carpenter. He is mentioned as overseer of the highway, 1717; also Peter Rugnion, 1737; and Darich Runione, 1737; Joseph Runyon, 1743; Reune Ronyon, from 1749 to 1767 served as town clerk; Ephraim Runyon served from 1768 until 1676 as town clerk, as well as collector for twenty years. Asa Runyon was collector in 1793; Daniel, 1840-42; and Eugene, 1869-71, as collectors. Daniel Runyon was chosen freeholder from 1859 to 1864; Reune Rugnion, "one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace," 1759-67; and mention still could be made of many more having held positions in this township and State. The families are owners of many farms, as well as engaged in mercantile pursuits.

Jediah Higginson (Higgins) came and took up lands as early as 1680, becoming a freeholder, and held some positions in the township. Descendants of the same branch of the family are now to be found in the neighboring townships.

There were two Wilsons, the first, John, a carpenter, and second, John, a wheelwright. They were both here at an early day, and were distinguished as Great John and Little John. The former died unmarried Oct. 12, 1672; the other was a freeholder as early as 1675. He must have owned lands just on the easterly borders of this township, and also a house and lot is made mention at Elizabeth Town. He is also made mention of in connection with a French gentleman who came here for a short time, but sold his land in 1687, by name of Lassore alias Remppele. This is the manner in which his name is signed to a deed of conveyance in Piscataway. John Pound and Elijah South are mentioned early (about 1710). They were Quakers. South left and went to Salem County, while John Pound remained. It is said he kept an inn at the Gum Spring, on the River road to Bound Brook. A few of the name are still in this section.

Mather Gile (Giles) was among the first settlers; owned farms near "Ambrose Brook" in 1699. This family has no connection with Rev. John Giles. They are still residents of this township.

Alexander Adams was a freeholder in 1699. His name is recorded in the records of the town, and in one place is spelled Adamss. A few of the same name are still in the county.

Benjamin Clarke and Daniel McDaniel are also made mention of, 1683. They owned lands near Samptown (now Waterville), and had a saw-mill.

Thomas Grube, Thomas Gordon, and Walter Robinson must have come together, as these names are mentioned in the "Survey of Allotment," and "Hesiadh bonham" is made mention of, but did not locate in the same part of the township, but near the Green Run (Brook).

The Boice family probably were of French extraction. A branch of the family settled at Newtown, Long Island, where we find that some of the family are connected by marriage with the Rapelyea family.² They must have come to this township on or about 1720, on lands near or by the River road, as well as a small piece of land near Newtown. John Boice (or Boyce) and George Boyce were privates in the Revolutionary war, and also a William is mentioned, but not enlisting from this county. The branches of the family have now extended into other counties, as well as in the West. Charles Boice is now a member of the committee and treasurer of the township.

John Clawson was a commissioner at an early date to sell confiscated estates. His son, William Clawson, was a freeholder in 1690 in this township, also Thomas William Clawson (possibly the same person). The family came originally from Staten Island, where the name dates back to 1669. Capt. John Clawson was in the Jersey Brigade, May 11, 1776, at Albany, N. Y. The family own still a number of farms in the township where they reside, while some are merchants in other places.

John Hopkins, Daniel Hendricks, Winnifride Rouce, Mr. John Royce, and Nicolas Mundy are represented in 1689 as freeholders.

Koriell (Coryell, Coriell). This family were among the first who came. The following is copied from the register in the Presbyterian Church at Bound Brook:

¹ E. T. Bill, 96-97.

² Rider's Newtown, L. I.

Baptized Jan. 2, 1728.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Elsie, child Aetie.

Baptized May 16, 1737.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Elsie, child Amnettie.

Baptized Aug. 25, 1738.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Elsie, child Moses.

Baptized Aug. 29, 1738.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Elsie, child Abraham.

Baptized June 1, 1740.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Elsie, child Immanuel.

Baptized Jan. 31, 1742.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Sarah, child Nettie.

Baptized June 5, 1743.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Sarah, child Elsie; godmother, Annie Van Cott.

Baptized May 9, 1745.—Parents, David Koriel, wife Sarah, child Jannettie.

Abraham Coriell, father of Abner Coriell, died Sept. 22, 1828, aged ninety years.

Esther, his wife, died March 20, 1796, in her fifty-eighth year.

David Coriell died Sept. 22, 1800, in his sixty-sixth year, Abraham's brother.

Elizabeth Coriell, wife of David, died March 22, 1813, in her seventy-seventh year. Susan Coriell, wife of Samuel Blackford, sister of Abraham Coriell, died June 27, 1827, aged fifty-four years. Samuel Blackford died April 16, 1837, aged eighty-nine years. Abraham, son of David and Elizabeth Coriell, died Aug. 15, 1800, aged twenty years.

John Geddis, Samuel Chandler, and Thomas Webster are mentioned as freeholders in 1718, and recorded their cattle, etc.¹

The Daytons came from Southampton, L. I. The early names are Ralph Dayton, who married the "widow of John Hinds, June, 1656." John Woodruff, of Elizabethtown, had a daughter Elizabeth, who was married to Robert, son of Ralph Dayton, about 1686. Jonathan Dayton, probably a grandson of Ralph Dayton, had with others the "allotment of Lands in 1733 above Essex and in Middlesex, bordering upon Somerset County." Elias Dayton was made a marshal with others for surveying the boundary lines, 1689. The family are not numerous in this township.

The names of Woden, Langstaff, Gustish, Griffith, Olden, Holland are found represented in other townships by the making of changes in the boundary lines.

CHAPTER LXXXIII.

PISCATAWAY.—(Continued.)

Civil Organization.—Jan. 1, 1683–84, Maj. Giles and Lieut. Doty were appointed to visit the town magazine and to report thereon to the townsmen at the next meeting.

April 2, 1684, H. Hull, G. Drake, John Langstaff, John Gilman to go and treat with Governor Laurie about the quit-rents and patents. Another committee for similar purpose the next year,—Gilman, Drake, Smalley, and Slater.

Jan. 1, 1684–85, Hopewell Hull and J. Martin to run the lines and lay out the bounds between "Beaver Dam and Woodbridge Line."

Sept. 17, 1686, "Agreed y^e every inhabitant of y^e towne is to paye nine pence in silver towerds ye buyinge of Nailles for ye Towne house."

Dec. 10, 1686. Town rate fixed at £44 6s.

Jan. 1, 1689–90, Edward Slater, George Drake, and Isaac Smalley were chosen "to Discourse hopewell a bout the finishe the towne house, and if hopewell hull refuse to finish it that the above mentioned men have power to hire workmen to finish the saide house."

March 2, 1690, Edmond Dunham to have ten shillings "for mending the buriell place, and to sett it up with good white oacke or Chestnut stakes And bound with good wites."

"Shingle Hill," "Turtle Hill," "Scotland's Bridge" are mentioned about this period.

Jan. 1, 1705, "The Stocks, Burying-place, Pound, and the Towne House were all to be substantially repaired, the Latter to have 'Glaysed dores hanged and maid tite.'"

May 16, 1732, a specific sum for the first time noticed as authorized to be raised for the relief of the poor, "fifteen pounds of Current Lawful money, at 8 shillings per owner."

"A pair of stocks to be made and kept in the usual place."

In the Piscataway township records, Oct. 26, 1683:

"At Towne Meeting then held, George Drake and Hopewell Hull chosen oversers for y^e High-Way, and y^e there be a Cart-bridge by Higginnes, a footbrige by Rehoboth Gannets, and a foot bridge at Stony brook, goinge to Greenlands.

"Mr. Martin, Mr. Jiles, Mr. Hull, and Hopewell Hull chosen by y^e Towne to be joyned with John Gilman & Edward Slater to treat with y^e Governor about settlinge y^e Townships and about y^e meadows on the lower side y^e South River.

"December 21st, 1683, Then published y^e acts of Generall assemblee, which passed at y^e Sessions in November & December dito, The same day published a proclamation concerning cuttinge or sellinge of Timber.

"January 1st, 1684.—George Drake & Isacke Smally then chosen Debates for y^e year 1684. Hopewell Hull chosen Constable & Edward Slater Towne Clarke. George Drake & Isacke Smally rate makers. Major Giles & Lieft Doty appointed to view y^e towne's Magazine & to bring report to y^e Townesmen at y^e next towne meetinge in what condition it is in.

"Benjamin Ffitts Randolph taken in a Townsman.

"April 24, 1684.—At a Towne meetinge then was chosene Hopewell Hull, George Drake, John Langstafe, & John Gilman, to goe and treat with Governor Lowrie about ovr quit rents & Pattenunge ovr Towneships, &c.

"August 11th, 1684.—Att y^e Towne meeting, Mr. Martin, Capt. Drake, Charles Gilman, Hopewell Hull, George Drake, Mr. James Giles, Isacke Smally, & Edward Slater chosen to lay out landings, highways, and other ways and conveniences for y^e Inhabitants of y^e said Towne, or the Major part of them."

The following are some of the village dignitaries during the early years of the settlement and first records:

DEPUTIES TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

1675.—John Gilman, Hopewell Hull.

1684–86.—George Drake, Isaac Smalley.

1687.—George Drake, John Langstaff.

1692.—George Drake, Benjamin Clarke.

1693.—Hopewell Hull, John Drake, Thomas Fitz Randolph.²

1694–95.—Thomas Fitz Randolph, Thomas Higgins.

¹ For Stelle family, etc., see history of Raritan township.

² September, in place of Hopewell Hull, deceased.

1696-97.—Cornelius Longfield, Jediah Higgins.

1698.—Samuel Walker, Cornelius Longfield.

OVERSEERS OF THE HIGHWAY.

1683.—George Drake, Hopewell Hull.

1684.—Charles Gilman, John Martin.

1686-87.—George Drake, Hopewell Hull.

1688.—William Wright, Thomas Higgins.

1689.—Benjamin Clarke, Benjamin Hull.

1690.—Thomas Higgins, Matthew Giles.

1692.—Benjamin Clarke, Jediah Higgins.

1695-86.—John Drake, Thomas Grub, Benajah Dunham.

1698.—John Field, John Drake.

JUSTICES OF THE TOWN COURT.

May, 1688.—Benjamin Clarke, George Drake, Charles Gilman.

There is no further record of their successors or predecessors.

Select men to Manage the Affairs of y^e towne were first established in January, 1693. Those first selected were Capt. Francis Drake, Thomas Fitz Randolph, Benjamin Hull, Isaac Smalley, and Edward Slater.

"September 4th, 1685.—(Ord)ered & voted at y^e Towne meetinge that (for) y^e encourageing of killinge of Wolves that for (every) wolfe killed in y^e Towne y^e killer shall be allowed him Twenty Shillings.

"January 1st, 1685.—Granted to Alexander Adams an accomodation of lands with in the Towne of Piscataway, (By) the said Towne meetinge according to y^e Governors (wa)rrent, Isaac Smally chosen Debuty.

"The Towne of Piscataway claime according to and other priviledges, the priviledge of (choosinge) every first day of January two Debuties. (They) have chosen for their other Debuty George Drake; Nicolas Munday, Constable; Edward Slater, chosen Clarke. Rate Makers for y^e last year is Isaac Smally & Edward Slater. George Drake & Hopewell Hull chosen surveyors for the high wayes, and to have power to mend the same and to bringe y^e same to a Towne Rate.

"May 11th, 1685.

"Jenewary 1st, 1685.

"John Langstaf and george drake chosen debnties for (the) Insewin yeare.

"At the same town meetinge thomas fizarandolfe chosen Cunstabel, Isaac Smalley Chosen towne Clarke.

"Jenewary the second 1685.

"At a towne meeting then helde

"william Right and thomas Higgins chosen for over seeers for the hiwayes for this presant yeare. At the same town meeting Isaac Smalley chosen towne Clarke. At the same town meeting thomas grube and thomas Gordon taken in towne men.

"At the town meeting a boveside John langstaf had the towne consent for a parcell of lande lling upon or nere Ambrass brook not exceding 60 acres."

TOWN CLERKS.

Nicolas Munday, 1685.

Thomas Fitz Randolph, 1687-88.

John Martin, 1689.

William Sutton, 1692.

Benjamin James, 1693.

Benjamin Clarke, 1694.

John Drake, 1695.

Thomas Grub, 1697.

Edward Slater, 1682, 1685, 1691-97.

Hopewell Hull, 1683.

Isaac Smalley, 1686, 1688-1705, 1709.

John Molleson, 1711-14.

Benajah Dunham, 1715-29.

John Dunham, 1730-39.

John Stelle, 1740-48.

Reuss Runyon, 1749-67.

Ephraim Runyon, 1768-76.

Thomson Stelle, 1777-1809.

Isaac Doty, 1744, 1748-49.

Henry Dunmont, 1744.

Benjamin Wooden, 1744, 1768-69.

Hendrick Lane, 1748.

Joseph Wootton, 1748.

Henry Langstaff, Jr., 1749.

Peter Bogart, 1749.

Benajah Doty, 1751.

Thomas Anty, 1751-55.

John Langstaff, Jr., 1751.

Joseph Woods, 1752-54.

Charles Roloson, 1752-53.

Nico. Laforce, 1754.

Thomas Pound, 1755.

Jacob Sutton, 1755.

Charles Sodam, 1756.

Eljah Dunham, 1756-58.

David Laforce, 1756.

John Laforce, 1757.

John Fitzworth, 1757.

Joseph Mitchell, 1758.

Jonathan Tontine, 1758.

Benjamin Foster, 1759, 1784.

Joseph Campbell, 1759, 1770.

Patrick Ryley, 1759.

David Martin Jr., 1761, 1763-64.

Samuel Wheton, 1760.

Bowley Arnold, 1760.

Ismael Shippey, 1760.

Samuel Sharp, 1761.

Falkerk V. Notewick, 1761.

Joseph French, 1763.

Thomas Wollom, 1763.

Daniel Bray, 1764.

Thomas Goodfellow, 1764, 1789.

Malachi Fitz Randolph, 1765.

Andrew Tenieck, 1765.

Joseph Drake, 1765-77, 1784.

John Roice, 1766.

John Wilson, Jr., 1776.

David Conger, 1767.

John Smock, 1767.

Thomas Davis, 1768-69.

Richard Field, 1768.

Aaron Booram, 1769.

Benjamin Field, 1770.

Jonathan Dunn, 1770.

James Gilman, 1777.

David Martin, 1777.

Abel Stelle, 1778.

John Shippey, 1778.

Joel Dunn, 1778.

Trustum Blanning, 1780.

Jacob Dunn, 1780.

Jonathan Miller, 1780.

John Bray, 1780.

Renne Martin, 1810, 1819-29.

Nathaniel F. R. Dunn, 1811-18.

Samuel Dunn, 1830-50.

Samuel E. Stelle, 1851-57, 1865.

John T. Martin, 1838-65, 1868.

Isaac D. Titworth, 1866.

William B. Stewart, 1867.

Mahlon Runyon, 1869.

Isaac H. Dunn, 1870-81.

CONSTABLES.

Isaac Webb, 1781-83.

Samuel Walker, 1781.

James Giles, 1781.

John Miller, Jr., 1782.

Henry Fort, 1782.

John Langstaff, 1783.

Elias Van Court, 1783-84.

John Miller, 1785-86.

John Marsalis, 1785-86.

Phineas Manning, 1785.

Benjamin Manning, 1787.

John Runyon, 1787.

Melancthon Freeman, 1787.

James Wooden, 1788.

William Harris, 1788-89, 1793.

Ephraim Drake, 1788.

Abm. Coriell, 1789.

Richard Field, Jr., 1790.

James Shotwell, 1790-91-93.

Edward Griffith, 1790-92.

James Little, 1791-92.

Joseph Fitz Randolph, 1792.

Asher Stelle, 1793.

John Fitz Randolph, 1794.

Cornelius Boice, Jr., 1794-96, 1798-1801.

Samuel Gilman, 1795.

Benjamin Manning, Jr., 1797.

John Dunham, 1796-97.

John Griffith, 1798-1805.

Jeremiah Manning, 1802.

Ephraim Runyon, 1803-4.

Edmund Dunham, 1806-7, 1811-

14, 1824, 1828-31.

John Philipbrick, 1806-7.

SURVEYORS AND OVERSEERS OF THE HIGHWAYS.

George Drake, 1683-85.

Hopewell Hull, 1683-85.

Isaac Smalley, 1684.

John Gilman, 1684.

Edward Slater, 1684.

William Right, 1687.

Thomas Higgins, 1687.

Benjamin Clark, 1691, 1695.

Thomas Higgins, 1691.

Thomas Fitz Randolph, 1693, 1771.

Joseph Manning, 1712.

Benaj Dunham, 1712.

John Drake, 1716.

Jos. Manning, 1716.

Benjamin Fitz Randolph, 1716.

Benj^e Hull, 1716.

Joseph Worth, 1717, 1722.

William Laing, 1717.

Vincent Rungion, 1717.

Samuel Dun, 1719-20.

Francis Drak, 1719, 1732.

Jonathan Drak, 1719.

Joseph Fitz Randolph, 1719.

Enoch Fredelund, 1720-21.

Jonathan Martin, 1720.

Peter Rungion, 1720, 1725.

John White, 1721.

John Lang, 1722.

David Fitz Randolph, 1722.

William Olden, 1723, 1730.

Derick Vanderpool, 1723.
 William Haring, 1723.
 John Vandick, 1723.
 Andrew Drake, 1724.
 Joseph Fitz Randolph, Jr., 1724, 1730, 1757.
 Joseph Drake, 1724, 1750, 1753.
 Daniel Sutton, 1724.
 John Sutton, 1725.
 John Pottard, 1725, 1731, 1734, 1747, 1744, 1746, 1749.
 Nicolas Manday, 1725-27.
 Jonathan Dunham, 1727.
 William Hucks, 1727-28.
 Honory Tromm, 1727, 1729.
 Samuel Connard, 1727.
 Jonathan Dunham.
 John Langstaff, 1728, 1746.
 Londrow Smack, 1729.
 John Dones, 1729.
 Gilon Morlat, 1729-30.
 Benjamin Martin, 1730-31.
 John Holton, 1731.
 William Classon, 1731.
 Benjamin Still, 1732-45.
 Edmund Dunham, Jr., 1732.
 Joseph Munday, 1732, 1738.
 Joshua Martin, 1733, 1745.
 Peter Martin, 1733.
 James Gils, 1733.
 Johannes Seabron, 1733.
 John Blackford, 1735.
 David Coriol, 1734, 1754, 1758.
 Nathaniel Manning, 1734.
 Peter Runyan, 1737, 1751.
 Darick Ronoyon, 1737.
 Jonathan Smalley, 1737.
 Moses Fitz Randolph, 1738, 1745.
 Abraham Shadwell, 1738.
 John Manning, 1738.
 Abraham Shotwell, 1738.
 Isaac Manaine, 1738.
 Peter Burdine, 1738.
 Joseph Ross, 1740.
 Joshua Smalley, 1740, 1742-43.
 Peter Kemble, 1741.
 Samuel Drake, 1741.
 Cornelius Cue, 1741.
 Benjamin Dunn, 1741, 1749.
 Jeremiah Field, Jr., 1742-44.
 James Pyatt, 1743-44, 1747-48.
 Martin Dunham, 1743, 1749.
 Hendrick Vroom, 1745, 1751, 1754, 1758.
 John Wolledge, 1746.
 Trustum Manning, 1746, 1749.
 John Martin, 1747, 1750, 1759.
 John Laforce, 1747-48.
 George Marlet, 1747, 1753.
 Maiejah Dunn, 1749.
 John Smock, 1749.
 Joseph Runyon, 1750.
 Fitz Randolph Drake, 1751.
 Elijah Pound, 1751.
 Ephraim Fitz Randolph, 1753.
 Peter Martin, Jr., 3d, 1753-55.
 John Martin, Jr., 1754, 1762.
 Isaac Faurat, 1755.
 Thomas Walker, 1755.
 James Martin, 1755, 1757.
 Peter Martain, 1756.
 Samuel Dunham, 1756.
 Charles Sedan, 1756.
 Henry Molleson, 1756.
 Moleston Fitz Randolph, 1757.
 Daniel Drake, 1757.
 David Lane, 1758.

John Miller, 1758.
 Hendrick Vroom, 1759-60, 1762.
 David Coriell, 1759-60.
 Benjamin Wooden, 1759.
 Jonathan Fitz Randolph, 1760.
 Andrew Smalley, 1762.
 Andrew Tenick, 1762.
 Jacob Dunn, 1764-66.
 Jacob Boice, 1764-66.
 James Harris, 1767-68.
 John Dunn, 1767-69.
 Renben F. Randolph, 1768.
 Benjamin Drake, 1769.
 Moses Martin, Jr., 1769.
 Benjamin Dunn, 1769.
 Henry Smock, 1772.
 John Webster, 1772-73.
 Charles Sadam, 1773-75.
 Jo. Duyekineck, 1774.
 John Boice, 1775.
 Benj. Runyon, 1776.
 David Coriell, Jr., 1776, 1784-86, 1794-99.
 Benjamin Dunn, 1777.
 John Sebring, 1777.
 Samuel Whitehead, 1778-79.
 Ephraim Pyatt, 1778-80.
 Meloson Raadolph, 1780.
 John Runyon, 1781-82, 1783, 1788-90.
 Henry Langstaff, 1781.
 William Manning, 1782, 1788-93.
 Joel Dunn, 1783-84, 1786-87, 1791-92.
 Dr. John Randolph, 1786.
 Abraham Dunham, 1787-1807.
 Abraham Smalley, 1793-1804.
 Benjamin Foster, 1794, 1803.
 Peter Runyon, Jr., 1800-3.
 Richard Runyon, 1805, 1808-10.
 David Stelle, 1806.
 William Vail, 1807.
 Samuel Stelle, 1808, 1811-12.
 Jeremiah Manning, 1811-19, 1829-30.
 George Farmer, 1813-16.
 Ebenezer Tingley, 1817.
 Elijah Chamberlain, 1818-19.
 Elijah Chamberlin, 1820-28.
 John A. Smalley, 1820-28.
 Ephraim F. Randolph, 1829-35.
 Thomas F. Randolph, 1831-36.
 Moses Giles, 1836-37.
 Enos L. Blue, 1837.
 Daniel Runyon, 1838-39, 1847-52.
 Jonathan R. Dunham, 1838-41.
 James Gilman, 1840-41.
 Joel Dunham, 1842-46.
 Israel R. Coriell, 1842.
 Isaac S. Dunn, 1843-46.
 Forman Runyon, 1847-52.
 Runyon Walker, 1853.
 Jephtha M. Clarkson, 1853.
 Ephraim Coriell, 1854-55.
 John D. Field, 1854, 1861-62.
 Vanderveer Giles, 1855-59, 1863.
 N. R. Morse, 1856-58.
 John Randall, 1859-60.
 Nelson Boice, 1860-63.
 Peter T. Stelle, 1864-71.
 Samuel Blish, 1864.
 William M. Drake, 1865-71.
 Abner S. Coriell, 1871-72.
 Martin D. Nevins, 1872.
 Samuel S. Giles, 1873-80.
 William Drake, 1873.
 Peter Benward, 1874-80.

ASSESSORS.

John Gilman, 1684-85, 1687.
 Edward Slater, 1684-85, 1687-89, 1695.
 Isaac Smalley, 1688-89, 1693, 1711-13.
 Thomas Fitchrand, 1688.
 George Craft, 1689.
 George Drake, 1691.
 Capt. Drake, 1693.
 David Slater, 1693.
 Samuel Walker, 1693.
 John Drake, Sr., 1711.
 Edmund Dunham, 1712.
 Jekon Coronone, 1713.
 John Borrow, Esq., 1716.
 Samuel Walker, 1718-22, 1727-28.
 Henry Skilbon, 1723-25.
 Benjamin Stelle, 1726.
 Henry Brocaw, 1729.
 Hendrick Brees, 1729-30.
 Henry Skilbon, 1731-32.
 James Walker, 1733.
 Jonathan Dunham, 1735-40.
 David Fitz Randolph, 1736-40.
 Renne Runyon, 1741, 1742-44.
 Azariah Dunham, 1745-47.
 Rehemaah Dunham, 1749-52, 1756-57.
 George Vroom, 1753-54.
 Henry Molleson, 1760-61.

COLLECTORS.

George Drake, 1689.
 John Drake, 1716.
 John Barowe, 1718-19.
 Edmund Dunham, 1730, 1723-24.
 Hugh Dunn, 1720.
 Daniel Nevins, 1722.
 Edmund Dunham, Jr., 1725.
 Samuel Walker, 1726.
 Benjamin Stelle, 1727-28, 1733.
 Jonathan Dunham, 1729.
 David Fitz Randolph, 1730-31, 1735, 1737-39.
 John Molleson, 1740-45.
 Phineas Dunn, 1746-47, 1749-51.
 Henry Molleson, 1752-53.
 Jonathan Fitz Randolph, 1754.
 Jonathan Fitz Randolph, Jr., 1755-62.
 Jacob Pletssoort, 1764-65.
 Ephraim Runyon, 1766, 1808-25.
 Renne Runyon, 1767.
 William Manning, 1767-70, 1773-74, 1784.
 Thompson Stille, 1771-72.
 John Runyon, 1775-76.
 Edward Griffith, 1777, 1781-83, 1795, 1812.
 Thomas Randolph, 1778-83.
 Abraham Coriell, 1784-85.
 Capt. David Dunham, 1785-86.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS.

Wm. Hodgson, 1714.
 James Manning, 1714-16, 1724.
 Hugh Dunn, 1715-16, 1719-20.
 Daniel Sutton, 1719.
 Benjamin Clark, 1720, 1722-23.
 Benjamin Stille, 1721, 1725-26, 1730-31.
 Samuel Dunn, 1722-26, 1728-29.
 Benjamin Dunham, Jr., 1727.
 Benjamin Martin, Jr., 1727, 1751.
 Edmund Dunham, Jr., 1728-29, 1735-46, 1739.
 Jacob Boyse, 1755, 1758-59, 1772-73.
 Henry Sottou, 1762-71, 1776-99.
 Jacob Dunn, 1767.
 Benjamin Manning, 1774.
 William Thorn, 1775.
 Alexander Dunn, 1800-10, 1812, 1815-20.
 William B. Manning, 1811-14.
 Daniel Runyon, Jr., 1821-23.
 Squire Dunn, 1824.
 Enos L. Blue, 1825-27.
 Asa Pyatt, 1828-31, 1834-37.
 Edmund Dunham, 1832-33.
 Jacob Martin, 1835-36.
 Simeon Dunn, 1838-39.
 David C. Dunn, 1840-43.
 John Letourrette, Jr., 1844.
 Nelson Webster, 1845.
 Charles C. Morgan, 1846-50, 1855.
 Ebenezer Conover, 1851.
 Nelson Webster, 1852-53.
 Asa R. Field, 1854.
 Isaac H. Dunn, 1856.
 Isaac S. Runyon, 1857-63.
 Randolph Martin, 1864.
 Joel Dunham, 1865.
 Daniel F. Randolph, Jr., 1866-70.
 Charles Boice, 1871.
 Abner S. Coriell, 1872-80.

Joel Dunn, 1786.
 David Coriell, 1787-89.
 John Randolph, 1787.
 Ephraim Pyatt, 1788-90.
 Ephraim Drake, 1790.
 Benjamin Manning, 1791-94.
 Peter Marsalis, 1791-92, 1794.
 Asa Runyon, 1793.
 Gershom Dunn, 1795.
 Abraham Smalley, 1796.
 Jeremiah Field, 1797-98.
 David Coriell, Jr., 1799, 1807.
 Samuel Stelle, 1813-15.
 John Dayton, 1816-26, 1828-31.
 Phineas Coriell, 1826-28.
 Peter Smith, 1827.
 Abraham Boice, 1829-43.
 Henry S. Laparlus, 1832-39, 1843-63.
 Daniel Runyon, 1840-42.
 Isaac S. Dunn, 1844-51.
 Charles C. Morgan, 1852-54, 1867-68, 1871-73.
 Benjamin Osuna, 1855-65.
 George Drake, 1864-69.
 Statts F. Randolph, 1866.
 Eugene Runyon, 1869-71.
 Charles C. Pope, 1874-75.
 Reune B. Manning, 1876-79.
 Martin D. Nevins, 1880.

Andrew Drake, 1729.
 Hendrick Vroom, 1730-31.
 William Harris, 1833.
 Jonathan Martin, 1733.
 Benajah Dunham, 1735-37.
 Gideon Marlett, 1737-38.
 Nathaniel Manning, 1738-41, 1744-45, 1754-55.
 John Dennis, 1740-41.
 Cornelius Low, 1742-44.
 Samuel Walker, 1749.
 Jonathan Dunn, 1745, 1749.

Jeremiah Dunn, 1745-47, 1750.
Joshua Smalley, 1746-47.
David Randolph, 1749-53.
Jeremiah Field, 1752-67.
Samuel Drake, 1756-63.
James Martin, 1764.
Micajah Dunn, 1765-67, 1769-74.
Daniel Bray, 1767-69.
Joseph Fitz Randolph, 1767-68,
1771-75, 1777-81.
Henry Laugstaff, Jr., 1770.
Jacob Boice, 1775.
John Dunn, 1776.
Benjamin Manning, 1776, 1787-89.
David Dunham, 1777-79, 1813-15.
Capt. Hugh Dunn, 1780.
Capt. Samuel Randolph, 1780.
Dr. Melancthon Freeman, 1780.
John Boice, 1780.
Justus Dunn, 1780-83.
Charles Sydam, 1782.
William Manning, 1783, 1794-96.
1802-8.
Edward Griffith, 1785-86.
Edward Runyon, 1785-86.
John Myers, 1787-1803.
Thomson Stelle, 1790-91.
David Coriell, 1792-93, 1800-1.
John Laugstaff, 1797-99.
George Farmer, 1804-6.

John Poole, 1807-12, 1816-24.
Joel Dunn, 1809-22.
John A. Smalley, 1823-30.
Edward F. Stelle, 1825-30, 1836-43.
Samuel F. Randolph, 1832-39, 1851-54.
William Phillips, 1832-24.
Morris Giles, 1835.
Lewis S. Randolph, 1840-48.
Ephraim Coriell, 1840-50.
Peter T. Stelle, 1849-58, 1861-62.
William Ryno, 1855-58.
Daniel Runyon, 1859-62, 1864.
N. R. Morse, 1869-60.
John D. Field, 1863.
M. M. Lupardus, 1863, 1868-69.
George W. Stelle, 1864, 1866-67.
Abraham Smalley, Jr., 1866-67.
James B. Brokaw, 1868-69.
George Drake, 1870-71.
Archibald Coddington, 1870-73,
1877-78.
Ambrose Smalley, 1872-73.
Lewis Dayton, 1874-76.
Ambrose Smalley, 1874.
Moses H. Acken, 1874-75.
Staats F. Randolph, 1876-78.
John C. Morris, 1879-80.

Abraham D. Titworth, 1835.
Enoch Randolph, 1836.
David Smalley, 1836, 1841, 1843-45.
Edward Stelle, 1836-43.
John D. Field, 1837-39, 1852-53.
Enos L. Blue, 1837.
Samuel Fitz Randolph, 1837-38, 1851.
Isaac S. Dunn, 1839-43.
Aea Fitz Randolph, 1840-41, 1844-47.
David A. Smalley, 1840-42.
Abel S. Runyon, 1843-51.
Simeon Dayton, 1844.
Simeon Dayton, 1845.
Jeremiah D. Stelle, 1846-48.
Stephen Voorhees, 1846-48.
James T. Dunn, 1848-53.
Randolph Morris, 1849.
Daniel Runyon, 1849-50.
Samuel E. Stelle, 1850-57, 1862, 1865.
Israel R. Coriell, 1852-55.
M. R. Molsey, 1852.
John T. Martin, 1853.
George B. Stelle, 1854.
Isaac C. Giles, 1854.
N. R. Morse, 1854-56, 1859-60, 1865.
William M. Drake, 1855-56.
Isaac H. Dunn, 1855.
Clarkson Giles, 1855-60.
Adrian Ver Muele, 1856-61, 1863.
Runyon Walker, 1857-53.
William Nisbit, 1857-58.
John T. Martin, 1858-59, 1861-63.
John Y. Martin, 1860, 1868.

Peter A. Runyon, 1861-63, 1865-67.
Abraham Coriell, 1861.
Daniel Dodge Randolph, 1862.
Abraham C. Coriell, 1863.
Erastus Humphrey, 1863.
Isaac H. Dunn, 1864.
Martin D. Nevins, 1865-65.
William B. Stewart, 1864-67.
Jeremiah Dunn, 1864.
Nehemiah R. Morse, 1866.
Isaac Boice, 1865-66, 1870-72.
Forman Stelle, 1866-67.
Samuel B. Merrell, 1867-68, 1870-71.
William P. Dunn, 1868-69.
Furman R. Stelle, 1868, 1870-78.
William O. Crowell, 1868-69.
Samuel Manning, 1869-70.
Farrington Barcalow, 1869.
Nelson Webster, 1870-71.
Samuel R. Manning, 1871.
Lewis Dayton, 1872-73.
Enos W. Titworth, 1872.
Ambros Smalley, 1872.
George Drake, 1872-75.
Tunis C. Mokaw, 1872.
George W. Stelle, 1872-73.
Tunis C. Brokaw, 1873-78.
Alexander Manning, 1874.
Nathan Vars, 1874-80.
Calvin Drake, 1876-77.
James T. Harris, 1876-78.
Eugene Runyon, 1878.
Charles Boice, 1879-80.
J. Auther Bligh, 1879.
Allen W. Dunn, 1880.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

John Royce, 1707.
Edmund Dunham, 1711.
John Borrowe, Esq., 1716.
Reune Runyon, 1759, 1767.
Alexander Dunn, Esq., 1802.
Isaac Smalley, Esq., 1703, 1711.
Robert Retty Hooper, Esq., 1733.
Thomas Harr, 1749.
Alexander Dunn, 1799.
George Boice, Esq., 1808.
William B. Manning, 1825.
Drake Dunn, 1826.
Nathan Vars, 1864, 1870-71.
W. B. Stewart, 1864, 1869.
W. X. Brumbridge, 1865.
Garshom P. Dunn, 1865, 1870-71.

Jacob Martin, 1866.
George Cornell, 1867.
Charles C. Morgan, 1869-71.
Nelson Webster, 1872-73.
Leonard T. Coles, 1880.
Archibald I. Coddington, 1880.
Samuel Luckey, 1880.
John Park, 1821.
Thomas Harnor, 1729.
Samuel Randolph, 1784.
Jacob Martin, 1784.
John Miller, 1785.
Benjamin Manning, 1798.
Thompson Stelle, 1795.
David Dunham, 1796.
Joel Dunham, 1839.

TOWN COMMITTEE.¹

William Tinbrook, 1786-89.
Dr. Freeman, 1786-90.
Jacob Martin, Esq., 1786-90.
Samuel Randolph, 1790, 1800.
Benjamin Foster, 1798.
David Coriell, 1798.
Joseph Randolph, 1798.
Benjamin Manning, 1798.
Joel Dunn, 1798, 1801.
Samuel F. Randolph, 1799.
Thompson Stelle, 1799, 1801, 1803-13.
David Dunham, 1799, 1814.
Alexander Dunn, Esq., 1799, 1813, 1818-20.
Daniel Drake, 1799, 1803.
Abraham Coriell, 1802.
Peter Runyon, 1802.
George Boice, Jr., 1803-4, 1809, 1815-17, 1829.
Samuel Stelle, Sr., 1804-6, 1816-24.
William Vail, 1805-8.
George Drake, 1807-8, 1810-19.

Nathaniel Dunn, 1809-10.
Nathaniel Fitz Randolph Dunn, 1811-15, 1821-25.
Elijah Coriell, 1814-15.
Jeremiah Manning, 1814-15.
William Manning, 1815.
Reune Runyon, 1816-18.
Reune Martin, 1816-27, 1829-31.
Jonathan B. Dunham, 1819-23.
John La Tourrette, 1820, 1842.
John A. Smalley, 1821-28.
Ira Dunn, 1824-27.
William B. Manning, 1825-26.
Drake Dunn, 1826-33.
James Gilman, 1827-34.
Reuben Drake, 1828.
William Phillips, 1828-30.
Samuel Smith, 1830-51.
Asa Pratt, 1831, 1838-39.
Elias J. Runlon, 1832-34.
Ephraim Coriell, 1832-34.
Samuel Randolph, 1833, 1835.
Moses Martin, 1835.

Schools.—The first school taught in this township dates about 1682, at Piscataway Town. It was located on lands conveyed "to George Drake, Benjamin Hull, Thomas Higgins, and Edward Slater by the proprietors of the province of East Jersey." This grant was not only made for school purposes, but also for a burial-ground and training-ground. A teacher by name of "Gordon" is supposed to have first taught here, as did a Mr. James Fullerton in the Short Hills, near Plainfield. These are believed to have been the first teachers, but of the early schools little is known.

In the records of the township is the following: "Oct. 24, 1696, Master Robert Cole is engaged to keep school in the town for one year, to be supported by voluntary subscriptions."

Master John Warburton, "as he was called, taught for a while in the Harris neighborhood, near Bound Brook." It is said that he not only believed in Dilworth's Speller, but also in the birch. This must have been in Quibbletown, now New Market, as a Mr. Gordon is mentioned about 1809, and followed by Rev. John Ellis, who was a Baptist preacher. The following are the names of teachers in this school as far back as we have been able to learn them: David Whitehead, Francis Fitz Randolph, Mr. Wells, Richard Townsend, Lucy Titworth, Mr. Gardner, Mary Eliza Davis, Mary Carman, Fanny Ingram, David Wilson, Mary L. Gibbs, Isaac S. Dunn, George P. Maxson, Rachelle Stelle, — Jeffry, Rachelle Willets, Lucretia Vail, Richard Ackerman 1823, Eliza Ackerman, ¹ The first record made 14th of March, 1786, for appointing a committee of accounts, which in three or four years afterwards was called or styled the Town Committee.

Miss Chiena, and Miss Webb. We are not able to give all the dates and the regular order of their terms of teaching.

THE FIELDVILLE SCHOOL.—This (as many of the other schools) cannot be traced back to its origin, but the list we give is correct as far as the memory of those now living serves. Mr. Dunbar, David Mack, Enoch Pillsbury, Abram Pillsbury, Miss P. A. Voorhis, Miss Eliza Lundy, Mr. I. Spaulding, Mr. H. Smith, Miss D. Field, David Mack, Elizabeth Brokaw, Hannah Coriell, Mariah Buxton, Delio Gillette, Mr. Carswell, and the present Miss Annie Davis have been teachers.

DUNELLEN SCHOOL.—This school is one of the oldest in the township, and is situated on the Titsworth property. The earliest record is as far back to 1800, when Ransom Downs, a "Yankee peddler," as he was called, taught. A Mr. Noyes is also mentioned in 1821. The Rev. John Ellis, a Baptist clergyman, and David Whitehead were teachers here. The school-house was rebuilt in 1841, when a Mr. Randolph came and taught for some time. Matthias Brown taught in 1850; Theodore Vail, Richard Townsend, 1853; Lorenzo Dow, 1855; Samuel Pound, Phebe Ann Randolph, Miss Townsend, Jenny Jennings, 1864; Mr. Willets, Howard Titsworth, 1867; David Tingley, 1868; Miss G. S. Wright and Mrs. Ella P. Hines, 1870. The present are Prescott D. Vail, principal, Mrs. F. B. Coffin, Miss Lansing, and Miss Belle Sidman. This district erected a fine brick building in 1875, two stories, with ample recreation rooms and many improvements needed for the better advancement of education, at a cost of ten thousand dollars. In this district (No. 2) are enrolled some two hundred and twenty-four children from the ages of five to eighteen years. Leonard C. Coles, Esq., is the district clerk.

NEW BROOKLYN SCHOOL.—This school district was among the first in Piscataway township, and it is said James Fullerton at an early date, living with his brother a short distance away on lands that were surveyed to them in the first allotment, 1669, taught here as well as in other parts of this county. In 1822 Mr. Campbell was a teacher, and also a Mr. Poulison. Neil Campbell taught here, when Capt. John Frasee came in 1825 and remained till 1830. Mr. Neil Campbell took his place. B. Ward taught in the years 1843-45, Mr. Cook in 1846, and there have been many who taught one quarter. The present teacher is Miss Ida Nelson, 1881.

The following statistics for the year 1881 furnish some information respecting the schools of the nine districts in this township:

	District.	Value School Property.	Children.
Harris Lane	No. 1.	$1,200	60
Dunellen.....	No. 2.	10,000	213
New Market.....	No. 3.	1,500	76
Panptown.....	No. 4.	1,500	23
New Brooklyn.....	No. 5.	1,200	82
Fieldville.....	No. 6.	300	24
Newtown.....	No. 7.	1,000	36
Union.....	No. 8.	400	38
Raritan Landing ..	No. 9.	1,500	27

The whole number of children between the ages of 5 and 18 years residing in this township is 579, and the value of school property $18,600; amount of moneys received from all sources for public school purposes is $8347.66; number of male teachers employed, 2; female teachers, 11.

CHAPTER LXXXIV.

PISCATAWAY.—(Continued.)

Seventh-Day Baptist Church.—We find the first Sabbatarian Church, as it is called in America, originated at Newport, R. I., and the first Sabbath-keeper was Stephen Mumford, who left London three years after the martyrdom of John James, and forty-four years after the landing of the Pilgrim fathers at Plymouth. He came as a missionary. Mr. Isaac Baccus, the historian of the early New England Baptists, has made the following record:

Stephen Mumford came from London in 1664, and brought the opinion with him that the whole of the ten commandments, as they were delivered from Mount Sinai, were moral and immutable, and that it was the anti-Christian power which thought to change times and laws, that changed the Sabbath from the Seventh to the First day of the week. Several members of the First-Day Church in Newport embraced this sentiment, and yet continued with that church for some time, until two men and their wives who had done so turned back to the keeping of the First day; but other followers came to assist Stephen Mumford, so that the first church of Sabbatarians was formed, and the following are the names: Tacy Hubbard, commenced keeping the Seventh day March 11, 1665; Rachel Langworthy, Jan. 15, 1666; Roger Baxter, April 15, 1666; and William Hiscox, April 28, 1666. These were the first Sabbath-keepers in America.

Dr. Edward Stennet wrote them, in behalf of the London Sabbath-keepers: "If the church will hold communion with these apostles from the truth, you ought then to desire to be fairly dismissed from the church, which if the church refuse you ought to withdraw yourselves." But they told the church publicly that they could not have comfortable communion with those four persons that had sinned. But the Sabbath-keepers replied that the ten precepts were as holy, just, good, and spiritual as ever, and they for several years went on with the church in a halvish kind of fellowship.

They soon left the Newport First-Day Church. On the 23d day of December, 1671, they covenanted together in a church organization.

Such was the origin of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church in America. And now we find that the second of these churches owes its origin to this circumstance: About the year 1700 one of the original settlers of this frontier, a Mr. Edmund Dunham, of now New Market, then commonly called Piscataway, N. J., reproved a person for labor on Sunday. He was asked for his authority from the Scriptures. On searching for this he became satisfied that the Seventh day is the only Sabbath in the Bible, and then began to observe it. Soon after others followed his example, and in 1707 a Seventh-Day Baptist Church was organized at Piscataway with some seventeen members. Edmund Dunham was chosen pastor, and sent to Rhode Island to receive ordination.

The first record on the church book after the articles of faith is as follows:

"The Church of God keeping the Commandments of God and the faith of Jesus Christ living in Piscataway and Hopewell, in the province of New Jersey, being assembled with one accord at the house of Benjamin Martin, in Piscataway, the 19th day of August, 1705, we did then and with one mind choose our dearly beloved Edmund Dunham, who is faithful in the Lord, to be our elder and assistant according to the will of God, whom we did send to New England to be ordained, who was ordained at the church meeting in Westerly, R. I., by prayer and laying on of hands by their elder, William Gilson, the 8th day of September, 1705."

In 1706, at a church meeting held at Edmund Dunham's, Benjamin Martin was chosen deacon and ordained by the laying on of hands and prayer by the Elder Edmund Dunham. This took place the 29th day of December.

Rev. Mr. Dunham at the organization of this church was about forty years old. It is evident that numbers became members of this church during Mr. Dunham's lifetime, but to what extent cannot be now ascertained from the manner in which their records were kept.

The following names appear on the records, who were all members previous to 1722:

Edmund Dunham, elder; Benjamin Martin, James Martin, Benjamin Martin, deacon; Isaac Martin, Samuel Doty, John Doty, Samuel Dunn, deacon; David Cummins, Thomas F. Randolph, Jr., John F. Randolph, Edmund Dunham, Jr., Jonathan Dunham, Thomas F. Randolph, John Martin, David F. Randolph, Hugh Dunn, Peter Martin, David Martin, Joseph Davis, Jonathan Martin, Lawrence Krith, Jonathan Smalley, Elisha Smalley, Gershom Hull, John F. Randolph, Jr., Ephraim Dunham, Joseph Dunn, Edmund Martin, James Martin, Jr., Benejah Dunham, James Lennox, Micajah Dunn, Hugh Dunn, Jr., John Dunham, Samuel Chandler, Samuel Dunn, Jr., Jonathan Dunn, Samuel Pyatte, Benjamin Martin, Azeria Dunham, Jonathan Martin, Thomas Noble, Jonathan Smalley, Mary Dunham, Sarah F. Randolph, Elizabeth Dunn, Margaret Martin, Martha Wooden, Hester Dunn, Dorothy Dunham, Sarah F. Randolph, Phebe Dunham, Elizabeth Allger, Mary F. Randolph, Jane Lee, Abigail Altger, Elizabeth Chandler, Dinah Dunham, Mary Satten, Jane Dunham, Temperance Martin, Philissa Martin, Dinah Martin, Rebecca Dunn, Hannah Davis, Esther Dunn, Elizabeth Dunn, Ann Drake, Hannah F. Randolph, Ann Smalley, Hannah Martin, Lucy Lennox.

Rev. Edmund Dunham we learn died in March, 1734, in his seventy-third year. The grave of this spiritual father, like that of Moses, cannot be found to this day. It was supposed that he was buried in the Piscatawaytown burying-ground, where scores of the early inhabitants of this frontier lie waiting the resurrection morn, yet no monument can be found telling us that he who was the founder of this church lies there.

"All traces of him should not be lost to you, Record his deeds and look their meaning through."

During the lifetime of Mr. Dunham they held these meetings in private houses. They built their first house of worship in 1736. The house is still standing, though for fifty years it has been used as a barn. The timbers of this ancient building appear as perfect as when taken from the forest. The Revolutionary war about this time came upon these people with all its terrors. The British army took possession of Piscataway, and for a long time this place was their encampment. The inhabitants were patriots, and entered the regular army or were enrolled in the militia. During the ravages of the war their beloved pastor, Rev. Jonathan Dunham, son of Edmund Dunham, died, March 10, 1777, aged eighty-three.

"Your birth-place once was home for me,
And so will long remembered be,
A long half century and more
The bread of life I spread before
Your fathers there. Through weal and woe
I pointed them the way to go
As well as by my light I could,
But not so faultless as I should
Could I have known what now I know
About soul-saving there below."

In 1802 the second meeting-house was built on the lot where the old one stood, concerning which we find the following record:

The new meeting-house was built by Jonathan Lenox, and cost about one thousand dollars. The money was raised by a tax. The old house was given to Elder McLaferty, except the inside (including seats, etc.), for him to use as a barn.

At the first meeting for business held in the new house a record was made of the names of all who were present, twenty-six in number. Not one of them is now living.

In 1835 and 1836 they built their present house of worship on the parsonage farm, two miles north of the old location, and near the village of New Market. This house is thirty-eight feet by fifty-one feet, with full galleries, neat in appearance, and costing some three thousand six hundred dollars. It was dedicated to the service of God with appropriate exercises in February, 1837.

In February, 1838, fifty-six of the members of this church were dismissed to a church in Plainfield, where they had been building, and now completed their first church. This reduced the number of the Piscataway Church to about one hundred and forty members.

During the year 1849 the church built a parsonage house, which adds much to the comfort of their pastor's family.

This church has been in existence nearly two hundred years. During that time it has built three meeting-houses and installed some eleven pastors, recapitulated as follows: Edmund Dunham, who planted this church; Jonathan Dunham, son of Edmund; Nathan Rogers, Henry McLaferty, Gideon Wooden, William B. Maxon, Walter B. Gillet, Halsey H. Baker, Lester C. Rodgers, Lewis A. Plates, L. E. Livermore. They at the present have good congregations, their pastor, Rev. Mr. Livermore, doing them good service, and occasionally supplying other pulpits in the neighborhood, he being very acceptable to the other denominations.

I find that in 1802 their General Conference was organized. At their first session they comprised in its organization eight churches, nine ordained ministers, and some thirteen hundred members. The Conference was organized with only advisory powers, the individual churches retaining the matters of discipline and church government in their own hands. The Conference now has about one hundred churches and some twelve thousand members. These churches are found in most of the Northern and Western States, and are divided into five associations, which, however, have no legislative nor disciplinary power over the churches which compose them. There are belonging to the denomination five academies, one college, and a university, with academic, collegiate, mechanical, and theological departments in operation. The Seventh-Day Baptist missionaries sustain many important missions, and are receiving a good degree of success in this work. It has also a missionary station at Shanghai and other parts of China, and a mission church there of faithful Christians. They have a publishing house at Alfred Centre, New York State, and publish the Sabbath Recorder, their church organ, and many publications upholding their Seventh-Day doctrine. They have many members scattered through the land who have not the opportunity to worship with the people of their choice, and do as did the members of the first church at Newport, R. I., two hundred and sixteen years ago, worship with the First-Day Christian, feeling that the God of their Sabbath is the God of the Christians of other churches. Many eminent men of talent and moral worth are found among them.

The history of the Sabbath embraces the period of six thousand years. The act which constituted it such were first, the example of the Creator; secondly, his placing his blessing upon the day; and thirdly, the sanctification or divine appointment of the day to a holy use. The Sabbath therefore dates from the beginning of our world's history. The highest of all possible honors therefore pertain to the keeping holy one day of the week. This divine appointment grows out of the nature and fitness of things, and was made directly to Adam.

Baptist Church.—This church was constituted in the year 1852, of a number of members from the church at Stelton, and others who united by letter from the churches at Samptown and Plainfield. The building is a frame, situated on the main road from Dunellen to New Market, near the latter place. The cost of the ground and edifice was about six thousand dollars. The following have been pastors: William D. Hires, George W. Clark, Isaac Newton Hill, Levi, Osborn, Grinnell, and the present, E. Everett Jones, who came first as a supply Jan. 1, 1873, and on April 1, 1873, was ordained as pastor. Revivals have passed over. In that period nearly one hundred and ninety converts have been added by baptism, and about forty by letter. Mr. Jones is also clerk of the East New Jersey Baptist Association, and secretary of the East New Jersey Baptist Sunday-School Convention. Eugene Runyon, Esq., is the stated clerk of the parish. Members, two hundred and nineteen; sittings, five hundred; Sabbath-school teachers, seventeen; scholars, one hundred and forty.

The Church of Holy Innocents, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was purchased from the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1872, as the building had become too small for their congregation, they having built a larger edifice in Dunellen. This parish is feeble and has passed through many discouragements. But by the liberality of Benjamin Smith, Esq., it was presented with the edifice clear of all encumbrances Oct. 6, 1881, at which time it was consecrated by Bishop Odenheimer, of this diocese. The Rev. E. Wenman, of the Bound Brook Church, is the present rector, and under his care, with the few families interested, are in hopes of seeing the growth of a larger parish.

Presbyterian Church.—(For the history of this church we are indebted to the courtesy of Charles A. Coriell, secretary of the board of trustees, and Rev. Alexander Miller, the present pastor.) There were many Presbyterian families located in this vicinity (Dunellen), and it was but natural that they should make some effort to establish a church in their neighborhood. The great distance to Bound Brook, and also to Plainfield, where many had attended, was another inducement to seek the location of a church here. At a meeting held for the purpose in the office of William J. Stevens, Esq., Sept. 7, 1870, suitable lots were offered by the Improvement Company on Dunellen Avenue, which were unanimously accepted, and on Sept. 19, 1870, a meeting was held for the purpose of electing trustees, when the following gentlemen were chosen: Francis A. Estey, president of board; Charles C. Morgan, secretary; Cornelius Boice, treasurer; Henry Oakley and Abner S. Coriell.

Arrangements for building were immediately made. Chauncey G. Graham, Esq., was requested to draw plans for a church, which in due time he presented before the board and they were accepted.

At a meeting held for purpose of organization, at the Dunellen Academy, Rev. John C. Bliss, moderator, and other clergymen assisting, the following-named members were received: William Vail and Elizabeth, his wife; Charles C. Morgan and Lucy Ann, his wife; Miss Mary F. Morgan; Abner S. Coriell and Catherine, his wife; Adam Craig and Catherine, his wife; James Craig; John A. Reed and Julia, his wife; Mrs. Harriett A. Humpstone, Henry Oakley, and Charlotte E. Reed. The following were elected the first elders: William Vail, Adam Craig, John A. Reed.

The corner-stone was laid May 15, 1871. The Rev. Ravand K. Rodgers, D.D., then pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Bound Brook, and Rev. John C. Bliss, D.D., of Plainfield, were present and assisted the elected pastor, Rev. Merrill N. Hutchinson, in the ceremonies of the occasion. The community gave liberally to this new enterprise, and Jan. 26, 1872, the day named for its dedication, Rev. Edward Hopper, D.D., made the opening prayer. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Rev. John Hall, D.D., of New York, prayer by Rev. W. C. Roberts, of Elizabeth, and the venerable Rev. Lewis Bond, of Plainfield, pronounced the benediction.

The whole cost of this beautiful building was $10,400. The following gentlemen have been elected as elders, and their term of office:

William Vail, 1870-73; Adam Craig, 1872-81; John A. Reed, 1872-81; Charles C. Morgan, 1874-81; George Beckwith, 1877-78; Charles A. West, 1877-80; Chauncey G. Graham, 1877-80; J. Wilbur Price, 1879-81; Orlando E. Chamberlain, 1880; James Lowrie, Nov. 2, 1881.

The Rev. Merrill N. Hutchinson resigned the pastorate Jan. 1, 1873, and the Rev. Theodore S. Brown was elected by the church as stated pastor March 26, 1873, and resigned June 21, 1880, after a pastorate of little more than seven years; he removed near Chatham Four Corners, N. Y. The Rev. Alexander Miller was installed Oct. 12, 1880; he came from the Ringoes Church, N. J. Rev. Dr. W. C. Roberts preached the installation sermon, assisted by Rev. John C. Bliss, D.D., of Plainfield, and Rev. Kneeland P. Ketchum, D.D., of First Presbyterian Church, Plainfield, who delivered the charge to the people. The following gentlemen compose the present board of trustees:

J. Roberts, president; Charles A. Coriell, secretary and treasurer; Arthur V. P. Sutphen, John P. Conover, Ruloff J. Swackhamer.

The sittings, 350; membership, 117; teachers in Sunday-school, 15; scholars, 118.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—In July, 1865, Rev. Charles E. Little, a supernumerary member of the Troy Conference, took up his residence in Newtown, about two miles distant from New Market, and found but a single Methodist family in New Market village, consisting of James Rutan and wife. The Rev. James O. Rodgers, of Newark Conference, had a few years before held a few Sabbath afternoon services in the Academy. The first services held by Mr. Little was by invitation of Hopewell Bigelow, Abner S. Coriell, James Rutan, Isaac H. Dunn, Arthur S. Cox, and George Osman, on Sabbath evening, Jan. 21, 1866, in the Academy, and this meeting was the start of a new church. On Feb. 25, 1866, the first Sabbath morning service was held, a class of twenty-three members was organized, which was subsequently increased by several Methodist families moving into the place. About the 1st of March a subscription was started and some $2000 or $3000 raised, and on the 22d of November, 1866, the church was dedicated. The entire expense of church and lots amounted to $4800. At this time this church was connected with the Plainfield Church as her mission, the Rev. George H. Whitney pastor, and Rev. Charles S. Little, assistant pastor.

During the Conference year of 1867-68 this church experienced a great loss in the removal of several of the brethren to other places, and its social meetings suffered. Mr. Little closed his pastorate March 24, 1864, and Rev. Theodore D. Frasee was appointed his successor. He remained until the spring of 1869, when Rev. Henry M. Simpson took charge of the church. He was succeeded by the Rev. Martin Herr in the spring of 1870, who was a non-resident and only supplied the pulpit on the Sabbath. In March of 1871, Rev. G. W. Gibson, a member of the Black River Conference, was put in charge by Rev. James Ayres, presiding elder of the Elizabeth district.

In the fall of this year (1871) the growing village of Dunellen was attracting many families from the city to become permanent residents, and the church had become quite too small, so that nearly all were in favor of building a new church in Dunellen. The old edifice in New Market was accordingly sold to the Episcopal Church for $3950 in February, 1872. The Rev. J. A. Kingsbury was appointed March, 1872, and upon him rested the labor and responsibility of building the new church, which in the fall of that year was completed and dedicated at an expense of nearly eight thousand dollars.

Rev. James W. Marshall was appointed to the pastorate in March, 1873, and remained for the term of three years, and during that term built the present parsonage; a large number were added, and the congregations increased to double what they had ever before been. In the spring of 1876, Rev. Charles S. Woodruff was appointed pastor by the Newark Conference, and remained three years. He was followed in 1879 by the Rev. Salmon D. Jones, who remained two years. The church prospered greatly under his ministry. In the spring of 1881, Rev. Ambrose S.

Compton was sent as their regular pastor, and by his interest in the temporal as well as the spiritual affairs has made considerable increase in the membership and improvement in the church property. Valuation of church, $9000; parsonage rectory, $3200; sittings, 350; membership, 70; officers and teachers in Sunday-school, 13; scholars, 100.

St. John's the Evangelist.—This new church of the Roman Catholics was built but a few months ago (1880), upon lots donated by Mr. Peter Moore, of Plainfield, N. J. Located upon Washington Avenue, Dunellen. The edifice is of brick, neat in architecture, and cost $2500. The Rev. Father Burgueda is the present pastor. The parish contains some thirty-five families; sittings about two hundred.

The Samptown (New Brooklyn) Baptist Church dates its existence from Dec. 1, 1792, when twenty-one members drew letters of dismission from the Scotch Plains Baptist Church, and Joseph Manning and Christianus Lupardus were elected deacons. The church remained without a settled pastor, they having preaching by supplies from the neighboring Baptist Churches until October, 1793, when the Rev. Jacob Fitz Randolph accepted a call. He remained for nearly twenty-five years, and it is said there was scarcely a church meeting in which there were not candidates present for admission into the church fellowship. In November, 1818, the Rev. Mr. Fitz Randolph, with thirty-two members of this church, took their letters of dismission for the purpose of constituting the First Baptist Church of Plainfield, Union Co., N. J. From that time until May 23, 1819, the church had no pastor. Rev. Lebbeus Lathrop then accepted a call. He remained a period of twenty-one years, which closed his active work in the ministry. He died Nov. 5, 1843, aged eighty-two years, and is buried in the cemetery of this church at Samptown.

Rev. E. M. Barker succeeded to the pastorate May 28, 1841, and remained for eight years as minister in this church. A remarkable revival of religion occurred, with a large accession of members, on Jan. 21, 1843. He extended the hand of fellowship to ninety-nine persons whom he baptized. One hundred were expected, but one was detained by sickness.

The following ministers have succeeded to the pastorate: Rev. W. D. Hires, Rev. W. Maul, Rev. J. J. Baker, and Rev. Mr. Gurr for less than one year—from May 1, 1868, to March 2, 1869, the shortest of any; followed by Rev. S. L. Cox, Rev. W. H. Burlew, and the present incumbent, Rev. Andrew Armstrong, who came from Easton, Pa., Aug. 1, 1878. This church, then located at Samptown, about one mile from New Brooklyn, was burned the 23d of April, 1879, by a cinder from the engine, which set fire to the roof. The (now) new church was built at the latter place in the fall of the same year at a cost of $4200, and the parsonage, $3000. The following named have been deacons: Joseph Manning, Christianus Lepardus, Samuel Drake, Benjamin Manning, Daniel Fitz Randolph, Reune Runyon, Sr., Reune Runyon, Jr., Jephtha L. Runyon, Ephraim J. Runyon, Joseph Tingley, Jeremiah Blackford, William Lapham, Louis Dayton, E. D. Boice, Thaddeus Drake, D. Toppin, Mr. Dayton. Boice and Toppin are the present deacons. Sittings, 250; membership, 100.

Tavern-Keepers in 1742.—There was a tax called the excise on all the tavern-keepers in 1742. We find the following names and dates of those who were taxed to keep inns:

John Hull, 1740; Joseph Michiel, 1750; Elijah Dunham, 1752; George Vroom, 1755; Aaron Boorum, 1774; James Gilman, 1774; Hugh Dunn, 1775; Josephus Drake, 1777; Samuel Moores, 1755; Joseph Woods, 1752; John Pound, 1770; Joseph Drake, 1771; Thomas Fitz Randolph, 1773; John Dunn, 1776.

New Market.—In the early settlement of this village it was known by the name of Quibbletown, and in Gordon's "Gazetteer of New Jersey" he speaks of it by this name, and also as being called New Market in the year 1834. It then contained a grist-mill, a tavern, a store, and some twenty dwellings, being seven miles north of New Brunswick, on the left bank of Cedar Creek, as the stream of New Brooklyn Pond was then called, which runs through the village. The village now contains about eighty dwellings. There are many residents doing business in the neighboring cities. The Easton and Amboy Railroad passes through the centre of the village, having a commodious station and freight-houses. There are a number of shops and one large clothing establishment in the place.

Dunellen is situated in the extreme northwesterly part of Piscataway township, and is divided by the Central Railroad of New Jersey from the village of New Market. The place is of but a few years' growth. The streets are wide, and laid out in regular lines. It contains a number of tasty dwellings belonging to business men of the city and others, who have selected this location for retirement. The surrounding scenery, particularly of the mountains in the vicinity of Washington Rock, is quite picturesque. It has about two hundred dwellings and a number of stores.

New Brooklyn and Samptown are small hamlets; contain grocery and general merchandise store, Reune and William Manning, who is also the postmaster; school-house, Baptist Church, grist-mill, Mr. H. Acken, who carries on the milling, and the old saw-mill of Drake Dunn and John Smalley, built before the Revolutionary war; Mr. William Ryno, who is the owner since 1857, and carries on the business. His father was the first tavern-keeper in 1822, but gave it up, and since then there has been no inn kept in the village. There are about thirty or forty houses. The Easton and Amboy Railroad passes through the place, and it has taken the name of South Plainfield, by which it is now known.

Burial-Grounds.—At an early day plots of ground were set apart in one corner of a farm called the family burial-ground, and in this township there were many such, but in later years the stones have been removed and the ground leveled with the rest of the field.

Among the oldest of these plots is the Runyon burying-ground. There are a large number here buried without headstones, and their interment probably dates back to the burial of the first settlers. We copy a few of the dates on the headstones:

Benjamin Runyon, died 1783, in his 58th year; Peter Runyon died 1821, in his 77th year; Susannah Runyon, wife of Peter Runyon, died 1824, aged 77 years; David Stelle, son of David and Rachelle Stelle, died 1819, aged 3 years, also their daughter, Susannah Stelle, died 1811, aged 9 years; Ann Runyon died 1805, aged 75 years; Sarah, wife of Runyon Hamil, died Dec. 11, 1804, aged 18 years; Maria Stelle died 1825, aged 14 years; Samuel Blackford died April 16, 1851, aged 89 years.

A family burial-ground of Dunn and Tingley lies back on the lands of the late Dr. C. W. Coriell, New Market. But a few stones now remain, many of them having been removed to the general burying-ground in the township, and the same may be said of the old family burial-ground of the Coriells, the stones having been removed, the farm now belonging to Frederick Wessels. It is situated at Newton, now called Randolphville, about the centre point of this township.

A private burial-ground of the Boices is situated in New Market, on lands of Dr. A. S. Titsworth. The stones bear many ancient dates of the first settlers who came to this township, and a large number who are buried without anything that can be recognized as their graves, but we are told that the plot is filled up. We copy a few. The initials T. B., for Thomas Boice, may be one of the oldest. P. C., 1758, representing the grave of Peter Coriell. J. L., 1756, Joseph or John Lenox, and the oldest date is roughly marked E. L., 1749.

The following are more in detail:

"Osee Daught of David and Sarah Coriell died Sept. ye 24, 1794, aged 4 mo. and 21 days.

David, son of above, died May ye 20, 1805, aged 3 mo. and 10 days."

"In Memory of Lydia, wife of Daniel Runyon, daughter of James Lenox, died Oct. ye 17, 1784, in her 31st year."

"Beny and Anne died April 23, 1777, July 7, 1781, aged 2 mo. 13 d. 1 mo. and 29 d."

"George L. Boice, who died Jan. 11, 1817. 65 years. Sarah, his wife, 73 years, died March 21, 1830."

Rachel Shotwell died Sept. 3, 1827, in her 68th year. There are other plots of the Giles family on the Peter Smith place; on the W. H. Oliver farm of the Field families; and at New Brooklyn, on land of John I. Holly, many of the family of Laing are buried.

WATERVILLE CEMETERY, sometimes called the Samptown burial-ground, is one of the oldest public cemeteries. It is kept in a neat condition, with good taste, trees planted and walks straightened. We will name only a few of the families who bury here, viz.: Pyatt, Piatt, Drake, Coulter, Stewart, Osmon, Tingley, Adair, Frasee, Low, Runyon, Watts, Manning, Mollerson, Blackford, Soper, Pound, Stillborn, Whitehead, Laing, Bloodgood, Ross, Fitz Randolph, Lee, Barclay, Dears, Honeyman, Harris, Farant, Way, Gaskell, Stephens, Morris, Beekman, Vannest, Magan, Bush, Clark, Blue, Shotwell, Conever, Lever, Clauson, Dunn, Wright, Miller, Clarkson, Holton, Vandevort, Lupardus, Pearsall, McCormick, Scelle, Sullard, Coriell, Brokaw, Gibson, Ayres, Hoff, and Snyder.

Here is an epitaph of

"Rev. Lebbeus Lathrop, who was born Oct. 23, 1761, in Canterbury, Conn., died Nov. 5, 1843, aged 82 years."

The following are epitaphs of those who served in the last war:

"In Memory of Augustus Ryno, Died from Wounds rec^d while in the service of his country, Dec. 13, 1863, aged 38 years."

"In memory of Lieut. George C. Boice, son of Peter and Mary A. Boice, who was killed in front of Petersburg, Va., while on duty on the Picket Line, Oct. 8, 1864, Aged 26 years, 3 mo., 16 days."

"Erected to the memory of Aaron P., son of John & Bershela Fitz Randolph, Died March 8, 1863, aged 22 years, 6 mo., 23 days.

My friends whom here I leave,
From whom I must now part,
Oh, look to God to comfort you,
And heal your broken heart."

Many of the stones in this yard bear date 1762, 1773, and 1792, and a number have become so obliterated that they cannot be deciphered.

The cemetery situated on the road from New Market to New Brunswick, about two miles from the former place, was, by the liberality of Joel Dunn, Esq., in 1835, given to the trustees of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church as their place of interment, their church having been built in the village instead of the location formerly occupied by the Second Church, where they had a small plot for burial purposes. The grounds are neatly inclosed, and very soon more room will be needed.

The private plots of the Gilles, Lainge, and a few others are now of the past, they not now being used as places of interment, and in some cases very much neglected by their descendants, which is much to be regretted, as they are the links in the chain of families, and is where the historian must go for his genealogies of these families.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

ISAAC D. TITSWORTH.

Isaac D. Titsworth was born in Piscataway township, Middlesex Co., N. J., June 13, 1805. He was the fifth child and second son of Lewis and Keziah (Dunham) Titsworth. His ancestors came from England, from a township named Tittesworth, in Staffordshire, which was the ancient seat of the family. From a printed work containing a history of this township we trace the name of Tittesworth back to the year 1030, in the time of Canute, the Dane, and Edward the Confessor. The same work informs us of certain descendants of the original Tittesworth who greatly distinguished themselves. One named Ralph joined Lord Stanley at Bosworth Field with a large body of men, and himself slew Richard the Third on the 24th day of August, 1485.

Another descendant, Sir Benjamin, was called "the Silver Trumpet of the Long Parliament." Horace Walpole speaks of him as "a wit and poet in great vogue in those days," and Southey, in his "Book of the Church," calls him "one of the most eloquent men in that best age of English eloquence." Another was the engineer and builder of the second Eddystone Lighthouse.

When the name first came to this country is uncertain; it was, however, previous to 1711, as the name occurs at that date as that of the owner of a plantation in Northern New Jersey. The subject of this sketch was reared in poverty. He did not long enjoy even the common-school advantages of those days for obtaining an education. Circumstances compelling him at an early age to earn a living, he began while yet a lad to carry on horseback through Middlesex, Monmouth, and Essex Counties the newspapers then published in New Brunswick, and continued to do so for a number of years.

Nearing manhood he was apprenticed to learn the trade of a tanner and currier, and for a number of years successfully carried on that business in Plainfield, and afterwards in New Market. On Aug. 25, 1831, he married Hannah Ann Sheppard, of Shiloh, Cumberland Co., N. J., thus forming a connection through his wife with the Sheppards and Ayers, two of the most reputable families of Cumberland County in those days. Moving to Shiloh in 1838, he was for fourteen years successively merchant and tanner, being also the first postmaster of that place, and continuing postmaster there till after his removal to Plainfield in 1852. In this year he sold a part of his farm to Thomas B. Stilliman, and with him laid out many of the streets in Plainfield. In 1853 he exchanged the remainder of his farm for a farm and tan-yard at New Market, where he has since continued to reside.

During the Rebellion he was active in sustaining the State and general government. Of his seven sons the oldest four, aged sixteen, eighteen, twenty, and twenty-two, enlisted in the ranks as volunteers; also two sons-in-law, both army and navy being equally represented among the six. All were promoted to honorable positions, all were honorably discharged, and all to-day occupy honorable positions in the communities where they reside. In politics Isaac D. Titsworth was first a Whig and afterwards a Republican, and has held a number of offices of honor and trust. In society he is respected for his public spirit and honest, consistent life. He has for many years been a deacon in the Seventh-Day Baptist Church, and has since early manhood been known as an active laborer in the cause of temperance.

On Aug. 25, 1881, he celebrated with his aged companion his golden wedding, all of the three daughters and seven sons being present with their companions (one son-in-law excepted), and all living grandchildren, twenty-one in number, being also present (save one).

It was considered a matter of unusual interest that during fifty years of married life but three deaths had occurred in their family, and but two of these (both infant grandchildren) being descendants of the aged couple.

HENRY V. DUNHAM.

The grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch was Squire David Dunham, who resided in the township of Piscataway, where he followed agricultural employments and wielded a considerable influence in public affairs. He married and had children,—Edmund, George W., Benjamin, Caroline, and Sarah. The death of Mr. Dunham, after a life of industry, occurred at his home. His son George W. was born Dec. 19, 1788, at the homestead, where the years of his boyhood, as also his later years, were spent. He subsequently removed to Plainfield, which became his residence. By his marriage to Miss Phebe, daughter of William Vail, who was a Quaker in his religious faith and born in 1792, he became the father of children,—David V., Eveline (Mrs. N. Randolph), Elizabeth (Mrs. B. D. Randolph), James V., Jane H. (deceased), Daniel V., Henry V., Clarkson C., George H., and Charles E. Mr. Dunham's death occurred June 22, 1876, in his eighty-eighth year, and that of his wife Oct. 5, 1881, aged nearly ninety years.

H. V. Dunham

Their son Henry V. was born Dec. 27, 1828, at the family residence, where his youth until the age of sixteen was devoted to study, varied by occasional labor on the farm. He then closely applied himself to a trade, that of a tailor, which was soon mastered and followed for a period of two years.

This proved, however, a narrow field of operation, and Mr. Dunham soon after embarked in the manufacture of cloth, in which he is still engaged at the village of New Market.

He was, Nov. 10, 1855, united in marriage to Miss Susan M., daughter of John Smalley, of the same township. Their children are Alida V. (Mrs. Isaac E. Giles), and William C., who is married to Etta Burdick, and resides at Alfred Centre, Alleghany Co., N. Y.

Mr. Dunham is a staunch Republican in politics, and a close observer of the political changes of the time, but cares little for the distinctions of official life. He is a Baptist in his religious faith, and a trustee of the New Market Baptist Church. He is enterprising and sagacious in matters of business, and has enjoyed a success commensurate with these business qualifications.

ASA F. RANDOLPH.

The grandfather of the subject of this biography was Edward F. Randolph, who had among his children a son, Edward F., who resided in New Jersey during the war of the Revolution, and died in Somerset County. He was united in marriage to Miss Mary, daughter of Hugh Webster, of Plainfield, and became the parent of eight children, two of whom died in infancy. The others were named, respectively, Phebe, Mercy, Sarah, Mary, Ira, and Asa F. The death of Mr. Randolph occurred Jan. 3, 1831. His son Asa F. was born Oct. 10, 1795, in Somerset County, where his youthful years were spent with his parents. He was married on the 4th of May, 1816, to Miss Rachel, one of ten children of William Vail, of Piscataway.

To Mr. and Mrs. Randolph were born seven children in the following order: Peter F., deceased, in 1817; William F., in 1821; Mary F. (Mrs. Daniel Randolph), in 1823; Lewis F., in 1828; Edward F., in 1830; Isabella F. (Mrs. Charles Buckelew), in 1836; Harriet F. (Mrs. Smalley), in 1838.

About the year 1820, Mr. Randolph removed to Piscataway, where he has since been one of the representative farmers of the township. He was also for a brief period engaged in the business of milling.

The Republican party in politics has claimed his allegiance, and various township offices have been filled by him, though these honors he never specially desired. Both himself and wife are members of the Piscataway Baptist Church, and have at all times manifested much interest in its prosperity. Mr. and Mrs. Randolph are still enjoying health and abundance in the sixty-fifth year of their married life.

CHAPTER LXXXV.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.

THE problem of establishing a seat of government for East Jersey was one which the proprietors early sought to solve. Although Carteret on his arrival in the province in August, 1665, fixed the seat of his government at Elizabethtown, where it remained for over twenty years, yet he early had his attention drawn to "Emboyle" (Ompoye, as it was called by the natives), known to the English as "Ambo," then as "Amboy," and finally as the city of Perth Amboy. In a letter to James Bollen, dated Elizabethtown, July 9, 1680, he mentions having made Amboy the subject of a special communication to Lady Carteret, and it is not improbable that the establishment of the chief town of the province at this point was then in contemplation, but was delayed on account of the transfer of the province to other proprietors. The new proprietors seem to have been made fully aware of the advantages of the situation and of the intentions of their predecessors respecting it, for upon receiving their title the twelve associates set forth the following "proposals" for building and settling the town:

Abel F. Randolph

"For as much as Ambo Point is a sweet, wholesome, and delightful place proper for trade by reason of its commodious situation, upon a safe harbor, being likewise accommodated with a navigable river and fresh water, and hath, by many persons of the greatest experience and best judgment, been approved for the goodness of the air, soil, and situation,

"We, the proprietors, purpose by the help of Almighty God, with all convenient speed, to build a convenient town for merchandise, trade, and fishery on Ambo Point: and because persons that hath a desire to plant there may not be disappointed for want of proposals, we, the proprietors, offer the following:

"First. We intend to divide fifteen hundred acres of land upon Ambo Point into one hundred and fifty lots, which lots shall consist of ten acres the lot; one hundred of the lots we are willing to sell here, and fifty we reserve for such as are in America and have long desired to settle there.

"Secondly. The price of each lot will be fifteen pounds sterling to such who purchase before the 25th of December, 1682, and to such who purchase afterwards, before the 25th of December, 1683, twenty pounds sterling.

"Thirdly. Every lot is to be as equally divided as the goodness of the place doth require and the situation can admit.

"Fourthly. The most convenient spot of ground for a town shall be divided into one hundred and fifty equal shares, and set out into streets according to rules of art; and no person shall be preferred before another in choice, whether purchaser or proprietor.

"Fifthly. We reserve four acres for a market-place, town-house, etc., and three acres for public wharfrage.

"Sixthly. Each purchaser is obliged to build a dwelling-house in the place designed for the town, and to clear three acres of upland in three years or else the proprietors to be re-registered in such lots wherein default is made, repaying the purchase-money.

"Sevently. We, the proprietors, do within a year hope by God's assistance to build for such of us one house upon Ambo-Point, which we intend shall stand in an orderly manner according to the best and most convenient model.

"And, in pursuance of the design of the propositions abovesaid,—

"Eighthly. And for the encouragement of carpenters, joiners, brick and tile-makers, bricklayers, masons, sawyers, and laborers of all sorts who are willing to go and employ themselves and servants in helping to clear ground and build houses upon the general account of and for the proprietors.

"The said proprietors will engage to find them work and current pay for the same in money or clothes, and provisions, of which there is plenty (as beef, pork, corn, etc.) according to the market-price at New York during the space of one year at least next after the 25th of December, 1682, in which time (through God's blessing and their industry) they may have got wherewith to buy cows, horses, hogs, and other goods, to stock that land, which they in the mean time may take up, according to the concessions; neither shall such persons pay rent for their said land so long as they are employed in the proprietors' work; and their wages shall at all times be so much as other such artificers and laborers in the said province usually have; nor shall they be obliged to work for the proprietors longer than they find encouragement so to do.

"Ninthly. And for the more ready and certain employing those workmen and laborers that shall transport themselves to East Jersey, this is to let all laborers and persons that shall transport themselves know they must upon their arrival upon that place, repair to the register of the above said province, and enter themselves according to their respective qualitis and designs, and thereupon they shall be entered into, the service and pay of the proprietors."

The proprietaries contributed twelve hundred pounds in furtherance of the project, to erect each a house, and Thomas Rudyard, their first deputy-governor, appears to have been instructed to carry out this and other plans respecting their new town. "Upon our view and survey of Amboy Point" he wrote under date of 30th of May, 1683, "we find it extraordinary well situate for a great town or city beyond expectation. . . . The point is good lively land, ten, some places twenty feet above the water." Says Mr. Charles D. Deshler,—

"Perth Amboy, originally called 'Ombo' and 'Ompoye' (signifying an elbow) by the aborigines, and in old records variously styled 'Amboyle' and 'Emboyle,' was settled and became a town later than Woodbridge and Piscataway. It was still uninhabited in 1682, as appears from an act 'directing the Times and places for holding the County Courts,' passed in 1686. This act recites that 'whereas an act was made the first day of March, 1682, providing that the Courts should be held in the County of Middlesex, at Woodbridge and Piscataway; and the Town of Amboy Perth not being then inhabited, the Courts could not be there settled; but, for the better encouragement of the said Town, the act of 1686 goes on to order that henceforth the Courts should 'be held at the town of Amboy Perth' in September and December of every year, alternating with Woodbridge and Piscataway. At the date of the 'Instructions' by the Proprietors to Governor Laurie, September 7, 1683, 'Perth Town' was yet 'to be built.' The Instructions say: As to the Lots at Ambo Point and the town of Perth there to be built, we desire that due care may be taken that it may be made regularly according to a scheme which is intended herewith to be sent.' In this same year 'one George Lockhart' offered to build a 'Prison and Towne house' in the place, and Governor Laurie was authorized to close with the offer. But it is certain that neither were built by Lockhart. On some part of the lands allotted to the town there was at this time 'a house belonging to the Proprietors, with the Orchards and Grounds belonging thereto,' and the Instructions ordered Thomas Rudyard, the first Deputy-Governor, to 'give the Governor possession thereof'—the governor alluded to being Gawen Laurie, who arrived in February, 1684.¹

"Besides this house, Rudyard wrote to the Proprietors May 30, 1683, that they had begun building 'some small houses fitting for workmen,' and August 11, the same year, Samuel Groom, Surveyor-General, wrote that three houses had been erected. The Instructions above cited also made allusion to what is now South Amboy, directing that the six thousand acres belonging to the Proprietors upon the South Side of the Raritan, over against Ambo Point, be cast in three equal divisions, Two Thousand in each for every eight Proprietors, who, it is added, are now (1683) sending over in Company both stock and servants.' Until 1686 the General Assembly of East Jersey had been held either at Elizabethtown, Woodbridge, or Piscataway,² but on the 9th of April, in that year, it met for the first time at the 'Town of Amboy Perth.' And at some time during the session an act was passed appointing 'a public Market on the fourth day of every week at the Town of Amboy Perth, as likewise two Fairs in the year. The same act empowered the inhabitants of the said town to choose themselves a clerk of the Market and Keeper of the Toll-Book.' Still later in the session the Court of Common Rights was ordered to be held there twice in each year. The place was variously called New Perth, Perth Town, and Amboy Perth, in the several acts of assembly till 1692, when it was first styled Perth Amboy in an act passed that year 'for raising Money for their Majesty's Service.' Its first municipal charter was obtained from Governor Robert Hunter, August 24, 1718.³

The first houses built in Amboy were "18 by 30 feet, with a double chimney made of timber and clay,

¹ Leiding and Spicer, p. 175.

² Ibid., p. 177.

³ The general seat of government was at Elizabethtown until removed to Perth Amboy in 1686.

⁴ Deshler's Historical Papers.

as the manner of this country is to build." Groom "surveyed the harbor and sounded the channel from Amboy to Sandy Hook, and found it a 'broad and bold channel.'" The house for the Governor was "66 foot long and 18 foot broad."

The quantity of land laid out for this town, Governor's house, and public highways was estimated at about two hundred acres. One hundred and fifty or two hundred acres of salt marsh, three miles up the Raritan River, were at first retained in common to furnish grass for the settlers on the Point. In a letter Governor Laurie reiterates his favorable impressions regarding the new city. He says, "Where the Town of Perth is now in building, a ship of three hundred Tuns may easily ride close to the shoar, within a plank's length to the houses of the Toun. The bank of the River is twenty foot, in some places thirty." John Barclay and Arthur Forbes were appointed to make inquiries, and they remark that ships "came close to the houses and also a ship of Three hundred tun in there this winter, in the hardest frost we had and lay hard by the toun, so near that she was tyed to a tree."

It is to be regretted that there are not fuller records in existence to throw light upon the incidents and counsels of this earliest era of the city's history, but the following, touching some of the prominent early residents and officials, will be of interest:

Thomas Rudyard and Gawen Laurie were the first two deputy-governors, and held land in Amboy. Samuel Groom, one of the twenty-four proprietaries, is styled in the records "Mariner of Stepney." He was appointed surveyor-general and receiver-general in 1682, and accompanied Deputy Governor Rudyard to the province the same year. He was a man of great activity and energy of character, but "Rudyard dispossessed Groom of his position on account of opposition made by him to his wishes respecting lands upon the Raritan River." He refers to the matter in this way: "Wee are very sensible of Samuel Groom's Honesty and Fidelity to our Interests, and therefore Cannot but very well approve of his Proceedings, both in his care in seeking out and Discovering the best Land, and surveying it out for our use, for his Endeavors to Clear it of the Indian Incumbrance, and for his refusing to comply with the particular Interest of any there, by accommodating them with Lands or others, at their desire, to our General Prejudice, and this wee are willing it to be signafed to him in our Name and wee wish there may a way be found where-by he may still continue to be Concerned with us."

The proprietaries had previously shown their confidence in him by placing in his charge, when he came to the province, a cargo of goods worth seven hundred and fifty pounds with which to purchase Indian titles.

The will of Groom is dated Aug. 21, 1682, and he died in the course of the following year, leaving on the stocks unfinished the first vessel built in East Jersey. He never brought his family to this province.

William Haige. It is recorded that when Rudyard removed Groom as surveyor-general and receiver-general he appointed William Haige to these offices. He was one who came to the settlement at the earliest period, and had the respect and confidence of the people of the colony. Groom soon after died, and Haige continued the duties of his office until the arrival of George Keith in 1685. Haige, in 1685, married Mary, daughter of Deputy-Governor Laurie; he died Jan. 1, 1688, leaving no issue.

William Dockwra owned several town-lots, and it was to his exertions and those of his friends that the prosperity of this town was largely due. Dockwra was appointed receiver-general and treasurer of the province July 6, 1688, on the death of William Haige. We find him first mentioned in the East Jersey records July 20, 1683, where he is styled "Merchant of the parish of St. Andrew, Undershaft, London," and he has secured for himself some fame by having originated the "Penny Post" in that city.

"The people" mentioned by Laurie were laborers sent over in order to obtain the grants for headlands, in accordance with "the concessions," Dockwra receiving a portion of their earnings. Some forty came at different times, besides some on account of the Scottish proprietaries generally; and we are also informed that many of the Scotch servants and poor families who came over had cattle, etc., given them.

Dockwra died in 1747, leaving a large number of children, but no account has been preserved of any of them who came to America.

Benjamin Clarke was a stationer, and came with his son Benjamin in 1683. It is supposed he built himself a house in Amboy, on the south side of Market Street, near the junction with Water Street. The next year his wife came over (1684). There is an account from a letter of Charles Gordon, "Sent from Amboy to Edinburgh under date of March, 1685;" he says, "Neither are we altogether destitute of Books and Clergy, for Rev. George Keith, who arrived three weeks since with some others (they were all winter in Barbadoes), hath brought mathematics, and Benjamin Clarke a library of books." James Johnstone also writes to his brother, and alludes to the "good stationer's shop of books at New Perth." Mr. Clarke died, leaving his son Benjamin heir to his property, in 1689. Nothing is known of any of his family at the present time.

George Keith was a native of Aberdeen, Scotland, an eminent Quaker, and subsequently an Episcopalian missionary. He was appointed in 1684 surveyor-general, but did not arrive in the province till the next year. Being naturally a leader among the people, through his talents and energy he soon gathered a party composed of many Quakers, inculcating increased attention to plainness of garb and language and other points of discipline. He was the cause of dissensions among the colonists, and in June, 1692, "a declaration was drawn up in which both he and his conduct were publicly denounced," and from that time his authority and influence were at an end. He returned to his home in Scotland, where he remained for a few years, when he returned to America, as a missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, in 1702. His labors were very successful, and he continued until his death to minister to Episcopal Churches and to write against the doctrines of the Quakers.

Lord Neil Campbell, brother of the Earl of Perth, was a gentleman universally esteemed. On account of his having espoused the liberal cause in Scotland he was cited to appear before a council in Edinburgh in 1684. But leaving his wife and family, he came here in the fall of 1685, having in August purchased the proprietary right of Viscount Tarbet, bringing with him, or causing to be sent out immediately afterwards, a large number of settlers for whom, subsequently, headlands were granted to him. His presence in the province led the proprietaries to avail themselves of his services as their deputy-governor, circumstances inducing them to remove Laurie from that post; he was commissioned on the 4th of June, 1686, and entered upon his duties the ensuing October. The change of a number of other offices soon followed. John and Archibald, sons of Lord Neil Campbell, were also obliged to seek refuge in America from the hostility of the English government.

Archibald Campbell died in May, 1702. No mention is made of any issue. He and his brother held lots in Amboy, and a ravine in the north part of the town bears the name of "Campbell's Gully."

In the month of December, 1685, an arrival of more than ordinary interest occurred. A vessel freighted with Scotchmen, upon whom persecution had wrought its work of purification, and whose souls had been tempered for patient endurance by sore trials and misfortunes, anchored in the harbor of Amboy, after a long and disastrous voyage of fifteen weeks, the circumstances of which, with the events attending the embarkation of the emigrants, are deserving of special notice. Mr. John Welsh, Mr. Samuel Amot, and many others had appeared before the Council, also George Scot, of Pitlockie, who was fined for contempt, and many others. A decree in 1674 had passed against those who "kept conventicles." They were persecuted, and came on account of their liberty of conscience. Many were imprisoned. Margaret Rigg (Lady Pitlockie) was fined a thousand marks. This was the cause of such a large number emigrating to East Jersey.

Scot, as early as May, had chartered the "Henry and Francis, of New Castle, a ship of three hundred and fifty Tun, and twenty Guns, Richard Hutton, Master." They left Leith the 5th of September, 1685, and those of the passengers who felt safer on board had been waiting for a long time to sail. The following is the list, but all cannot now be given. Many died out of some two hundred or more who came. Those names are marked with a star who died on the voyage.

Robert Adam.	Janet Lintron.
Lady Aithernie.*	Gawen Lockhart.
John Arbuckle.	Michael Marshall.
Rev. William Aisdale.*	John Marshall.
John Black.	John Martin.
George Brown.	Margaret Miller.
Robert Campbell.	George Moor (Muir).
David Campbell.	Gilbert Monorg or Monorgau.*
William Campbell.	Jean Moffat.
John Campbell.	John Muirhead.
Christian Carie.	James Muirhead.
John Crichton.	William McCalmont.
John Corbet.	John McEwen.
Andrew Corbet.	Walter McEwen (McIgne).
John Corsan (Casson).	Robert McEwen.
Agnes Corhead.*	John McQueen (McEwen).
Barbara Cowan.	Robert McLellan.
Marjory Cowan.	Margaret McLellan.
William Cunningham.*	— McLellan.
Patrick Cunningham.	Andrew McLellan.*
William Douglass.	John McKeanan.
Charles Douglass.	William McMillan.
Isabel Durie.	John McGhie.*
John Frazer.	William Niven.
Thomas Finlater.*	William Oliphant.
Elspeth Ferguson.	Andrew Paterson.
Janet Ferguson.	John Pollock.
Margaret Ferret (Forrest).	John Ramn.
John Foord.	Rev. Archibald Riddel.
James Forsyth.	Mrs. Riddel.
John Forman.	William Rigg.
John Gray.	Eupham Rigg.
Thomas Gray.*	Marion Rennie.
Thomas Graham.*	John Renwick.
Grisel Gemble.	James Reston.
William Ged.*	Thomas Russel.
Fergus Grier.	Peter Russel.*
James Grier (Grierson).	Christopher Strang.
Robert Gilchrist.	William Sprat.
John Gilfillan.	(McAgnes Stevens Tannis).*
Bessie Gordon.	William Spreul.
Annabel Gordon.	Thomas Shelston.
Katherine Govan.	John Swinton.
John Hanie.	John Smith.
John Henderson.	John Sinton* (Seton.)
Adam Hood.	George Scot.
Charles Homgall.	Margaret Scot.
John Hutchison.*	Eupham Scot.
John Hodge.*	Janet Symington.*
Thomas Jackson.*	James Sittingtoun.
William Jackson.	John Target.
Annabel Jackson.	John Turpinie.
George Johnson.	William Turnbull.
John Johnston.	Patrick Urie.
James Junk.	John Vernor.
John King.	Mrs. Vernor.
John Kippen.*	John Watt.
John Kincaid.	Patrick Walker.
James Kirkwood.	James Wardrope.
John Kirkland.*	Elizabeth Whitelaw.
John Kellie.	Grizel Wutherspoon.
Katherine Kellie.*	William Wilson.
John Kenuie.	Robert Young.*
Margaret Leslie.

They were charged five pounds sterling for each adult, and those who were unable to pay that amount for their passage were, on their arrival, to serve four years, and at the expiration of that time to receive twenty-five acres and a suit of new clothes. They bad set sail from the harbor of Leith on the 5th of September, 1685, and the many deaths were from fever, which assumed a malignant type on shipboard. Seventy of the passengers are believed to have died on the ocean.

After their arrival considerable difficulty took place on account of those who had come over without paying their passage-money, and Mr. Johnstone tried to prevail upon them to serve the four years, in accordance with the terms before mentioned, in consideration of the expense incurred by Scot for their transportation. This they would not agree to, and suits were commenced to compel them. The following verdict was rendered in several suits: "We Jurours finde for the pl^t w^a five pounds sterling debt and costes of suite."

It is difficult at this time to determine how many of those who came to the province remained in the vicinity of Amboy. A few eventually settled in and about Woodbridge and Metuchen, but most of them removed to New England.

William Jackson was also one that was banished; he was a cordwainer by trade. He left Amboy and went to New York.

The following were to be delivered to Robert Barclay, Governor of the province, under date of 7th August, 1685, on condition that they should be transported to East New Jersey: George Young, John Campbell, John Swan, James Oliver, James Stuart, John Jackson, John Gibb, Gilbert Ferguson, Colin Campbell. Then in the canonicale tolbooth: John Gilliland, Thomas Richard, William Drennan,¹ William McIlroy,¹ Archibald Jamieson.¹ Then in the Laight Parliament-house tolbooth of Edinburgh: John McKello, Alexander Graham, Duncan McEwen, Malcolm Black, John McAulin, Donald Moor, John Nicol.

William Niven is also mentioned as being sent in banishment. He was placed on board of a vessel at Leith, destined for Virginia; but on arriving at Gravesend, in consequence of the non-appearance of the charterer of the vessel, the master put them all ashore rather than retain the charge of them longer, and they nearly all reached their homes, after an absence of some nine months.²

It is with considerable interest that we give the following account. Nivens was to be sent to Virginia; but after his arrival at home in Scotland he followed his trade and lived quietly, refraining from any objectionable conduct, save that he attended not the authorized religious services until the 29th July, 1684, when he was taken from his bed at midnight and carried to the Glasgow tolbooth, where he lay in irons for three weeks. He was then examined, but nothing of a serious character was elicited. He refused, however, to take the oath of allegiance, and was sent into Edinburgh under guard with five others, fettered in pairs, and confined in irons until May, 1685, when upon a charge of having some acquaintance with treasonable documents he and others were sentenced to immediate execution.

Circumstances occurring which led to a postponement, he was suffered to remain, subjected to all the miseries of imprisonment in Dunnottar Castle, of which, as so many of the emigrants were subjected to them, it will not be irrelevant to give some account.

The vault in which about a hundred men and women were pent up all summer was under ground, ankle-deep in mire, with but one window overlooking the sea. They were without any conveniences for sitting, leaning, or lying; and, indeed, so full was the place that little more than sitting room was afforded. Stifled for want of air, stinted for both food and water, and subjected to the direful influences of the impurities which necessarily collected, it was miraculous that they did not all die. Many did, and others became afflicted with diseases. An attempt was made by several of them, including Niven, to escape by the window which has been mentioned. They succeeded to the number of twenty-five in creeping along the face of a precipice, at the hazard of their lives, to some distance from the fort before the alarm was given; but fifteen of them were retaken and barbarously used. Beaten, bruised, and bound, they were laid on their backs and obliged to undergo various processes of torture.

Niven, who was among those retaken, as well as Peter Russell, another of the emigrants, and others, were laid upon a form, their hands bound, and matches placed between their fingers; these were kept burning "equal with their fingers" for three hours without intermission. Some died under this torture; some were so badly burned that the bones were charred, and Niven himself lost one of the fingers of his left hand.

Such, faintly sketched, were some of the trials which those in Dunnottar Castle were obliged to undergo, and it can cause no surprise that to escape them a voluntary expatriation was gladly acceded to. Scot's proposition to the council was profited by, and Niven and others should have entered into an engagement whereby they were to be transported to New Jersey.

Christopher Strang was the son, it is believed, of Christopher who was executed on Dec. 7, 1666, for treason, and his head was exposed at Hamilton and his right arm affixed to the public posts of Lanark. It is possible this person was the progenitor of the family of Strangs in this country.

Rev. David Simson's name is found among those for whom headlands were claimed by Lord Neil Campbell. He is also mentioned, Aug. 14, 1685, ordering his bonds to be given up, which had been required of him some months before, he having been confined in the prison and now was to be liberated, as he was to leave the kingdom, and the cessation of his ministerial services as he was going to New Jersey.

¹ They were sentenced to have their left ears cut off by the common executioner.

² Wadrow, ii. pp. 475, 476.

John Doby, Robert Hardie, John Forbes, and John Cockburn arrived in 1684. Coburn was a mason, and built David Mudie a stone house. Forbes was a brother to the Laird of Barula, and after his arrival here he had a plantation near the Gordons and Fullertons, on Cedar Brook, now in Raritan township. From a letter he appears to have left Scotland without the knowledge of his friends.

John Emott came to this province, but it is not known at what date, supposed to have been before the purchase by the twenty-four proprietaries. The Long Ferry Tavern was kept by him in 1685, and the following year he was appointed secretary of the province, and on the 10th December of that year his name appears in the first notice of the Amboy militia, being appointed lieutenant of a "company of train bands, consisting of the inhabitants of Amboy Perth under the command of the Honorable Lord Neil Campbell." He was also appointed clerk of the County Court and Court of Sessions.

John Barclay was a brother of Governor Robert Barclay, and came to this province about the same time that Mr. Emott arrived. He held numerous positions of trust. In 1688-89 he was a deputy surveyor under George Keith, and succeeded him as surveyor-general, receiving the appointment together with that of receiver-general April 6, 1692. Thomas Gordon leaving the province for England, Mr. Barclay was appointed 25th November, 1695, deputy-secretary and register. On the 6th August, 1698, he was made register of the Court of Chancery and one of the commissioners of the Court of Small Causes, in 1700 he received the clerkship of the County Court of Common Right of the Supreme Court and Court of Sessions, and in 1704 he represented Amboy in the Assembly. He died in the spring of 1731 at an advanced age. He had a son John, but little is known of him.

David Barclay, brother also of Governor Barclay, came in 1685; also John Loofborow, "miller;" Benjamin Griffith in 1687, he became a commissioner of the Minor Court in 1696; John Watson, "merchant;" Peter Watson, "planter;" Thomas Knowles, "stationer;" and Robert Bridgman, "merchant," arrived in 1684. The two brothers, Stephen and Thomas Warne, were the sons of Thomas Warne, one of the "twenty-four" who was a merchant of Dublin. They came in 1683. Thomas and Robert Fullerton arrived in October, 1684. Thomas with his wife and ten servants settled near the borders of the city of Plainfield, and also had house lots in Ambo Point. They were brothers to the Laird of Kennaber, intelligent men, and according to Mr. Whitehead were enchanted with the province. "The weather here," says Thomas, "is constantly clear. The sun rises and sets free of clouds." John Reid in 1683 brought his wife with him and resided at Amboy for some years after his arrival, becoming of some note among its inhabitants. He was (June, 1686) on account of his services in drawing maps of the province given a grant of two hundred acres of land in Monmouth County called Hortensia, on the east branch of Hope River, where he resided in 1686. He had a daughter Anna, who became the wife of Capt. John Anderson, of Monmouth.

Miles Forster's name appears in the records in 1684 as deputy to William Haige, the receiver and surveyor-general. He was one of the most prominent of the early settlers, holding many important positions in connection with the revenue. Upon the opening of the port of Amboy he was collector and receiver of the customs under Dongan the Governor, Nov. 30, 1687. It appears that in the year 1689 he became engaged in commercial pursuits in New York and there made his residence, and he is mentioned as a merchant in that city in 1695, and was appointed in 1690 one of the executors of Col. Lewis Morris. He left New York and resided in Amboy many years before his death, where he built the first sloop launched at that port, and received from the Board of Proprietors the grant of a town lot. He died in 1710. William Bradford, the printer of New York, was one of his executors. His wife Rebecca was a daughter of Gawen Laurie. They left one son (William) who lived in the island of Barbadoes in 1721, and was alive in 1729, and two daughters, Elizabeth and Mary.

David Mudie, after his arrival in November, 1684, from Montrose, Scotland, with four children and thirteen servants (no account of his wife), built "a good, handsome house, six rooms off a floor with a study, two stories high above the sellers, and the garret above." This was of stone, and considered at that time a great achievement. He also erected a "horse-mill," which he believed would be worth one hundred pounds per year. He was a man of great energy of character, and one of the most valued residents of Amboy. He was appointed a judge of the Court of Common Right, and was one of the Governor's council during the administration of Lord Neil Campbell and Andrew Hamilton.

Mr. Mudie selected his plantation on South River, at a distance of two hours' sail, and says of it in one of his letters, "I mind to settle some of my servants there against the middle of this month (March, 1685). I am provided with six coarse horses, oxen and swine sufficiently in number for any plantation for the first year; the land I have settled on in my judgment is extraordinarily good." All this indicates the possession of pecuniary resources such as the majority of the settlers did not enjoy.¹

¹ Contributions to East Jersey History.

The family of Walls came about the same time as Mr. Madie. The place of their nativity is not known. Garret and Walter were brothers. They appear to have been quite prominent at Amboy for a short time, but removed to Monmouth County. Garret Wall had a son John, who was father of James Wall, who became a resident of Amboy and the ancestor of Dr. John Golen Wall, who practiced as a physician in both Amboy and Woodbridge. The Hon. Garret D. Wall, who for a long period bore a distinguished part in the public affairs of New Jersey, was a son of James Wall.

CHAPTER LXXXVI.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.—(Continued.)

Civil History of Amboy.—Amboy had no special municipal charter till in the early part of the eighteenth century. "The various county officers and courts preserved order and regulated its police; and its existence as a town was soon recognized by admitting one or more representatives from it to the General Assembly, which held its first session in Amboy in 1686. In the year 1698 it was allowed two members, and that number continued to be its quota until the war of independence."¹

The first charter was obtained from Governor Robert Hunter Aug. 24, 1718,² and incorporated the city under the name of "The Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of Perth Amboy." Among the petitioners for the charter are mentioned John Johnstone, Thomas Gordon, John Hamilton, George Willocks, John Barclay, William Eier, John Stevens, William Hodgson, William Frost, Henry Berry, John Sharp, Thomas Turnbull, Andrew Redford, and Alexander Walker, men prominent in the affairs of the town and province at that period.

The mayor, clerk of the market, sheriff, and water-bailiff were appointed by the Governor. The recorder and town clerk held their offices according to the tenor of their commissions, no particular term being specified. The aldermen, assistants, chamberlain, coroners, overseer of the poor, and constables were elected by a majority of the freeholders, and the assistants not to be chosen until it was known who were to be aldermen. The sergeant-at-mace (which meant that the mayor of the city should have a mace borne before him) was to be appointed by the mayor with the approval of the Common Council, and, together with all the other officers, was required to be "of good capacity." The overseers of the poor and constables who should refuse to take the oath of office and enter upon their respective duties were to be fined five pounds, and others were to be elected in their stead, who should be held similarly liable should they decline the honors conferred.

The mayor, recorder, and aldermen constituted the City Court, and held a term once a month for action of debt, and none but free citizens were allowed to exercise "any trade, art, or mystery, saving during the times of fairs," which, with market-days, were duly authorized.

A common seal was adopted, and is used at the present time by the city. It has the following device: on the dexter a hunting-horn, and over it "Arte-non-Impetu;" on the sinister a ship riding at anchor in the harbor, under it "Portus Optimus." Around the seal is the following motto: "Sigillum Civitatis: Perth Ambojen Sis."

Mr. Whitehead, the historian, says, "There are very few notices of the place to be found, and none at all, having any pretensions to accuracy, upon which any estimate can be based of its growth either in population or wealth. Some improvement, however, was the result of the privileges secured to it by its charter, but from that time to the present writers have been obliged uniformly to deplore the disappointment which has attended the plans projected for its prosperity. In 1738, it is stated, planters had not resorted to it as was expected, notwithstanding its commodious situation, and the lapse of years brought no change."

In 1739-40, Governor Morris, although he expressed an opinion that the harbor is preferable to that of New York,—“easier to be entered or departed from, and of the two more safe,”—yet finds an argument for the establishment of another seat of government upon the fact that it was “a poor, inconsiderable place.”³ Yet there were hopes expressed that Amboy would eventually become a fixed trading port, and at various times legislation was looked to for the purpose of enlarging its commerce, but it was attended by few beneficial results. Governor Belcher arrived August, 1747, and the city authorities in their address to him say, “the city of Perth Amboy is not only most commodiously situated for a place of trade, but it has one of the best harbors for shipping upon the continent, and yet hath hitherto struggled with many difficulties; nevertheless, by your excellency’s favor and kind protection, which we humbly pray for, we hope will flourish amongst us.” In his answer the Governor said, “I have hardly ever seen a place more pleasantly situated for health, and more commodiously for trade, and you may depend on everything on my part to render it a flourishing city.” He disappointed the inhabitants by taking up his residence at Elizabeth Town, but his successors who resided at Amboy gave convincing evidence that the patronage of royal Governors could not alone make a flourishing city.⁴

“This city of Amboy,” says Bumaly, in 1759, “contained about one hundred houses.” Mr. Burke, in his account of the “American Settlements,” published in ³ Papers of Lewis Morris, pp. 69, 121.

⁴ Whitehead’s East Jersey, p. 54.

1761, makes the number two hundred. It was at the time of the Revolution probably at the "pinnacle of its fame." But that struggle for independence caused many of its inhabitants to remove, and when peace was proclaimed Amboy was but feebly prepared to vie with other communities less influenced by the changes the war had wrought. In 1784 an attempt was made to revive its importance by the renewal of its corporate powers through an act of the Legislature passed December 21st, which remained "the law of the land" unimpaired by any amendments until 1844. The title of the act was "An act for erecting the North Ward¹ of Perth Amboy and a part of the township of Woodbridge, in the county of Middlesex, into a city, and for incorporating the same, by the name and title of the city of Perth Amboy." The author of the bill must have been a warm friend to the young city, judging from the preamble, which was as follows:

"WHEREAS, the improvements of trade and navigation in this State is of the utmost importance to the well-being of the same; and whereas, the prosperity of trade requires the collection of merchants together in sufficient numbers, in order that the union of their force may render them competent to great undertakings, and that the variety of their importations and their wants may always furnish to the purchasers and to the sellers a secure and constant market; and whereas, it is necessary in the present unprovided and disadvantageous condition of this State to bestow on merchants peculiar immunities and privileges, in order to attract them to its harbours, and to secure to them for a sufficient and definite duration the entire profits of their commerce without burden, abatement, or uncertainty, in order to excite in them a spirit of useful adventure, and to encourage them to encounter the risks and expenses of a new situation, and of important and beneficial undertakings; and inasmuch as commercial cities require a peculiar mode of government for maintaining their internal police and commercial transactions; require more expeditious and summary tribunals than others; and whereas, diverse good citizens of this State residing in different parts thereof, by their humble petition presented to the Legislature, have set forth the great public utility of incorporating certain towns in the State, and of investing them with such powers, privileges, jurisdictions, and immunities as shall conduce to the encouragement of its commerce, and have prayed that Perth Amboy aforesaid may be incorporated for the said purpose; and whereas divers of the inhabitants of the said North Ward of Perth Amboy, and others in the vicinity thereof, by their humble petition to the Legislature, have set forth that for many years previous to the late revolution the said North Ward of Perth Amboy, under and by virtue of charters to them granted for that purpose, did hold, enjoy, and exercise many powers, privilege, and immunities, which they found greatly beneficial to the inhabitants thereof, and have prayed that the said charter, or one of them, so far as may extend to the said North Ward and a part of Woodbridge, may be revised, corrected, and amended, and that a law for incorporating the said North Ward, together with a part of the township of Woodbridge, into a city and town corporate may be enacted."

Mr. Whitehead says, "One would suppose the wealth of the Indies, if not the commerce of the world, would flow into the harbor after the obtainment of a charter which opened with so much promise, but however reasonable such expectations from the given premises might have been elsewhere, at Amboy they were not realized, and probably will not be until more innate energy is possessed." The genius of the place might say to us, in the words of the renowned Dr. Syntax,—

"All those to whom I've long been known Must see I've habits of my own."

The present act of incorporation was approved Feb. 27, 1844, by which the government of the city is confined to the following officers: mayor, recorder, three aldermen, six councilmen, clerk, assessor, collector, and treasurer.

The statistics of the population can only be given since 1810, the enumerations prior to that year giving the number of inhabitants only by counties.

CENSUS REPORT.

1810.		1840.
White males.....	358	White males.....	587
" females.....	372	" females.....	678
All the free persons.....	36	Free colored.....	38
Slaves.....	49
Total.....	815	Total.....	1303
1820.		1850.
White males.....	346	White males.....	885
" females.....	372	" females.....	918
All other free persons.....	50	Free colored.....	62
Slaves.....	30
Total.....	798	Total.....	1865
1830.		1860.
White males.....	404	Population, 2302; increase, 437.
" females.....	400
Free colored.....	63	1870.
Slaves.....	12	Population, 2861; increase, 559.
Total.....	879
		1880.
		Population, 4812; increase, 1937.
		1882.
		Population supposed to be over 7000.

Prior to 1870 the increase, as above, was very slight. The ratio of increase from 1860 to 1870 was twenty per cent., while from 1870 to 1880 it exceeds sixty-eight per cent., and at the present time, 1882, the increase is a much greater percentage.

The following interesting description of Perth Amboy is from one of the first newspapers published here, called the New Jersey Gazette, Aug. 5, 1819:

"The situation of Perth Amboy ranks pre-eminent to almost any other in the United States. It stands on a peninsula, with high banks, a bold shore, surrounded with the pure ocean water free from marshes, swamps, or ponds, and consequently perfectly exempt from agues, mosquitoes, and all the other plagues that interfere with health or comfort. In fact, in point of salubrity of air and exemption from all other diseases, exceptions such as the frailties of human nature necessarily inflict, we may boldly assert that it is not exceeded by any place in the United States. The excessive heats of summer, which are everywhere so oppressive, are here moderated by the refreshing breezes that almost daily act in from the ocean. It consequently constitutes a most desirable summer residence, the more so as, in addition to the healthful practice of sea-bathing, which here can be enjoyed to perfection, its vicinity abounds with mineral springs highly impregnated with those qualities that tend as well to preserve health as to cure many of those diseases to which the human frame is subject. Some of them possess at least an equal degree all the qualities of the highly celebrated springs at Schooley's Mountain, which have within a few years become so fashionable a resort, and they are of course more accessible, and, in point of situation, much more convenient."

John, a son of Dr. John Johnstone,² was a colonel in the provincial forces, his commission bearing date March 10, 1758, and he was second in rank on the Oneida station in August of that year. He was killed by a cannon ball at Fort Niagara in the course of the war. He married his cousin Euphemia, daughter of Andrew Johnstone.

¹ South Amboy, now a separate township, was the South Ward.

² See Medical Profession.

David, who was the heir-at-law of his brother John, married Miss Walton, and lived and died at "Nine Partners," Dutchess Co., N. Y. Their eldest son, John, was for some years presiding judge of the Court of Common Pleas for that county, and died Aug. 19, 1850. One of their daughters, "a young lady of great merit and beauty," married John Allen, Esq., of Philadelphia, April 6, 1775; another married the Hon. Gullivan Verplank, M.C., etc.; a third became the wife of Dr. Upton, then a lieutenant in the English army, and after his death married Thomas A. Cooper, the tragedian, leaving children by both husbands; another son, David, died unmarried.

Andrew Johnstone was born Dec. 20, 1694, and until 1717 or 1718 was engaged in business as a merchant in New York. In Amboy he resided for some time in an old house that stood back from the street, on the property belonging to Mr. George Merritt, which went by the lofty title of "Edenboro' Castle." This edifice was vacated and soon after destroyed on the erection of the brick edifice, now the residence of Mr. Merritt. Mr. Johnston (the children dropped the final e from their name) inherited the proprietary rights of his father, and at one time was president of the board of proprietors. He also succeeded his father in the Provincial Assembly as a representative from Amboy, and, like him, was speaker for several years. In January, 1748-49, he was chosen treasurer of the College of New Jersey, then located at Newark, and held during his life various other offices. The following obituary notice is found in the New York Mercury for July 5, 1762: "Last Thursday se'ennight (June 24th) died at Perth Amboy in an advanced age the Hon. Andrew Johnston, Esq., one of his Majesty's Council for the Province of New Jersey and Treasurer of the eastern division of the Province, A gentleman of so fair and worthy a character that truly to attempt to draw it would be throwing away words. He was really equal to what Pope means when he says, 'An honest man is the noblest work of God.'" "During the last fifteen years of his life," says the historian, Smith, "he was in the Council, and a diligent attender on the business there; he had great equality of temper, circumspection of conduct, an open, yet grave, engaging mien, much goodness of heart, and many virtues both public and private." A pencil sketch of him is in the possession of Mr. Whitehead. Mr. Johnston died in his sixty-seventh year. He married Catherine, daughter of Stephanus Van Cortlandt, of New York, by whom he had two sons and six daughters, viz.: John, who married Isabella, daughter of Robert Lettice Hooper, of Trenton, in February, 1768. He was a merchant in Amboy until 1775, in partnership with Peter Barberie. In 1767 he was a member of Assembly, and was appointed one of the committee to correspond with the agent of the colony in Great Britain, the other members being Cortlandt Skinner, John Lawrence, and David Cooper. He left several children, of whom little is now positively known.

Sonmans. The creek or brook which flows into the Raritan from the ravine at the western termination of Market Street is designated on the map of the township as "Sonmans Creek," deriving its name from Peter Sonmans, who owned the adjoining lands. The father of Peter was Arent Sonmans, a Hollander, who resided at Rotterdam, but went to Wallingford, Scotland, and became one of the twenty-four proprietors of East Jersey. On becoming interested in the province, he made arrangements for visiting it, but on his way to Scotland from London in August, 1683, in company with his wife, Robert Barclay, and one other person, when passing through Hunterdonshire he was shot by a highwayman in his thigh, which proved fatal. His wife's name was Frances Hancock, and they had three children,—Peter, Rachel, the wife of Joseph Ormston, and Joanna, wife of Joseph Wright.

Peter Sonmans inherited the greater part of his father's property, and came over to New Jersey as early as 1688. He probably returned to Europe the same year, but came again to New Jersey in 1705 with the intention of remaining. He was a man of education, held several offices in England under King William, and, although his character was not above reproach, after he arrived here he filled important offices. He was one of the council, a member of Assembly, also receiver of the proprietary quit-rents, ranger of the forests, surveyor-general, and agent for some of the non-resident proprietors. Lord Cornbury placed in his hands the records of the province, a circumstance loudly complained of by the people, and the Assembly, in not very gentle terms, called in question the honesty of Mr. Sonmans in their "representations of grievances" handed to the Governor at various times, he retorting the accusation upon Thomas Gordon, from whom the records had been taken. And in an address to Governor Lovelace, March, 1708, they accuse him of malversation in office as one of the judges of the Court of Sessions, and a grand jury, aggrieved by some of his acts, did not hesitate to notify the Assembly in an official manner that he had been indicted at the preceding term of the Supreme Court for perjury and great immorality. He was holding important positions in the province (a collector of their quit-rents), and Governor Burnet, in 1726, issued a proclamation pronouncing his conduct illegal and unwarranted.

Among the charges was that of his prohibiting Quakers from sitting as jurors. It seems that he (failing to vindicate his character) was obliged to leave the province, but it is now uncertain whence he removed. In 1712 it is stated that "he printed and dispersed his libels against the government, and Governor Hunter informed the board of trade that he was in Pennsylvania." He died in March, 1734. An obituary notice of him in the Philadelphia Weekly Mercury of April 11, 1734, gives the following account:

"On Saturday, 29th of March, was here interr'd the Body of Peter Sonmans, Esqr., one of the Chief Proprietors of East New Jersey. He was son of Arents Sonmans, late of one of the States of Holland, which government, after having finished his study at Leyden, he quitted and came to Eogland, where he had the Honour to hold some considerable offices under his late Majesty King William, 1705. Coming a second time into this country where he had so considerable an interest. He was appointed of her late Majesty's Hon. Council Agent to the Proprietors, Surveyor-General, General Receiver of the Quit-Rents, and Ranger of the Forests as well as sea coasts. He was in two succeeding Elections chose Representative for the County of Bargain, in which Station he manifested himself a true Patriarch to his Country. He was justly esteemed for his Charity and Clemency, his sincerity in Friendship, Patience in oppressions, and undaunted spirit in Dangers, manifested his first Merit of the Motto of his arms, Patientia est Fide. In Augustus interpidus much more could be said, but for Brevity Sake is omitted."

Mr. Sonmans was twice married, his second wife being Sarah, daughter of John and Mary Neville, of Stafford, England, and a sister of Judge Neville, of Amboy, whom he married Oct. 17, 1723. He left her his sole heiress and executrix, although he had a son Peter, a practicing physician in Philadelphia.

Willocks. James Willocks, "Doctor of Medicine in Kenny, Scotland," became possessed of a proprietary right to East Jersey in 1683, but died soon after, and his property was inherited by George Willocks, his brother. This gentleman arrived in the province with two servants in 1684, and after remaining here for some years, during which no particular mention of him or of his pursuits is made in the early records, he returned to England, and in 1697 was appointed attorney for his brother proprietaries to collect the quit-rents due to them from the settlers, which the disturbed state of the province had caused to accumulate. In furtherance of this arrangement he sailed from England about April, 1698, in the "Dispatch William Fidler, master," and arrived at Amboy. After his arrival he was appointed chief ranger, an office of which Whitehead, the historian, says there is no account. He became one of the commissioners for the Court of Small Causes. In 1701 he was appointed deputy-surveyor of the province under John Reid, and March, 1719, was one of the commissioners for settling the boundary between the province and New York, in which offices he showed considerable business tact. He died about February, 1729, after a long and distressing illness, his wife dying some five years before.

Neville. Peter Sonmans, we have stated, married Sarah Neville, and upon her death her property became vested in "Samuel Nevill, of London Gent." He was her eldest brother and heir-at-law. Her other brother, John Neville, was then in New Jersey, of whom, although it seems he was a resident of Perth Amboy, but little is known save that he held various offices under the provincial government, and lessee of the ferry across the Raritan. His brother, however, occupied a more important station in society. Samuel Neville, as soon as he heard of his sister's death, embarked for East Jersey, reached the province towards the end of May, 1736, and established himself at the capital. He had received a liberal education, and was a lawyer by profession. He had been editor of the London Morning Post, and even the few memorials of him that are now to be found indicate the possession of character and talents much above mediocrity. He became judge of the Court of Common Pleas, mayor of Perth Amboy (then no trifling station), also second judge of the Supreme Court of the province, and filled several other important offices to the credit of himself, and it is believed to the satisfaction of the government. In 1752, while holding the office of second judge of Supreme Court, Mr. Neville published the first volume of an edition of the laws of the province in two vols., folio, and the second volume not appearing until 1761. He was also the writer of various articles, and edited a monthly periodical published at Woodbridge, by James Parker, called the "New American Magazine," and it was the first periodical of any kind printed in New Jersey, and only the second monthly magazine on the continent. Each number contained about forty pages octavo, and in variety and interest it will compare with many modern publications in good repute. A history of America and a traveler's diary were published in connection with each number, paged separately, in order to form distinct volumes at the end of each year.

On the death of Chief Justice Morris, in January, 1764, Neville would probably have been raised to the vacant bench, but the infirmities of age rendered the performance of its duties impracticable. He died soon after, Oct. 27, 1764, in the sixty-seventh year of his age, leaving a name unsullied, it is believed, by the slightest stain. His wife preceded him to the grave, dying in 1755, and their simple headstones yet mark their places of sepulture in the graveyard of St. Peter's Church. They left no children. Mr. Whitehead, the historian, out of respect to the memory of one whom he conceived worthy of a place among the most eminent of other days, he had repaired the spot where this eminent and distinguished Neville was buried, which had long been neglected.

Barberie. A plain stone in the burial-ground of St. Peter's bears this inscription:

"John Barberie
Aged 50 years
died July 23d 1770."

He was a French Huguenot. The name is first seen upon the records of 1702, in a petition to the proprietors for a house-lot, and which was granted that the house should be built within a year. The petitioner is presumed to have been the father of John Barberie. There is a statement that he was the eldest of four brothers, and that but two names were shared among them. The first was called John, the second Peter, the third John Peter, and the fourth Peter John.

It is said he was a gentleman of pleasing manners and address, occasionally marred by exhibitions of temper, and extremely proud of his birth and family connections. At the time of his death he was collector of customs for the port. He married Gertrude, daughter of Andrew Johnston, elsewhere mentioned in these pages; they had nine children, five sons and four daughters.

Peter was a merchant in Amboy, in partnership with his uncle John Johnstone, and afterwards removed to New York, where he died, leaving a widow and children.

John was a captain in the Second Battalion of Cortlandt Skinner's brigade, raised during the Revolution, and after the war retired to St. Johns in the province of New Brunswick, where he died in 1818, aged sixty-seven. He was colonel of militia and a magistrate of the county. A son, Andrew, became a member of the Provincial Assembly.

Oliver commenced the study of law in the office of Cortlandt Skinner, subsequently entered the British army, and became a lieutenant in the Loyal American Regiment. He married a daughter of his legal preceptor, and one of his sons now holds an honorable post in the army or navy of England. He died in the province of New Brunswick.

Lambert, died unmarried.

Andrew was placed in the navy, and was shot on board of an English vessel of war during the Revolution.

Susannah, married her cousin John L. Johnston, of Spotswood, and had several children.

Francis married James Throckmorton, of Monmouth County. Catherine became the wife of Henry Cuyler. Mr. Cuyler died in Newark in May, 1774, aged twenty-eight, and was buried under a pear-tree in what was afterward the orchard of Col. Samuel Ogden, north of what is technically known as "the Stone Bridge." Mrs. Cuyler is thought to have died at Amboy. They left several children. Gertrude died young and unmarried.

Parker. There were a number of the name of Parker residing in this province of East Jersey between the years 1670 and 1680. Among them was Elisha Parker, of Woodbridge, the ancestor of the present Amboy family by that name. The first grant of land to "Elisha Parker, senior, Yeoman of Woodbridge," was for one hundred and eighty-two acres on the highway leading to Piscataway, under date of April 19, 1675. He appears to have been married three times and had several children. Those by his first wife (Elizabeth) were as follows:

1. Thomas, who resided in Woodbridge early in life, and in October, 1680, his father gave him sixty acres of upland and fifteen acres of Raritan meadow. It is supposed that for a time he resided on Staten Island (in 1687). His children by his wife Mary were—David, born May 1, 1676; Thomas, born March 9, 1682–83; Elisha, born August 20, 1684; Joseph, born Sept. 18, 1690; Benjamin, born Jan. 4, 1692–93; and George and Elisha, twins, born March 30, 1695.

2. Elisha, who in 1681 was styled "Weaver," and afterwards in 1701 "Merchant of Woodbridge," was in 1709 captain of the provincial forces and attached to the commissariat, being charged with the duty of furnishing supplies to the troops then engaged on the Canadian frontier. About 1712 or 1715 he removed to Perth Amboy, and died April 16, 1727, unmarried and much regretted, being eminent for his piety. He left his property in equal proportions to his three half-sisters, Elizabeth, Ursula, and Mary.

3. Samuel, born March 1, 1669, died Dec. 27, 1672.

4. Mary, born Dec. 3, 1672, married Daniel Robins Nov. 27, 1691.

5. Samuel, born June 1, 1674.

And by his second wife, Hannah Rolph (died Oct. 14, 1696), whom he married March 26, 1691, he had:

1. Elizabeth, born Dec. 23, 1691, died March 13, 1692.

2. John, born Nov. 11, 1693. He was the grandfather of the families of Amboy. He married, Sept. 16, 1721, Janet, daughter of Dr. John Johnstone. He held the rank of colonel in the provincial forces the same year. From 1726 to 1728 he was engaged in business in New York, but must have at the time resided in the city, as he is spoken of then as a valued citizen. The stone part of the old Parker mansion, familiarly termed "The Castle," was built by him. He held many minor offices, as well as one of the Council, being appointed by Governor Burnet in October, 1719, and continued as such until his death in 1732. In his will he left two hundred pounds "for extraordinary schooling and teaching one or more of my sons the Latin and French tongue, regard being chiefly and in the first place had to the eldest." His widow lived until Feb. 16, 1741. Their children besides one son, who died in infancy, were: Elisha, who was bred to the profession of the law under James Alexander, was licensed May 3, 1745, and attained to some eminence. He married Catharine, daughter of James Alexander, and died of consumption March 14, 1751, in his forty-seventh year. He left no children. His widow married Walter Rutherford, then an officer in the army, and was the mother of the late John Rutherford, of Belleville.

James will be mentioned more particularly on a subsequent page. Mary died unmarried Feb. 25, 1813, in her eighty-sixth year, and was buried in St. Peter's cemetery, where most of the family were interred, although no monument marks their graves as in her case.

John also will be mentioned more particularly farther on. Lewis Johnston, born Dec. 9, 1731, died Feb. 2, 1760, in his twenty-ninth year, of consumption, while preparing himself for the bar, having sought in vain for health by a sea voyage and residence in another climate.

By his third wife, Ursula Crage (Craig), to whom he was married Sept. 27, 1697, and who survived him, he had (1) Elizabeth, born March 21, 1698-99, and married James Johnston, of Monmouth County; (2) Ursula, born Dec. 21, 1700, died unmarried; (3) Mary, born Dec. 22, 1702, died unmarried; (4) Edward, of whom no information has been obtained, excepting that he was baptized by the Rev. Jedediah Andrews, of the First Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, April 30, 1716.

John Parker was born Nov. 7, 1729, received a mercantile education, and from October, 1745, to May, 1750, served as a midshipman on board Her Majesty's ship "Chester," Capt. Spry. In 1751 he went on a voyage to Jamaica as a supercargo of a vessel, and subsequently to Virginia and New Foundland on similar enterprises. Also in the campaigns of 1755 and 1756, against the French, he commanded a company in the Fourth Battalion of the royal Americans, and after the capture of Col. Schuyler at Oswego, being the senior officer, the command of such of the New Jersey forces as were not involved in that disaster devolved upon him. Capt. Parker was then in his twenty-seventh year, a bold and energetic officer, and the surrender of Oswego seemed to him uncalled for. In the following letter to his brother at Amboy, dated "Fort Eagle, Aug. 18, 1756," he says,—

"I am busy preparing for an attack hourly expected. . . my love to all friends and you may venture to tell them that Jack Parker will never be taken in this poor, little, sooty fort without losing more than his life, if all the force that was at Oswego comes against him; how that affair was managed I don't know, and therefore suspend judgment.

"Col. Schuyler, Capt. Skinner, his brother Jack and all the officers that were there are well and untouched, except Col. Mercer who was killed; Capt. Patten, of Shirley's, ensign, Walter of Schuyler's, wounded, five men killed."

The ensuing August, 1757, found him holding the rank of colonel at Fort William Henry, where he came near losing his life. He remained in the service until he was taken as a prisoner, it is supposed, as he was at Martinico in 1761, where fatigue connected with the service and his health he died Feb. 15, 1762, and was buried at Port Royal. Having ever led an unsettled life consequent upon his military career, Mr. Parker never married. He was bold, courageous, and active, but his public services secured him but little fame.

"James Parker was the only child of John Parker, Sr., who left issue. He married Gertrude, only daughter of the Rev. William Skinner, and was the father of the present elders of the Parker family. Like many others of the young gentlemen of Perth Amboy he entered the provincial military service, and in August, 1746, embarked for the northern frontier as captain of one of the six companies raised for the expedition of that year. It is thought that his military services terminated with the campaign. He afterwards engaged in mercantile business in New York with Mr. Beverly Robinson, his transactions being principally with the West Indies, some of them in partnership with Andrew Johnston; and in 1750-51 he made a voyage to Jamaica upon affairs connected with these commercial projects. Soon after this he took his abode permanently at Amboy. His time was much engrossed in attending to the large landed interests possessed by the family. He held many local offices in this city, and among others that of councilor under Governor Franklin, to which he was appointed in October, 1764, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of Chief Justice Morris. Mr. Parker took a prominent part in the proceedings of the council, and many of the addresses and other documents emanating from that body during his connection with it were written by him. In 1771, and in other years, he was mayor of Amboy, and in April, 1775, was appointed with Stephen Skinner and Jonathan Deare a delegate from Amboy to the Provincial Congress, but he did not attend its sessions. The deep interests he had at stake led him to pursue a course different from that adopted by most of his family connections, by preserving a strict neutrality in word and deed between the royalists and provincials. He took no offices and endeavored to keep himself aloof from the party dissensions of the time, removing his family in November, 1775, to a farm in Bethlehem, Hunterdon County, where they resided until the peace in 1783, when they removed to New Brunswick, and two years thereafter returned to the family mansion at Amboy. Mr. Parker was a man of tall stature and large frame, possessing a mind of more than ordinary strength and vigor, and his wife was remarkable for her piety and excellence of character. Mr. Parker died Oct. 4, 1797, aged seventy-two, and she followed him to the grave on the 10th February, 1811, aged seventy-one.

Thomas Bartow. In a house standing on the south-west corner of Market and the square, of late years occupied by Mrs. C. M. Kearney, an old and solitary man resided prior to the Revolution. This lone individual was Thomas Bartow. He was the grandson of Gen. Bertant, a French Protestant, who fled from France to England in 1685; his father being the Rev. John Bartow, the first rector of St. Peter's Church, Westchester, N. Y., and his mother, a Miss Read or Reid, a Scotch lady, who had a brother residing in New Jersey. He was their eldest son.

Mr. Bartow was feeble, and, caused by rheumatic affections, being prevented from any active participation in the proceedings of the colonists, whose cause he warmly espoused. In his mansion he had no other inmates than one housekeeper and a male assistant. He was a small, thin man, whose pale and time-worn countenance was rendered highly impressive by long, gray locks, which divided from his forehead to the crown of his head, hung down on either side "in comely guise." Neat in his person, for which he was remarkable, made him strikingly venerable in appearance. His books were the principal source of his amusement, and apparently his only company. Occasionaly visiting the neighboring villages in a one-horse chaise in summer and a sleigh in winter, and these excursions were the extent of the old man's traveling. His property had been accumulated through a long series of years by speculation in land, and by the employment of his pen in different clerkships, having been, in 1735, clerk of the Supreme and Chancery Courts, in 1741 of the Assembly, in 1762 of the surveyor-general's office, and during the absence in England of William Alexander, surveyor-general for some years subsequent to 1756, he acted as surveyor-general of the eastern division. In 1740 he also held the appointment of commissioner of probate with John Bartow, presumed to have been a brother.

Here we leave this worthy old man, who died at Bethlehem, Pa., in 1780, never having revisited his peaceful residence in Amboy after the Revolutionary war commenced.

Sargent. Samuel Sargent was commander of a merchant vessel in the European trade, and acquired sufficient property to retire from the sea some years previous to the Revolution, and enjoy the fruits of his industry on land; the receipts of a small country store, to which he attended when called upon (which was not often), contributing to the support of his family. He was much interested in the progress of this colony, and took measures for its advancement. He was noted for his energy of character. His wife was a Miss Leonard, of New York, a sister of Mrs. Thomas Farmer (elsewhere mentioned). Her death is recorded on a tombstone in St. Peter's churchyard as taken place the 20th December, 1761. They had four children, one son and three daughters. Mr. Sargent lived not to enjoy the fruits of his exertions in the cause of liberty, or even to get a glimpse of the happiness which was to be secured to the country. When the English took possession of New Jersey he retired with his two remaining daughters into Pennsylvania, and served for a time as a commissary, but his health declined, and he died about the summer of 1778.

The eldest daughter married Lieut. England, and accompanied her husband to the British camp in Boston, where he and one of his brothers were severely wounded, from the sanguinary fight of Bunker Hill, their wounds received from hands in whose deeds her father felt so deep an interest.

The second daughter married a gentlemau by name of Vanleer, and left children.

The third daughter became the wife of Capt. (afterwards General) John Heard, of "Sheldon's Dragoons," and had several children. Their only daughter, Margaretta D., died at Mount Carmel, Ill. (the wife of A. Slack, Esq.), on the 4th of March, 1839, leaving four children.

Stevens. Richard Stevens' monument covering his grave recording his death on the 4th of July, 1802, in the eightieth year of his age. He was small of stature, had red hair, and all the vivacity of a Frenchman. He was largely interested in landed property, and said to have been constantly traveling the province, and died from injuries being thrown from his gig on his way to New Brunswick, only living one day thereafter.

His wife was Susan, daughter of Philip Kearney; she followed him to the grave the ensuing year (1803), lying an entire winter speechless from the effect of paralysis. They lived in the house of late years the residence of George Merritt, Esq. They were both violent Whigs, differing in that respect from the greater number of their friends. They left one daughter who married John, son of the Rev. Mr. Roe, of Woodbridge, who had several children who lived in New England.

John Stevens, brother of Richard, was also a prominent citizen, represented Amboy in the Assembly at different periods, and in June, 1763, was appointed one of the Council. He is said to have been remarkable for his courteous and refined deportment. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of James Alexander, and sister to Lord Stirling. He died in Hunterdon County in 1792, leaving two daughters, one of whom (Mary) married Chancellor Livingston, of New York, and one son John, renowned as the originator of many modern improvements in traveling, and from whom the gentlemen have descended who of late years have been so extensively engaged in promoting the convenience and comfort of those traversing the distance between Philadelphia and New York.

Mrs. Stevens, after her husband's death, resided with her daughter at Clemont, Livingston Manor, until the year she died, 1800.

There was a John Stevens in Amboy in 1722, then an inn-keeper, and in 1735 clerk of the Court of Chancery, who died in 1737, and another John, possibly his son, resided there in 1741. It is not known if they were his ancestors.

CHAPTER LXXVII.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.—(Continued.)

Incorporation and Civil Officers.—The first charter of incorporation was granted by Governor Hunter Aug. 24, 1718. Mayor, William Eier, with recorder, aldermen, assistant aldermen, chamberlain, treasurer, town clerk, sheriff, water bailiff, coroner, marshal, or sergeant-at-mace, overseers of the poor, and constables, with a city seal, which was adopted by the Governor and was the property of the mayor. This charter was granted upon the petition of many inhabitants recommending it as the best place for a city, and was worked under until by an act of the Legislature a second one was granted Dec. 21, 1784; and by the minutes from a sheet of paper of a meeting of the citizens held at the court-house on Saturday, Nov. 12, 1785, it would appear that James Parker was mayor, but the impression being with the citizens that he would not be eligible for reappointment, Thomas Farmer was to be presented to the Legislature, then in session at Trenton, to be appointed mayor, as the appointment of municipal officers came from that body.

The persons intrusted with the first official stations (1718) are named in the charter to hold their offices until the annual elections. They are as follows: "Mayor and Clerk of Market, William Eier; Recorder, James Alexander; Aldermen, John Parker, John Rudyard, Samuel Leonard, and William Hodgson; Assistant Aldermen, John Brown, Andrew Redford, Michael Henry, and Jacob Isleton; Chamberlain and Treasurer, John Stevens; Town Clerk, John Barclay; Sheriff and Water Bailiff, John Harrison; Coroner, William Harrison; Marshal or Sergeant-at-Mace, William Frost; Overseers of the Poor, John Ireland, Henry Berry; Constables, John Herriott, Fred. Buckaloo, Alexander Cairns."

There is no record of the city officers existing from which a perfect list can now be made out of those who subsequently held these stations.

Some fragmentary memoranda, however, exist, from which it appears that certain ordinances were passed of which there is no record,—one in 1797, two in 1818, and others in after-years. The Council met at the house of Martin Chandler, Feb. 28, 1831, James Parker, mayor. At this meeting a book of minutes was procured and the record commenced. July 31st the mayor reported that eight copies of an ordinance concerning dogs had been put up, one at Woodbridge and the others at different places in the city. 1832, James Parker, mayor, Dr. Charles McKnight Smith was appointed health officer under the city seal, and his appointment signed by the president. At this time cases of cholera had appeared in New York, and this city was threatened with the disease. The officer reported at a subsequent meeting that cases had occurred, but they had been confined to the localities where they originated by the necessary precautions. Joseph Marsh, mayor, 1834, first meeting at the house of John Arnold, April 26th. May 12th, the mayor laid before the board an ordinance for striking and issuing small notes, passed 1792. June 30th, Patrick Henry was appointed city porter, and the clerk authorized to sign and grant him a license, Patrick Henry to pay the city fifty cents for the certificate. August 4, 1834, the Council, by resolution, granted to the manufacturing company, without any valuation, price, or rate, the right and title to lease the cove or wet-dock property to the Lehigh Coal Company for the term of nine hundred and ninety years. During this year the question was argued as to the city seal, as some one without authority introduced a new seal, and the city was in possession of two. By resolution the old one was adopted, the original of which is the seal now used by the city.

At a meeting of the Council, May 20, 1835, a resolution was passed that a single row of flagstones be laid in the centre of Smith and High Streets. This was the first effort towards walk improvements. At a meeting, May 2, 1836, this was rescinded, as the work had not been done. Resolution passed May 30th that John Arnold be paid, from the first moneys not appropriated, five dollars for the use of room, fuel, and light for the Council during the year; also to plant trees in square as shade and ornament. Dr. Solomon Andrews was one of that committee. Mark Harris was appointed pilot, with license to pilot vessels from New York to New Brunswick, and Perth Amboy to Sandy Hook. The rates fixed by the Council as fees were: from New Brunswick to New York or Sandy Hook, for a vessel drawing five feet of water and under, three dollars and fifty cents; over five feet, four dollars for each and every vessel. October 18th, upon application of sundry citizens, the names of most of the streets were changed.

May 12, 1837, the mayor fined four members fifty cents apiece for being twenty-five minutes late at Council meeting. June 10th, an ordinance was passed, upon recommendation of the mayor of New York City, levying a tax of one dollar per head for emigrants landing in the city. David B. Ogden, a lawyer, declared this ordinance unconstitutional, and it was postponed indefinitely.

1838. The minutes are not recorded.

1839. But one meeting recorded, Thursday afternoon, September 19th. This meeting declared the lots on the southerly side of the house of Thomas G. Marsh, belonging to Matthias Bruen, a nuisance.

1840, but two meetings recorded. One of these—the last, September 5th—passed an ordinance regulating and protecting shade-trees in the streets and squares of the city, the trees to be twenty-five feet apart.

1841, 1842, 1843, blank.

1844, a new charter was granted by the Legislature, February 27th, repealing the charter of 1784, except the ninth section. This section is relative to the city seal adopted by Governor Hunter, Aug. 24, 1718, and its title clause.

1844, James Harriot was elected mayor, yet we have no minutes or any proceedings for that year.

1845, Francis W. Brinley, mayor: minutes of six Council meetings, the appointment of officers, and the granting of licenses constituted the business of the year.

1846, William Paterson was elected mayor; no record of proceedings.

1847, Francis W. Brinley was again elected; record of meetings properly kept, ordinances and resolutions passed, and general routine of business.

1848, Commodore Lawrence Kearney was mayor, with but three meetings recorded.

1849, Dr. Solomon Andrews, mayor. This year appears as a new era as regards business, as nine leaves are recorded, with ordinances and street improvements.

1850, James Parker was mayor. This year, as the one before, nine leaves of business were recorded.

1851, Lewis Compton was mayor, with minutes properly recorded. December 17th a lease was granted to David Crowell & Son, for eighteen years, of the slip at the foot of Commerce Street.

1852, Theodore F. King was elected, and served as mayor; minutes properly kept, and ordinances and resolutions passed.

1853, Dr. Solomon Andrews was mayor; record properly kept, and large amount of improvements. During this year four special town-meetings were held, one on the 24th of August, to consider the charter as regards the streets and sidewalks; another, September 8th, to raise five thousand dollars to facilitate improvements; January 4th, to consider the law passed by the Legislature granting ferry privileges to certain parties; and another, adjourned from January 4th, to appoint committee to advise the repeal of the law.

1854, Joseph D. Forbes was mayor. This year the record was duly kept, and a number of ordinances passed, among the rest one to suppress vice and immorality that stands upon the books a monument to the City Council of 1854.

Solomon Andrews was again mayor in 1855; minutes properly kept, and ordinances for improvements passed.

1856, William Paterson was mayor. This was a noted year for the granting of licenses, as the Council was elected for that special purpose.

1857, Edward J. Hall was mayor. At a meeting held on July 15th, the slip foot of Fayette Street was leased to Peter R. Hawley for ten years; records kept and considerable business transacted.

1858, William Paterson was mayor for the third time, and was re-elected in 1859. This year the sewer in Smith Street was commenced. The committee who reported the plan were Ephraim Martin, Edward J. Hall, and Charles Keen. Length, 1700 feet; cost, about $2795. The following year, 1860, William Paterson was again elected mayor.

1861, Edward J. Hall was elected, this being his second term; general business of importance transacted.

1862, Joseph L. Crowell was elected mayor, and acted until October, when John R. Watson, the recorder, acted as mayor, Mr. Crowell having enlisted and gone to the war.

1863, Alfred Hall was elected mayor. During this year the slip foot of Smith Street was leased to Messrs. Drake for a ferry, and forty-eight bonds for one hundred dollars each, to pay for volunteers, were issued, with other business, showing an increase in the work of the City Council.

1864, Alfred Hall was re-elected. This year we find recorded correspondence with Governor Parker relative to conscript laws, as the citizens began to quake concerning the draft, and with the board of freeholders to obtain county notes for those conscripted or volunteered. A special meeting was called, and a tax of ten dollars each imposed on all liable to draft, and the City Council authorized to pay a bounty of three hundred dollars to every man credited on the call of three hundred thousand men; tax to be paid on or after the first day of May, 1865, the quota of men being thirty-five for Perth Amboy. A committee was appointed to draft and superintend the passage of an act by the Legislature authorizing the borrowing of ten thousand five hundred dollars. This act was passed, and the action of the City Council confirmed February, 1865.

1865, Alfred Hall continues still in office. This year the charter was revised with fifteen sections, principally relating to street improvements. A petition was presented from twenty-five persons declaring the house belonging to Abram Dunham a nuisance. The petition was granted, and the house demolished. The house stood upon the site upon which R. P. Barton has built on Smith Street. Ordinances preparatory to improvements and enterprise were passed during this year.

1866, Alfred Hall mayor, and continued in office until 1868; street extended to the suburbs, and large increase of business.

1867. In April a resolution was passed instructing a committee to purchase a new safe at a cost not to exceed three hundred dollars; one was procured for two hundred and seventy-five dollars. Ferry slip was leased to Staten Island Railroad Company for twenty years. July 15th, a contract was awarded to Schantz & Dutton for the erection and completion of twenty-five lamps and posts, with oil.

1868, April 6th, petition from Citizens' Association, asking for an appropriation of one thousand dollars to repair streets and roads leading into the city; also from the Middlesex Land Company relative to streets and roads. Prospect Street was extended to Market Street, also High Street from Washington Street to Crane Creek. September 1st a resolution was passed preparatory to the extension of Smith Street to the township line, to run parallel with Market Street, and to build bulkheads foot of Gordon and other streets; also opening King Street from Smith to Market Streets.

March 16, 1869, a contract was awarded to A. S. Hotchkiss & Co., to furnish and put up a clock for seven hundred dollars.

1869, James M. Chapman was mayor. This year Water Street was worked to a grade, with shade-trees set out from Smith Street to Fayette. The city park fence and chains were reset. November 1st the City Council, by resolution, adopted a memorial to the memory of Lewis Golding, deceased, late treasurer of the city, who had for thirty-nine years faithfully and impartially held office under the city government.

March 17, 1870, the charter was revised, and the City Council started out anew under its workings.

Joseph L. Crowell was mayor, and was elected for two years. The board of education was organized, and the school enlarged with energy. A lot was purchased for the erection of a new school-house, and bonds were issued. Sixteen additional lamps and posts were contracted for and furnished to the city. September 20th a contract was awarded to George W. Mercer to build a lock-up (jail) for eleven hundred and fifty dollars. October 3d a map commission was appointed, with surveyor, to make a map of the city, with street and sidewalk improvements.

1871, the City Council at one of its first meetings, May 1st, appointed a committee to take into consideration the expediency of building an almshouse. At the next meeting, June 5th, this committee reported that they deemed it expedient to build one in their opinion; yet if this be not the year, it should be deferred only a short time. This is the most lengthy meeting of the year. October 2d the police force was increased to two men. October 17th, committee appointed to examine plans for rebuilding the city hall reported their approval of the same with slight alteration, which was received. Committee, N. H. Tyrrell, John Fothergill, and Garret Jacobie. Committee continued, and report laid on the table for future action. November 6th, Council, by resolution offered by L. A. Golding, appropriated in bonds, to run twelve years, twelve thousand dollars, and the committee were directed to advertise for sealed proposals for contract, according to plans and specifications drawn by the architect, George W. Mercer. November 27th the proposals were opened and contract awarded,—carpenter work to Moses Martin, and mason's work to George W. Mercer, with staling, tinning, painting, iron-work, cornice, etc., and completed under the supervision of the committee. This Council completed its labors on the 19th of March, 1872, after accomplishing improvements and other enterprises.

April 29, 1872, the cost of the new city hall has been in bonds, $16,000 for building and furniture, gas and all, complete; and the dedication of this new city hall took place Oct. 15, 1872. Mayor John G. Garretson introduced ex-Mayor Alfred Hall. Mayor Garretson read some interesting historical facts connected with the history of Perth Amboy. Hon. William Paterson made an extended and deeply interesting address on the occasion, making reference to many incidents and the past history of this ancient city, and was followed by ex-Mayor Joseph L. Crowell, who urged liberality in raising money for public purposes, saying, "We must not be afraid to be taxed a little," and "if we fail in this liberal principle, we shall go backward instead of making advances." Letters were read from Hon. William A. Whitehead, the "historian," Governor George C. Ludlow, Hon. James M. Chapman, Ed. J. Hall, and ex-Councilman Henry J. Hart, of Plainfield.

It has been with considerable research that the following list has been collected, many of the records being but meagre accounts of the officers present, the business transacted, and the adjournment, the clerk often not even signing his own name, much less giving a list of those elected:

MAYORS.

William Eler, 1718.	James Parker, 1850.
Samuel Neville, 1758.	Lewis Compton, 1851.
James Parker, 1784-1815, 1831-33.	Theodore F. King, 1852.
Thomas Farmer, 1785.	Joseph D. Forbes, 1854.
John Ratoone, 1808.	Edward I. Hall, 1857, 1861.
Joseph Marsh, 1834.	Joseph L. Crowell, 1862, 1870-71.
James Harriott, 1844.	Alfred Hall, 1863-68.
Francis W. Brinley, 1845, 1847.	James M. Chapman, 1869.
William Paterson, 1846, 1855-56,	John G. Garretson, 1872-73.
1858-60, 1874-78.	Eber H. Hall, 1879-80.
Lawrence Kenney, 1848.	U. B. Watson, 1881.
Solomon Andrews, 1849, 1853-55.

RECORDERS.

James Alexander, 1718.	William Paterson, 1854.
Joseph Marsh, 1831-33.	James L. Compton, 1855.
Robert A. Thorp, 1834, 1836-37.	James S. Crowell, 1856-60.
James A. Nichols, 1840, 1842-43.	John Manning, 1861.
William Thomas, 1844-45, 1851.	John R. Watson, 1862.
Lewis Golding, 1846, 1848-49.	S. V. R. Paterson, 1863.
Robert Freeman, 1850, 1855.	William Hall, 1864-68.
John G. Golding, 1852.	Ezra W. Arnold, 1869.
Joseph G. Martin, 1853.

ALDERMEN.

John Parker, 1718.	Alfred Hall, 1850-51.
John Rudyard, 1718.	Cornelius White, 1852.
Samuel Leonard, 1718.	Edward J. Hall, 1854.
William Hodgson, 1718.	John Hall, 1854.
William Whitehead, 1831, 1833,	Henry D. Tyrrell, 1855.
1836.	Edmond Dunham, 1852.
James Harriott, 1831, 1838.	William Hall, 1856.
Matthias Bruen, 1831.	J. G. Garretson, 1857.
Solomon Andrews, 1835-36.	Charles Keen, 1857.
Hermion Bruen, 1840.	John R. Watson, 1861.
Charles McKnight Smith, 1840,	William B. Watson, 1862.
1846-48, 1850-51.	James M. Chapman, 1866.
Thomas G. Marsh, 1847-48.	Joseph E. Chapman, 1869.
Benoni Mandeville, 1844-45.	D. O. Noy, 1872.
Benjamin Hall, 1844, 1856.	John Fothergill, 1872-73.
Alexander M. Bruen, 1844-45.	William G. Thomas, 1872-75.
John Arnold, 1845.	Henry B. Tyrrell, 1873-75.
Theodore F. King, 1846.	Samuel Hall, 1874-75.
James Harriott, 1846.	James M. Chapman, 1876-78.
David Crowell, 1846-51.	Eber H. Hall, 1876-79.
Thomas G. Marsh, 1848, 1851.	Patrick Convery, 1876-80.
David T. Wait, 1847-49, 1851.	Edward R. Pierce, 1879-81.
Cleveland A. Forbes, 1848.	S. G. Phillips, 1880-81.
Charles M. Smith, 1849-50.	F. W. Gordon, 1881.
James L. Compton, 1850.

COMMON COUNCIL.

Benjamin Maurice, 1831-32.	Willits Griffen, 1846-48.
Abner Woodruff, 1831-32.	Thomas G. Marsh, 1847.
Lewis Golding, 1831-32, 1835.	Ephraim Martin, 1845.
Robert A. Thorp, 1831-33.	William Thomas, 1848.
Josiah B. Howell, 1831-34.	Daniel Selover, 1848.
Francis W. Brinley, 1831-33.	James Compton, 1848-50.
William Thomas, 1832.	Robert Freeman, 1849-50.
David Crowell, 1834-35.	Charles Reader, 1849-50.
Lewis Compton, 1834-35.	Lucius D. Moore, 1849.
John Arnold, 1835, 1840.	Stephen G. Woodbridge, 1849-50.
David C. Wood, 1840, 1845.	Joel Smith, 1849.
James Harriott, 1840.	A. Slaght, 1851.
John Manning, 1849, 1845-47.	Isaac S. Hamed, 1850.
Ellis Tyrrell, 1845-46.	P. P. Woglom, 1850, 1852-53.
John Wait, 1845.	James Tuitt, 1852.
Ephraim Martin, 1845.	Elam Sanford, 1851.
Thomas Dunham, 1845.	Merritt Martin, 1852.

Abram Sleight, 1851.
 William Dunham, 1853-54.
 J. Compton, 1853-54.
 Daniel Selover, 1853-54.
 William Laforge, 1853.
 Garret Onderduick, 1854.
 L. Golding, 1854-55.
 J. U. Coutta, 1854.
 E. Martin, 1854-55.
 Joseph L. Crowell, 1854-55.
 D. T. Wait, 1855.
 Elam Sanford, 1855-56.
 Eber H. Hall, 1854-55.
 Joseph Tanner, 1855.
 Abram Dunham, 1856, 1858.
 John G. Garrettsen, 1856.
 William Thomas, 1856.
 Thomas B. Liddle, 1856-57.
 Henry Buchanan, 1857.
 Henry C. Drost, 1857.
 Henry M. Stone, 1857.
 William Hall, 1851, 1858.
 Cornelius Winant, 1858.
 James M. Martin, 1858.
 H. Buchanan, 1858.
 John P. Woglom, 1855.
 William King, 1859.
 John W. Sneath, 1859.
 Richard P. Barton, 1861.
 C. Van Doren, 1861.
 James L. Beers, 1861.
 Moses Martin, 1862.
 Albert S. Jackson, 1862.
 William A. Masker, 1862.
 Hugh Timmins, 1862.
 Albert Roli, 1863.
 Garret Jacobsie, 1863.
 Aaron Masker, 1864.
 Ezra W. Arnold, 1864.
 James A. Gillman, 1864.
 John H. Ryno, 1865.
 Joshua B. Ford, 1866.
 John Fothergill, 1866.
 George Foster, 1866.

CITY CLERKS.

Joseph A. Martin, 1848.
 John D. See, 1850.
 Isaac D. Ward, 1855.
 Lewis B. Harrold, 1858.
 Henry I. Hart, 1861.
 I. T. Golding, 1870.
 I. D. Ward, 1872-81.
 Cortlandt L. Parker, 1882.

TREASURERS.

Charles Keen, 1875.
 Richard P. Barton, 1876-81.

ASSESSORS.

Ezra W. Arnold, 1875-80.
 Joseph L. Crowell, 1881.

COLLECTOR OF REVENUES.

Joshua B. Ford, 1874.
 John Hall, 1875.
 John Manning, 1876-81.

CONTROLLERS.

George A. Seamee, 1878-80.
 Joseph E. Chapman, 1874-77.
 J. Thorn Golding, 1881.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Rev. Aaron Peck, 1874-77.
 U. B. Watson, 1874-76.
 Edward R. Pierce, 1874-77.
 Cornelius Hadden, 1874-78.
 James M. Chapman, 1874.
 George H. Tice, 1874-75.
 John L. Kearney, 1875-81.
 S. B. P. Higgins, 1876-77.
 L. S. Blackwell, 1877-78.
 H. D. Tyrrell, 1878-79.
 W. W. Hubbard, 1878-79.
 John Fothergill, 1879-81.
 James L. Compton, 1879-81.
 W. H. McCormick, 1878-79.
 James E. Noe, 1881.
 J. B. Smith, 1881.
 William Dally, 1881.

CITY SUPERINTENDENT.

Henry Farmer, 1874-81.

CHAPTER LXXXVIII.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.—(Continued.)

Resident Governors.—The "Long Ferry Tavern" was the first public house erected in Perth Amboy. Governor Rudyard was superseded in 1684 by Gawen Laurie, and through him the proprietors bestowed upon their new town the name of Perth in honor of James, Earl of Perth, one of their number. The suffix "Amboy" is a change from the original Indian "Ompoge." Governor Laurie (1684-86) appears to have been the first of the proprietary Governors who resided a portion of the time at Perth Amboy. After 1686, the date of the removal of the government to Perth Amboy, the proprietary and royal Governors resided here with more or less permanence. Governor Laurie laid the foundations of the new city. Andrew Hamilton, Lord Neil Campbell, and Jeremiah Basse filled respectively the chief office in the province. Hamilton and Campbell appear to have been permanently established here, the latter during his entire term, and the former prior to 1689, and again from 1692 to 1698. We find that Robert Hunter, then Governor, about the fall of 1709, was the first of the royal Governors of New Jersey who regarded this province with sufficient favor to make upon its soil anything like a permanent home. He has been considered the first one who made his permanent home in Perth Amboy. He was much esteemed for many excellent qualities, and his house stood upon the knoll south of St. Peter's Church. He was born in Scotland, but of his parentage or of the incidents of his early life nothing is known. In 1707 he bears the title of "colonel," and has as associates men of literary attainments, such as Swift, Steele, Addison, and others. He arrived in the province at a most inauspicious period for his own ease, immediately succeeding the unpopular and disorganizing administration of Cornbury.

There is no account given respecting the Governor's family. "While in the army he married Lady Hay, the relict of Lord John Hay, and daughter of Sir Thomas Orby, Bart., and had several children. She came with him to America, and died in August, 1716."

In 1719, the Governor's health not being good, and his interests seeming to require his presence in London, he left his government here never to return, and in 1720 was succeeded in office by William Burnet, who continued therein until his death, which took place about nine years later, or 1730.

Col. John Montgomerie, who succeeded Mr. Burnet, died in 1731, and William Cosby, his successor, also died in 1736, and on the death of the latter, upon John Anderson, then president of Council, the government of New Jersey devolved, but after his assumption of the chief authority he died in a few weeks. The following is an obituary published at this time :

"PERTH AMBOY, March 30, 1736.

"On Sunday Last, March 27th, died here in the 71st year of his age, after a short indisposition, the Honorable John Anderson, Esq., President of his Majesty's Council and Commander-in-Chief of this Province of New Jersey, which station he held but 13 days. He was a gentleman of the strictest honor and integrity, justly valued and lamented by all his acquaintances."

The next incumbent was John Hamilton, a colonel, and the son of Andrew Hamilton, Governor under the proprietaries, and is the only descendant of whom any knowledge has been obtained. It has not been determined whether he was a native of Scotland or America. He first appears in public life as one of Governor Hunter's Council in 1713, and continued to hold a seat at the board during the succeeding administrations of Burnet, Montgomerie, and Cosby, so that when he became chief magistrate he was fully prepared for its duties. In 1735 he was associate judge of the Provincial Supreme Court. He resided, it is thought, in the house now known as the Lewis House or Place, beautifully situated, overlooking the broad bay formed by the junction of the Raritan and the Sound with Sandy Hook inlet. He was buried in the old burial-ground, then used, lying north of the Britain House, but no trace can now be seen indicating the spot.

His successor was Jonathan Belcher, who arrived as Governor in 1747, landing at Amboy early in the morning of August 8th, having come in his barge from Sandy Hook; the voyage across the Atlantic having been made in the "Scarborough" man-of-war. He was well pleased with Amboy, but after a time made his residence at Elizabethtown, and died there in 1757.

Francis Bernard succeeded Governor Belcher. He was descended from a respectable family; had been educated at Oxford, and was engaged in the profession of the law at the time of his appointment, being a proctor or solicitor at Doctors' Commons, in London. He arrived at Amboy, Wednesday, June 14, 1758, from "His Majesty's ship the Terrible," bringing his wife and family. From the papers of that day, furnishing account of his reception in the province, it appears that more honors were bestowed upon him than were given to any of his predecessors. It may be well to portray the form and ceremony that in those days "did hedge about a Governor."

"On the second day after his arrival, attended by the members of his Council, the mayor and other authorities of the city, the Governor proceeded to the town hall and published his commission in the usual mode, by causing it to be read aloud in the presence and hearing of the assembled multitude. He then received the compliments of a great number of persons of distinction who had come hither to witness the august ceremony which placed once more over them a representative of majesty, and the day closed with various suitable demonstrations of joy." The next day the corporation of the city waited upon him, and the then mayor, Samuel Neville, Esq., presented him with the usual complimentary address. The Governor returned satisfactory replies, assuring the mayor that he should "embrace every opportunity to show his regard for the city of Perth Amboy."

His residence was what was called the "old Johnston house," which stood upon the bank of the Raritan, about half-way between Long Ferry and Sandy Point. He continued to exercise the chief authority until the beginning of the year 1760, when he was transferred by the royal command to the province of Massachusetts Bay.

"He was sober and temperate, and had fine talents for conversation if the subject pleased him. He had an extensive knowledge of books, and memory so strong as to be able to refer to particular passages with greater facility than most men of erudition. He would sometimes boast that he could repeat the whole of the plays of Shakspeare. He was a friend of literature, and interested himself greatly in favor of Harvard College when Harvard Hall with the library and philosophic apparatus were destroyed by fire, after which he presented to it a considerable part of his own private library. The building which now bears the name of Harvard is a specimen of his taste in architecture. He was a believer in the principles of Christianity, the effect of study as well as of education, and was regular in his attendance upon public worship, attached to the Church of England, but no bigot, . . . when in the country attending service at the nearest Congregational Church.

Thomas Boone was the next Governor to succeed Governor Bernard; he received his appointment Nov. 27, 1759, but did not reach Amboy until July 30, 1760, being detained in New York waiting for his commission. The Governor was escorted on his way through the county of Essex by a troop of horse commanded by Capt. Terrill, of Elizabethtown, and through the county of Middlesex by a troop under the command of Capt. Parker, of Woodbridge. On his approach to Amboy he was met by the mayor and officers of the corporation, and conducted by them into the city. The next day the oath of office was administered, and then preceded by the corporation and attended by His Majesty's Council he walked in the procession to the city hall, where his commission was published with the usual formalities. An elegant entertainment was subsequently spread for the assembled company, at the expense of the Governor, and the day closed with illuminations and other demonstrations of joy "usual upon such occasions," says the record, now no longer occurring within the precincts of the old capital.

He was soon removed, and his position filled by Josiah Hardy, a man of few words and prompt action, but his administration, too, was brief.

Governor Boone was present on the arrival and installation of his successor, and did not sail from New York till Dec. 3, 1761, and arrived and entered upon his duties in South Carolina early in January, 1762, and remained there a little over two years (May, 1764), when he left for England, being recalled in consequence of differences with his Assembly.

Of Governor Hardy very little is known. He was appointed the 14th of April, 1761, to succeed Governor Booue. As we have said, he was a man of few words, and as a specimen the following is given, being his answer to the trustees of the College of New Jersey, who presented their address Sept. 29, 1762:

"GENTLEMEN,—I heartily thank you for your address. It will be at all times a particular satisfaction to me to give you every assistance in my power in promoting the prosperity of this useful seminary of learning.
JOSIAH HARDY."

The Governor met the Assembly on the 30th November, 1761, and also in the months of March, April, and September, 1762, but there is no record in the public documents of the time indicative of his character or acquirements, and in February, 1763, he was succeeded by William Franklin, the last of the colonial Governors. He was a son of Dr. Benjamin Franklin, and was born in the province of Pennsylvania in 1731. But little of his youth is known. He early showed a marked predilection for books, which his father, of course, encouraged. He received the rank of captain in campaigns on the northern frontier before he was of age, rising from a subordinate station. On his return to Philadelphia young Franklin seems to have become in a great degree the companion and assistant of his father in his various scientific and professional pursuits, and subsequently himself entered into official life, and from 1754, for two years, 1756, he acted as comptroller of the general post-office, then under the management of Dr. Franklin, and in January, 1755, then holding in addition the clerkship of the Provincial Assembly, he accompanied the troops that were sent under the command of the doctor to build forts on the frontiers of Pennsylvania, and in June, 1757, his father having been appointed colonial agent at London, he sailed with him for Europe.

William Strahan, his father's friend, a man of talents and discrimination, thus alludes to him in a letter written shortly after his arrival in England:

"Your son,"—he is writing to Mrs. Franklin,—*"I really think is one of the prettiest young gentlemen I ever knew from America. He seems to me to have a solidity of judgment not very often to be met with in one of his years. This, with the daily opportunity he has of improving himself in the company of his father, who is at the same time his friend, his brother, his intimate and easy companion, affords an agreeable prospect that your husband's virtues and usefulness to his country may be prolonged beyond the date of his own life."*¹

Young Franklin commenced the study of law in the Middle Temple, and was called to the bar in 1758, after which he traveled with his father through England, Scotland, Flanders, and Holland, and was the means of profit as regards mental and personal attainments. Courtied as was the society of his father by men of the highest literary and scientific acquirements, he could not but imbibe in such a circle a taste for similar pursuits, and we consequently find that when the University of Oxford, in 1762, conferred upon the father, for his great proficiency in the natural science, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, the son was thought worthy of that of Master of Arts for having distinguished himself in the same branches of knowledge.

In the year 1762 (August) he was appointed, through the influence of Lord Bute, and without any solicitation on the part of his father, Governor of New Jersey, "previously undergoing, it is said, a close examination by Lord Halifax, minister of American affairs,"² deemed advisable, perhaps, on account of his colonial birth and youth, he at that time being only thirty years of age.

The following account of his marriage is interesting:—"About the time of his appointment Governor Franklin married a Miss Elizabeth Downs, of whom recollections are, or were cherished by aged persons who knew her, as an exceedingly amiable woman, possessing many virtues and of very engaging manners. With her he arrived in the Delaware River in February, 1763, and, after some detention from the ice, reached Philadelphia on the 19th, whence he started for New Jersey on the 23d. He slept at New Brunswick on the 24th, and arrived at Perth Amboy the following day."³

"Almost immediately after his entrance upon his duties in New Jersey the vexatious measures of the British ministry began to excite throughout the colonies that abhorrence which eventually led to their separation from the mother-country, and Governor Franklin, although favorably disposed towards the colonies so long as no direct opposition to the authority of Parliament was manifested, advocated and enforced the views of the ministry with a devotion and energy worthy a better cause. The war-clouds were gathering, and dissection for the time crept into the Council. Hitherto this body had coincided with the views of the Governor, but he, in the fall in 1775, felt obliged to suspend from membership in it Lord Stirling, the latter having accepted a military commission under the Provincial Congress. From this time a palpable estrangement dates between the Governor and the Council, and so rapidly did it grow that all harmony of action ceased, and the former was left to face the rising storm alone." Writing about this period to the Earl of Dartmouth, Franklin says, "My situation is not a little difficult, having no more than one or two among the principal officers of government to whom I even now speak confidentially on public affairs." The dispatch containing this passage was intercepted by Lord Stirling, who took measures to prevent the possible escape of Governor Franklin, although nothing goes to show that the latter had any such intention. Not long after this he was arrested by authority of the Provincial Congress, and upon refusing to give his parole was placed under guard and taken to Burlington and sent thence to Connecticut, where he was kept a prisoner until regularly exchanged.¹

¹ Franklin's Writings, vol. vii. pp. 158, 170.

² Public Characters of Great Britain, vol. iv. ³ E. J. Hist., p. 188.

By this time the city had become an important centre, not only from the fact that it was the seat of government and the residence of the principal royal officers, but on account of its commanding military situation, of which both parties were fully aware, and in the month of December, 1775, two New Jersey provincial regiments were organized, and a company under Capt. Conway marched down from New Brunswick and occupied the "barracks," since owned by the Andrews family (see account of barracks). The space between the barracks and the turnpike was used for a parade-ground, and was inclosed by a high board fence, and shaded until 1832 by numerous tall poplar-trees. Capt. Conway's force was soon strengthened by a regiment under Capt. Longstreet, and a company under Capt. Howell, and all found quarters at the barracks. Meanwhile the colonial officers continued nominally in possession of their respective posts, and several months passed without any open act of hostility or breach of peace. But in April a detachment of the Third Regiment of Jersey troops arrived here and at once began to throw up earth-works.

Encouraged by the arrest of Governor Franklin, and the desertion of Amboy by a number of the adherents of the royal cause, there was a more active display of organized resistance to British rule. About the end of June the appearance of Sir William Howe with a large force on Staten Island decided Gen. Washington in his intention to form a camp at Amboy, and Gen. Hugh Mercer was put in command. Troops were at once ordered here, and several armed whale-boats and vessels were disposed along the front of the town. It was at this period that a British war brig carrying twelve guns came up and anchored west of Billop's Point. During the night the Americans mounted an eighteen-pounder behind the breastworks near St. Peter's Church, and at daylight opened such a hot fire upon the brig that she was obliged to retire. Her retreat was covered by the guns of another English vessel which lay east of the Point, and by a shot from her the tombstone at the grave of Capt. Bryant was broken and the church itself hit.

The next hostile act occurred July 24th, when an American battery of four guns fired upon two sloops on their way from Staten Island to Sandy Hook. No damage seems to have been done to them, but the cannonade provoked a reply from the British artillery on Billop's Point "which lasted for an hour."

The casualties on our side were two: a man confined in an upper room of the court-house, and a horse which was killed in High Street near the town pump. Single shots from muskets and rifles were often fired across the Sound, and now and then either from precision or by chance one would be effective. During the summer a want of proper vessels prevented the Americans from undertaking any aggressive operations at Amboy on a large scale, but after the failure of the famous conference in the Billop House, on Staten Island, between Lord Howe and the committee from Congress, there were several successful raids and sorties upon the British on Staten Island. But nothing of much moment took place, and in November, 1776, when Washington began his retreat through New Jersey, the troops at Amboy were withdrawn and joined his army.

The English immediately took possession of the town, which, as well as New Brunswick, they retained until July, 1777.

"On the 12th of April, 1779, commissioners appointed by Gen. Washington and Sir Henry Clinton met here to make arrangements for the exchange of prisoners, after which the Revolutionary history of Perth Amboy presents little interest and nothing of importance."²

CHAPTER LXXXIX.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.—(Continued.)

St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church.—About 1695 several of the East Jersey proprietors applied to Bishop Compton, of London, for the supply of a minister, and in compliance with their request the Rev. Edward Perthuck was sent out, who arrived at the close of 1698. Upon his arrival at Perth Amboy the proprietors met in February of the following year, and a house which had been built by them to be given for a church having been fitted up by a number of the inhabitants, the Rev. Mr. Perthuck commenced religious services according to the forms of the Church of England.

This building stood near the ferry over the Raritan, and its site is marked on an early map. There was a stone taken down and inserted in the rear wall of the new church edifice bearing date 1685,³ and this is supposed to have been the date of the foundation of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Amboy. It is not known how long Mr. Perthuck remained, but prior to the incorporation of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 1701, clergymen occasionally visited the place. In the year 1702 the Rev. George Keith was sent by the society as a missionary to the colonies, with the Rev. Mr. Talbot as an associate. These visits awakened an interest in the erection of a new church, but it was deemed advisable to repair the old one for temporary use, and six pounds were appropriated by the proprietors for that object. In 1705 materials were collected and the new church edifice commenced. The Rev. Mr. Brook is mentioned as their missionary at this time, including Elizabethtown. He was zealous and indefatigable in his labors. "Besides preaching, he used to catechise and expound fourteen times a month, which obliged him to be on horseback almost every day, which was expensive as well as toilsome to him." His example, however, awakened a spirit of zeal among his members. In the autumn of 1707, Mr. Brook, while on his way to England, was lost at sea.

¹ T. S. Kearney's Sketch.

² Centenary Speech, in A. B., 1876.

³ William A. Whitehead Acct.

The Rev. Thorowgood Moore, a truly zealous and sincere clergyman and missionary of the society, appears to have officiated for a while in Amboy, following Mr. Brook, but on account of his plainness in the discharge of his duties he incurred the displeasure of some of the nobility, more especially of Lord Cornbury, and was taken by the sheriff to New York. But he fortunately escaped to Boston, and from there to England on the same vessel with Rev. Mr. Brook.

Rev. Edward Vaughan succeeded Mr. Brook in 1709. He executed the duties of his calling with the utmost application and diligence, rendering himself exceedingly acceptable to the people. He gave Amboy as much of his attention as was possible, having Elizabethtown and other missions to visit frequently. In 1711 the inhabitants of Amboy were obliged to procure a separate minister, and Rev. Thomas Halliday commenced his labors, in connection with Piscataway Town. (See Raritan township.) He remained until about 1714, at Amboy, when that year Rev. Mr. Vaughan for the second time came to Amboy, and once in four weeks officiated for the parish here, going to Elizabethtown and Woodbridge on the other Sabbaths. This arrangement continued with but little intermission for several years. On the 30th of July, 1718, a charter was granted to the parish of St. Peter's by Governor Robert Hunter, in behalf of his sovereign, George I., in which William Eier and John Barclay were appointed wardens; Thomas Gordon, John Rudyard, Robert King, and John Stevens, vestrymen.

To Mr. Gordon, George Willocks, and John Barclay the church is indebted for the ground on which the present edifice stands and for other lands in the vicinity of this city. . . . The parsonage and grounds were valued at £400 sterling. In June, 1719, John Harrison and Mr. Willocks gave twelve acres of land contiguous to the city for the use of the church forever.

In 1825 this congregation erected a tablet in this church in memory of their liberal benefactors. It bears the following inscription:

This Tablet
is designed to express the gratitude of the Congregation of St. Peter's church in this city to the benefactors of the said church whose names follow
GEORGE WILLOCKS who died 1729—
MARGARET WILLOCKS his wife who died in 1722—
THOMAS GORDON
who died April 28 1722
and John Harrison.
They loved the habitation of God's house and the place where his honour dwelleth.

Erected A.D. 1825.

This congregation, upon receipt of their charter, became regularly established. The erection of a new church soon followed. It was begun in 1719, and dedicated by the name of "St. Peter's" in 1722. It was an oblong building, thirty feet broad, forty-eight feet in length, and simple in architecture. Save in the additions made to the number who were buried in the graves surrounding the church, but few changes had been wrought in its appearance until 1852, when it was removed to give place to a more commodious modern structure. The Rev. William Skinner was appointed missionary to the parish, and in the autumn of 1722 commenced his labors. He was received by the people "with much kindness and civility."

In the year 1731 the pews were all placed in the church, and the following is a record of the names of pewholders, the numbers allotted, and prices affixed:

	£ s.		£ s.
1. Rector	6 17	15. This seat may have been reserved for the poor.
2. Philip Kearney.....	6 17	16. Aarou Faltout.....	5 7
3. John Parker.....	6 17	17. Peter Savary and Henry Berry, Jr.....	5 2
4. William Skinner.....	6 17	18. Jos. Leig, Richard Bishop, and Wm. Davenport.....	5 2
5. Ursula Parker and Elizabeth Johnston.....	6 7	19. John Sharp.....	5 2
6. John Johnston.....	6 7	20. Thomas Frost, and Eleanor Williams.....	5 12
7. R. S. Hooper.....	6 7	21. Richard Hughes.....	5 12
8. J. Hamilton.....	6 7	22. Andrew Hay.....	6 7
9. A. Johnston.....	6 17	23. Gabriel Stelle.....	6 7
10. F. Lyell.....	6 17	24. Michael Kearney.....	6 7
11. George Leslie.....	6 17
12. John Ritchie.....	6 17
13. J. Webb.....	5 12
14. Harmon Stout.....	5 12

When Mr. Skinner entered upon his duties there were only twenty communicants reported. There were in 1724 about seventy families belonging to the congregation. He ordinarily had one hundred and fifty auditors in summer, and about seventy in winter. His custom was to preach in the morning and catechise the children in the afternoon. In 1747, in consequence of Governor Morris having fixed his residence at Trenton, Amboy lost many of its population. The prevalence of the smallpox proving fatal to many in the winter of 1746-47, the congregation, which had increased under the labors of Mr. Skinner, fell off materially, and in 1758 they were deprived by death of the labors of their faithful pastor.

In the year 1759 there was appointed as missionary to Amboy the Rev. Philip Hughes, but he must have declined, as no other mention is made but that Rev.

Mr. Palmer entered the station and continued to officiate as missionary until 1762, when the name of Rev. Robert McKean comes in February, 1763, and reports in a few months after some fifty families that belonged to this parish, and communicants thirty-four. In the year 1764 a committee were authorized "to carry on the outside walls of the church as far as the end of the steeple, and inclose it, and to build a plain spire on top of the steeple, and do any other matter the vestry shall think necessary towards completing the same." Rev. Mr. McKean died Oct. 17, 1767, leaving an excellent record of a gospel minister and Christian gentleman; he was also a practitioner of physic, etc. The following epitaph from his tombstone:

"In Memory of
The Rev. Robert McKean, M.A.,
Practitioner of Physic, etc.,
And Missionary from the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign parts to the City of Perth Amboy, who was Born
July 13th, 1732, N. S., and died October 17th, 1767.
An unshaken friend,
An agreeable companion,
A rational divine,
A skilful Physician,
And in every relation of life
a truly benevolent and honest man,
Fraternal love hath erected
This monument."

The Rev. Mr. Preston, chaplain to the Twenty-sixth Regiment, then quartered at Amboy, was requested to officiate, the necessary funds for his remuneration to be raised by subscription. He accepted the offer, but refused all compensation save the occupancy of the parsonage. Mr. Preston remained at Amboy until 1774, acting as the chaplain, and also as missionary to this church when the "tide of war" caused his removal. He was a Scotchman, tall of stature, and with an athletic frame surmounted by a bushy wig; he was a bachelor, and had accumulated considerable property, which he lost by the failure of his banker, which caused his death, bringing him to the grave old and broken-hearted.

In the year 1768, as there had been numerous applications for pews which could not be supplied, arrangements were made to put up a gallery on the south side of the church, which was accordingly done.

From 1774 to 1782 there are no records of the vestry's proceedings, and it is believed that the church held no regular services. The edifice became a place for stabling the army horses, the pews having been removed; and the graves and monuments were exposed to injury by the destruction of the fences. Against the headstones fires were lighted by the soldiers to prepare their food, and the tombstones they occupied as tables for the meals which they thus prepared. The church, however, escaped the fiery ordeal, being built of durable materials, while many frame buildings were destroyed. In this connection the following letter from Rev. Mr. Preston is interesting:

"PERTH AMBOY, N. J., July 2, 1777.

"REVEREND SIR,—My correspondence with the society has been interrupted for some considerable time, owing to this place having been made a garrison town of the rebels, and their endeavoring to intercept all letters that were writ from hence, which was attended with bad consequences to the writers of them. Whilst they were here they never interrupted me in the discharge of my duty; they threatened indeed to compel me to observe the Fast Day that was appointed by Congress in May last, which I not choosing to do, left town for two days, and on my return had service in church as usual without any molestation, which I continued till the end of June, when Independence was declared. After that it would not have been prudent in me, nor indeed would they have —have suffered me to officiate, unless I would have conformed to the alterations which they made in the Liturgy. Upon the King's Troops taking possession of Staten Island, which is separated from this place by a narrow channel, they crowded in 6000 or 7000 men into this little town, filled all the houses with soldiers, and took the church and made a Barrack of it; they at last gave out an order that any person that had any connections or acquaintances upon Staten Island should quit the place. Upon this the greater number of the inhabitants were obliged to leave town. I retired 40 miles back into the country, where I remained till one of the King's Regiments passed along, which had been made prisoners and were going to be exchanged, and I joined them and got to this town the 20th of December. I had service in the church the Sunday before Christmas, and had that day 20 communicants. Few of the inhabitants have as yet been able to return here, the Roads are all beset by the Rebels and their houses are now filled with the King's Troops. I found the Parsonage House so demolished that it was not habitable; the windows broke to pieces, the partitions torn down, the out-houses and fences all burnt and destroyed. £300 will not repair the damage, and how that is to be done I know not, for everybody here have been such sufferers that it cannot be expected that they should contribute much towards it. Many of them will find it a hard matter to repair their own losses. My own private losses I do not bring into the account, tho' I have been a considerable sufferer: part of my Household Furniture is gone and some of my books, amongst which was the register of Baptisms, &c., so that I can make no return to the Society of the occasional duties for these two year last Past.

"I am, Reverend Sir, yours,

"JOHN PRESTON."

During the years 1782, 1783, and 1784 the Rev. Abraham Beach occasionally officiated in the parish, being appointed temporary missionary by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel at the request of the vestry. The war was over and all civil and ecclesiastical connection with Great Britain severed. At the end of the year 1784 an invitation was extended to the Rev. John Hamilton Rowland, who was at that time settled as rector of St. Andrew's Church, Staten Island. He officiated for the congregation at stated periods for two or three years, and then removed to Nova Scotia.

The following March (1785) resolutions in relation to the complete reparation of the church, commencing with the windows and floors, were adopted. On the 16th of April the vestry petitioned the board of proprietors for aid, and received from them a grant of one hundred acres of land, which was sold and the proceeds made available, forming with monies (£150) secured by private subscriptions enough to warrant the completion of the interior. These improvements were finished in October, and some twenty-six out of thirty-two pews were sold. Rev. Mr. Rowland's labors in Amboy ceased about August, 1786, as in the same month a candidate for orders,

Mr. Joseph I. Bend, who also was teaching school in the town, was engaged by the congregation as lay-reader.

Rev. George Hartwell Spieren was the next rector. He was called in June, 1788, and ordained at St. Peter's, on the 18th of July, by Right Rev. Dr. Provost, Bishop of New York. This was the first ordination in the Protestant Episcopal Church in East Jersey. During his ministry (1788) measures were taken to procure a bell. The following one was presented to the parish by Capt. Philip Lytheby, a Scotchman from Bahama Islands. The captain caused the following quaint inscription to be cast around the bell:

"In Perth Amboy my Sound Enjoy, 1789."

Rev. Henry Van Dyke, the next rector at Amboy and New Brunswick, arrived with his family April 19, 1791. After serving the parish usefully for some months he (in July, 1793) removed to Burlington, N. J. The church now extended a unanimous call to the Rev. Richard C. Moore, of Staten Island, who became rector on the 25th of November, 1793, and for several years performed his duties in the parish. He became Bishop of Virginia.

The following have been connected with this parish: Rev. Jasper D. Jones, 1804-9; Rev. James Chapman, 1809-44; Rev. Hamble T. Leacock, 1845-48; Rev. H. E. Pratt, 1849-54; Rev. Alexander Jones, D.D., 1855-71; Rev. Alexander R. Walker, 1871-77; Rev. James O. Drumm, 1877-78; Rev. E. P. Miller, 1879 to the present time.

The present number of communicants is one hundred and fifty; church sittings, about three hundred and fifty. The present church edifice was first used for public worship June 19, 1853.

The following is a complete list of the officers of the congregation to the present time, with the years of their election:

WARDENS.

William Eier, 1718.
Robert King, 1719.
William Burnet, "Governor," 1721.
John Barclay, 1718-22.
John Rudyard, 1720.
John Stevens, 1722-25, 1730-31.
George Leslie, 1732-29.
Michael Kearney, 1723-26, 1730-33.
Andrew Johnston, 1726-29, 1742, 1762.
Heron Potland, 1726-28.
John Parker, 1727-32.
Fenwick Lyell, 1727-29, 1737-41.
Andrew Hay, 1729-39.
John Hamilton, 1730-36, 1742-45.
John Barclay, 1730-32.
Lawrence Smyth, 1734-55.
William Cosby, "Governor," 1734.
Robert L. Hooper, 1734-38.
John Webb, 1735-40.
Gabriel Stelle, 1737-38.
Lewis Johnson, 1739-41, 1763-73.
Adam Hay, 1739.
Samuel Neville, 1741.

Philip Kearney, 1742-74.
John Deare, 1742-62.
Francis Brazier, 1744-45.
John Dodsworth, 1745.
Gerard Says, 1749.
John Smyth, 1749-62.
George Leslie, 1750-52.
John Barberie, 1753-62.
John Johnston, 1753-74.
Cortlandt Skinner, 1755-74.
Samuel Sargent, 1757-62, 1772.
Stephen Skinner, 1763-71.
James Parker, 1763, 1774, 1784-95.
Alexander Watson, 1763-74.
Jonathan Deare, 1770-74.
Revaud Kearney, 1770-74, 1782-83, 1786, 1791-93, 1797, 1800-1.
Elijah Dunblaw, 1770-74.
Frederick Smyth, 1774.
John Rattoone, 1782-89.
Thomas Lyell, 1782-84.
John Halsted, 1782-84, 1799.
Elias Marsh, 1782-86, 1795, 1798.
Stephen Deare, 1782-83.
John Griggs, 1784-85.

Poole England, 1784-85, 1788-90.
Norris Thorp, 1785.
Samuel Farmer, 1785-86.
Thomas Farmer, 1785-88.
Matthias Halstead, 1785-86, 1788-94, 1797.
Richard Stevens, 1786-88.
John L. Johnston, 1786-87.
Andrew Bell, 1787, 1789, 1808.
Michael Kearny, 1790.
John Johnston, 1791-93, 1795-96.
Joseph Taylor, 1794-1801.
Joseph Marsh, 1794-87, 1810.
Robert Palmer, 1798.
James Parker, 1799, 1837, 1843.
James H. Kenney, 1809-11.
Abraham Webb, 1809-36.
Philip Ten Eyck, 1809.
David Thorp, 1810-29.
B. H. Tomlinson, 1811.
C. A. Forbes, 1812, 1816-17.
Abraham Thompson, 1812-19.
George Buchanan, 1813-21.
William Hamilton, 1814-15, 1830-31.
Robert Arnold, 1816-17, 1822-29.
Jeremiah Martin, 1818-30.
Richard Giggs, 1818-19.
Archer Gifford, 1820-21.
Abner Woodruff, 1822-25, 1828-37.
F. W. Brinley, 1822-23.
William Whitehead, 1824-34.

Thomas G. Marsh, 1826-51.
Lewis Gelding, 1827-54.
Robert A. Thorp, 1830-35.
Samuel Angus, 1830.
Benoni Mandeville, 1834-37.
Charles C. Lawrence, 1836-37.
Jedediah Paine, 1837.
John Parker, 1723-26.
Robert S. Hooper, 1826.
John Hamilton, 1727-29, 1737-41.
Michael Kearney, 1727-29.
Andrew Johnston, 1730-41.
Fennell Lyell, 1730-36.
Lewis Johnston, 1742-62.
Samuel Nevill, 1742-62.
Samuel Sargent, 1763-71.
John Smyth, 1763-74.
Stephen Skinner, 1772-74.
Norris Thorpe, 1782-84.
John Johnston, 1782-89.
John Halsted, 1785-96, 1800-1.
John Rattoone, 1790-1801, 1809-10.
James Parker, 1797.
Revaud Kearney, 1798-99.
Andrew Bell, 1809-42.
Joseph Marsh, 1811-41.
Abner Woodruff, 1841.
John R. Watson, 1842-55.
Edward Brinley, 1843-51.
James Parker, 1852-55.
C. L. Parker.
F. W. Gordon.

VESTRYMEN.

Thomas Gordon, 1718-22.
John Barclay, 1730-32.
John Rudyard, 1718-19, 1721.
Robert King, 1718, 1720-35, 1744-45.
John Stevens, 1718, 1726-30, 1749-52.
William Nicholls, 1719-21.
Alexander Farquerson, 1719-20.
John Sharp, 1720.
John Johnston, 1722-28.
James A. Nicholls, 1838-50.
John Arnold, 1838-55.
John R. Watson, 1839-41.
Charles Hamilton, 1842.

Charles McK. Smith, 1843-55.
Lawrence Kearney, 1851-55.
Lawrence Boggs, 1852-55.
William King, 1852-55.
Joseph D. Forbes, 1852-55.
Eber H. Hall, 1855.
S. V. R. Patterson, 1855.
James T. Watson, 1876.
F. W. Gordon, 1881.
E. H. Willford, 1882.
J. L. Kearney, 1882.
De Witt Watsons, 1882.
William Ding, Jr., 1882.
Aime B. Marsh, 1882.

REV. JAMES CHAPMAN, the senior presbyter of the Episcopal Church in the diocese of New Jersey, and for thirty-five years rector of St. Peter's Church, Perth Amboy, N. J., died at his residence in that town on the 6th day of April, 1857, in the seventy-second year of his age, and the fiftieth year of his ministry.

He was the eldest son of James Chapman, a native of Peterboro', England, who early in life came to this country, and settled at Elizabethtown, N. J., where the subject of this sketch was born on May 15, 1785. His father was an active patriot during the Revolution, and one of those who suffered incarceration in the famous sugar-house in Liberty Street, New York. His mother was Mary Ogden, a descendant of one of the early settlers of New Jersey. His parents were of noted integrity and piety, and therein was laid that strict integrity of character which marked the whole life of their son. His father, though originally an Episcopalian, had, during the awakening that attended the preaching of Whitefield, joined the Presbyterian Church, and so the son, when about to enter the Christian ministry, was naturally inclined to the order of that church. With this view, after an academic course under the late Rev. Dr. Barry, to whom so many of the bishops and elder clergy of the church have been indebted for their early classical training, he was sent to Princeton College and Theological Seminary. After graduating at the college, and while pursuing his theological studies, his mind becoming impressed with the superior claims of the order and ministry of the Episcopal Church, after careful consideration, he applied and was admitted as a candidate for holy orders by the standing committee of the diocese of New Jersey in 1806. Forming an intimate acquaintance with the late Bishop Hobart, he enjoyed the privilege of pursuing his theological studies under the guidance of that learned and able divine, and laid the foundation not only of sound church principles, but also of a warm friendship with that distinguished prelate which lasted through life. He also had the friendship and counsel of the venerable bishop Benjamin Moore, by whom he was ordained deacon in St. Paul's Chapel, New York, on May 31, 1807, and was immediately afterwards employed as an assistant minister in Trinity Church, New York. This was an interesting period of his ministry, as appears by the journal he regularly kept during his whole ministerial life. His duties were constant and various. He here formed many valuable friendships, one of the latest fruits of which was a beautiful epistle received by him, shortly before his death, from one who was baptized by him, and the first child baptized in the then new St. John's Chapel, New York.

While in New York he received calls at about the same time from Trinity Church, New Haven, from Alexandria, Va., and from Perth Amboy, N. J., all earnest and urgent. By the advice of his friend, Bishop Hobart, concurring with his own love for his native State and for rural life, and more especially regarding the depressed condition of the church there, and her great need of the aid of all her sons, he chose the last, though least, being, in the language of Bishop Doane to his convention, "a Jerseymen all through." He entered upon his duties in this parish on Sept. 9, 1809, was ordained priest by Bishop Moore, in Trinity Church, New York, Sept. 7, 1810, and instituted rector Aug. 8, 1811. At this time the Diocese of New Jersey had no bishop, and scarcely an existence. He entered at once with zeal upon his chosen work. His own immediate parish he found in a very low state, small in numbers, and involved in debt. This debt was paid off, the number of pew-holders and communicants soon increased two-fold, the church repaired and beautified, a new parsonage house built, and the churchyard and parsonage grounds improved and ornamented, and the affairs of the parish brought into a prosperous condition. In diocesan affairs he held a prominent place, and was for a long series of years one of the leaders in the diocese; was for twenty years a member of the standing committee, frequently a delegate to the General Council of the church, and held other important offices and trusts for many years; promoted the election of Bishop Croes, and was his warm friend and co-operator through the whole of his episcopate.

In 1819 he married Mary Marsh, eldest daughter of the late Joseph Marsh, and had four children, viz.: James M., lawyer; Mary R., died Sept. 8, 1845, aged twenty years; Joseph E., retired merchant; and Thomas S., died July 13, 1841, aged ten years. He continued in the rectorship of St. Peter's Church for the third of a century, devoted to his parish, his books, his garden, friends, and family circle,—the dear object of his affections. In the retirement of a country parish he escaped to a great extent the vicissitudes and trials of more exposed positions in life; indeed, the great trial of his life was the relinquishment of the parish to which he had given his labors, his prayers, and the best years of his life,—a result produced through the unfounded animosity of some who for private ends counteracted his usefulness, making his position painful and embarrassing, and finally compelling him, for the sake of peace, to resign his charge, which he did in September, 1842, afterwards residing on an adjoining property belonging to him, where he spent in comparative retirement, though in active usefulness, his remaining years. From this time till shortly before his death he served gratuitously the ancient parish of Trinity Church, Woodbridge, and performed many ministerial offices among his neighbors, by whom he was much esteemed.

In the early part of 1856 his usual robust health began to decline, and disease at length broke down his vigorous frame. He bore up under his protracted sufferings with fortitude to the last, and fell emphatically with his armor on, a faithful soldier of the cross,—in youth, in manhood, and in age. The deceased was noted through life for a beautiful simplicity of character, the strictest integrity, a steady, manly maintenance of the truth, a straightforward, earnest, untiring devotion to duty. No fear, no danger could deter him from the path of duty or keep him from the bedside of the sick and dying.

He was a man of varied and extensive acquirements; was acquainted with the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and French languages. It was his daily practice to read in a regular course, and he thereby acquired a great fund of information. Like his brother, the late Thomas Chapman, of Camden, N. J. (one of whose collections forms part of the library of Middletown University), he was from youth a great lover of books, and had collected one of the best theological libraries in the State, also containing a large collection of pamphlets and historical records running through a period of more than half a century. This collection will not be dispersed, but is kept together by his sons. He was also a great lover and observer of nature. For many years he kept a regular meteorological record and memoranda of natural phenomena with great care and accuracy. He exemplified in his life the best ideas of the ancient philosophers, adorned and perfected by the graces of Christianity, and his place in the circle in which he moved will not soon be filled.

Presbyterian Church.—There is little that can be learned respecting the early history of the Presbyterian Church of Perth Amboy. The following record of a meeting held by the East Jersey Proprietors July 22, 1731, will throw some light upon the subject:

"The humble petition of some of the inhabitants of the city of Perth Amboy humbly petitioneth—

"To the Hon. Council of Proprietors now sitting in Perth Amboy: Whereas several of your petitioners have in the old Burial-place so called our parents, wives, and children interred, we your petitioners humbly beg that your honorable house would take it into consideration and grant us a right of that piece of ground, that we may have a right to erect a meeting-house for the worship of God, and likewise for a Burial-place; and that it may be your Honorable Council's order that the said piece of ground may be dedicated to the said use and no other, and your humble petitioners will for ever pray.

"John Matthis, John Gaschrie, William Thompson, Thomas Inglis, Thomas Loggans, John Leigh, John Moore, John Herriott, John Thompson, Samuel Moores, Alexander Carnes."

"Which petition being taken into consideration by this Board, they are of opinion that the said piece of Land do remain as formerly intended for a public Burial-place for the inhabitants of this city. But that the petitioners have liberty to erect and build a meeting-house on the southeast corner of the same, and this Board do hereby lease as far as in them lies, unto the said Petitioners, so much of the said piece of land in the said southeast corner as shall be necessary for that purpose, not exceeding one chain square, for the term of one thousand years."

This was situated on State Street, formerly Back Street, and from long occupancy is now called the "Presbyterian Burial-Ground," although set apart on the settlement of the town as a public cemetery, and no special or exclusive right having ever been granted to that congregation other than appears in the foregoing proceedings of the board of proprietors.

Between the years 1731 and 1735 the privilege accorded by the proprietors was secured by the erection of a small building, which was for a long time occupied by this denomination as their house of worship. We find no record of who was the first clergyman, and the information that can be gathered at this late day of a settled minister is very limited. The edifice was demolished during the Revolution. The following is found "on the Synod Records Sept. 17, 1724, a supplication from some of the inhabitants of Perth Amboy, desiring sermon sometimes, being referred to the Presbytery of Philadelphia (which then included both East and West Jersey), was approved by the Synod, and Mr. Anderson was appointed to write a letter to them. . . .

"June 29, 1735, Gilbert Tennant preached at Amboy on the 'Necessity of Religious Violence to Durable Happiness,' which was afterwards published."

It is supposed from various data that the Rev. John Cross, of Baskenridge, served Perth Amboy and Staten Island, then constituting one congregation. Aug. 2, 1742, a call was presented to Rev. Charles McKnight from Staten Island, and it is supposed also from the Perth Amboy church.

From the year 1761 the South Ward of South Amboy appears as supplicants for sermons; and as Rev. Elihu Spencer supplied that place, he probably also preached in this city, as they held "weekly meeting."

In 1764 the building appears to have needed repairs. The attempt to improve it at that time was delayed and finally frustrated by the war of the Revolution, during which the meetings were for some time held in the old court-house, and occasionally in private residences.

Capt. John Angus, who had been a resident of Perth Amboy for a few years, in 1801 commenced a course of persevering efforts towards a new church, and in 1802 the foundation was laid. The committee was appointed, consisting of Capt. Angus, Mr. David Wait, and Capt. and James Harriot, and to the energy and perseverance of Capt. Angus is the congregation of the present day indebted for the neat edifice it yet occupies.

Rev. Elias Riggs, a licentiate of the Presbytery of New York, became the regular pastor on the 7th of March, 1802, and on the 2d day of August, 1803, he was ordained in the new meeting-house. He remained for four years. In 1807, Rev. Mr. Keys was settled as pastor, but remained only a few months. The following have been pastors of the church: Rev. Peter Stryker, 1809, until September, 1810. For four years or more after he left, the congregation was dependent upon occasional supplies. Dec. 17, 1814, the Rev. Joshua Young became pastor, but remained for a very short time. The following named were the first communicants: Capt. John Angus, Margaretta Angus, Margaret Clark, Elizabeth Coddington, Phebe Harriot, Rachel Friend, and John Lewis (7).

About June 6, 1816, the Rev. Josiah B. Andrews began his ministerial labors here, and remained nearly eight years. After his removal the congregation was without a regular pastor until 1828, when Mr. Nicholas A. Wilson accepted a call. It is said he was a most excellent and devoted man, and "much people were added to the church." He removed to Philadelphia in 1831, where he soon died, greatly lamented.

Rev. Peter H. Shaw came in 1831. He continued about eighteen months, and was followed by the Rev. David R. Gillmer, who after a brief term left and entered the Episcopal Church, and after a few years returned to the Presbyterian Church, and was settled in Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Benjamin Cory was the next pastor, Nov. 9, 1834. During his ministry both the temporal and spiritual interests of the congregation improved. At no time previous had the church met with so much prosperity. In 1856 there were one hundred and forty-four members and fifty-nine pewholders.

The following is a list of officers (ruling elders and deacons are united in one) from 1817 to 1855: John Angus, David Wait, John Lewis, Alexander Semple, John V. Crawford, John D. See, Zadoc Mundy, James Harriot, Charles Ford, Samuel E. Woodbridge, David Crowell, Daniel Selover, Stephen G. Woodbridge, Cornelius D. Selover, Caleb C. Pierson.

The trustees' book having been destroyed by fire, we can only give the names from 1838 to 1856: Benjamin Maurice, David Crowell, Charles F. Maurice, Edwin Ford, William J. Ford, John Wait, Stephen G. Woodbridge, Alexander M. Bruen, William Paterson, Cornelius H. Schapps, David T. Wait, Charles Keene, Edward J. Hall, Henry D. Tyrrell, William Hall.

The Rev. Mr. Cory left after a pastorate of twenty-five years, during which time the church was greatly prospered.

Rev. Charles C. Wallace was installed pastor Oct. 29, 1860, and remained for little over three years. He was dismissed Dec. 29, 1863, having received a call to a church at Placerville, Cal.

Rev. James A. Little was engaged as stated supply in August, 1864, and on the 23d of the following March he was called to the pastorate, and was installed April 27, 1865. He served in the pastorate about three years, during which the church was repaired at a cost of nearly $10,000. He was followed by the Rev. Mr. Pingry, as stated supply until July, 1869, when a call was extended to Rev. Aaron Peck, who accepted, and was installed Jan. 19, 1870. During the few months of his pastorate steps were taken to pay off the last incumbrance which was secured by mortgage against the church, and in April, 1876, it was fully paid. Mr. Peck remained until 1877, when Rev. N. W. Cary came in the fall, and continued with other supplies until July 13, 1880. Rev. David Stevenson received a call which he accepted, and was installed Oct. 13, 1880. The number of members is about one hundred and thirty-two. Elders, Henry D. Terrill, C. C. Pierson, and E. W. Barnes.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The first instance on record of Methodist preaching in this city is furnished by the journal of the venerated Bishop Francis Asbury, under date of "Thursday, Feb. 27, 1772." "After having preached in a large upper room at Mr. T.'s, in Amboy, where many came to hear, and I was much favored in my soul, an innkeeper invited me to his house and was kind enough to desire that I would call on him when I came again." It is more than likely that he did return there, as an entry shows that he put up at the "Long Ferry House," and this ferry connected with the stages between New York and Philadelphia.

The regular services of the Methodist preacher dates about 1813, when Amboy was included in the Elizabethtown Circuit, and Rev. Thomas Morrell, Robert Cloud, John McCluskey, Joseph Totten, and David Bartine were among the first circuit preachers, and were instrumental in the formation of a church in this city. A regular organization was formed in 1818, but it was not until 1837 that the church edifice was erected. The success of this undertaking was principally due to the exertions of the Rev. Isaac Cross, who had officiated occasionally in the city, and who became in 1838 the first settled minister of the congregation. He remained but two years according to the itinerant rules of the Methodist Church. The following have been the pastors since that time: 1840, Benjamin Day; 1842, Josiah F. Canfield; 1843, Curtis Tally; 1844, Robert Sutton; 1846, Alexander Gilmore; 1848, John N. Crane; 1850, Jacob B. Fort; 1852, John W. Barrett; 1854, James H. Dandy; 1855, David Graves; 1857, Benjamin Kelly; 1859, Alexander Gilmore; 1860, Solomon Parsons; 1861, Jeremiah Cowins; 1863, Josiah R. Daniels; 1865, Walters Chamberlin; 1868, Isaac N. Vansant; 1871, Stacy W. Hilliard; 1872, John G. Garrison; 1874, John A. Kinsbury; 1879, William S. Galloway; 1881, D. B. Fitz Randolph.

When the church was organized there were but twelve members; at the present time (1882) there is a membership of two hundred and twenty. During the year 1866 the new edifice was then commenced, and in a few months this beautiful church edifice was erected. It is capable of seating some six hundred persons. The church property is valued at nearly $30,000.

The Roman Catholic Church.—The first services held by a Catholic priest in this city was perhaps a short time prior to 1842, in the house of Mr. James Tuite, on every alternate Sunday. In 1844 a neat brick church, costing some three thousand dollars, was erected on Centre Street, and the Rev. Thomas Quin was the prime mover of this enterprise.

Since the founding of this church the following-named pastors have had charge: Fathers McArdle, Medranda, Rogers, Sheridan, Quin, Cornell, Connelly, the present incumbent. There is a parish school connected with the church. The membership is about twelve hundred. The property is now valued at about thirteen thousand dollars.

Baptist Church.—It was not until the 26th of August, 1818, that this church was organized, although services had been held in a small building occasionally. The Rev. Thomas Winters received a unanimous call to become pastor of this small charge. He accepted the call, and remained in the successful discharge of the pastoral duties until in 1823, when he was succeeded by Rev. Jabez C. Gable. They had held religious services in the old court-house, and sometimes at the residence of some of the members, but in 1824 the erection of a church was commenced. It was not completed, however, for some few years after. In 1855 it underwent extensive alterations and repairs. The church numbers at this writing (1882) one hundred and nine members.

The following have been the pastors: 1817, Rev. Drake Wilson; 1818, Rev. Thomas Winters; 1823,

Rev. Jabez C. Gable; 1826, Rev. J. Booth; 1829, Rev. John Bloomer; 1832, Rev. J. Sloper; 1835, Rev. T. Recker; 1837, Rev. J. Blain; 1839, Rev. John B. Case; 1842, Rev. John Rodgers; 1845, Rev. George F. Hendrickson; 1849, Rev. J. M. Carpenter; 1852, Rev. John E. Reynolds; 1854, Rev. T. S. Rogers; 1856, Rev. Alfred Harvey; 1860, Rev. H. A. Cords; 1862, Rev. A. G. Lawson; 1866, Rev. G. W. Pendleton; 1867, Rev. G. W. Nicholson; 1870, Rev. S. G. Woodrow; 1872, Rev. George R. Hunter; 1875, Rev. G. I. Ganun; 1876, Rev. William James; 1876, Rev. George W. Pendleton, returned for the second time; 1880, Rev. W. A. Bronson.

The first deacons of the church were George Compton, 1818; Thomas Freeman, 1818; Uriah Burge, 1825; James Compton, 1829; John Hart, 1832; William Hart, 1845; John P. Woglam, 1848; George F. Tryner, 1848.

The Church of the Holy Cross.—In the summer of 1878 this church was built as a mission of St. Peter's Episcopal Church. The edifice was erected on the corner of State and Washington Streets. The opening services were on St. Bartholomew's Day, Aug. 24, 1878, and shortly after it was recognized by the bishop as an independent parish, and the foundation of the church is dated from Dec. 4, 1878. Rev. J. O. Drumm, former rector of St. Peter's, officiated temporarily, and the building was moved to the east side of High Street near Commerce. The following pastors have succeeded Mr. Drumm: Rev. A. B. Conger, from October, 1879, to Easter, 1880, and Rev. William S. Boardman, A.M., June 20, 1880.

The first wardens were Hon. Eper H. Hall and Isaac Thorn Golding, who continue to hold the office. The first vestrymen were Messrs. Farmer, Greely, Sneath, Benton, Boggs.

These with one exception continue in office, Mr. Boggs being succeeded by F. H. Kitchel.

The communicants are forty; sittings, two hundred and seventy-five.

Danish Methodist Church.—This church was organized in 1868. A number of immigrants from Denmark had settled in this city and attended services in the Methodist Church. One of the prominent members, Mr. Buck, and his sons resided in the antiquated stone building on the southwest corner of Fayette Street and Maiden Lane. As they were gifted in vocal music, it became a Danish rendezvous and the exercises soon partook of a religious character, resulting in the conversion of a number of persons and forming the nucleus of a society that worshiped for two or three years in a building on the east side of State Street between Fayette and Jefferson Streets, formerly occupied by Mrs. Manderville for school purposes. A plain and neat structure was built in 1876 and dedicated. The Rev. B. Smith has helped them in the establishment of regular preaching from the first, but Rev. F. W. Erickson is their regular pastor; communicants, forty-seven; sittings, two hundred.

Lutheran Church.—About twelve years after the settlement of Danes commenced in this city the first Lutheran sermon was preached in the lecture-room of the Presbyterian Church, Nov. 5, 1868, by the Rev. Ole Juul, and, as far as known, this was the first sermon preached in the Danish language in the State. On the 20th of November following "Our Saviour's Danish Evangelical Lutheran Church," of the unaltered "Augsburg Confession," of Perth Amboy, N. J., was organized, and the present neat edifice, near the corner of State Street and Eaglewood Avenue, was erected in 1870, and dedicated to the worship of God on the 18th of December of the same year. The present pastor, Rev. Mr. Everson, a graduate of the Lutheran College at Decorah, Iowa, and Concordia Theological College, preaches in the church, and has done effective work.

The Danish Lutheran Church.—This church was organized as St. Stephen's Lutheran Church in 1871. The Rev. H. L. J. Soeholm was their first pastor. It commenced under unusually favorable circumstances, and held its regular services in Combination Hall. In 1876 a neat church was built on East Avenue, north of the New Brunswick turnpike.

Within the past few years the manufacturing interests of this city have declined to such an extent that their ranks have been greatly thinned by removals. But of late the prospect of increased business appears more encouraging, and the church may hope for renewed prosperity in the near future. The present pastor is Rev. Mr. Everson, and there are some 40 communicants, and sittings to accommodate some 200.

CHAPTER XC.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.—(Continued.)

Education and Schools.—The period under the royal Governors seems not to have been favorable either for education or for a general diffusion of intelligence among the people, judging from the following passage in the instructions to Lord Cornbury:

"Forasmuch as great inconvenience may arise by the liberty of printing in our said province, you [the Governor] are to provide by all necessary orders that no person keep any press for printing, nor that any book, pamphlet, or other matters whatsoever be printed without your especial leave and license first obtained."

Is it strange that a civil policy which began by ignoring the printing-press should have paid little regard to schools? Accordingly we do not find any act of legislation relating to education during the entire period of the royal authority in New Jersey, or for the seventy-five years preceding the Revolution.

Under the proprietors, in 1693, it was enacted that the inhabitants of any town, by warrant from any justice of peace, might meet and choose three men to make a rate and establish the salary of a schoolmaster, for as long a time as they may think proper, "and any rates levied the payment to be made" for the "cultivation of learning and good manners, which tends greatly to the good and benefit of mankind."

A record showing the existence of a school in connection with St. Peter's Church appears in the minutes of the vestry in July, 1765. The Rev. Mr. McKean, the rector, informed that body that a school-house was immediately necessary, as the barracks in which the school was then kept could not be longer had without hiring. The vestry took the subject into consideration, adopted a plan, and directed subscriptions to be obtained for the immediate construction of the necessary building. It was erected somewhere near the intersection of Rector and Gully (now Gordon) Streets. The rector, Mr. McKean, probably taught this school himself, as it is related in 1768 that the town was without a teacher, Mr. McKean's death having occurred the October previous.¹ In April a house was hired for the school for seven pounds per annum by a committee appointed for the purpose, and in August, 1768, a school was commenced by Mr. McNaughton, and continued until May, 1770. Why the school was discontinued then does not appear, for the master appears to have been in the town for some time thereafter, and teaching in the school-house in Rector Street. This appears from a letter from the late William Dunlap, who says, "I was sent to learn my letters while yet in petticoats to Mrs. Randell, who had a swarm of such manikens about her, in a house in the street leading out to the Barracks (Smith Street). From this nursery-school I was transferred to Master MacNaughton's school, a black-looking Irishman, who had his school in a wooden building near the gully which divides the church green from the building north of it. When the hour for 'school going in' arrived he used to appear at the door and beckon us to leave our sport on the church green and come to the dominion of his strap and ferrule."

"It appears that nothing was done for a good school until August, 1773, when, at a meeting of parents having children, the consideration of the subject was referred to a committee, at the head of which was the Rev. Mr. Preston, who at a subsequent meeting presented a long formal report, in which they express their conviction that a man 'proper for a public school in this town should be capable of teaching Latin, Greek, and English Languages grammatically, with the mathematics, ciphering, writing, and other useful branches of literature,' and a committee was appointed to receive subscriptions at the rate of £4 per annum for every child to be sent, and such additional sums as 'the generous might contribute.' And 'the sum to be paid the teacher was Limited to £100 per annum,' and preparations were then made for a suitable school building."² The subscriptions to the school fund were the following:

James Parker, £12; Cortlandt Skinner, £12; Stephen Skinner, £12 10s.; Elizabeth Goelet, £8; Elias Bland, £8; Alexander Watson, £7; John Johnstone, £7; Stephen Johnston, £7; John Smyth, £6; Thomas Skinner, £6; Samuel Dunlap, £6; John Preston, £6; Lewis Antill, £5; Jonathan Deare, £4; Gertrude Barberrie, £4; Philip Kearny, Jr., £4; William Burnet, £4; Thomas Stephens, £4; Henry Cuyler, £4; Ravand Kearny, £4; Thomas Lyell, £4; Samuel Sargent, £4; Michael Kearny, £1 10s.; John Barberrie, £1 10s.; William Terrill, £1 10s.; Frederick Smyth, £4. Some of them subscribed for five years, and the meeting being attended by the chief justice of the province, the rector of the church, Rev. Mr. Preston, with the most of the respectable gentlemen of the place, subscriptions were reported to the amount of £144 10s. A committee was appointed to perfect the arrangements and secure the erection of a school-house. For the object subscriptions were obtained as follows: J. Parker, £15; C. Skinner, £12; E. Bland, £12; S. Skinner, £12 10s.; J. Smyth, £6; Thomas Stephens, £2; Lewis Antill, £2; William Terrill, £2; total, £63 10s. The building was never erected.

It appears that there was considerable difficulty in securing suitable teachers, and there was nothing apparently done until 1774, in July of which year Mr. Thomas Johnston arrived and entered upon his duties as a tutor to the children of this city for £60 per year, New York currency. Mr. Johnston came recommended by Dr. Miles Cooper, president of King's College, as an Englishman who had studied some time at Oxford. The school was kept in the court-house, Mr. Johnston taught only a few months. He was succeeded by his assistant, a one-armed man by the name of Garrick, who kept his school on Tower Hill, and it is thought remained as teacher until the Revolution overturned all customary pursuits and employments in the city. From this time little of interest pertains to the history of schools in Perth Amboy till we come down to a quite recent period. Under the new improved system of State education, and through several private enterprises successfully carried out, a marked change for the better has been wrought.

On March 17, 1870, the Board of Education of the city of Perth Amboy was organized; lots were purchased for the site of a new school-house; bonds were issued to raise money for the erection of a substantial and elegant building, which was finished and opened to the public with appropriate services in September, 1871, at a cost of about $17,000, including the land.

¹ Mr. Whitehead, the historian, has in his possession most of the documents relating to the schools of this city from 1768 to 1775.

² East Jersey Records.

It is situated on high ground in the centre of the city.

In 1873, Alanson Leake was appointed principal, with the following assistants as teachers: Miss Peabody, Miss M. Keasbey, Miss Prentiss, Miss Martin, Miss Kent.

Mr. Henry Farmer, superintendent of schools of the city. This school was subdivided into branches representing the different grades of studies, as high school, grammar, intermediate, and primary, and in 1876 the grammar department had: Boys, 30; girls, 17; total, 47. Intermediate department, boys, 59; girls, 53; total, 112. Primary department, boys, 136; girls, 129; total, 265. Mr. A. Leake, principal; Miss E. H. Prentiss, vice principal and teacher of A class.

In 1881, I. D. Caldwell, A.B., was appointed principal, and Miss Emma Johnson vice-principal and teacher of Class A. There are upon the school roll about 600 scholars. Mr. Henry Farmer held the position of superintendent for a number of years, giving his attention strictly to the advancement of the cause of education in the city; has just retired to give place to Cortlandt L. Parker, the present superintendent.

From the annual report of the city treasurer, showing the receipts and disbursements of the public schools of the city of Perth Amboy from March 1, 1880, to March 1, 1881, we take the following:

Receipts.....	$9216.22
Da.		Cr.
By Balance in hands of		To Paid Salary.....	$1585.72
Treasurer, March		Incidentals.....	172.78
1, 1880.....	$4774.56	Repairs.....	225.64
City Appropriations.	1600.00	Printing.....	23.75
Recd. from County		Fuel and Light.....	75.97
Superintendent.....	2841.66	Supplies.....	125.90
		School-Books.....	227.47
	$9216.22	Balance in hands of
		Treasurer, March
		1, 1881.....	3778.90
			$9216.22

Burial-Places.—Col. Hamilton's remains were interred in the burial-ground lying north of the present Brighton House. Time has long since obliterated every indication of the spot. A memorial of him, however, existed until recently in an old-fashioned eight-day clock, once his, which continued to mark with accuracy the passage of the hours in the old Parker mansion at Amboy.

The next oldest burying-ground is on State Street, formerly called "Bock" Street. It was granted to the Presbyterians by the proprietors in 1731, upon the petition of John Goschire, John Mathie, John Moore, Thomas Inglis, William Thompson, Thomas Loggans, John Thompson, James Leigh, Samuel Moores, Alexander Cames, and John Harriott, to be used as a burying-ground, and also permission was given them to build a church upon one part of the lot.¹ This ground, however, was an old burial-place long before that period, and had been used by the "forefathers of the hamlet" more than a hundred years. The petitioners speak of it as "the old burial-place, so called," and refer to their "parents, wives, and children" buried there.

In 1872 the Presbyterian Church and the "Board of Proprietors" transferred the property to the city for the sum of one thousand dollars, and since then many of the remains and headstones have been removed to other cemeteries.

We insert a few of the epitaphs:

"An elegie upon the Death of the truly virtuous
Mrs. Helen Gordon, spouse to Thomas Gordon, of the family of Strabogh, in Scotland. died 12 December, 1687. Aged 27 ys. married 10 ys.

Calm was her death,
Well adored her life,
A pious mother
And a loving wife.

Her offspring six,
of which four do here lie."

"J. J., John Moore, 1720."

"1729, hear Lyeth the body of John R. S. Moor, Aged 8 year of the — — — in Scotland."

"Here lies y^e Body of Anna, y^e wife of Gabriel Stelle. She died March 24, 1730, 44 yea waoting one day."

"Here lies y^e body of Anastie, wife of Andrews Robinson,
aged 45 y^es.
Deceased y^e
22 [or 28], 1731."

"In memory of Andrews Herriott, dec'd Oct. y^e 14, 1757. In the 50 year of his age."

"Here lies y^e body of Alexander Thomson, who departed this life May 14, 1763, in the 59 y^er of His life."

"In memory of Hannah, wife of John Thompson, who departed this life July 15, 1789, in the 39 year of her age."

"Here lyes y^e Body of John, son of John & Martha Thompson, aged 13 y^es. Dec'd Oct. y^e 18, 1731."

"In hope of a joyful resurrection here lyes y^e body of Gabriel Stelle, Esq.,
who departed this life
Novr y^e 25, 1738, aged 53 y^es & 9 mo'e."

"In memory of Margaret Hodge, wife of John Hodge, who departed this life December the 30, 1775, aged 45 years."

ST. PETER'S BURIAL-GROUND.—This also is one of the oldest burial-grounds; many of the first interments had no stones erected to tell who they were, and many were destroyed during the Revolutionary war.

In 1805, Baltus Leonard was appointed sexton and grave-digger, and held the office thirty-two years, digging in that time, it is said, four hundred graves with his own hands. He died in 1837, and was succeeded by George Fothergill, whose salary was twenty dollars a year and fees for grave-digging, and in 1846 John Foster was put in the responsible post, which he held until his death in 1854, being succeeded by his son, George Foster, Esq., who has entire charge of this ancient burial-ground, and under his care it is now kept with considerable neatness, surrounded by substantial fence, the grounds kept with the aid of his assistant in neat and proper order.

¹ See history of the Presbyterian Church in the preceding chapter.

The following is a literal translation of the Latin inscription on the stone which marks Thomas Gordon's place of sepulture; the original inscription is much defaced by the hand of time, and a few more years will make it entirely illegible:

"In Hope of a Happy Resurrection Here is Deposited what in THOMAS GORRON was found Mortal, who being descended from an Ancient Family of Pitlochrie in Scotland, could have gloried had that been proper in his extrication, yet in him was not wanting that of which he might justly boast, For As the Secretary of the Province He exerted his best Abilities in behalf of the councils of the State acceptably to All. Dear to his relations, A sincere Worshipper of the eternal Deity, he enjoyed Life, and Died with resignation on the 28th Day of April, in the year of our Lord, 1722, in the 70th Year of his Age.

"His Mourning Consort, who Also desires to be Interred Here, has caused this Monument, such as it is, to be set. He Lived as Long as He Desired, as Long as the Fatee Appointed; thus Neither Was Life Burdensome, Nor Death Bitter."

"Here lyes y^e Body of Gertrude Hay, wife of Andrew Hay, aged 47 years,

Dec'd December y^e 12, 1733, and May Hay, aged 13 mo. Dec'd June y^e 23, 1728,

James Hay, aged 6 weeks. Dec'd Feb. y^e 20, 1734."

ALPINE CEMETERY.—In the year 1862 a number of the citizens of this city and Woodbridge met for the purpose of arranging a union cemetery, and after the matter was decided upon to secure lands near the two above places. They applied for an act of incorporation in the spring of 1862 of the Legislature, which was granted. The following gentlemen were then appointed directors: Edward J. Hall, Samuel Dally, John Manning, Jarvis Valentine, William Paterson, William H. Berry, and William King, and the name of "The Alpine Cemetery Association" was chosen. The grounds have been graded and laid out with considerable care, and the cemetery has become the general burial-ground of the township of Woodbridge and this city of Perth Amboy.

CHAPTER XCI.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.—(Continued.)

The Court-House.—In the Proprietary Minutes, dated May 14, 1685, is the following:

"It is agreed and ordered that the Town House be built on that place or piece of Land fenced in by Thomas Warne, next Thomas Hart's and Clement Plumstead's lot, and in case any damage be done thereby to Thomas Warne's corn now sowed before reaping that he be paid for the same."

It is not now known where this lot was situated, but probably it ran through from High Street to Water Street, and what has been lately termed "Lewis Place."

In the year 1713 an act was passed for building and repairing jails and court-houses in the province, and Amboy is particularly named as the site for the jail and court-house of Middlesex County. This building was erected on the corner of High Street and the Public Square, and served for both the triers and the tried, the prison being under the same roof. It continued to be used not only for courts, but also for all the sittings of the General Assembly. Each Governor on his arrival at the capital—from Governor Hunter down to Governor Franklin, inclusive—proceeded to it in stately pomp to proclaim to the assembled throng the good pleasure of the sovereign of England to the effect that they should respect and obey his representatives; and beneath its roof did Whitefield preach some of his spirit-stirring sermons to attentive congregations. There is no other notice of the court-house but that it was destroyed by fire, 1765 or 1766.

Immediately the General Assembly passed an act, June 28, 1766, for erection of another and also of a jail upon two lots of ground which had been given by the citizens of Amboy, but the amount appropriated for this building is not named.

The following items of the early times will be of interest. They are quoted from the bill for the support of the government passed in 1738: "To Mrs. Jannett Parker for the Use of a Room, Fire Wood, etc., for the House of Representatives the sum of Thirty Shillings per week during this present session." "To Mr. Andrew Hay the sum of Twenty Shillings per week for the use of a Room, etc., for the Gentlemen of the Council during this present session."

After the Revolutionary war the county-seat was transferred to New Brunswick. The court-house was used for school purposes and for public meetings. It was thoroughly repaired in 1826 and at different periods since, and will probably remain a monument of the days of "good King George III." It has lately ceased to be a public building, and is owned by one of the citizens.

Jails.—The first mention of a jail in Perth Amboy appears in 1713. It stood until 1765–66, when it was burned with the court-house. The erection of another was authorized by act of Assembly June 28, 1766, and it was finished in 1767 at a cost of two hundred pounds.¹ There were rooms for the keeper's family in addition to those for prisoners. In consequence of having no attention paid to its preservation from the little need of such a building, it was torn down after the removal of the county-seat to New Brunswick.

The Stocks.—This formidable machine was erected a few feet south of the market-place, and it is only a few years since its removal from this ancient city.

¹ William A. Whitehead.

The cut in the early history of the courts will give the reader a better idea of this obsolete instrument of punishment than could be conveyed by any verbal description. About the year 1827 it was removed as "encumbering the ground." The pillory was also an institution of a peculiarly salutary character belonging to the same period of civilization.¹

The Old Market.—This old structure of the early days, after standing a long time untenanted, was removed in the year 1842. It was several times repaired previous to that date, but the corporation conceiving it useless or undeserving the expense of repairs, sold it to the highest bidder. It is said that during the Revolution this market-house was closely boarded up, and here was where many of the British soldiers were domiciled. It was also used for the storage of provisions for the troops.

The Barracks.—In the year 1758 barracks were erected, the same time with others at Elizabeth and Trenton. They were built to accommodate three hundred men. The sum of twenty-six hundred pounds was appropriated by the province for their construction. The building committee consisted of Samuel Neville, Thomas Bartow, and John Smyth. Three trustees were appointed to receive the title-deeds for the land, which was not to exceed one acre in quantity, but more must subsequently have been obtained, as the commons as now inclosed cover more ground. They were completed in 1759.

These barracks were first occupied by the troops returning from the capture of Havana in 1762, and from that time until the evacuation of this State by the British they were seldom unoccupied for any length of time. The 47th Foot Regiment was the last that occupied them previous to the Revolution. A portion on the west side was used as a wood-yard, and the remainder for the morning and evening parades. On the breaking out of the Revolution the barracks were taken possession of by Capt. Conway's company of militia, who marched down and paraded on the old race-course with the air of an invading army. This, too, while all the British colonial officers were yet nominally in possession of their respective offices. The official papers are among the Stirling reports in the New York Historical Society's Library, as well as an inventory of the furniture, etc., that Capt. Conway found in the buildings.

Being public property, these buildings were confiscated to the United States, and by a resolution of Assembly, 1783, John Griggs was authorized to put them in repair. They are still standing as a monument of the early years of this settlement and used as dwellings.

The Office of Provincial Records.—This low, hipped-roofed, square-shaped record-office of the Provincial Assembly was built at a cost of six hundred pounds in pursuance of an act which took effect Dec.

5, 1760, and the following year it was finished. It stood on the corner of High Street and Gully (now Gorden) Street. Mr. Whitehead says, "It had a fire-proof apartment, occupying one end of the building, and in the year 1761 was used as a place of deposit for the records of the eastern division of the province. The building now used for these ancient records is in the east of the City Hall, and is designated the surveyor-general's office.

Brighton House.—The proprietors in March, 1762, adopted a plan and gave the necessary directions for building a proprietary house where the present Brighton stands. It is said to have been finished in 1765, and comprised only what is now the main edifice. (An account is given of a first government house, which was erected in 1684, and that the record says was occupied by Governor Andrew Hamilton, but little is now known of its history.) But the record says, "From May, 1766, to May, 1771, it was occupied by Chief Justice Smyth, at an annual rent of twenty-five pounds New York currency, and in October, 1774, it became the residence of Governor Franklin." Its interior was burnt during the possession of the city by the British troops, whose commander's headquarters was at this house. This must have been 1777-78, but after the war, and in 1785, the Board of Proprietors sold it. It was bought by Mr. John Rattoone, who subsequently rebuilt and enlarged it.

It was established as a public inn about the year 1809. It has been kept in the style of some of the best houses; servants abounded, bands of music were in constant attendance, and every arrangement made about the premises to accommodate the public in the most luxurious and agreeable style. This was before the war with Great Britain, and at its commencement its prospects as a public house of entertainment were blighted, the proprietor became insolvent, gave up the business, and the property was sold. It came into the possession of the late Matthias Bruen, who purchased it, and it was for many years until his death his private residence. But it has been for a long time a place of summer resort.

The Cove and Tower Hill.—There existed an inlet at the time of the settlement at the foot of Tower Hill. In a letter written by Gawen Laurie in his description says, "The spot resembles the Keys in London, and laid out the lots of the city accordingly. The highest ground was to be occupied as stores and warehouses, and a basin was dug out more like a canal, so to permit small vessels to come up to the warehouse doors, and from this it takes its name of 'The Cove,' and within the recollection of some of the oldest inhabitants boats large enough to carry several loads of wood came inside and deposited their freight."

The Lehigh Railroad Company now occupy the ground, and the low ground has been filled up and occupied by the coal company as their docks.

¹ See page 450 of this work.

The elevation or high ground west of this old cove and in front of the church was called Tower Hill, and so designated a great many years before the Revolutionary war. The name, it is said, was conferred in consequence of its having been the place where on some occasions criminals were executed.

Post-Offices.—To Governor Andrew Hamilton the colonies are indebted for the first scheme for the establishment of post-offices in America, for which he obtained a patent from the crown about the year 1694, but subsequently for an adequate consideration reconveyed it to the government, and it is supposed the first regular post-office was established in this city on or about the above date.

"For some time the only offices in New Jersey were at Perth Amboy and Burlington; being on the direct route from New York to Philadelphia, they partook of the benefits of the first arrangements. Letters for large districts of country were sent to those places for distribution. In December, 1733, a notice is inserted in the Philadelphia Weekly Mercury stating that 'there are a number of letters in the post-office at Amboy for persons living in the counties of Somerset, Monmouth and Essex,' and directing the inhabitants of those counties to apply for their letters to sundry individuals named in the advertisement."¹

In 1732 the post ran between the city of Amboy and New York once a fortnight; during the summer it is probable that letters were forwarded once a week. The holders of the honorable office of postmaster in Amboy previous to the Revolution have not been ascertained except in one instance: John Fox in 1851 was the incumbent. In the year 1791 there were only six offices in this State, and Amboy and Burlington were the principal ones. But in 1793 the office of postmaster was regularly established and John Thompson was appointed as postmaster. "The mail was brought from Woodbridge three times a week, and continued so to arrive until the year 1812, when it was brought in daily. In or about the year 1825 it arrived daily (except Sundays) during the summer and three times a week in winter, which continued to be the case until the present arrangements were established in 1830," and it is now received daily winter and summer.

The names of the postmasters as nearly as can be ascertained with the dates of their appointment are as follows:

—1751, John Fox.
—July 1, 1793, John Thompson.
Nov. 1, 1794, Edward John Ball.
Sept. 1, 1795, Joseph Golding.
Nov. 1, 1796, George Wright.
June 20, 1798, Robert Rattoon.
April 15, 1801, Simson Drake.
May 29, 1812, Robert Arnold.
March 10, 1827, Lewis Golding.
Oct. 23, 1830, James Harriott.
—1847, Lewis Golding.

—Benjamin Arnold.
—W. S. Russ.
—1854, John Manning.
—1857, R. P. Bartin.
—1861, John F. Ten Broeck.
—John Tomlinson.
—1874, Elam Sanford.
Miss Mildora Sanford (as acting P.M. after her father's death).
1881, John F. Ten Broeck (his second term).

CHAPTER XCII.

CITY OF PERTH AMBOY.—(Continued.)

Banks and Institutions.—In the year 1872 a number of the business men of this city met for the purpose of arranging the establishment of a banking institution in this city. It had been deemed a matter of considerable importance that something should be done to establish a bank in this city, as heretofore much of the moneyed interest was withdrawn into other sources or channels, and difficulty had arisen in cashing paper without going some distance, either to Rahway or New Brunswick, being the nearest banking institution, when, March 14, 1872, was organized the MIDDLESEX COUNTY STATE BANK of Perth Amboy, with a capital of $35,000. The directors are William Hall, president; William King, Uriah B. Watson, Noah Furman, R. N. Valentine, and Eber H. Hall.

PERTH AMBOY SAVINGS INSTITUTION.—Incorporated April 2, 1869. They have a fine building, used for different purposes as well as their institution, valued at twenty thousand dollars. The Raritan F. and A. M. have their rooms in the third story, and are spoken of as being fitted up in a superior manner, besides lawyers', dentists', and Water Company offices in the second story.

President, William King; Secretary, F. W. Gordon; and Treasurer, William King.

THE PERTH AMBOY GAS COMPANY was incorporated March 8, 1861, with a capital of $65,000, which has all been paid up; and Dec. 21, 1871, they met at John Manning's, merchant, of this city, for the purpose of organizing. The following gentlemen commissioners were present: John Manning, Joseph L. Crowell, William Hall, and John L. Boggs, and arrangements to put in effect the lighting of this city. The present officers are: President, William Hall; Treasurer, William Hall; Secretary, William H. Hall; Directors, William Hall, Rev. Aaron Peck, N. C. J. English, and M. B. Watson.

Manufactures and Business Pursuits.—At an early date manufacturing was carried on, and much of the household as well as the wearing material was made in this city. In 1831 the cove or wet dock property was leased to the Perth Amboy Manufacturing Company, and confirmed on Monday, March 6, 1831, for ninety-nine years for the sum of six cents per year, on the condition that the Manufacturing Company would within five years fill it up two feet in height with good and wholesome soil, on failure of which the lease to be void. Since then various branches of business have sprung up, and there is at present a cork manufactory, terra-cotta company, brick company, the Ashland Emery Company, iron and brass founder, shipwrights and repairers, wholesale oyster dealers, Lehigh and Wyoming coals, Perseverance Iron-Works and Machine-Shops, 1 designer and sculptor, 2 carriage-makers, 2 undertakers, 17 hotels and saloons, 7 physicians, 5 dry-goods stores, 2 harness, 1 real estate and insurance, 12 groceries, 5 lawyers, 2 news-agents, 4 merchant tailors, 8 meat-markets, 2 ship chandlers, 2 fruits and nuts, 3 dentists, 2 livery exchange, 1 ship stores, 1 stoves, 2 schools, 1 custom-house collector, 3 newspapers, 3 millinery, 2 mason and builder, 4 carpenters and builders, 3 painters, 5 barbers, 2 express companies, 5 cigars and tobacco, 4 bakers, 1 fancy goods, 2 stationery, 2 boat-builders, 1 lumber, 1 furniture, 4 blacksmith, 4 stoves, 3 candies, 1 coal and wood yard, 3 oysters and clams, 1 sail-loft, 3 railroad stations, 2 machine-shops, 1 clothing, 1 florist, 2 jewelers, 1 bank, 1 savings-bank, 1 photographer, 1 hardware and crockery, 1 steamboat landing, 2 sewing-machine, 3 druggists, 1 gas company, 1 postmaster, 1 shipmaster, 1 furniture, 1 confectionery and saloon, 2 fruits and vegetables, 1 livery, 1 tobacco and stationery, 3 restaurants, 2 fish, 1 foundry, 1 cooper.

¹ East Jersey Records.

THE OYSTER BUSINESS is a large interest of Perth Amboy, giving employment to hundreds of men. The beds in Prince's Bay cover an area of about twenty square miles, and are divided into lots varying in size from a few rods to one hundred acres or more, and in value from ten to fifteen dollars to two thousand dollars per acre.

The seed-oysters are taken from the Raritan River and Newark Bay, and placed in these beds in quantities sufficient to entirely cover the ground and left there until large enough for the market, usually three or four years.

THE ASHLAND EMERY COMPANY.—This company commenced business in this city some three years ago. Their business has steadily increased from the beginning, and they have erected substantial buildings to handle the large stock which the trade demands. A large number of men are employed, and the amount of business done places these mills among the important industries of this city.

Emery ore is found in Turkey and in the island of Naxos. The mines in Naxos have been worked for nearly a century, their yield being about twelve hundred tons yearly. The product is owned by the Greek government, and sold mostly in Belgium and Marseilles; for a long time these mines were held by English overseers, who enjoyed the monopoly of the world in emery. Mr. Charles Alden in 1844, through the aid of a friend then residing in Smyrna, secured a few hundred pounds of stone from that country, which proved to be pure emery, and from that small beginning the supply for the world has mostly come from that source, and the demand is increasing to thousands of tons every year.

The Ashland Emery Company, now located in this city, on the identical spot where the Long Ferry Tavern stood, which was built in 1684 (during the administration of Governor Gawen Laurie).

Emery is one of the hardest substances known, belonging to the same order of minerals as the ruby and sapphire, and has been used in India from time immemorial for cutting and polishing all gems and precious stones except diamonds. The first question that naturally arises is how can a substance second only to the diamond in hardness be worked? The miners have to work around the outer ledges where the ore has been shattered by volcanic action, and take out such pieces as they can break off with hammers and wedges. It comes in size of a few ounces in weight to one hundred and sometimes two hundred pounds, is first put into crushers, which work like huge jaws, and reduce it to about the size of a walnut. It is then run through six different mills, each reducing it a little finer than the last. The process of reducing the ore must be very gradual, so as not to destroy its crystalline structure, on which it depends for its sharp points and hardness. It is used for polishing granite and marble, and so much is required to gratify the public taste for the beautiful that it would be impossible to dispense with its use in almost every department of mechanical work. It is made into solid wheels. Emery-cloth, emery-paper are glued on woolen wheels and belts. It is also used in lapidary work, the cutting and polishing of precious stones, and in these various forms made to do every kind of work required more rapidly and cheaper, giving a better quality of work than can be done with file and grindstone. Optical instrument makers, plate glass manufacturers, plow-makers, engine-builders, and nearly all workers in mechanical tools and instruments find its use indispensable. By the courtesy of N. D. White, Esq., treasurer of this company, I am indebted for these facts.

HARBOR AND RAILROAD FACILITIES.—Although the hopes and expectations entertained by the founders of this city have not been realized, the natural advantages of this port for trade and commerce were not overestimated, and there are few cities which offer so many and so great inducements to manufacturers, and such excellent facilities for shipping goods both by land and water to all parts of the globe. We have harbor facilities now for vessels of fifteen hundred tons burden, and United States engineers are at the present making surveys with a view of still further deepening the channel so as to admit the largest ocean steamers.

A large number of sloops, schooners, and other vessels are here centred, making continuous voyages to ports in the South and East, carrying coal, lumber, and oysters, also a general trade with foreign vessels arriving at different ports, they acting as "lighters," carrying the freight of these ships and steamers to ports where their goods are consigned. A bonded yard has recently been established here, and lighters bonded for carrying freight to and from New York City, so that whether imported goods are taken in line steamers to New York or are brought direct to this port the duty need not be paid until the goods are required for immediate use. This trade is now largely on the increase, and in a few years it is expected that it will more than double in quantity of freight.

Three great lines of railroad intersect here, which within a few years have opened this city to the use and requirements of commuters doing business in the near cities of Elizabeth, Newark, and New York, and by the South Amboy line to Philadelphia. The following facts are interesting: The Lehigh Valley Railroad, which runs northwest through the coal and iron regions of Pennsylvania and through the State of New York, connecting with the Erie, the Northern Central, and the New York Central Railroads, and carrying freights through to Lake Ontario without change of cars; the Pennsylvania, which with its branches furnishes transportation to all the great markets of the West and Northwest; the New Jersey Central, connecting with the Camden and Amboy for Philadelphia and the South, and running through all the great watering-places along the coast. These three great lines with their connections furnish direct transportation to and from all the great inland markets of the United States and Canada. Besides these we have the Staten Island Railway and the steamer "Norwalk" direct to New York City, with very low rates of freight, especially by steamer. Thus we not only have the coal and iron region of Pennsylvania and the great market of New York City at our very doors, but the most ample means of communication by land and water with all the markets of the world. We have also in our immediate vicinity an inexhaustible supply of as fine clay as can be found anywhere in the world, and the above facilities for its being carried to different parts of the country.

CLAY MERCHANTS.—John R. Watson established in 1836 the manufactory of brick for rolling-mills, lime-kilns, blast-furnaces, iron foundries, gas-works, tanneries, boiler- and grate-settings, glass-works, etc., fire-clay, fire-sand, kaolin, and ground cement. The firm is now known as Watson Fire-Brick Company. It is situated south of Mutton Hollow Brook and east of Hall's. The clays are mined out and carried to the brick-works at Perth Amboy, being there handy for shipping, etc. A large number of men are continually employed, and excellent work is turned out from the furnaces ready for market.

Some of the finest beds of clay are Inslee's pits on Perth Amboy road, also on the William Cutter's land a fine white fire-clay; within a few years the Meeker and Phillips clay pits have been opened, and over the hill south of these pits and southwest of Charles Anness's residence and just west of the Perth Amboy road several small pits in fire-clay have been dug by Mr. S. G. Phillips, and north of this and on the hill across the road from the Anness house there is an old pit where a little dark-colored clay was dug some years ago for making red brick at the Spa Springs yard. This belongs in the laminated clay and sand bed, which is the great source of the red clay for the several yards along the Raritan and South Rivers.

W. H. P. Benton's clay pits are situated on the low ground west of the Perth Amboy road and the railroad and south of the one of Mr. Phillips. It was opened some eight years ago.

The Charles Anness & Sons' mines are just in the line of Woodbridge township. In this clay pit there is considerable irregularity and variation in the thickness of the several layers, and the vertical section of any given pit is not always representative of that immediately adjoining it. In the southernmost pits the following layers were observed:

1. Red shale drift.....	18 feet.
2. Yellow sand and gravel.....	6 feet.
3. White sandy clay.....	3 feet.
4. Feldspar.....	4-5 feet.

and is about ninety-one feet above high-water level.

Mention made of the following clay-miners and dealers who are interested in the pits; in this Perth Amboy and on the line of roads from Woodbridge some of the finest kaolin clays have been found. The clay pits of Isaac Inslee, Jr., Merritt's kaolin pits, A. Hall & Son, Samuel Dally's fire-sand pit. Feldspar has been seen cropping out in the Easton and Amboy Railroad cut one mile west of Perth Amboy and east of the Eagleswood road. This was in the bottom of the cut.

I. H. Manning's clay pit is one and a half miles west of Perth Amboy, not far from the New Brunswick road.

E. F. Roberts' clay pits are situated south of the Easton and Amboy railroad, near the Woodbridge and Perth Amboy line, and a third of a mile north of Florida Grove.

These clay pits are so intersected with the Woodbridge clays, and as there are a number of firms and individual owners in both the township of Woodbridge and at Perth Amboy, what has been remarked for one is represented by the other. A number of owners may be mentioned, but a description given of the clays is all that is necessary. The source from whence the materials for this formation originated must be looked for to the southeast of the present strata. Though bordering upon and overlying the red shale and sandstone which lies to the northwest of it, there is not a fragment of those rocks to be found in any of these beds, nor any of their striking and characteristic red color to be perceived in them.

On the contrary, the materials of these beds are white, gray, or blackish, and if at all tinged with the reddish color of oxide of iron it is a yellowish-red, and not a purplish-red, like the red shale and sandstone. The appearances all indicate that they have originated from the materials of disintegrated and partially decomposed feldspathic granite or gneiss. Mention may also be made of the kaolin beds, but the above will be all that is needed to say of these valuable clay pits.

TERRA-COTTA WORKS.—This bank is at the head of a "Mutton Hollow," as it is called, and the most westerly opening for clay in it. It shows considerable variation in the several layers from the surface to the bottom of the pits. In some of the pits at the bottom there is a gravelly earth with some shaly materials mixed with it. These kaolin pits are about a mile northwest of these works, and between the Woodbridge and Perth Amboy Railroads. The kaolin is eight by ten feet thick, and is underlaid by a dark sandy earth, occasionally called "black kaolin." They manufacture silica and white bricks also.

A. Hall Terra-Cotta Company are pushing forward buildings for pressing- and finishing-rooms, and brick-sheds seventy-eight by one hundred and thirty-five feet are about finished. The main room will be soon ready, as soon as the machinery is in place, about 1st May, 1882. The extensive manufacturing of brick and terra-cotta will be an impetus to business, and the employment of nearly three hundred men, and be the means of putting a large amount of money in circulation among our tradesmen.

A large number of clay pits could be named, which are employing a large number of miners, among them the E. Cutter Clay-Works, also S. G. Phillips, which were newly opened east of the Woodbridge and Perth Amboy road, and a few rods west of Spa Springs station, in 1876, and are shipping large quantities of this superior clay.

Custom-House.—In 1683, Thomas Rudyard, the Deputy Governor, was instructed to take care that goods be not exported to New York and other places, but that all goods be brought to Perth Amboy as the port of entry of the province. By an order of Council of Proprietors, Aug. 14, 1687, the collector of the port of New York was directed to allow vessels bound to New Perth to proceed thither without first entering at his port, which they had previously been obliged to do, provided the government of East New Jersey would allow some person appointed by the government or receiver-general of New York to receive the customs and imports.¹ This power having been accorded by the government of East New Jersey, Miles Forster was appointed by Governor Dongan "collector and receiver at New Perth," on the 26th of November, 1687, and was recognized as such by the Council of the province on the 30th of the same month, and he was directed to levy similar duties upon imports and exports to those levied at New York, which were as follows, the table showing what were the principal articles of trade at that time:

ON IMPORTS.

Rum, Brandy, and Distilled Spirits.....	4d. per gal.
Madeira, Fayal, St. George, Canary, Malaga, Sherry, and all sweet wines.....	£2 per pipe.
Red, White, and Rhenish Wines.....	£1 per bid.
All other Goods from Europe.....	2 per cent. ad val.
All other Goods from other ports.....	12 per cent. ad val.

ON EXPORTS.

Beavers.....	9d.	6 Minks.....	9d.
3 Dullings.....	1s. 6d.	4 Wolves.....	9d.
4 Cats.....	9d.	20 Moose.....	9d.
2 Bears.....	9d.	10 Racoons.....	9d.
0 Martins.....	9d.	3 Otters.....	1s. 6d.
4 Cattle.....	9d.	24 Musk-rats.....	9d.
14 Fox skins.....	9d.	24 Deer.....	9d.

All other peltry and skins equivalent to beaver, excepting ox, bull, and cow-hides.

On goods sold to the Indians 10 per cent. ad val. upon certain valuations.

In 1694 the Assembly of East Jersey, for the better encouragement of its trade, established a custom-house entirely distinct from New York, and the independence thus impliedly asserted caused the claims of the officers of New York to exercise authority in East Jersey also to be renewed, and for several years the greatest confusion prevailed from the attempts of the two governments to enforce obedience to their respective mandates. Thomas Coker was collector for Amboy in April, 1698, but on July 12th of the same year Charles Goodman was appointed collector by Edmund Fitz Randolph, surveyor-general of the customs in America, and he was sworn into office on the 15th of that month. He remained in office until 1701, when he died, and John White (April 21st of that year) received the appointment under Queen Anne. And in this year, by a decision of the Queen's Bench in England, the contention with the New York custom-house was put to rest, and New Jersey's rights were fully established. At this time the proprietors were zealously engaged in upholding the rights of their capital as a port of entry, in opposition to the rival claim and competition of New York. But they seem to have erred greatly in judgment as to the measures which would most effectually secure this object, both before and after the privileges of a port were obtained.² Although legislation may have been an obstacle in the way of the commercial prosperity of East Jersey, the principal cause of the decline of her port was the growing commercial importance of New York and Philadelphia. It appears that no vessel was built at Amboy until 1702. "Miles Forster received a town lot in consideration of his having built the first sloop in Perth Amboy belonging to the province, and to be navigated hence."

The same system was pursued after the surrender of the government to Queen Anne. The exportation of pipe and hogshhead staves in 1714 to the neighboring province was burdened with a duty of thirty shillings on every thousand, and twenty shillings per thousand were to be paid when shipped to any other part of the continent, the reasons given being the "great discouragement to the trade" of the province such exportation caused and the destruction of timber which was the result. In the year 1717 this was repealed, having been found, as might have been anticipated, "to be prejudicial to the inhabitants;" but in 1743, for fear there "might not be enough left for the necessary use of the Eastern Division," these duties together with others upon timber generally were revived, and the law continued in force until the Revolution. A duty was laid upon wheat in March, 1714, exported from the Eastern Division to any of the British colonies upon the continent of America, and as this law came in force at the same time as a law respecting staves, it shows that both were regarded in a similar light and productive of like results; and it appears that the repeal of these laws caused great discussion, as many pamphlets were published pro and con upon the subject. In the Philadelphia Library among the pamphlets is one, entitled "Proposals for Trade and Commerce in New Jersey," published at this time. "In May, 1740, a bill was introduced into the Assembly for establishing two trading companies or bodies corporate for carrying on a Foreign trade, one of them to be located at Burlington and the other at Amboy." This attracted considerable attention, and it was printed for the information of their constituents, postponing action upon it until some future period, but the proper time never arrived. To afford some idea of what the notions of the legislators of those days were in relation to commerce, the following synopsis of the bill is here introduced:

¹ Manuscript in the possession of William A. Whitehead, Esq.

² E. J. Hist., p. 297.

"After providing names and location for the companies, commissioners from the counties of Middlesex, Monmouth, Essex, Somerset, and Bergen were empowered to record the names of all such persons as were disposed to become associated with the Amboy Company, and similar officials from the county of Hunterdon, Burlington, Gloucester, Salem, and Cape May were to perform the same duty for the Burlington Company, the persons so subscribing to give security, if in lands for double, and if in houses for treble the amount of their respective subscriptions. Such property to be the basis for the issue by the province of £40,000 of paper money,—twenty thousand to each company,—which was to be the capital upon which they were to trade; and so confident were they of success that it was provided for in the bill that for twenty days after the books were opened no persons were allowed to subscribe for more than one share, and for the second twenty days for not more than two shares, the shares being one hundred pounds each."

Whitehead remarks that "it was expected that in ten years the profits of the companies would be sufficient to sink the forty thousand pounds, but should such not prove to be the case then the property held as security was to become liable for any deficiency."

It was a mistaken policy to expect the foreign trade would entirely concentrate in Perth Amboy. There was considerable trade, as the arrival and departure of vessels are frequently noticed in the newspapers at that time, but the removal of the provincial government from that city and the enterprises of New York merchants withdrew what little foreign imports there were at that time. The following June 24, 1751, arrivals and departures from and to foreign ports and coastwise, not including, however, ordinary coasting vessels not obliged to enter and clear, were:

Arrivals.	Departures.
2 ships.	2 ships.
2 snows.	3 snows.
7 brigantines.	8 brigantines.
18 sloops.	13 sloops.
10 schooners.	10 schooners.
2 shallops.	2 shallops.
41	38

The imports from foreign ports for the same time were:

39,670 gallons rum.	437 pounds naval stores.
31,600 gallons molasses.	123 pipes wines.
333,908 pounds sugar.	12,759 bushels salt.

The exports for foreign ports for the same time were:

524 pounds flour.	14,000 pounds hemp.
168,500 pounds bread.	And small quantities of butter,
314 pounds beef and pork.	lams, beer, flax-seed, bar iron,
17,941 bushels grain.	and lumber.

Mr. Russell in his work on America, printed in 1778, estimated the commerce of the province at the commencement of the Revolution to be twice as great as it was in 1751.

The "fee book of Jonathan Deare," naval officer at Amboy, is now in the possession of the New Jersey Historical Society, showing the number of entrances and clearances from June 8, 1784, to Feb. 8, 1788, three years and eight months, to have been as follows:

Entrances.	Clearances.
Snows..... 2	Snows..... 2
Brigs..... 6	Brigs..... 6
Ketch..... 1	Ketch..... 1
Schooners..... 10	Schooners..... 7
Sloops..... 33	Sloops..... 34
52	50

These vessels were mostly from Nova Scotia, St. Eustatia, St. John's, St. Croix, Tobago, Barbadoes, England, and Madeira, etc.

The following is a list of the collectors at the port of Perth Amboy since the establishment of the government of the United States to the present time. No complete list, only what have been mentioned prior to these dates, can now be found or previous to the Revolutionary war:

John Halsted, Aug. 2, 1789.	Francis W. Brinley, Aug. 24, 1843.
Andrew Bell, March 18, 1800.	Solomon Andrews, June 15, 1844.
Daniel March, June 13, 1801.	James A. Nicholls, May 6, 1845.
John Heard, June 1, 1802.	Charles McKnight Smith, July 31, 1849.
Phineas Manning, Feb. 25, 1806.	Francis W. Brinley, March 26, 1853.
Daniel Perrine, April 15, 1809.	Amos Robbins, June 16, 1857.
Aaron Hazard, June 12, 1812.	J. Lawrence Boggs, 1861-69.
John Brewster, April 1, 1818.	Dr. C. McKnight Smith, 1869-74.
Robert Arnold, Jan. 20, 1821.	Lt. W. R. Coddington, March, 1874,
James Parker, April 1, 1829.	to March, 1875.
Joseph W. Reckless, March 11, 1833.	Col. C. H. Houghton, March, 1875,
David K. Schenck, June 23, 1838.	to 1882.
Charles McKnight Smith, July 10, 1841.

The following persons have been connected with the customs as deputy collectors:

D. R. Schenck, 1853-57.	Jacob L. Martin, 1861-69.
Louis V. B. Howell, 1857-61.	Lieut. W. R. Coddington, 1869-74.
J. Forbes Morris, 1861-69.	Maj. J. Kearney Smith, 1874-82.

As inspectors :

Maj. J. Kearney Smith, 1861-74. Lieut. J. H. Tyrrell, 1869-82.

Fire Department.—Previous to the Revolution the larger proportion of houses in this city were built of wood, and there was no means in force for the speedy arrest of fires, yet endeavors had been made to effect some arrangement, and a letter in the possession of Mr. Whitehead, the historian, from Elias Bland, dated New York, May 15, 1767, says,—

"I hope the worthy gentlemen of your corporation will not suppose I want to impose on them respecting the fire-engine which comes herewith, with a certificate from the person who has the care of those belonging to this city. I had three ; two of 'em wanted something done to 'em, owing to being hog out of use. This now sett has wanted nothing done. Stoutenburgh says it is a very good engine, and (unless abused) will last forty years. However, if not approved let it come back per Thompson (who was the only navigator between New York and Amboy at that time) at my expense."

The value of the engine was "20 guineas at current Exchange."

By an act passed by the General Assembly authorizing the corporation to raise by a tax on the inhabitants among other things "to purchase a fire-engine with the necessary paraphernalia, and to dig public wells," what is now known as the "Town Well," at the junction of Smith and High Streets, was probably dug.

Perth Amboy Water Company was organized in the month of January, 1881, and the company have built their reservoir at the Eaglewood Park. Water is dispensed throughout the city, having in case of fire a pressure of over forty-two pounds from stand-pipe main in any part of the city. Capital, $100,000. President, William Hall ; Secretary, C. C. Hommann ; Treasurer, William Stiger. Directors, William Hall, Alfred Hall, J. G. Garretson, William Runkle, E. R. Pearce, Patrick Conway, and William King.

Lincoln Hose Company, No. 1.—The following list of officers who were elected Feb. 19, 1882, to serve for the ensuing year: Foreman, Lewis Franke ; First Assistant Foreman, James Dunham ; Second Assistant Foreman, Ambrose Wood ; Treasurer, G. W. Coutts ; Secretary, A. C. Phillips.

Secret Societies.—RARITAN LODGE, No. 61, F. and A. M. Date of January, A. L. 5863. In their by-laws, published in 1873 :

Section 1. This lodge shall be known and designated as Raritan Lodge, No. 61, A. F. and A. M., under the jurisdiction of the M. W. Grand Lodge of the Ancient and Honorable Society of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of New Jersey.

The following were the officers in 1881 :

Past Masters, Isaac D. Ward, William P. Dally, Frederick W. Harper, William King, Jr., Eber H. Hall.

Officers for 1880-81 : Joseph Marsh, W. M. ; Aime B. Marsh, S. W. ; George H. Tice, J. W. ; R. H. Marsh, Treas. ; F. W. Gordon, Sec. ; William King, Jr., S. D. ; W. A. Slaughter, J. D. ; Thomas Macan, M. C. ; A. G. St. Clair, M. C. ; George W. Mercer, Steward ; Samuel G. Miller, Steward ; Philip Gabriel, Tyler ; Thomas Macan, Eber H. Hall, William King, Jr., trustees.

Regular communications the second and fourth Thursday evenings of each month.

Election of officers in the month of December.

A beautiful lodge room over the bank building, corner of Smith and Rector Streets.

LAWRENCE LODGE, No. 62, I. O. of O. F.—The following is the list of officers: John G. Martin, N. G. ; George Adair, V. G. ; Joseph Efenbach, Sec. ; George W. Dubois, P. S. ; George Foster, Treas.

Their regular meeting night is on Friday, at 7.30 o'clock.

ALGONQUIN LODGE, No. 44, K. of P.—They have considerable of a membership. The following: William C. Rhodes, C. C. ; Louis H. Frank, V. C. ; Wesley G. Gardiner, M. of E. ; Garri Jacobi, M. of F. ; A. W. Slaght, Treas.

Their regular time for meeting is on Monday evenings.

ENDOWMENT RANK, SECTION 427, K. of P.—The following officers for 1881: Adam Eckert, Prest. ; John E. Wood, Vice-Prest. ; E. B. P. Kelley, Ex'g Physician ; Charles Walters, Jr., Guard ; Frederick F. Fox, Treas. and Sec. ; David F. Noe, Chapl. ; James H. Woglom, Guide ; George Liddle, Sent.

Their regular meeting is second Thursday evening of each month.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.—Major Dandy Post, organized April, 1870 ; Joseph L. Crowell, P. C. ; J. Kearney Smith, Adjt.

Meets the first and third Tuesday evenings of each month.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

ALFRED HALL.

Alfred Hall, manufacturer, of Perth Amboy, is a New Englander by birth, having been born May 22, 1803, in Meriden, Conn. On his father's side he is of English, and on his mother's side of French extraction. Both his father, Avery Hall, and his mother, Sarah Foster, were natives of Connecticut, his father being a farmer at Meriden. The early education of Alfred Hall was obtained in the public schools of Meriden. Later he removed with his parents to Great Barrington, Mass., continuing his studies in the schools of that place. At the age of seventeen he taught school at the centre of Tyringham, Mass. His father owned a large tract of land about fifty miles southwest of Cleveland, to which Alfred and his brother Seldon, who is now a resident of Ohio, started for the purpose of clearing off a portion of the timber. They performed the journey

—Alfred Hall (1874) —

Alfred Hall

of seven hundred miles on foot, going by way of Albany and Rochester (the latter place being then a mere collection of log huts), and thence through Buffalo and Cleveland, reaching their destination a month after leaving home. Their first work was the erection of a log hut. Three months later the remainder of the family joined them, making the journey in wagons drawn by oxen. The clearing in the forest now became the family homestead. Alfred Hall having a natural aptness for mechanical work, was frequently called upon to help his neighbor pioneers in preparing their log homes. Alfred remained at home about one year, after which he went to Silver Springs, Pa., to engage in school-teaching, remaining about two years, when he returned to his father's home, built for himself a log cabin near by, and settled down as a permanent citizen of the then forest community. During the several years of his residence in this place he served as postmaster, trustee of the township, and justice of the peace.

He finally removed to Cleveland, engaging in the manufacture of brick, which business he continued successfully for fifteen years. He took an active part in the public affairs of Cleveland during his residence in that city, filling the position of alderman and member of Council.

Although in politics a Democrat, his public spirit, sterling integrity, and practical ability were so widely and heartily recognized that he received the support of his fellow-citizens irrespective of party considerations. In 1842, while still in business in Cleveland, he invented and patented a brick-moulding machine, which was adopted generally by the trade throughout the country and is still in use. Leaving Cleveland he removed to Cossackie, N. Y., where he remained three years. In 1845 he visited England, being occupied most of that year in securing patent rights in that country for his brick-machine. He returned the latter part of the year and located at Perth Amboy, where he commenced the erection of buildings for the manufacture of fire-brick. Ten years later, in 1856, a portion of these buildings was destroyed by fire, and he at once erected in their place an extensive brick building comprising all desirable improvements, and in this structure the work is carried on all the year round. The former buildings being of wood, continuous work throughout the entire year was impracticable. The ground floor is heated by four furnaces, by which the bricks are dried, the upper story being used for the manufacture of Rockingham- and yellow-ware. The works also include extensive kilns for burning the bricks and the ware. These are perfect in their way, embodying many improvements which are the inventions of the proprietor; among them may be mentioned a patent hinge-grate of his invention, which renders the burning much more speedy and less expensive than heretofore. Beside the works at Perth Amboy the firm of A. Hall & Sons have a similar fire-brick works, of about the same capacity, at Buffalo, N. Y., and ten miles below Buffalo, at Tonawanda, extensive works for the manufacture of red brick, which produce about two million two hundred and fifty thousand annually, a million of which are of the style of Philadelphia face brick. When running in full force the several works employ about two hundred and fifty men and boys, and produce about five million fire-brick and two million two hundred and fifty thousand red brick annually. The works in Buffalo are in charge of Edward J. Hall, a son of Alfred Hall. Another son, Eber H. Hall, is associated with his father at Perth Amboy. A fine specimen of the colored building brick produced by A. Hall & Sons was presented by the large chimney erected by them adjoining the New Jersey building on the Centennial grounds, and it deservedly attracted much attention and admiration.

Having retired from the presidency of the Perth Amboy Terra-Cotta Company during the fall of 1880, he conceived the plan of a new terra-cotta works, upon which he immediately began work and proceeded to organize a stock company. The success of this undertaking was guaranteed through the co-operation of Mr. Hall's experience of forty years and men of experience in this line. The company was incorporated in July, 1881, and the work of building begun in August of the same year; at the present time is well toward completion. These works when completed will be the most extensive of any in the United States. The capacity when completed will be for three hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of work annually without any extra exertion; buildings cover an area of five acres independent of dockage; the machinery, modeling and moulding building, facing the south, is two hundred and seventy-two by forty feet, two stories; facing the east are the office building, forty by twenty, two stories high; the flue-house, in which is done the pressing and finishing, one hundred and twenty by fifty, three stories high. This is one of four buildings of same dimensions; to the north fronting this is the end of the kiln building, which is two hundred and twenty by sixty feet, containing seven terra-cotta kilns. Still to the north is another flue-house and a store, two hundred and eighty by forty feet, fronting the north, Buckingham Avenue; to the west of this on Mechanic Street appears the stowing and coal-sheds; these buildings are of fire-proof construction, all of the partition walls being made of brick.

Mr. Hall has been assisted greatly in plans by Mr. R. W. Taylor, his foreman, a man of large experience in this line of work. Mr. Hall's letter to the State geologist, published in their annual report, shows how thoroughly he has studied the resources, and the prognostications have up to this writing been more than realized:

"I am doing all I can to develop and bring into use the great varieties of clay, which should be a great source of wealth to the State of New Jersey. We have in our employ men of all nationalities, who are familiar with the working of clay in all parts of the world, and their opinion is unanimous that the red and other colored clays of New Jersey are superior for making terra-cotta to any in the world. There are also many clays that are now considered worthless that show qualities that I think will be of great value when applied to the uses for which they are adapted.

"Perth Amboy is the natural centre for the manufacture of architectural terra-cotta, both on account of the abundance of the raw material and the great facilities for shipping, the docks here having been unimpeded by ice all through the last severe frost. The present works cannot supply the increasing demand, the sales of the six months ending December 31st amounting to $72,916. January 1st there were orders exceeding $55,000, and several large works for which terra-cotta is specified for which estimates have been given aggregating nearly $200,000 more, and Perth Amboy ought to become as noted for terra-cotta as Trenton is for pottery.

"ALFRED HALL.

"PERTH AMBOY, February 21st, 1881."

The manufacture of brick has been very much benefited by various improvements introduced by Mr. Hall, many of them being his own inventions. From 1863 to 1869 he was mayor of Perth Amboy, and three times he was elected without the opposition of any other candidate. He is, and has been since its organization, a stockholder, director, and the president of the Middlesex Land Company. He was for many years a member of the board of freeholders of Middlesex County, and is president of the Fire-Brick Manufacturers' Association of the United States.

During the war of the Rebellion he was an active Union man, aiding the government effectively with money and influence. While residing in Loraine County, Ohio, the location of the old forest home-stead, he married Sarah Buckingham, a native of Connecticut, and in their pioneer home the two sons now associated with him in business were born. Their family consisted of three sons and three daughters, of whom only two sons and one daughter are now living.

She (the mother) died in 1853, highly esteemed by all who knew her. Subsequently he married Parmelia F. Robinson, a widow with three young children,—one son and two daughters,—whom he reared as his own. She is a native of New England, and a daughter of Col. William Pearl, of New Hampshire. Mr. Hall is possessed of literary tastes, and his writings are always graphic and to the point. An article written by him on the "Manufacture of Fire-Brick," and published in the Scientific American in January, 1870, and republished in several English papers, is characteristic. He is a supporter of the Episcopal Church, which he attends with his family. He is no sectarian, and is a member of no particular denomination, but a liberal contributor to all religious societies in his vicinity.

CHAPTER XCIII.

CITY OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

Original Site.—Where New Brunswick now stands during the greater part of the seventeenth century there was a dense cedar forest and a swamp called

"Prigmore's" or "Pridmore's swamp." The latter name often appears in old records. The first inhabitant is said to have been Daniel Cooper, who resided where the post-road afterwards crossed the river and kept a ferry.¹ This Cooper was one of the very early purchasers and settlers under the proprietors, and his name appears as such in the schedule to the Elizabethtown Bill, but the record does not locate him at the site of New Brunswick, where a misty tradition only places him. Daniel Cooper had a tract of two thousand acres of land on "Pasaick" River.²

When New Brunswick was first called "Inians' Ferry" cannot be determined exactly. Gordon and other annalists state that on the 1st of November, 1681, John Inians and company bought two lots where New Brunswick now stands, containing a mile of river front by two miles in depth. On the 1st of March, 1682, he was a petitioner to the Governor and Council, in connection with Joseph Benbridge, requesting that "lands which they and their associates had purchased of the Indians, which had by the late surveyor-general been surveyed and a return of the survey made into the secretary's, might be patented according to said survey." The warrant was for six thousand acres, and it appearing that the surveyor had laid out seven thousand six hundred and eighty acres without reserving the sevenths that were the proportion of the proprietors, further consideration of the petition was deferred till the next day. On the following day it was determined by the Council that "John Inians and Joseph Benbridge and associates should have patents for the land, according to the proportion mentioned in the warrant for the survey,—John Inians one thousand and all the others five hundred acres apiece,—at one halfpenny per acre, and that the whole overplus of the tract shall be appropriated to the proprietors in lieu of their sevenths to be laid out by the surveyor-general, and that the proprietors shall pay and allow to the said Inians and associates an apportionable part of the Indians' part of said overplus."³

A map is extant a literal copy of which is in the possession of Mr. Charles D. Deshler, of New Brunswick, made in 1685 by John Reid, first deputy surveyor under the proprietors, and afterwards surveyor-general, which gives the situation and outline of nineteen lots known as "The Raritan Lots," lying on the south side of the Raritan, and stretching from the mouth of South River past the site of New Brunswick to Bound Brook, seventeen of which have each about a half a mile of river front by about two miles in depth, and extend in a southwesterly direction inland. Beginning at the mouth of South River, the first of these lots is marked to "Law Baker" and contains thirteen hundred acres; the next to "C. P. Sonmans," one thousand acres; the next to "Governor Barclay," five hundred thousand acres; the next to "C.

¹ Gordon's Gazetteer, p. 195.

² Elizabeth Bill, p. 88.

³ Records of Governor and Council of E. J., pp. 8, 10.

Longfield," five hundred acres; the two next to "John Inians," each six hundred and forty acres. This last is shown in the map to be the "fording-place" (and the original site of New Brunswick) by a hand pointing toward it, and also by the word "falles" written opposite. These "falles" are within the memory of many, and were more properly a rocky rift, extending across the river just below the upper lock, making the stream so shallow as to be easily crossed at low tides in a wagon or on horseback.

On the 3d Tuesday of September, 1686, John Inians appears in the minutes of the County Court of Middlesex as plaintiff in an action against Mordecai Boudinot. He is again spoken of as "Capt. John Inians" when he acted as one of the justices of the Court of Sessions held at Piscataway March 15, 1686-87. Afterwards his name often appears in these minutes in connection with that office. He was unquestionably a man of some consequence, for besides being an associate justice of the court he was one of Governor Hamilton's Council from October till November, 1693, and again from July, 1695, till March, 1697, and also of Governor Basse's Council from the 8th till the 11th of March, 1698.¹ Inians became the owner of this property, as has been seen, certainly as early as March 1, 1682, and it is probable that he very soon afterwards started the ferry, for on the 19th of April, 1686, we learn from the "Records of the Governor and Council of East Jersey"² "a paper was given in here by Mr. John Inians, therein setting forth that he has been at considerable expense to accommodate the Country in making out a Road to the falls from his house on the Raritan, which is six miles shorter than formerly, and hath furnished himself with all accommodations, as boats, canoes, etc., fitting for ferrying over the Raritan River all Travelling with horses and cattle, etc. Desiring that this Board will be pleased to order its being a publicke road for the use of the country, and settle the rates for the ferry, etc., which being Read, It agreed and ordered that the Commissioners appointed by Act of the General Assembly for laying out of all Highways, Landings, and ferries, in some short time repair to the said ferry, and there inspect the same and make Returne to the Secretary's office, and as to the said fees and Rates for the ferry, the same must be settled by Act of the General Assembly, to which end this Board will take care to recommend the same to the House of Deputies." So that, as this quotation establishes, Inians' Ferry was in operation before the date of this petition, April 19, 1686, whether one or more years can neither be asserted nor denied. "When it was legally established as a ferry," says Mr. Deshler, "so as to empower the collection of fees, I have not been able to ascertain with certainty." Gordon says (and the statement has been adopted by all later annalists), "The ferry was granted by the Proprietor,

Nov. 2, 1697, for the lives of Inians and his wife, and the survivor, at a rent of five shillings sterling per annum."³

The place continued to be called Inians' Ferry—variously corrupted Inions, Innions, Onions, and Inyance—in all the public acts and records as late as 1723, at which time a road and two streets were laid out in the place on petition of "the inhabitants of Innionces' Ferry." Before this there was one other street, called "the Broad Street," which undoubtedly was the one now known as Burnet Street.⁴ As the minutes of the commissioners relative to the laying out of these streets are very interesting, we copy them from the "Minutes of the County Court," as follows:

"Whereas complaint hath been made by the Inhabitants of Innionces ferry to us the Surveyors of the County of Middlesex concerning a Road Beginning at George's Road about three chains from the River (from thence running to the Northeast corner of Jacob Oakley's house, thence along Lawrence Williamson's House to Freeland's, Northwest corner of his house), thence along all of the houses to the front of Court Van Vorles House, and there the said Road ends as witness our hands this twenty-second day of July in the ninth year of his Majesty's Reign Annoys Domi, 1723. Said Road being a Rod and a half wide.

"HENRY FREEMAN,
"WILLIAM HARRIS,
"TIMOTHY BLOOMFIELD,
"DIRICK VAN AERSDALEN.

"Another street laid out beginning at Lawrence William's House (from thence running down to Low water mark) which said street is to be one Rod wide (half of the said Rod of Lawrence Williamson Land and the other half of John Van ardsden Land) Laid out by us Surveyors witness our hands this twenty-second day of July in the ninth year of his Majesty's Reign Annoys Domi 1723.

"HENRY FREEMAN,
"TIMOTHY BLOOMFIELD
"WILLIAM HARRIS
"DIRICK VAN AERSDALEN.

"Another Road Laid out by us whose names are underwritten Surveyors of the County of Middlesex. Beginning at Samuel Mulford's and so along dildine's House and Abraham Lefog's house into the Broad Street Leading to Court Van Vorles house witness our hands this twenty-second day of July in the ninth year of his Majesty's Reign Anno Domi 1723. Said Road being a Rod wide. HENRY FREEMAN, WILLIAM HARRIS, DIRICK VAN AERSDALEN."⁵

"The earliest use of the name 'New Brunswick' which I have been able to discover in any public record is found in the minutes of the County Court, from which we learn that on the 7th of April, 1724, two surveyors of the roads and two constables were, for the first time, appointed by the Court of General Quarter Sessions for New Brunswick, and after this date it ceases to be called by the name of Inians'. So that the title New Brunswick was not applied to it by those who were most familiar with the facts until at least ten years after the accession of the House of Brunswick to the throne of Great Britain. At this early period the settlement at New Brunswick must have been a very small one, although it was already beginning to overshadow the older settlements of ³ Gazetteer, p. 195.

⁴ William Burnet, after whom the street was named, was appointed Governor, and arrived in this country in 1720.

⁵ County Record of Roads.

¹ Records Governor and Council East Jersey, pp. 166-217. ² Page 132.

Woodbridge, Perth Amboy, and Piscataway, and its prospect of becoming an important place was considered to be very flattering. In August, 1730-31, James Alexander writes to ex-Governor Burnet: 'As to New Brunswick at Inians' Ferry, it grows very fast, and the reason is the country grows very fast back of that place; for when I came to this place in 1715 there were but four or five houses in the thirty miles between Inians' Ferry and the Falls of Delaware, but now the whole way it is almost a continued lane of fences and good farmers' houses, and the whole country is there settled or settling very thick; and as they go chiefly upon raising wheat and making of flour, and as New Brunswick is the nearest landing, it necessarily makes that the store-house for all the produce that they send to market, which has drawn a considerable number of people to settle there, insomuch that a lot of ground in New Brunswick is grown to near as great a price as so much ground in the heart of New York.' The frequency with which the necessity for a way to Inians' Ferry is at this date presented by the people of comparatively remote sections as an argument for the opening of new roads, and the readiness with which this plea is accepted by the road commissioners as a sufficient reason for granting the petitions, show the importance of the landing and ferry there to the rest of the province. Notwithstanding all this, the embryo town must have been of very diminutive proportions in 1730, for thirty-four years later, in 1774, John Adams describes it as follows: 'Went to view the city of New Brunswick. There is a Church of England, a Dutch Church, and a Presbyterian Church in this town. There is some little trade here; small craft can come up to this town. We saw a few small sloops. The river is very beautiful. There is a stone building for barracks, which is tolerably handsome; it is about the size of Boston jail. Some of the streets are paved, and there are three or four handsome houses; only about one hundred and fifty families in the town.'"¹

Inians procured his grant in November, 1681. At that time a single road, or, more properly, a bridle-path, afforded the only means of communication with West Jersey, crossing the Raritan at this point. The different rivers and streams were the principal avenues whereby intercourse was kept up in other directions. In 1675 William Edmundson made a journey southward from New York. He says that in going from Middletown to the Delaware River, although directed by an Indian guide, he was unable for a whole day to discover the proper course, and he was obliged to go back until his guide could strike the Raritan. They then followed its margin until they came to a "small landing from New York,"—no doubt the crossing of the path at Inians' Ferry,—and thence wended their way along a small path to Delaware Falls. He says, "We traveled that day and saw no tame creature; at night we kindled a fire in the wilderness and lay by it; . . . next day, about nine in the morning, by the good hand of God, we came well to the falls."²

Dutch Immigration.—About 1730 several families immigrated from Albany, N. Y., and the tradition is that they brought with them their building materials, according to the Dutch custom, and located along the public road, which they called, after their former home, "Albany Street." Among these settlers we find the names of Dirck Schuyler, Hendrick Van Deursen, Direk Van Veghten, Abraham Schuyler, John Ten Broeck, Nicholas Van Dyke, and Direk Van Alen. These were men of considerable property and enterprise, and their arrival gave a fresh impulse to trade. The city was now a growing town of much activity. The principal streets were Burnet, Water, and Albany, with perhaps a few buildings on Church Street. The inhabitants lived along the river as far south as Sonman's Hill, extending north for about one mile, or a short distance above the ferry. A few of the ancient buildings are still standing, but most of them have given place to more modern structures. The old house recently standing in Burnet Street near Lyle's Brook, known as the property of Dr. Lewis Dunham, was built by Hendrick Van Deursen, one of the Albany settlers, who owned several acres of land in the vicinity.³ John Van Nuijs, of Flatbush, L. I.,⁴ bought a farm of one hundred acres of Enoch Freland, April 28, 1727, having its front on Neilson Street, its northern line along Liberty Street, its southern along New Street, extending west as far as the Mile Run. For this property, in connection with five acres of "salt meadow" at the mouth of South River, he paid the sum of eight hundred pounds. In the summer of that year he erected a large farm-house on what is now Neilson Street, between Schureman and Liberty, and surrounded it with suitable outbuildings. This house was used as the headquarters of the Hessian commander during the occupation of New Brunswick by the British army in the Revolutionary war, and is still remembered by nearly every middle-aged man. Some of the older citizens will remember the Appleby House, a stone edifice with gable roof and broad hall, on the corner of Church and Peace Streets, now Van Pelt's drug-store; the Gibbs House, an antique stone mansion, built by Hendrick Voorhees, standing between Bur-

² Edmundson's Journal, p. 106. Watson's Annals of Philadelphia, p. 91,—note.

³ Abel and Hasser owned twenty or thirty acres above Van Deursen's. Judge Morris owned a large farm on both sides of Commercial Avenue. Mr. Van Deursen was offered about forty acres of land lying below Morris Street, west of the lots on Burnett Street, between them and George, for two hundred and fifty-six dollars.

⁴ The ancestor of the Van Nuijs family in this country is Aucke Jansen Van Nuijs, who, with his wife, Magdalen Pieterse, and children, emigrated from Holland in 1861 and settled in New York. His place of birth is supposed to have been Nuijs, in Groningen; hence the surname Van Nuijs. He was a carpenter by trade, and built the first church of Midwout (now Flatbush), completed in 1660.—Bergen Family, p. 157.

¹ Life and Works of John Adams, vol. ii, p. 355, Charles D. Deshler, article on New Brunswick.

net Street and the river, near Miller's Brook, crossing the street near Town Lane; the French property on George Street, in front of the hotel near the depot, and the large apple-orchard on the hill, where now stand the buildings of Rutgers College.

One of the oldest frame buildings in New Brunswick is the old Vanderbilt House, No. 143 Burnet Street. Like the old City Hall in Liberty Street, it is a little the worse of wear. The oldest preserved deed of the property was "made by William Cox to Court Van Voorhise, in the thirteenth year of the reign of Lord George II., and in the year of our Lord 1725." With the house was included all the mill property from the brook at its lower line up along the river about two hundred feet to the southerly line of the Hicks property. For all of this the sum of forty pounds was paid. In 1778 the property belonged to Richard Gibbs, and was at his death by will devised to his three grandchildren, John, James Neilson, and Ann Gibbs. The latter thereafter married Thomas Perkins, of Philadelphia, who purchased the shares of the other two grandchildren for sixteen hundred dollars, and in 1795 sold the house to John Schureman, who the same year sold it to David Abeel. The property was afterwards sold by the then sheriff to Joseph Sequine, who in 1828 sold it to Cornelius Vanderbilt (price not named). By him it was sold in 1830 to John Hicks for two thousand one hundred and fifty dollars, and by his executors deeded to Isaiah Rolfe, April 22, 1872, for forty-five hundred dollars. The house has been vacant since 1871, and is now alone in its old age, the proprietor being unresolved whether to repair or remove it.

Below is a copy of the first part of one of the oldest deeds of the property:

"This indenture, made the eleventh day of February, in the thirteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign, Lord George the Second, by the grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, defender of the faith, etc., and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred thirty-nine and forty. Between Court Van Vorhise of the corporation of New Brunswick, in the province of New Jersey, yeoman, of the one part, and Richard Gibbs of the same place, mariner, of the other part, witnesseth that the said Court Van Vorhise, for and in consideration of the sum of fifty pounds current money of the province aforesaid, at eight shillings per pound to him in hand, before the sealing and delivery hereof well and truly paid by the said Richard Gibbs, the receipt whereof he the said Court Van Vorhise doth hereby acknowledge himself to be therewith fully satisfied, contented and paid, and of and from every part and parcel thereof, doth absolutely, fully and fairly quit, exonerate and discharge him the said Richard Gibbs his heirs, executors and administrators forever by these presents, hath given, granted, bargained, sold, aliened, enfeoffed, released, conveyed and confirmed by these presents, do give, grant, bargain, sole alien, enfeoff, release, convey and confirm unto the said Richard Gibbs, his heirs and assigns forever. All that certain lot of land situate, lying and being in the city of New Brunswick aforesaid, beginning upon the line of the said Richard Gibbs upon the street, thence running as the street runs to the brook, thence along the said brook as the brook runs at low water to low water mark in Raritan River, thence up the said river to the line of the said Richard Gibbs, thence along the line of the said Richard Gibbs to the line aforesaid or place of beginning, etc., etc."

After the deed, which is very long and minute in its description, comes the following:

"ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

"Be it remembered that on the ninth day of July, 1745, personally appeared before me one of his Majesty's counsels for the Province of New Jersey, John Cholwell, one of the subscribing witnesses to the within instrument, who being of full age and duly sworn on the Holy Evangelist of Almighty God, did declare that he did see the within-named Court Van Vorhise, party to the within instrument, execute the same as his voluntary act and deed for the uses therein mentioned, and that he signed his name as a witness thereto, and that he also did see Noah Barton sign his name, also a witness thereto.

"EDWARD ANTILL."

A very interesting description of New Brunswick in 1748 is given in the account of the travels of Peter Kalm, a professor of the University of Abo, in Swedish Finland, who visited North America as a naturalist, under the auspices of the Swedish Royal Academy of Science. "About noon," he writes, "we arrived in New Brunswick, a pretty little town in a valley on the west side of the river Raritan. On account of its low situation it cannot be seen coming from Pennsylvania before coming to the top of the hill which is close to it. The town extends north and south along the river. The town-house makes a pretty good appearance. The town has only one street lengthwise, and at its northern extremity there is a street across. Both of these are of considerable length. One of the streets is almost entirely inhabited by Dutchmen, who came hither from Albany, and for that reason they call it Albany Street. On the road from Trenton to New Brunswick I never saw any place in America, the towns excepted, so well people.

"The greater part of its [New Brunswick's] trade is to New York, which is about forty English miles distant. To that place they send corn, flour in great quantities, bread, several other necessities, a great quantity of linseed, boards, timber, wooden vessels, and all sorts of carpenter's work. Several small yachts are every day going backward and forward between these two towns. The inhabitants likewise get a considerable profit from the travelers who every hour pass through on the high road."¹

The City Charter and Government.—New Brunswick was incorporated as a city in 1784, when the first president, directors, etc., were appointed. The presidents and assistants were afterwards (till 1801) elected annually by the people. In 1801 a new charter was obtained, and under it a mayor and aldermen were appointed by the Legislature, and six common councilmen elected by the Legislature and six common councilmen elected by the people. Since 1838 all these municipal officers have been elected by the people.

The following have been presidents and mayors of the city since its incorporation:

¹ It has been pointed out by Dr. Steele and others that Professor Kalm was mistaken in some of his statements; for instance, in reference to "two German Churches, one of stone and one of wood," and that "the Presbyterians were building a church of stone" at the time of his visit.

1784. Azariah Dunham.	1853-55. John B. Hill.
1796-1801. Abraham Schuyler.	1856-56. Abraham V. Schenck.
1801-13. James Schureman. ¹	1856-57. Lyle Van Nuis.
1813-21. James Bennett. ¹	1857-58. John B. Kirkpatrick. ²
1821-24. James Schureman.	1858-59. Tunis V. D. Hoagland.
1824-29. Augustus R. Taylor.	1859-60. Peter C. Onderdonk.
1829-38. C. L. Hardenbergh.	1860-61. Ezekiel M. Paterson.
1838-40. August R. Taylor.	1861-63. Lyle Van Nuis.
1840-41. David M. Yail.	1863-65. Richard McDonald.
1841-42. Littleton Kirkpatrick.	1865. Augustus T. Stout. ²
1842-43. Fitz Randolph Smith.	1865-67. John T. Jenkins.
1843-45. John Acken.	1867-69. Miles Ross.
1845-46. William H. Leupp.	1869-71. George J. Janeway.
1846-47. John Van Dyke.	1871-73. Garret Conover.
1847-48. Martin A. Howell.	1873-75. Thomas M. De Russey.
1848-49. Augustus F. Taylor.	1875-77. Isaiah Rolfe.
1849-51. David F. Randolph.	1877-79. Lyle Van Nuis.
1851-52. Peter N. Wyckoff.	1879-81. T. De Witt Reiley.
1852-53. John Van Dyke.	1881. William S. Strong.

ALDERMEN.

First Ward, James Hurley, 1881; Cornelius Farley, 1882.
 Second Ward, James Neilson, 1881; John N. Carpenter, 1882.
 Third Ward, Francis M. Oliver, 1881; John S. De Hart, 1882.
 Fourth Ward, John C. Scott, 1881; Charles B. Harbert, 1882.
 Fifth Ward, Alexander M. Way, 1881; Henry Waker, 1882.
 Sixth Ward, John Fitzgerald, 1881; Charles McCormick, 1882.
Assessor, Cornelius W. Castner, 1881-83; Collector, Robert G. Miller, 1881; Solicitor, Howard MacSherry; Treasurer, Lewis R. Dunham; City Clerk, Edward Tindell; City Physician, Staats V. D. Clark; Overseer of Poor, Peter J. Stults; City Weigher, Stelle F. Randolph.
Chosen Freeholders.—Director, Cornelius Powelson; Clerk, William M. Cox; Solicitor, A. V. Schenck; Janitor, Robert S. R. Pierce.

Boundaries.—The corporate limits of New Brunswick are inclosed within the following boundaries: Beginning at the mouth of Mile Run Brook, southwesterly up to where it crosses George's road, thence east to Lawrence's Brook, following said brook to the Raritan River, crossing said river, and following the south boundary line of Piscataway (now Raritan and Piscataway) township, up said river to a point opposite Mile Run Brook.

Ward Boundaries.—First Ward.—Bounded on the north by New Street, on the east by the Raritan River, on the south by Lawrence's Brook, and on the west by George Street, Clifton and Neilson Avenues.

Second Ward.—North by New Street and Livingston Avenue, on the west by the boundary line of the city of New Brunswick, on the southeast and east by Neilson and Clifton Avenues and George Streets.

Third Ward.—East by the Raritan River, south by New Street, west by Neilson Street, and north by Washington Street.

Fourth Ward.—South by New Street, west by George Street, north by Washington Street, and east by Neilson Street.

Fifth Ward.—South by New Street and Livingston Avenue, on the west by the boundary line of the city of New Brunswick, on the north by Somerset and Albany Streets, and east by George Street.

Sixth Ward.—West by the boundary line of the city of New Brunswick, north by the Mile Run Brook and the Raritan River, south by Albany, Somerset, and Washington Streets, on the east by the Raritan River and George Street from Washington Street to Albany Street.

Geological Features.—Within the boundaries of this city the red sandstone and shale predominate, which are of a soft and argillaceous character, decomposing rapidly when exposed to the action of the atmosphere. There are only a few layers scattered through it which furnish a stone that is considered of any value. The soil resting on the top of it presents a tinge of color which has been derived from its decomposition. In many places it comes so near the surface that the growth of trees is rendered difficult and uncertain, and the vegetation produced on it is peculiarly liable to injury from drought. Yet in a good season it yields the farmer a profitable remuneration for his labor, and when it has been treated with lime, which absorbs and preserves in time of drought the moisture of the atmosphere, it claims to be called fertile land.

The rocks of the red sandstone and shale formation of this vicinity are all regularly stratified, and have a uniform dip to the northwest, except when they have been subjected to some disturbance from the upheaval or protrusion of other formations. The dip varies from five to twenty degrees. The State geologist, Professor Cook, gives the thickness of the red sandstone in this vicinity as twenty-seven thousand feet, or more than five miles.

"If the mode of computation is right, the result must be accepted. Those who think the strata was once horizontal, and were thrown into their present inclined position at some later period, adopt this conclusion; others, who think the strata were deposited on a slope, as we now find them, do not consider the above as being the true thickness. They suppose that the strata on the southeast border were first deposited on the northwest slope, and then that the upper edges were worn off, and the material carried farther northwest, to be again deposited and form new strata upon the lower parts of those already deposited. Without any addition of material there would then be, in this way, a multiplication of strata, all having the same dip; and such a process could go on until the formation had widened out to its present extent. Such a mode of formation would not require that the whole series of strata should be more than a few hundred, or possibly a thousand, feet in thickness."³

There has been sunk a well in New Brunswick some four hundred and fifty feet, several at Newark to a greater depth, and one in Paterson thirteen hundred feet, all in the red sandstone and shale; and all observations unite in showing that the red sandstone and shale of New Jersey are of sedimentary character. The materials composing them must have been deposited in water during the progress of many ages, and since an analysis shows so little trace of any of the ingredients of the salt water of the ocean, we may add deposited in fresh water.

¹ Died in office.

² Resigned. Hoagland and Jenkins elected to fill vacancies.

³ Geology of New Jersey, p. 175.

The prevailing red hue of the strata is obviously due to the fact that they contain a portion of the red oxide of iron. Some of the beds of the shale and fine-grained sandstone from local causes have a bluish-green hue, while other large tracts have a dull brown color, the effect of the heat of the adjacent trap rock, and in some localities they have been so baked that they have a ringing sound when struck like clinkstone.

We give an analysis of the red shale in the vicinity of New Brunswick, which will show all the materials of which it is composed:

In 100 parts,—73 silicic acid and quartz; peroxide of iron, 10; alumina, 3.20; lime, 4.93; magnesia, 0.98; potash, 0.73; soda, 0.97, with a trace of sulphuric and carbonic acid and water.

The lime, iron, potash, soda, and magnesia are specially noticeable as valuable ingredients. There remains only one more circumstance of importance to be mentioned respecting the red shale and sandstone. It seems to have been subjected at some period after its deposition to a process of denudation, by which the upper surface of the strata or the outcrop has been abraded and worn away, exposing them almost naked to the action of the weather.

Copper has been found in the red sandstone and shale, and exists in almost a pure native form as a red oxide, as a basillate, as a gray sulphuret, and as pyrites or yellow copper ore.

At an early date copper was discovered in the vicinity of the city, and promised quite a "boom" to the little hamlet. Some one in passing the fields of Philip French, about a quarter of a mile from the town, observed a large flame rising from the ground. Previously two hundred pounds of virgin copper in lumps had been plowed up.

In 1751 a shaft was sunk about three hundred yards from the river, and the miners struck a vein of bluestone two feet thick, covered with sheets of pure copper having the consistency of gold-leaf; the stone itself contained grains of copper, and occasional lumps were found. A stamping-mill was erected in the hollow between the college and seminary, and supplied with water from Mile Run. Many tons of pure copper were exported to England. Several other spots in the vicinity were worked with temporary success. There have been several more recent attempts to renew old Elias Boudinot's enterprise, but they have failed.

There has been found a compound of the carbon and oxide of copper associated with the red oxide. It resembles some dark earthy substance, and is easily crushed between the fingers. On examination with a microscope small black shining particles were discerned diffused through the mass, found to be carbon, probably anthracite. Heated in the flame of an alcohol lamp it burned, and continued in a red-hot state until the carbon was consumed. Heated to three hundred degrees it loses seventeen per cent. of its weight. When treated with nitric acid after being ignited, a residuum of twenty-five per cent. was found to be silica. It is an important fact that so large a portion of carbon (35.50) should be associated with this copper ore. This is unusual. Gray sulphuret of copper is massive, sectile, has a dark lead-gray color, and is seen sometimes in the form of roundish grains in the altered shale rock.

The locality is near the bed of a ravine, and near the Delaware and Raritan Canal, a short distance from the city, and when it is remembered that the red oxide is common in the vicinity, it will not be difficult to account for the formation of these carbonates, which seems to be continually going on. Water charged with carbonic acid dissolves a portion of this oxide, and whenever circumstances favor the escape of the excess of the carbonic acid these salts as a residuum are deposited. The mineral is manifestly the product of precipitation from an aqueous solution, and to find the above result it is only necessary to admit that the carbonates of copper are rendered soluble by an excess of carbonic acid. The color varies from a light to a bluish-green, and can be scratched with a knife, and is easily broken. The fracture is uneven and slightly conchoidal. In structure usually it is opaque, but sometimes translucent and having a vitreous lustre.

We can only add if it should ever, after sufficient trial, prove to be true, it may bring into operation a new industry, and render the treasures that have long been claimed to have been hid in this soil a source of extensive wealth.

A short distance from the city west have been found the sulphate of barytes. The specimens are opaque, having a yellowish color and a foliated structure, but others exhibit crystals which are translucent and have a bluish tint. In a commercial point it is used in chemistry, and also in the preparation of paints, and valuable as a mineral.

River and Streams.—This city is so situated that one prominent aspect of the surface is that its gentle slope in the southeasterly parts insure a proper drainage to the Raritan River, freeing the city of all surface water and giving power from the river to the extensive mills which are situated upon its banks. We find the South Branch of the Raritan rising in Brooklyn Pond, in Morris County, a few miles north of Drakeville, whence it courses along the western base of Fox Hill, receives the waters of Budd's Lake, and drains the Sennon Valley; it then passes west of Round Mountain and enters upon the red shale district, flowing to the northward of Flemington, thence nearly eastward to Neshanic, where it changes its course, its direction being nearly northeasterly to the point where it joins the North Branch in forming the Raritan River, through which its waters after passing along the borders of the northeasterly parts of New Brunswick, discharge into the bay at Amboy.

The North Branch has its head near Calais, in Morris County, and not far from the source of the South Branch, but this stream is not diverted by the range of Fox Hill, and therefore naturally finds a channel more directly towards the red shale district, and flowing nearly southerly meets the South Branch, and sends its waters oceanward by the same channel. It has a larger branch and a longer, called first Black River, then the Lamington, which first receives the waters of the North and South Rockaway. These principal streams discharge almost all the waters of Hunterdon and Somerset Counties. They all flow through broad valleys, whose rich alluvial soil afford a sure reward to the husbandmen's labor. The South Branch is the westernmost stream in New Jersey which finds its way to the Atlantic.

It was of Governor Paterson that Moses Guest, New Brunswick's earliest poet, wrote, July 4, 1791, on seeing the Governor in his barge, which was elegantly decorated with laurel and flowers, and rowed by twelve men dressed in white:

"On Raritan's smooth-gliding stream we view—
With pleasure view—the man whom we admire,
On this auspicious day with laurel crowned;
How gracefully the honored large moves on!
See Neptune's sons, all clad in white,
Timing their care to the melodious flutes.

Not Cleopatra's barge,
When she, full armed with each bewitching charm,
A tyrant bound in the sweet chains of love,
More elegant or pleasing could appear,
Nor did contain a jewel of such worth;
Not freighted with a proud, intriguing queen,
She nobly bears New Jersey's favorite son,
Our guardian chief, our friend, a Paterson."

The water used for drinking and culinary uses is said to be of the purest. It is well-nigh entirely free from the deleterious vegetable and mineral substances, and this fills out the complement of its claims to healthfulness. In the State Geology of New Jersey, pp. 701-4, is the following, the first column of which gives the whole amount of solid matter in grains, obtained by evaporating a gallon of water to dryness (one gallon of water contains 58,372 grains); the second column gives that portion of the solid matter that is of vegetable or animal origin and can be burned out. Both mineral and organic matter are prejudicial to good health, the mineral matter affecting the kidneys; the animal and vegetable matter are recognized as especially injurious to the system; so we give both the total solid matter, which comprises the mineral and organic matter, and the organic matter alone in a separate column:

Stream.	Solid Matter.	Organic Matter.
Lawrence's Brook (city water).....	2.03	0.66
Raritan River.....	3.80	0.78
Passaic (Newark, etc., Paterson water).....	7.44	2.86
Delaware (Trenton water).....	3.53	0.63
Schuylkill (Philadelphia water).....	5.50	1.24
Croton (New York water).....	10.92	4.31
Cochituate Lake (Boston water).....	3.11	1.42
Albany water supply.....	10.72	2.32
Truy " ".....	6.92	2.12

Here is an official report certifying that but two-thirds of a grain in nearly sixty thousand grains of this city water is vegetable or animal matter, or one-ninety-thousandth part of it, while Newark water is four times as bad, and New York water nearly seven times. But even these are vastly superior to the wells which are even now voluntarily used by many of the citizens.

The city of New Brunswick, with her increasing population, has many facilities that many cities are without. The rich harvests of Middlesex and Monmouth lying to the east and southeast, the consumers are brought face to face with them, and are enabled to procure fresh vegetables and fruit in their season; a healthy climate, well laid out streets and avenues, make it superior to many places which have not its advantages.

Revolutionary Incidents.—Capt. Peter Voorhees was killed on the 25th of October, 1779, within half a mile of New Brunswick, by a party of British horsemen commanded by Maj. Stewart, Col. Simcoe, who had been in command, having been taken prisoner by Capt. Moses Guest. This officer gives in his journal, published in connection with a collection of his poems in 1823, the following account of Simcoe's expedition into New Jersey, and his being captured in this county near New Brunswick:

"On the 25th day of October, 1779, Simco, who then commanded a regiment of horse in the British service, crossed over from Staten Island at the Blazing Star Ferry to the Jersey shore in the night with seventy-five horsemen. His main object was to take Governor Livingstone prisoner, which he expected to do by surprise. Simco was not discovered to be an enemy until he had got seven miles north of New Brunswick, at Quibbletown, from which place an express was dispatched to Col. John Neilson, at New Brunswick, who immediately ordered out his regiment. We were soon marched to the bridge at Raritan Landing. From Quibbletown Col. Simco proceeded rapidly to Col. Van Horne's house at Middlebrook. He was much disappointed in not finding the Governor there. He then went on to Van Vechten's bridge on the Raritan River, and set fire to some forage and flat-bottom boats; from which he went to Millstone, a small town 8 miles N. W. of New Brunswick; here he set fire to the court-house and jail. While we were at the landing bridge we discovered the smoke of those buildings. It was then thought probable that the enemy would endeavor to pass this bridge in their retreat. Col. Neilson therefore continued there, being in hopes of cutting off their retreat, and dispatched me with thirty-five men, with orders to endeavor to fall in with them, and to annoy them as much as possible. Soon after getting upon the road leading from Millstone village to the bridge, I was informed by an express that the enemy was within a few hundred yards of me; I had just time to get to an open piece of woods when they made their appearance. We attacked them as they came up, but they came on so rapidly that we could only give them one discharge. Col. Simco's horse received three balls, fell on him and bruised him very badly; there was one man killed and several wounded. I left a physician with Simco and proceeded on. We soon found his party had halted on the heights west of Brunswick. They sent a doctor and his servant to us bearing a flag. The doctor requested permission to attend Col. Simco, which was granted, but as the enemy was proceeding on their retreat whilst the flag was negotiating, which is contrary to the rules of war, the doctor and his servant were considered as prisoners. After Simco fell, Maj. Stewart (a refugee who had piloted him) took the command. Soon after we dismissed the doctor we witnessed a scene that was truly distressing. We found Capt. Peter Voorhees lying in the road mortally wounded, and to all appearance nearly breathing his last breath. He had just returned from Gen. Sullivan's and with a few militia horsemen was pursuing so close on the enemy's rear as to cause a detachment to sally out. They soon came up to him and cut him with their broadswords in a most shocking manner, which caused his death in a few hours. We pursued them until we got to South River bridge, 8 miles south of Brunswick, at which place we received information that five hundred men had been landed at Perth Amboy to cover their retreat, and that they were embarking for Staten Island.

¹ The Governor was then at New Brunswick.

"Many persons, I doubt not, think it strange that Col. Simco could penetrate so far into a thick settled country without receiving more injury than he did. It was not occasioned by the inactivity of the Jersey militia, who had greatly distinguished themselves for their zeal and activity during the Revolutionary war in defending the liberties of their country, but it was occasioned by their getting to a considerable distance in the country enveloped in the shades of night, by their having the address to pass, in many places, for the American horse, and by the rapidity with which they proceeded. Simco was in the Revolutionary war to the Northern what Tarleton was to the Southern army; they were both zealous partisans, and capable of undertaking and executing any daring enterprise."¹

We condense the following respecting the war in New Brunswick from Dr. Steel's Historical Discourse and other sources:

New Brunswick suffered during the war to an extent to which few towns were subjected. It lay in the path of the two armies crossing and recrossing the State, and in the varying fortunes of war was at one time in the hands of the enemy, and at another under the protection of friends. During the winter of 1776-77 the city was in the possession of the British army, who occupied it by a large force. Lord Howe, the commander-in-chief, had his headquarters in the Neilson house, in Barnet Street, while the Hessian commander occupied the Van Nuisse house, on Queen Street. The hill beyond the theological seminary was fortified; a post was erected at Raritan Landing, overlooking the river, and another on Bennet's Island, two miles below the city. Many of the British officers were quartered upon the inhabitants; the citizens were compelled to abandon their residences; all business was suspended; schools and churches were broken up, and the whole town was under the absolute sway of the enemy. On the property of William Van Deursen, below New Street, there was an encampment, with a redoubt thrown up for their protection.

The soldiers remained in possession of the city about six months, Lord Cornwallis having command of the post. During the months of February and March they were shut up in the town and cut off from their base of supplies at Amboy. To relieve them a fleet was sent up the Raritan with provisions.

The fate of that fleet was a matter of anxious interest on both sides, the British expecting it, yet fearing it would fall into the hands of the enemy, and the Americans planning for its destruction. Receiving timely information that the fleet had started up the Raritan, the Americans in the night planted a battery of six cannon on the shore below New Brunswick, and in the morning, as Lord Cornwallis was watching eagerly for the approach of the boats, and they were just rounding the point below the city, the battery opened upon them, "when five of the boats were immediately disabled and sunk, and the remainder returned in a crippled condition to Amboy."

Gen. Howe at this time made an unsuccessful attempt to open communication by land.

The farmers throughout this whole section of country were compelled to deliver over their stores into the hands of the British. At Three-Mile Run the buildings were all plundered and frequently fired. Barns were torn down to supply timber for the construction of a temporary bridge over the Raritan, and some of the most wanton cruelties were inflicted.

"But they were not allowed to remain in the undisturbed possession of the town. Cols. Neilson and Taylor gave them constant trouble; Capt. Guest was on the watch for a favorable opportunity to pounce upon the Hessians; James Schureman, who had learned something of war at the battle of Long Island, gave them no rest, while Capt. Hyler, whose adventures with his whale-boat around Staten Island seem almost romantic, and who could fight on land as well as on water, kept them in constant apprehension. These officers watched every movement of the enemy, drove back their foraging parties into the city, and often skirmished with their outposts.

"Deeds of personal valor were of frequent occurrence, and traditions are preserved in the families of the town of heroism unsurpassed in the whole history of the conflict.

"Col. Neilson organized a secret expedition against the outpost of the British on Bennet's Island, now known as Island Farm. With a picked command numbering two hundred men he stealthily approached the works on the morning of February 18th, some time before daybreak. It was a clear, cold night, and a fresh fall of snow rendered the undertaking extremely hazardous. But they reached the works without being discovered, and Col. Neilson was the first man to leap the stockade. Capt. Farmer saved the life of his commander at this moment by aiming a well-directed blow at the sentinel, who was in the act of discharging his musket into his breast. The short engagement lasted only a few minutes, when the works were surrendered by Maj. Stockton, who was the acting commander of the post in the absence of Col. Skinner. One captain, several subordinate officers, and fifty-five privates were taken prisoners, and a quantity of munitions of war were captured. The British knew nothing of the event, as only a few guns were fired, until some time during the morning, when the Americans with their prisoners and booty were far on their way towards Princeton, where Gen. Putnam was stationed, into whose hands they delivered their spoils. Col. Neilson and his men received from Gen. Washington a very high compliment for the wisdom with which he had planned, and the secrecy with which he had executed, this most successful expedition.

"On the 28th of May, Washington, who had spent the previous winter at Morristown, marched his army of seven thousand five hundred men to the heights of Middlebrook. Here he lay for two weeks, watching the movements of the enemy at Brunswick from a position which has since been called 'Washington's Rock.' In the mean while the route to Amboy had been opened, both by land and water, and troops had been pushed forward to this point in large numbers, until by the 12th of June, 1777, an army of seventeen thousand British and Hessians was assembled, under those veteran commanders, Gens. Howe, Cornwallis, and De Heister. Both the English and German commanders were agreed that they had never seen a more splendid army, or one so well disciplined and equipped, and in better spirits.¹ On the 14th they marched out of the city in the direction of Middlebush, with the design of drawing on an engagement with Washington, if they could induce him to leave the strong position which he occupied. Remains of the fortifications which they hastily threw up are still visible on the farm of Mr. John Wilson. Here the enemy remained until the 19th, when, failing in their design, they returned to New Brunswick, and made immediate preparations to evacuate the State. They were pursued by the Americans, and so greatly harassed on their retreat that it was not until the 1st of July that they were able to cross over from Amboy to the place of their destination on Staten Island."

¹ Guest's Journal, pp. 144, 146.

Governor Dowain, of Massachusetts, bore the following testimony in regard to the firmness and patriotism of the people of New Brunswick during the struggle for independence: "With respect to the political principles of the inhabitants of New Brunswick, it may be proper to do them the justice of adding that they have, throughout the whole course of the war, approved themselves firm and distinguished Whigs, and inflexibly preserved their attachment to the cause of America in the most gloomy and perilous times of her conflict with Great Britain."

Capt. Hyler, to whose romantic exploits reference is made by the historians, had his rendezvous at New Brunswick. He had under his command one gunboat, the "Defiance," and several large whale-boats, with which it was his custom to proceed down the Raritan, and among the trading-vessels, transports, and plundering parties of the enemy around Staten Island, Long Island, and in the neighborhood of Sandy Hook. He selected only the bravest men, so expert in the use of the oar that when rowing at the rate of twelve miles an hour they could be heard only at a short distance. He had the faculty of infusing into his men his own spirit of adventure and daring. On one of his excursions he captured five vessels, two of them armed, in about fifteen minutes, within pistol-shot of the guard-ship at Sandy Hook. In another enterprise he captured an eighteen-gun cutter, which he was forced to blow up, after removing a quantity of stores and ammunition. His plan was to sally out of his berth near the upper lock, pass rapidly down the river, make his captures, and dash back again, often pursued by the enemy, who made slow progress with their heavier vessels, and dared not to follow him along the tortuous channel of the Raritan.

"The annoyance was so great that an expedition of three hundred men in several boats was fitted out to proceed to Brunswick and destroy his whale-boats and recapture some of the ammunition. The plan was carried into effect Jan. 4, 1782. The river was clear of ice, and proceeding cautiously up the Raritan, they had nearly reached the town, when, at midnight, Mr. Peter Wyckoff was awakened by the barking of a watch-dog, and, holding his ear to the ground, he heard the measured stroke of muffled oars, and at once concluded that an attack was to be made upon the city. Mounting a fleet horse, he gave the alarm to Capt. Guest and spread the word from house to house, warning the inhabitants of danger. A scene of great excitement now ensued. Lights flashed through the town, and in a short space of time all the able-bodied men were under arms. But the enemy had reached the whale-boats and set them on fire, when our men came up and driving them off prevented them from accomplishing their purpose. They now found that their only safety consisted in a hasty retreat. The night was dark, and a running fight took place in the streets. The British endeavored to reach their boats by passing down Queen Street to their rendezvous at the foot of Town Lane. But they were intercepted at the Dutch Church, from behind the walls of which a volley was fired as they passed on eager only to escape. The principal skirmish took place near Mr. Agnew's, but they succeeded in reaching the river and made their way back to Staten Island. The enemy's loss in this encounter was four men killed and several wounded. On the side of the Americans there was the loss of six men wounded, none fatally, and five or six prisoners. A ball was shot through the body of John Nafey in this skirmish, but the prompt attention of Col. Taylor saved his life. The enemy completely failed in the object of their expedition, and Capt. Hyler was on the water in a few weeks, more daring than ever." He died in New Brunswick in 1782, but the place of his burial is not known.²

James Schureman, a young man at the Revolution, was very prominent soon after in civil affairs. He graduated at Queen's College about 1773, and through his eloquence chiefly a company was raised in New Brunswick, which served with great credit in the battle of Long Island. He had command as a captain in the early part of the war, and was offered a high position in the regular army. But he preferred to serve as a volunteer, and held himself ready to go out at a moment's warning against the enemy. Being one of Capt. Guest's company at the interception of Col. Simcoe, on the 25th of October, 1779, he saved the life of that officer by knocking up the musket of a comrade, who was in the act of running him through with his bayonet, as Simcoe had fallen wounded under his horse, which had been pierced by three balls. Schureman averted the deadly thrust and took Simcoe prisoner. The dastardly conduct of the British a few moments later in taking the life of Capt. Peter Voorhees while a prisoner in their hands excited the indignation of the citizens to such an extent that vengeance was threatened against the person of Col. Simcoe, and during the night the town was searched for him. "He was concealed in the old stone house on the corner of Neilson and Albany Streets, from whence he was removed to Burlington, where he remained a prisoner until honorably exchanged."

¹ For its numbers that army had not an equal in the world. Every soldier was eager for a battle.—Bancroft, vol. ix. p. 351. The time was eventful and critical. About the time when these two armies confronted each other, viz., June 14th, Congress adopted the flag of our country. The historian remarks, "The immovable fortitude of Washington in his camp at Middlebrook was the salvation of that beautiful flag." p. 352.

² Dr. Steele's Historical Discourse, pp. 64, 65.

Mr. Schureman was taken prisoner during the war near the mills on Lawrence Brook, and after being confined for a few days in the guard-house near the Neilson mansion he was removed to the notorious "Sugar-House" in New York, whence he made his escape to the American army at Morristown. After the war was closed he was elected a member of Congress in 1789, after which he was chosen to the United States Senate for a full term, and was again returned to the House of Representatives in 1812 as a colleague with Richard Stockton. He served several terms as mayor of New Brunswick, and as a citizen was held in high esteem. He was a grandson of the schoolmaster, Jacobus Schureman, who came from Holland with Dominie Frelinghuysen, and died Jan. 22, 1824, in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

New Brunswick in 1799.—From the newspaper of that period, The Guardian and New Brunswick Advertiser, which commenced its eighth year Oct. 29, 1799, we learn something of the condition of New Brunswick at the close of the last century:

At that time New Jersey was divided into congressional districts as follows: Eastern District, Essex, Bergen, and Middlesex; John Condit, representative. Northern District, Morris and Essex; Aaron Kitchell, representative. Western, Hunterdon and Somerset; James Linn, representative. Middle District, Monmouth and Burlington; James H. Imlay, representative. Southern, Gloucester, Salem, Cumberland, and Cape May; Franklin Davenport, representative.

Then letters for the following places were directed to the New Brunswick office: Somerset, Scotch Plains, Raritan Landing, Amboy, North, South, and Middle Branches, Cranbury, Bonhamtown, Millstone, Stony Hill, Piscataway, Basking Ridge, Spotswood, Bridgewater, Six-Mile Run, etc. Imagine the residents of these places at the present day depending on the New Brunswick office for mail facilities on account of its having the nearest post-office! Letters for some of the above places, as Raritan, Cranbury, and Somerset, were sometimes sent to the Princeton post-office. Occasionally letters brought up at this office intended for the British province of New Brunswick, as we notice letters advertised here for well-known Tories who had fled to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia at the close of the war.

News from Europe averaged about six weeks in reaching the city, and when it arrived it was eagerly read at this time, as the citizens were deeply interested in the wars of France and England then in progress. Most of the citizens who had business at New York went by private conveyances, leaving their teams at Powles Hook (Jersey City) or Hoboken. "The Hobuck House and Ferry," kept by John Town, at Hoboken, seems to have been well patronized by New Brunswickers. Mr. Town took care of the teams while the owners crossed over in sail- or row-boats. A New Brunswick merchant would usually require the best part of three days to go to New York, transact business, and return. Much of the merchandise taken to and from the city was in sloops and schooners, and by them a large amount of lumber was brought from Egg Harbor, Virginia, etc. Some of these sailing-vessels were regular packets, carrying passengers and freight. The sloop "Hope for Peace," Capt. Nicholas Auten, and the "Independence," carried passengers as far as Albany.

Among the principal merchants of New Brunswick at the close of the last century may be mentioned the following: Robert Eastburn, Church Street; Jacob R. Hardenbergh, Samuel Clarkson, Samuel Barker, Church Street; William Lawson, Jr., near the market; Perez Rowley, S. J. & H. Rudderow, Albany Street; George Young, Jr., Peace Street, all dealers in dry-goods, groceries, medicines, etc.; Willett Warne, Albany Street, hardware; James Richmond, lumber, plaster, grass-seeds, etc.; Michael Pool, Queen Street, hats and furs; John Dennis, Jr., lumber, plaster, paints, etc., houses to let, agent for packets, etc.; William Forman, lumber; Williams & Leslie, watch- and clock-makers, plated ware, silver knee-buckles, etc., had also a branch store at Trenton; Timothy Brush, auctioneer, land and intelligence office, houses, lots, plantations, negro men, wenches, and children for sale, let, or hire, etc.; Miss Hay Burnet, young ladies' high school, French, music, dancing, etc.

Among the now almost forgotten articles then sold by merchants were knee- and shoe-buckles, bellows, and snuffers; and in dry-goods, rattinets, calamancoes, shalloons, wildboars plain and figured, peelongs, durants, dowlass, moreens, etc.

At that day it will be remembered that women under certain circumstances were allowed to vote. It is a sad commentary on the frailty of human nature that even the fair sex were then charged with illegal voting! In the New Brunswick paper it is charged that the Jefferson candidate for Congress in Essex was elected by the large number of fraudulent or illegal votes given by married women and girls from fifteen years old upwards. It is consoling to know that the Middlesex ladies were above cheating at the ballot-box!

A singular adjunct to the business of the publisher of the New Brunswick paper at that day was the acting as agent for the sale of so many things advertised in his paper, and at the present day the most singular of all seem such as the following:

"To be sold, a negro man about 45 years old, with his wife aged 32, and child 3 years old; and, if wanted, a fine boy 6 years old; also a negro wench, husband and child, 2 years old; a negro fellow, 21 years old; a fine wench, 15 years old, etc. Enquire of the printer. Wanted to purchase a healthy negro man for farm work. Enquire of the printer."

Stray negroes were occasionally put in jail, their owners advertised for, and if none came forward they were sold to pay expenses of arrest and jail fees.

Connected with the early history of the place when it was known as Inians' Ferry is the following incident: Thomas Budd, from whom Budd's Lake took its name, purchased a large tract of land from the Indians, which he supposed was in West Jersey, as the division between the provinces was not then very certain. This was in 1687, or about that time, before Coxé and Barclay had agreed upon their compromise line. Budd had been to New York to purchase goods to pay off the Indians for the land, and when on his way back, at John Inians', he was met by the sheriff and posse of East Jersey, armed with a warrant from the Governor and Council for his arrest. He was charged with having contrary to law convened the Indians within the bounds of East Jersey and purchased lands of them which belonged to the East Jersey proprietors. He refused to be arrested, claiming that he was then within the bounds of West Jersey, locked himself in, and defied the authorities to take him. Some of the people of West Jersey came over ostensibly to visit him, but with the design of effecting his rescue. The Governor being informed of this state of things sent up from Amboy a stronger force to assist the sheriff. Budd stood out for five days, incarcerated in some room of Inians' tavern, but finding it useless longer to resist he surrendered, was taken before the Governor and Council, and bound over in the sum of one thousand pounds to appear and answer at the Court of Common Right to be held at Perth Amboy in October.

We are not informed how the case was finally settled, but it is probable that Budd gave up his Indian purchase, as before the convening of the court in October the partition line had been agreed upon.

CHAPTER XCIV.

CITY OF NEW BRUNSWICK.—(Continued.)

Review of the City's Progress.—About the beginning of the present century New Brunswick was a small place. "The little hamlet," says the Gazette, "hugged the river, and even Albany Street above Neilson was sparsely settled." In 1811 on the south side were the old Revolutionary stone house, on the corner the old Gazette printing-office, just above, and afterwards occupied by Justice Henry, and the carriage manufactory of John Van Nuis; above that, opposite, were the roomy old place, afterwards occupied by Justice Nevius and the Leupp estate, whose old white wooden building has been torn down within a few years. The north side was several feet above the south, so that the road shelved decidedly. It was very steep in its descent to the river. The door of the present Nevius residence was but one step from the sidewalk, now it is a dozen. While the ground was higher above than at present, it was much lower below. The old yellow building next to the Times newspaper office, now even with the sidewalk, was formerly three steps above the ground, and a pavement has been found several feet below the present surface. About the year we speak of, 1811, the street was graded, the upper part cut down and the lower filled up. But to make the north side of the street even with the south would have left the foundations of the Nevius residence clear above ground, so that to this day one side of the street in that vicinity is two feet higher than the other.

In 1828 there were about five thousand population, seven hundred and fifty dwellings, over a hundred large stores, including a dozen grain-stores and twenty taverns. What rare old times for Bonifaces were the stage-coach days! The hotels were of two kinds,—for farmers and for through travelers. The former flocked in for trade, the latter rested on their journey. The city was then bounded by George and New Streets. South of New Street the houses could be numbered upon the fingers of one hand, barring out, of course, Burnet Street, which led to the steamboat-dock. West of George Street there was but one house. The old stone mansion which stands on the corner of Livingston Avenue and Carroll Place was then quite in the country, as were the two famous old Adrain willows, near making many a stage-coach tumble in the hollow, which were recently cut down in the work of widening and leveling the avenue. The house, the residence of Mr. Edward S. Vail, was built, according to the inscription on a stone over the front portico, in 1760 by Henry Guest. The walls were made three feet thick, and "old Guest" himself, according to tradition, "said to his son that if his descendants would only keep a roof on it the house would stand till Gabriel blew his trumpet." Tom Paine was barricaded in the house by his hosts, the Guests, from the violence of the loyal mob of Brunswick, who sought to punish him for his treasonable writings. Here, too, were written those wonderful "poems" of the son of Moses Guest, afterwards published in Cincinnati, among which figure that gem, "To Pave or Not to Pave," and that highly humorous satire on the old "Toll Bridge."

Farther up the Trenton turnpike, and then as far out of town as it is now in, stood the old frame building occupied by the ex-mayor, McDonald, which was built at the close of the last century by the father of the late John Van Nuis. From it stretched out south to the Mile-Run Brook the large Van Nuis farm, which has been within some twenty-five years divided into city lots and built upon. The house was later the residence of the sainted Livingston, president of the college, who is yet remembered as an exceptional specimen of the muscular Christian, a giant in form and in faith, strong in muscle and mind, a man all over and a Christian all through. Still later the Adrain family came into possession of the place and planted those two wonderful old willows at the foot of the hill, which the local iconoclasts, the street commissioners, have removed to make way for improvements.

At this time Dennis Street was a skating-pond in winter and a swamp in summer. Commons extended north of Somerset Street. The aristocracy lived on Little Burnet Street and the little alley crossing it, a fine row of elaborately-finished brick houses standing there. The generous residence of Governor Paterson occupied the site of the present Paterson Block. The dry-goods marts were on Burnet Street below the post-office, the shops on Church Street, grain warehouses on Water Street, the hotels for the traders there ranged on Water Street also, and were always crowded.

The trade was then very largely wholesale. The city drained Warren, Hunterdon, Sussex, and Somerset Counties, and Northumberland County, Pa., and the country along the upper Delaware, of grain, while it supplied them with fish and salt, dry-goods and merchandise. Old Monmouth and the country to the south was little better than a desert of sand, before the mines of marl were married to the virgin soil, and the latter brought forth in such abundance as to make Monmouth the second county in the Union. The grain was brought by the Jersey turnpike road in great wagons carrying twenty-eight barrels, and drawn by four and six horses. They made two trips a week, and an old resident remembers counting forty-two of these great wagons lying in Water Street, the pole of each under the wagon before it, remaining there groaning with grain overnight, to be emptied at morn into the great warehouses, of which Mr. Runyon's, formerly the business house of James Bishop, Sr., is now the sole remaining relic. Elias Runyon stands as the survivor or relic of our solid men of Brunswick, like James Bishop, Sr., and John Bergan, and John Brush and Holcombe Cox. These merchants and their peers sold direct to New York dealers, and shipped to them by the dozen sloops, which at that time were constantly plying between our docks and the metropolis. There were three hundred thousand bushels of Indian corn and fifty thousand bushels of rye annually exported about the year 1830, and some years later it is said the total number of bushels of grain passing through this market reached over a million. In these fast days it is almost impossible to conceive of a little city like ours being the entrepôt for the products of nearly all the fruitful sections of New Jersey, and for a goodly stretch of Pennsylvania territory, and being also their market for the supply of the necessities of life, as well as furnishing a chief source of supply for the New York agricultural trade. But it must be remembered that before the advent of railroads and canals as a means of intercommunication the Raritan was the only outlet to the metropolis from a large territory west of us. One item here may be mentioned: "Our peach trade was also considerable, and many of our staid citizens remember the Saturday frolic on Sonman's Hill when they were allowed to sort out from the great wagons the luscious fruit to be packed in the steamers, and taking home as recompense all they could carry of the 'speckled' but none the less delicious flavored esculent."

The thought is a striking one in illustration of the remarkable advance we have made in civilization during the past half-century, and suggests to us a picture of what we should now be if steam traffic and the telegraph had been delayed in their coming or had advanced less swiftly towards apparent perfection, as well as shows us what absolute changes are made by the progress of science in the very structure and nature of society and of life. At this time passenger communication was had four times daily with New York by steamboat, with which connected stages to Lambertton, where other steamboats took up the journey. Two lines of steamers vied with each other in the passenger traffic, while many citizens of New Brunswick ran trading vessels. These were lively times in the busy little town. "Crowds would gather at the steamboat dock to witness the Union line steamers race to the dock with their competitors, and extensive was the betting on the result. As the steamers bumped against the wharves the passengers made a rush for the line of four-horse stages which stood ready. These filled, whips would crack, and whistling up Burnet Street would race a train of as many as twenty-two stages in line. The excitement concerning the travel north was little less. From the cupola of the steamboat-house a signal on the straight turnpike tavern could be seen, and in a few moments more the blast of bugles and the whirl of dust announced the arrival of the return stages. Crowded with passengers, the horses would gallop madly down New Street, and dash around the corner in a style that would touch the heart of that Jehu of Yosemite, California Joe. Rattling along they presently reached the boats, which lay, steam up, ready to continue the journey to the metropolis. The boys and young men, and even the older citizens, would take sides with the 'Citizens' or 'Union' line as excitedly, and even more so than the youth of the present period bet and yell over the fire-engines. They would gather on Sonman's Hill, where the view would be clear to the turnpike near the Adrain estate, and descry the victorious coach, usually but little ahead of her rival, with which she had run a dead race all the way from Trenton. If the 'Union' stage was ahead the waiting steamer 'Thistle' would peel out a welcome of victory. With eager eyes the crowd watched the descent of the hill to the old willows, and waited for the second appearance at the turn into New Street, wildly shouting at the hazardous tilt around into Burnet Street and the final gallop to the dock. Contrast these scenes with that of the Philadelphia business man of to-day, who at morning steps into a vehicular palace, transacts a day's business in New York, and sups with his family again at night in the Quaker City."

"The boats and stages which came into the city at night would deposit their living freight in the care of our Bonifaces, who kept open house along Burnet and up in Albany Streets. Here were the present Bell Tavern, and White Hall ('Hart Moore's' ancient predecessor), and the City Hotel, and, the best of all, Mann's Hotel. This was the long old building, corner of Albany and Neilson Streets, now occupied as a boarding-house and by Van Cleef's grocery. This, by the way, continued to be the only public lecture hall the town possessed up to a tolerably recent date, —'Mann's long room,'—in which many of our business men of to-day will remember to have first strutted forth upon the stage in all the glory of juvenile oratory. Opposite here stood the moss-covered, stuccoed stone dwelling which dated back to the Revolution, which has been credited with the frequent entertainment of Washington, and in front of which, in July, 1776, Col. Neilson mounted a table and first read to our loyalists the Declaration of Independence. The hotel at the foot of Burnet Street was kept by Skipper Cornelius Vanderbilt, the late commodore of steamboats and general of railroads. His wife kept clean and neat the house, and attended to the boarders during the day, while her husband ran his 'perry-auger'—a sloop without a bowsprit—to New York. His ambitious mind yearned for a steamboat, and when an opportunity to buy one was presented and he lacked the money, his wife, according to a story Judge Fisk, a great friend of Vanderbilt's, used to tell, surprised him with a considerable sum which she had, unknown to him, saved by economy in her management of the hotel. He was also aided by Mr. William Gibbons, who resided at Madison, N. J., and also owned the Union Line of steamers; so he started off then, where he remained until his death, at the head of one of the main routes of travel. But how different the relations to society and its history this position bore then and bears now."

In the year 1830 the railroad agitation commenced, and the State began to be tickled with the feelers of the monster which was afterwards to grapple with and subdue it. Camden and Amboy made its appearance, and the Delaware and Raritan Canal was soon under way. In 1833 it was completed and opened for passenger and freight traffic. There was no particular rejoicing over it, although naturally the popular feeling for improved methods of transit was gratified and the health of the town was much improved by the substitution of deep water and docks for the bare river-beds covered with filth which formerly lay exposed. The canal was projected as far back as 1804, and companies were several times in the next quarter of the century talked of and chartered. The present company was incorporated in 1830, and in four years had built the forty-two miles of canal from Bordentown to this city, together with twenty-three miles of feeder along the Delaware north of Trenton. The canal is seventy-five feet wide and seven to ten feet deep, admitting vessels of from seventy-five to one hundred tons burden. Its cost, together with that of the feeder, was about three millions of dollars. It has some twenty locks. The benefit derived from the canal has been chiefly from the bringing of coal from the mines, although its through traffic is immense, and puts the Raritan among the three greatest rivers in the country for her tonnage. It is an interesting fact that the first steam-propeller which ever passed through a canal was the "Hercules," which came up through the basin at New Brunswick soon after her arrival in this country. The vessel was an iron screw-steamer, built at Glasgow by order of Commodore Stockton, and sailed to America by nine persons,—a most daring feat, for she was little larger than our present towing-tugs. She is still in use about Philadelphia.

In 1734 the Bordentown and Washington road was opened, and once a week a freight wagon was run, connecting with boat for New York.

But the coming of the New Jersey Railroad awakened the wildest enthusiasm. It was bitterly opposed by the Camden and Amboy, and the feeling of the people sided with it as against the monopoly, aside from their local prejudice in its favor. The road was incorporated in 1832, and soon had horse-cars running from Newark to New York eight trips daily. On Dec. 3, 1835, the first locomotive, named the "Newark," ascended the grade at Bergen Hill and came sweeping in upon the Newarkers in gay style, at the rate of twenty miles an hour, now and then increasing to thirty. A month later the entire road was opened to this city. On Jan. 2, 1836, a new locomotive, the "New Brunswick," attached to thirteen cars decorated with banners bearing the names of the counties, cities, and villages along the road, and United States and State flags, came down at the rate of about twenty miles an hour from Newark, freighted with guests from all along the line to East Brunswick. Here the visitors were received by Alderman Zabriskie, who conducted them in carriages over the Albany Street bridge to the court-house, where had been prepared a sumptuous collation. The feast was presided over by Hon. C. L. Hardenbergh, and accompanied by toasts and speeches. On January 4th the regular trains, three each way, commenced running from Rahway to Newark, fare fifty cents.

Trains had to stop across the river, as there was at that time no railroad bridge. The depot stood on the right as the train came in, on the little knoll now covered with a few cedars, and omnibus coaches ran thence to the City Hotel via the Albany Street bridge, at the low charge of six and a quarter cents. On the 1st of January, 1838, the first train ran across the viaduct to the depot on Somerset Street, which had meanwhile been erected on the site of the old Baptist Church, for which was paid $6327.50 by the company. It is worthy of remark here that this bridge cost at that time $57,532,—twenty-nine thousand dollars less than the Albany Street bridge. The company, having obtained permission of Common Council, built their road out two or three miles towards Monmouth Junction, to what were then the city limits, and efforts were made to continue the line on to Trenton, to connect with the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad, and thus make a through line to New York, to compete with Camden and Amboy. To prevent this, the Camden and Amboy, in 1837, yielded to destiny and applied for permission to build a branch of their road between the Philadelphia and Trenton and the New Jersey Railroads, and on March 15th the necessary bill became a law. In the following year the first train passed through from New York to Philadelphia, via Kensington, connecting with the Baltimore train, so that the transit occupied a day.

Prices and Premiums, 1822.—In the Bridgetown Museum, published at Bridgetown (Lower Rahway), the wholesale prices current of flour and grain at New York and New Brunswick, Sept. 23, 1822, are given as follows:

New York superfine flour, bbl.....	$6.00
Philadelphia.....	6.50
Baltimore.....	6.50
Richmond City mills.....	6.75
“ Country mills.....	6.00
Fredericksburg.....	6.00
Middlings, fine.....	4.50
Rye flour.....	3.75
Indian meal.....	3.87
“ In bbls.....	18.00
Wheat, North River, bushel.....	1.18
“ Virginia.....	1.20
Rye.....	70
Corn, yellow.....	80
“ Southern.....	60
Oats.....	37

Prices at New Brunswick.

Wheat.....	s. d.	s. d.
Rye.....	8 6	a 9 0
Corn.....	5
Oats.....	2 9	3
Flaxseed.....	8
Wheat flour.....	26	30
Rye “.....	16 0	18 0
Indian meal.....	12 0	13 0
Potatoes.....	3	3 3
Butter, fresh.....	14 to 16 cents.
“ firkin.....	12
Lard.....	9 to 9½ cents.
Older Spirits.....	35 to 36 cents.
Flax.....	7 to 7½ cents.
Eggs.....	9 cents.

“LIST OF PREMIUMS

“To be awarded at the Full Meeting of the Agricultural Society of New Brunswick, on the first Tuesday of November, 1822.

1. For the greatest number of bushels of corn, raised on two acres of land lying together, at the rate of fifty-eight pounds to the bushel. The mode of culture, planting, and manuring to be stated, and the measurement of corn and land to be proved by affidavit before the Committee, a cup..... $10
2. For the greatest number of bushels of Wheat, raised on two acres lying together, to be threshed and measured, the quantity and kind of measure and mode of culture to be stated, a cup..... 6
3. For the greatest quantity of Millet raised on two acres, for hay, a cup..... 8
4. For the greatest number of bushels of Potatoes raised on one acre, a cup..... 6
5. For the greatest number of bushels of Turnips on one acre, a cup..... 6
6. For the greatest number of bushels of Ruta Baga on one acre, a cup..... 6
7. For the greatest number of bushels of Carrots from one quarter of an acre, a cup..... 6
8. For the best half acre of cabbage, a cup..... 6
9. For the best two acres of Flax, to be viewed and judged by a committee before pulling, a cup..... 10
10. For the best pair of Fat Cattle, a cup..... 6
11. For the best Fat Cow, a cup..... 6
(In both cases to be owned and fed by the owner on his farm for one year previous to the show.)
12. For the best calf not exceeding eight months, a cup..... 6
13. For the best sucking foal, a cup..... 6
14. For the best pen of spring pigs, not less than five, of one litter, not over nine months old, raised by the owner, stating precisely the mode of feeding and nearly as may be the expense, a cup..... 6
15. For the best New Hampshire Ram, a cup..... 6
16. For the best English Ram, a cup..... 6

“DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES.

- Best pair of knit thread stockings..... 3
- Best pair of knit woolen stockings..... 3
- Best cloth, not less than ten yards, made in this State from wool raised by the person offering..... 5
- 2d Bonnet of split straw..... 2
- Best Bonnet of grass..... 3
- 2d Bonnet of grass..... 2
- The best Diaper for table cloths, not less than fifteen yards..... 5
- The best dozen Napkins..... 3
- The best thirty yards of linen shirting..... 4
- The best piece of Flannel, not less than twenty yards..... 4
- The best piece of Carpeting, not less than thirty yards..... 4
- The best Bed-quilt or Counterpane..... 3
- In all cases the materials must be raised or manufactured by the person offering; and no article that has been used or worn shall be admitted.

“By order,

“JAMES CROMMELIN, Sec’y.”

Manumission Papers.—The following is a copy of a bill of sale for a negro girl, Jude:

“This is to certify that I have this day sold to Peter Spader my Negro woman, Jude, aged seventeen years for the sum of two hundred and twenty-five dollars, which Negro woman I promised to deliver or cause to be delivered unto Peter Spader or order.

“As witness my Hand the 26th day of March, 1814.

“ROELIF NEVENS.

“Witness Present:

“ABRAHAM SPADER.”

BILL OF SALE OF SLAVE POLL.

“For in consideration of the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars to me in hand paid, I hereby freely assign and deliver to Jane Spader of New Brunswick—My Negro woman named Poll—about forty years of age and do warrant her against all the claim of all persons.

“As witness my hand the 9th day of January, 1810.

“JOHN M. BAYARD.

“Witness Present:

“R. SPADER.”

Tornado.—On June 9, 1835, our town came near meeting the most melancholy fate of total destruction. Two dark clouds approached and joined each other in the vicinity of Griggstown, on the Millstone River, and then started a full-blown tornado on a path of devastation through Six-Mile Run and Middlebush to this city, where at five o'clock in the evening they appeared a lowering mass projecting downward a pillar of fire. The hurricane with fearful violence took an easterly course, threatening Albany and Church Streets, but actually striking at the heads of Paterson, Bayard, Liberty, and Schureman Streets (the heads of these being at George Street), whence it took its destructive way across Neilson and Burnet Streets, killing several persons in its path; thence over the Raritan to Piscataway, and so to the water. Schureman, Liberty, and Burnet Streets were a complete mass of ruins, over one hundred and twenty dwellings, exclusive of numerous stores, store-houses, etc., being destroyed or greatly damaged. The loss reached one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, a very large sum in those days, and the suffering was considerable, though speedily relieved by contributions from all over the State. The razed parts of the city were speedily rebuilt, and the industry and commerce of the city received no serious check.

Present Status of the City.—New Brunswick is well supplied with water, and is under adequate police regulations. It is protected from the ravages of fire by a well-organized and efficient fire department. Its educational affairs are under the management of a board of education composed of twelve men. Its business places number over six hundred, and its furnishing stores, banking institutions, and insurance companies are adequate to meet the city's demands.

The city can claim high standing for her educational advantages, being possessed of Rutgers College, the Theological Seminary, the Conservatory of Music, Rutgers Grammar School, five public schools, two young ladies' seminaries, and eleven private schools. The press of this city can boast of two daily and two weekly papers, Times and Fredonian, and two monthly journals, the Constellation and the Rutgers College Targum.

The religious advantages of New Brunswick are not less marked. There are twenty-one churches besides six missions, viz., four Reformed, two Episcopal, three Baptist, five Methodist Episcopal, two Roman Catholic, one Jewish synagogue, one Evangelical Lutheran (Emanuel, German); besides Bethel Mission Union, North Mission Union, Hope Mission, Plum Street Mission Union, Second Reformed Mission, Young Men's Christian Association Mission; the Charitable Association, Humane Society, established in 1807, object, to supply the poor with fuel, etc., during the winter; Dorcas Society, established in 1813, object, clothing destitute widows and their children.

Ladies' Depository, established in 1856, object, to supply work to respectable families. Burnet Street, foot of Hiram, is the headquarters of the society.

New Brunswick Auxiliary Orphan Asylum (auxiliary to the Newark Orphan Asylum), established 1860. Young Men's Christian Association, organized in 1857, meets at No. 48 Church Street, S. S. Lindley, librarian.

Middlesex County Bible Society, established in 1849 at New Brunswick, meets annually in the different townships. Depository with the executive committee. Chairman of the executive committee, Rev. R. H. Steele, D.D., of this city; Treasurer, Johnson Letson.

New Brunswick City Mission, established Jan. 26, 1862. Anniversary held in the fall election in the spring. City missionary, Silas E. Weir. They are doing a vast amount of good, and have plans well laid for visiting and holding meetings throughout the city.

Young Men's Auxiliary Bible Society, established in 1816 (contemporary with the American Bible Society).

THE PUBLIC LIBRARIES.—Of these there are four. The Reformed Theological Seminary Library was organized at an early date, and a large number of volumes were secured; in the year 1873 it was reorganized. The library is in the "Sage Library Hall," open daily from 9 A.M. to 12.30 P.M., and from 2 to 4.30 P.M.

Rutgers College Library, open to students during the week. Library in Kirkpatrick Chapel building.

Young Men's Christian Association Library, at Association Rooms, No. 48 Church Street. S. S. Lindley, librarian. It contains nearly six thousand volumes.

New Brunswick Circulating Library, established 1876. They now have it in the bookstore of Messrs. Morgan & Shivers, 36 Church Street. I. Heidingsfeld, librarian.

MUSICAL SOCIETIES.—Hartranft Choral Society was organized April 18, 1870. Holds regular meetings once each week at Masonic Hall.

Gesang Verein Eintracht (Glee Club Eintracht), organized 1861. Leader, Professor Frederick Schueeweiss. They meet every week at Saenger Hall, Richmond Street.

Aurora Verein, reorganized 1875. Leader, Otto Geitner. Rooms at Saenger Hall. Singing school on Thursday evening.

Volks Concert Association, organized 1876. Professor Frederick Schueeweiss, musical director. Object, to give popular concerts of popular music by local artists, professional and amateur.

Americus Glee and Social Club, organized 1872; object, to promote social amusement among the Israelites of this city; meets every two weeks on first and third Thursdays of each month.

New Brunswick Vocal Union, organized February, 1877; meets every week on Monday evening at Masonic Hall.

BANDS.—Darrow's Cornet Band was organized March, 1866, Burritt Darrow, leader; meets once each week at Bull's Head.

Goodwill Cornet Band, organized in 1877, Kemble Dunham, leader; there are about thirty members.

POLITICAL CLUB.—Union Republican Club, organized March 29, 1880; meets Friday in each month.

Martin A. Howell

BUILDING LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.—There are some nine associations in this city who are regularly organized for the purposes specified as a loan company for building purposes.

The Middlesex Building and Loan Association, organized October, 1867. President, P. Wychoff Voorhees; Secretary, William A. Van Doren.

Union Building and Loan Association, organized October, 1869. President, James P. Langdon; Secretary, A. M. Way; office, 20½ Albany Street.

Raritan Building and Loan Association, organized March, 1870. President, Garret Conover; Secretary, Arthur G. Ogilby; office, corner George and Albany Streets.

Home Building and Loan Association, organized April, 1871. President, Garret G. Voorhees; Secretary, Peter G. Polhemus; office, 152 George Street.

Empire Building and Loan Association, organized in 1872. President, James L. Rogers; Secretary, A. M. Way; office, 20 Albany Street.

New Brunswick Building and Loan Association, organized April, 1873. President, Kenneth J. Duncan; Secretary, Peter G. Polhemus; office, 152 George Street.

Third Excelsior Building and Loan Association, organized June, 1877. President, William G. De Hart; Secretary, Theodore B. Booraem.

People Building and Loan Association, organized January, 1880. President, Mahlon Runyon; Secretary, D. F. R. Runyon.

The PUBLIC HALLS in the city are as follows:

City Hall, corner George and Schureman Streets.

Masonic Hall (containing opera-house, assembly-room, lodge- and drill-rooms), corner Albany and George Streets.

Geological Hall, College Campus.

Greer Hall, No. 195 Burnet Street.

Helectia Hall, 22 Albany Street.

Kearney Hall, 20½ Albany Street.

Odd-Fellows' Hall, 134 Neilson Street.

Saenger Hall, Richmond and Dennis Streets.

Sage Library Hall, Seminary Place.

Schmidt's Hall, City Alley.

Suydam Hall, Seminary Place.

Van Neste Hall, College Campus.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—County court-house, Court-House Square, between Bayard and Paterson Streets.

County collector's office, grand jury-room, court-rooms of Supreme, Circuit, Oyer and Terminer, Court of Common Pleas and Quarter Sessions, and of District Court, in court-house, erected in the year 1843.

Sheriff's house and office, Court-House Square.

County jail, Court-House Square.

County clerk's and surrogate's office, Court-House Square.

Pump-house, water-works, at Lawrence's Brook; reconstructed in 1874.

ATHLETIC ASSOCIATIONS.—The following are the organized clubs:

The Young Men's Athletic Association, organized in 1879. Its regular meetings are every Thursday evening, corner Hiram and Neilson Streets.

Rutgers College Boat Club, organized in 1876. Boat-house (floating) in Raritan River, south of Albany Street bridge. Navy: two four-oared shells.

New Brunswick Yacht Club, organized in 1875. Commodore, Clifford Morrogh, M.D.

The Washington Yacht Club, organized in 1876. Commodore, Augustus Wilcox.

BASE-BALL AND FOOT-BALL CLUBS.—Rutgers College Base-Ball Association, organized 1860.

Union Base-Ball Club, organized 1875.

Rutgers Foot-Ball Association, organized in 1868; now called "Rutgers Foot-Ball Eleven."

The above associations are very popular with the community during the pleasantest parts of the year. The organizations show new life and vigor, and attract much attention from the college and the citizens generally.

There are a dozen loan associations, whose advantages in increasing private buildings are marked.

There are two military companies, eight Masonic lodges, four of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows, one Knights of Pythias, two of the Order United American Mechanics, six Sons of Temperance, two political clubs, two brass bands, some seven benevolent societies and three church benevolent lodges, six musical societies, one historical society, and one board of trade.

MARTIN A. HOWELL, born Dec. 25, A.D. 1804, and in his seventy-eighth year, was one of a family of five, and is one of the oldest native residents of New Brunswick, N. J. His paternal grandfather, Howell, was of Welsh descent, and his maternal grandfather (Armstrong) of Scotch descent, and were both residents of Franklin township, Somerset Co., and farmers. His father, Christopher, born in Griggstown, N. J., settled in New Brunswick after his marriage to Ann Armstrong, where he resided until his death in 1814, aged fifty-five years. His mother died in 1829, aged sixty years.

Children during his boyhood days did not possess the many advantages for instruction that are freely offered to the present generation, many of the pupils in the Lancasterian School in New Brunswick, of which he was a member, having been taught to write in sand, which was placed in a groove made for the purpose on a desk in front of a long line of children. But such limited means of learning as then offered themselves were improved by young Howell, and he thus laid the foundation of a sound and reliable business knowledge and successful career. At eleven years of age he was taken from school, and one year later, in 1816, he began a clerkship in his brother's store in New Brunswick, and subsequently served a clerkship with James Dunham in New Brunswick, and with James F. Randolph in New York, where he remained one year, occupying his evenings in attending the school of Mr. Bennett, the American practical book-keeper, at that time celebrated as the leading if not the only place in the country where both single and double entry book-keeping were taught. At the end of the year young Howell applied to Mr. Bennett for a diploma, which under his rules was never granted except upon a rigid examination before the school, and upon a favorable vote of all the scholars. Mr. Bennett was somewhat surprised that this boy who had only attended at nights and for such a short period should make such a request, but finally consented to give him the trial. The examination took place, and at its conclusion he was awarded the diploma by the unanimous vote of the school. In the spring of 1826, upon settlement with Mr. Randolph, he found his entire capital in money to be four dollars and fifty cents, but he had acquired a valuable experience, and had learned the basis and principles of business. Starting out with these young Howell, by energy, economy, and untiring industry, worked himself up, with varying fortune, through many youthful disappointments and difficulties, to the head of a business of his own, the manufacture of wall-paper, at that time a new enterprise, the building for which he erected in 1837 on the canal water-power on Water Street, New Brunswick.

This was the first manufactory built in that city, and was one of the first for the manufacture of wall-paper erected in the United States. The knowledge and experience which he acquired during the early years of his life now came into use, and these, combined with close attention to every detail of his business, made the venture a success, and a manufactory that started with an annual production of eight thousand dollars grew and increased in a few years to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

